BLANCHLAND, otherwise SHOTLEY HIGH-QUARTER, a chapelry, in the parish of SHOTLEY, union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 10 miles (S. by E.) from Hexham; containing 476 inhabitants. It is situated on the north side of the river Derwent, and is celebrated for its lead-mines, which have been extensively worked for a long period, and from which large quantities of ore are still raised: the proprietors have a smelting-furnace at Jeffries'-Rake, in the county of Durham. The village is in a narrow deep green vale, and is inclosed by heathy hills and morasses; the population is chiefly employed in the mines. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £198; patrons and impropiators, Lord Crewe's Trustees. The chapel was formed, in 1752, by the trustees of Bishop Crewe, out of the tower and two aisles of an abbey of Præmonstratensian canons founded by Walter de Bolbec, in 1175, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, the abbot of which was elevated to the house of peers in the 23rd of Edward I.: the establishment, at the time of the Dissolution, consisted of an abbot and fourteen canons, and the revenue amounted to £44. 9. 1. After having passed through various hands, the estate was purchased by Bishop Crewe, who bequeathed it for charitable purposes: besides that part converted into a chapel, the principal gateway and other portions of the conventual buildings are still visible. The trustees also founded two schools, now on the national plan.

BLANDFORD (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of BLANDFORD, hundred of COOMBS-DITCH, Blandford division of DORSET, $\frac{2}{3}$ of a mile (S.) from Blandford-Forum; containing 407 inhabitants. The parish, situated near the river Stour, and on the road from Blandford to Dorchester, comprises 1557 acres of arable and pasture land in nearly equal portions; the soil is generally chalk. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 17. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Miss Burrough: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £300, and there are 40 acres of glebe. The church, with the exception of the tower, was rebuilt in 1711, by Governor Pitt, ancestor of the Earl of Chatham and of Lord Camelford; it is in the Grecian style, and contains the remains of many of the Chatham family. A school was instituted, in 1827, by the Hon. and Rev. S. Best. Bröwné Willis, LL. D., the celebrated antiquary, was born here, Sept. 14th, 1682. In 1833, about a quarter of a mile from Blandford Bridge, six skeletons were discovered; a single skeleton was also found a short distance from the others, and a variety of Roman coins, a Greek coin, a bronze figure of our Saviour, and a glass vessel, two inches in length, evidently formed in a mould, and impressed with two grotesque heads.

Corporation Seal.

BLANDFORD-FORUM (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union of BLANDFORD, comprising the borough and market-town of Blandford-Forum, which has a separate jurisdiction, and the township of Pimperne, which is in the hundred of PIMPERNE, Blandford division of DORSET, 16 miles (N. E.) from Dorchester, and 10½ (S. W.) from London; containing 3349 inhabitants. This place derived its name from its situation near an ancient ford on the river Stour, called by the Romans Trajectus Balamniensis. It was nearly destroyed by an accidental fire, in 1579, but was soon afterwards rebuilt. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., it suffered severely for its loyalty to that monarch; and in 1644 it was plundered by the parliamentary forces under Major Sydenham, and, not being fortified, became an easy prey to the contending parties, by each of whom it was frequently assailed and alternately possessed. In 1677, and in 1713, it again suffered greatly from fire, and, in 1731, was, with the exception of forty houses only, consumed by a conflagration, which destroyed also the hamlets of Blandford-St. Mary and Bryanston, in which only three dwellings were left. After this calamity, which is recorded on a marble tablet over a pump near the church, it was rebuilt, by act of parliament, in 1732. The town is pleasantly situated on the road from London to Exeter, within a curve of the river Stour, over which is a bridge; the streets are regularly formed and well paved, the houses modern and uniformly built of brick, and the inhabitants amply supplied with water. The theatre, a neat and commodious building, is opened occasionally; and the races, which have been established for more than a century, are annually held, in August, on a down near the town, the course being one of the best in the kingdom. The manufacture of lace of a very fine quality, equal, if not superior, to that made in Flanders, and valued at £30 per yard, formerly flourished here: the making of shirt-buttons, for which Blandford has long been noted, and which formerly afforded employment to a very considerable number of females in the town and the adjacent villages, is now almost discontinued. The market is on Saturday; the fairs, chiefly for horses, horned-cattle, sheep, and cheese, are held on March 7th, July 10th, and Nov. 8th, to each of which a court of pie-poudre is attached. Blandford is a borough by prescription, and is parcel of the duchy of Lancaster, the arms of which are borne on the corporation seal; it has also a charter, granted by King James I., who, by separate letters-patent, gave the manor and vill to the bailiff and burgesses. By the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76, the corporation now consists of a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors; and the mayor and late mayor are justices of the peace. A court leet is held; and the county magistrates hold petty-sessions here for the division. The town-hall is a neat edifice of Portland stone, supported on pillars, with an entablature. The burgesses exercised the elective franchise from the 23rd of Edward I. till the 22nd of Edward III., when it was discontinued.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 8. 1½.; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Winchester. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £152. 10., and the vicarial for one of £112. 10.; and there are nearly 13 acres of glebe, belonging to the appropriators. The church is a handsome modern edifice, in the Grecian style, with a tower surmounted by a cupola, and ornamented with a balustrade and urns. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. The free school, to the northwest of the church, is of uncertain foundation: it has a small endowment. The Blue-coat school, for the clothing and instruction of twelve boys, and apprenticing three of them, was founded by Archbishop Wake, who, in 1728, bequeathed £1000 for these purposes: this sum was expended in purchasing New South Sea annuities, and, by repeated additions, the total amount now standing to the account of the trust is £1716. 5. 5., yielding a dividend of £51. 9. 8. There is a small sum for the instruction of four boys, arising from a benefaction of William Williams, in 1621, who left £3000, to be laid out in land, now producing £465 per annum, for instruction and other charitable purposes. There are also a British school, two national schools, and several infants' schools. In 1685, almshouses for ten aged persons were founded and endowed by George Ryves, Esq.; the entire annual income is about £260. In the churchyard are others, supported by property bequeathed by Sir Edward Uvedale, and occupied by five poor women. The union of Blandford comprises thirty-three parishes or places, and contains a population of 13,856. On a hill to the north of the town was formerly an intrenchment, inclosing an area, 300 paces in length, and 200 in breadth, which has long been under cultivation, and the only relic now visible is an adjoining barrow. Sir Thomas Ryves, LL.D., a learned antiquary and civilian; the Rev. Bruno Ryves, D.D., publisher of the Mercurius Rusticus, an early newspaper in the time of the parliamentary war, and one of the writers of the Polyglot Bible, who was born in 1596; the Rev. Thomas Creech, M.A., translator of Lucretius, born in 1659; William Wake, Archbishop of Canterbury, born in 1657; Edward Wake, uncle to that prelate, and founder of the institution for the Sons of the Clergy; Dr. Lindsey, Archbishop of Armagh; Dr. Samuel Lisle, Bishop of Norwich; and the Rev. Christopher Pitt, translator of Virgil's Æneid, who died in 1748, and was buried in the church; were natives of the parish. Blandford gives the inferior title of Marquess to the Duke of Marlborough.

BLANKNEY, or BLACKNEY (St. Oswald), a parish, in the union of SLEAFORD, Second division of the wapentake of LANGOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 10 miles (N.) from Sleaford; containing, with the hamlet of Linwood, 640 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 5000 acres, chiefly arable land. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 10. 7½.; net income, £752; patron, C. Chaplin, Esq. A national school, established in 1832, is partly supported by Charles Chaplin, Esq., and the Rev. Edward Chaplin, by the former of whom the school was built. On Blankney heath are the remains of a British camp of about eighty yards in diameter, with a fosse; the site has been recently planted by Mr. Chaplin.

BLASTON (St. Michael), a chapelry, in the parish of HALLATON, union of UPPINGHAM, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 7 miles (N. E.) from Market-Harborough; containing, with Blaston-St. Giles, 102 inhabitants. The chapel is a small plain building. Another chapel, called the Nether chapel, dedicated to St. Giles, was founded by Richard I., to whom the manor belonged, and rebuilt about 1710. It is a donative belonging to the lord of the manor; net income, £222; patron, Rev. G. O. Fenwick. The tithes of Blaston-St. Michael's, payable to the minister, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £74; and there is a glebe of 7 acres. A school is partly supported by subscription.

BLATCHINGTON, or BLETCHINGTON, EAST (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of NEWHAVEN, hundred of FLEXBOROUGH, rape of PEVENSEY, E. division of SUSSEX, $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile (N.) from Seaford; containing 163 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 700 acres, of which 405 are arable, and 295 pasture; and is bounded on the south by the English Channel, and intersected by the road from Newhaven to Seaford. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £14; net income, £88; patron, John King, Esq. The church is a neat edifice in the early English style.

BLATCHINGTON, WEST (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of STEYNING, hundred of WHALESBONE, rape of LEWES, E. division of SUSSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W. by W.) from Brighton; containing 64 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with the vicarage of Brighton, and valued in the king's books at £6. 4. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £200: the church is in ruins. On an elevated spot, commanding an extensive range of the coast, were discovered, in 1818, the site and some vestiges of a Roman villa.

BLATCHINWORTH, a chapelry, in the parish and union of ROCHDALE, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3 miles (N. E.) from Rochdale; containing, with Calderbrook, 4456 inhabitants. The manufacture of flannel and the printing of calico prevail extensively in the chapelry, which also abounds with coal-works.

BLATHERWYCKE (Holy Trinity), a parish, in the union of OUNDL, hundred of CORBY, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 8 miles (W. S. W.) from Wansford, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from Rockingham; containing 236 inhabitants, including a portion of Rockingham Forest, said to be extra-parochial. This parish, which is intersected by the road from Kettering to Stamford, comprises 2105a. 2r. 39p. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 13. 3.; net income, £394; patron, A. Stafford O'Brien, Esq.: the glebe consists of about 400 acres, with a house. Blatherwycke anciently included two parishes, united in 1448, since which one of the churches, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, has been demolished; the existing structure is a mixture of the Norman and early English styles. A school is supported principally by Mr. O'Brien. There are a chalybeate, and a sulphureous spring in Blatherwycke Park.

BLAWITH, a chapelry, in the parish and union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 7 miles (N.) from Ulverstone; containing 186 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £59; patron and impropiator, T. R. G. Braddyll, Esq. In 1772, Margaret Lancaster bequeathed £50, and, in 1777, William Lancaster gave £110, for the support of a school.

BLAXHALL (St. Peter), a parish, in the union and hundred of PLOMESGATE, E. division of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Wickham-Market, 7 miles (N. E.) from Woodbridge; comprising by computation 2033 acres, and containing 173 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20, and in the gift of Andrew Arcedeckne, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £510, and there are 80 acres of glebe. A charity school is supported.

BLAXTON, a township, in the parish of FINNINGLEY, union and soke of DONCASTER, W. riding of YORK, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Bawtry; containing 183 inhabitants.

BLAYDON, a village, in the parish of WINLATON, union of GATESHEAD, E. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 4 miles (W.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 1114 inhabitants. This place is situated on the south border of the Tyne; the soil is generally light, but produces good wheat, turnips, and potatoes, and the scenery is varied in hill and dale, wood and water. The tide flowing for about four miles up from the village, in a westerly direction, affords great facility for the conveyance of coal, of which immense quantities are sent in keels from the Townley-main, Blaydon-main, and Cowen's collieries, to the shipping at Shields. There is an extensive manufactory and depôt for lead, the property of T. W. Beaumont, Esq., of Bretton Park, Yorkshire; the lead is brought from the Allendale and Weardale mines, where it is smelted, to the works here, where it is manufactured, and shipped for the London market. Messrs. Richardson, Currie, and Co., have white-lead and sulphuric-acid works, which were established in 1839; Messrs. Robert Hall, and Co., an iron manufactory for chains, nails, &c.; Mr. W. G. Hawdon, a cast-iron foundry for ovens, stoves, engines, and other articles; Mr. Mitchel, a coke and lamp-black factory; and Messrs. Thomas Milner and Sons, a steel and iron forge, and a fire-brick manufactory. A good road from Newcastle crosses the Tyne by an elegant suspension bridge at Scotswood, and forms a junction with the Gateshead and Hexham turnpike here; and the Newcastle and Carlisle railway has a station at which the trains meet from Newcastle and Gateshead. A site for a church has been given by Mr. Beaumont; and divine service is at present performed every Sunday in a neat school-house built at the expense of Archdeacon Thorpe, and in which a school on the national plan is supported by subscription. There are places of worship for Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Methodists of the New Connexion.

BLAYDON-BURN, a hamlet, in the parish of WINLATON, union of GATESHEAD, W. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 150 inhabitants. This place is picturesquely situated on the Tyne, at the confluence of a small rivulet, or burn; and is celebrated for an extensive establishment belonging to Messrs. Joseph Cowen and Co., where fire-bricks, fire-clay retorts for gas-works, flint for potteries, and almost every article of which fire-clay is susceptible, are manufactured: the first fire-clay made into bricks in this part of the country, was produced at these works about 80 years ago, and within the last 20 years the trade has much increased. A colliery is in full operation, employing from 200 to 300 hands; and there is a private railway winding through the romantic dell of Blaydon-Burn, opened in 1841, and extending to the Tyne, whence goods are conveyed by wherries to Newcastle and Shields, and there shipped for London and other parts of the kingdom, and for the continent, the East and West Indies, and America. There are two flour-mills, one propelled by the water of the burn, and the other by steam. Joseph Cowen, Esq., has a neat residence, surrounded by thriving and beautiful plantations.

BLAZEY (ST.), a parish, in the union of ST. AUSTELL, E. division of the hundred of POWDER and of the county of CORNWALL, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from St. Austell; containing 3284 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1480 acres; the surface is hilly, and in the lower grounds is subject to inundation; it is rich in mineral produce, and mines of copper and tin are extensively wrought. The living is a vicarage, annexed to that of St. Austell, and in the gift of the Crown: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £120, and the vicarial for one of the same amount. There are places of worship for Wesleyans. Here is an almshouse of remote foundation.

BLEADON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of WINTERSTOKE, E. division of SOMERSET, 5 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Axbridge; containing, with the hamlets of Oldmixon and Shipslade, 778 inhabitants. The navigable river Axe passes through the parish, by means of which a considerable trade in coal is carried on. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £27. 7. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £469; patron, Bishop of Winchester. The Rev. Meric Casaubon, D.D., an eminent critic and divine, and son of the celebrated Isaac Casaubon, was collated to the benefice about 1624. A building has been erected for a national school. Here are vestiges of a British settlement, but the Roman road on which it stood can scarcely be traced; and there are several barrows on an eminence in the vicinity.

BLEANE.—See COSMUS (ST.) and DAMIAN.

BLEASBY, a hamlet, in the parish of LEGSBY, union of CAISTOR, W. division of the wapentake of WRAGGÖE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 123 inhabitants.

BLEASBY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SOUTHWELL, liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY, and S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 3 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Southwell; containing 353 inhabitants. It comprises 1468a. 1r. 5p., of which 760 acres are arable, and the remainder meadow and pasture. The village occupies a secluded situation on the western side of the river Trent, over which is a ferry; and the parish is within that portion of the liberty of Southwell and Scrooby which separates the northern from the southern division of the wapentake of Thurgarton. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the patronage of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell, valued in the king's books at £4; net income, £107; appropriators, the three Prebendaries in Southwell church. The tithes were commuted for land in 1777. The church is an ancient edifice, in good repair.

BLEASDALE, a chapelry, in the parish of LANCASTER, union of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 7 miles (E. by N.) from Garstang; containing 249 inhabitants. The forest of Bleasdale, comprising 8000 acres, was co-extensive with the township; a great part of it has been inclosed. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Lancaster: there are about 22 acres of glebe. The church, a neat edifice, was rebuilt in 1835. Christopher Parkinson, by will dated July 8th, 1702, founded a school, and endowed it with an estate now yielding about £65 per annum; and a school, in connexion with the National Society, has been erected, towards the support of which an endowment of £10 per annum is appropriated.

BLEATARN, a hamlet, in the parish of WARCOP, EAST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Brough. John Tailbois, in the reign of Henry II., gave the manor to the abbot of Byland, in Yorkshire, who founded a cell in the vicinity, the ruins of which indicate the conventual buildings to have been somewhat extensive. The Sawbridge estate, and others within the manor, are tithe-free, if occupied by their respective owners, but subject to the claim, if held by a tenant. Limestone abounds.

BLECHINGDON (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of BICESTER, hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Woodstock; containing 638 inhabitants. It is bordered on the south-west by the Oxford canal, and contains quarries of stone well adapted for building and paving. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 9. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Queen's College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £272. 18., and the glebe consists of 209 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres. Leonard Power, by will in 1620, endowed an almshouse for four poor persons; it was rebuilt about the end of the last century, and £33 per annum are assigned for the support of the inmates. A school is partly maintained by Arthur Annesley, Esq. Dr. Mills, Principal of St. Edmund's Hall, Oxford, and author of the "Prolegomena," was rector of the parish; he was interred in the church, and a handsome monument has been erected to his memory.

BLEDINGTON (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of STOW-ON-THE-WOLD, Upper division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Stow; containing 354 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1400 acres, and is divided from Oxfordshire by the Evenlode stream, by which the flat grounds are sometimes flooded; the soil is gravelly, with clay, and the surface level. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £88; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford, to whom land and a money payment were assigned in lieu of tithes in 1769. A school is partly supported by subscription.

BLEDISLOE, a tything, in the parish of AWRE, union of WESTBURY-UPON-SEVERN, hundred of BLEDISLOE, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER.

BLEDLOW (Holy TRINITY), a parish, in the union of WYCOMBE, hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCK-

INGHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Thame; containing 1205 inhabitants. It comprises 4112*a. 1r. 1p.*, of which about 500 acres are woodland, 100 pasture, and one-third of the rest meadow, and two-thirds arable. There are two paper-mills, and females find employment by making cotton and blond lace by hand on pillows. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 9. 7.; net income, £250; patron, Lord Carrington: land and money payments were assigned in 1809, in lieu of all tithes, woodlands excepted. The church is an ancient building, erected about the year 1200. At Bledlow Ridge, three miles from the church, is an episcopal chapel, which was rebuilt by subscription, in 1835, and is in the style of an old church, with tower and buttresses: it is vested in three trustees, the vicar who is also chaplain, being one. There is also a Wesleyan meeting-house at Bledlow Ridge; and several endowments, amounting to about £30 per annum, have been left to the poor.

BLENCARN, with KIRKLAND, a township, in the parish of KIRKLAND, union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Penrith; containing 233 inhabitants. At Blencarn-gate is a free school, erected in 1775, and endowed with 100 acres of land, allotted on inclosing Culgaith common, and now let for £42 per annum.

BLENCOGO, a township, in the parish of BROMFIELD, union of WIGTON, CUMBERLAND ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Wigton; containing 211 inhabitants. The Rev. Jonathan Boucher, who published a "Supplement to Dr. Johnson's Dictionary," was born here in 1738.

BLENCOW, GREAT, a township, in the parish of DACRE, union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from Penrith; containing 64 inhabitants. In 1772 land and a money payment were assigned to the impropiator in lieu of tithes. A grammar school, of high repute, was founded in 1576, by Thomas Burbank, who endowed it with property now producing about £200 per annum: a new schoolroom, and a house for the master, were built in 1793. The late Lord Ellenborough received a part of his early education at this school, which has also produced several distinguished clergymen.

BLENCOW, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of GREYSTOCK, union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Penrith; containing 69 inhabitants. Near an ancient house, once the residence of the Blencows, are some dispersed ruins of buildings, particularly those of a chapel, with a burial-ground adjoining; and near the road is an inclosed cemetery, in which stands a stone cross, with the arms of the family engraved on it.

BLENDON, a hamlet, in the parish of BEXLEY, union of DARTFORD, hundred of LESSNESS, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT; containing 122 inhabitants.

BLENDWORTH (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of CATHERINGTON, hundred of FINCH-DEAN, Petersfield and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile from Horndean; containing 280 inhabitants. It comprises 1421*a. 1r. 23p.*, of which 611 acres are arable, 146 meadow, 386 downs, and 253 woodland: the soil is chalky, and the surface level and dry. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 7. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Rev. Edward Langton Ward: the tithes have been commuted for two rent-charges, £130 payable to the incumbent of Chalton, and £243 to the rector of Blendworth, who has also a glebe of 6 acres. William Appleford, in 1695, gave £200 in trust, to be invested in land, and the proceeds applied to education.

BLENHEIM-PARK, an extra-parochial district, in the liberty of OXFORD, though locally in the hundred of WOOTTON, union of WOODSTOCK, county of OXFORD; containing 109 inhabitants. This district, which comprises the royal manor of Woodstock, with the demesne, including the hundred of Wootton, was granted, in 1704, by Queen Anne to John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough, in commemoration of the splendid victory obtained by him over the French and Bavarians, on the 2nd of August, near the village of Blenheim; and this grant was confirmed by parliament in the following year, when the house of commons voted the sum of £500,000 for the erection of a palace, which was completed in 1715, after a design of Sir John Vanbrugh, and is a magnificent pile of building, 850 feet in extreme length, and generally considered to be the only public work of magnitude sufficient for the full development of the genius of that architect.

BLENKINSOPP, a township, in the parish and union of HALTWHISTLE, W. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W.) from Haltwhistle; containing 845 inhabitants. This has long been the property of the Blenkinsopp family, of whom Sir Reginald de Blenkinsopp, who lived in the time of Henry II. and Richard Cœur de Lion, assumed the cross, and accompanied the latter monarch to the Holy Land, and fought under him at the battle of Ascalon. In 1399 "Thomas de Blencansopp" had a licence to fortify his mansion on the borders of Scotland: it occurs in the list of border castles about 1416; and in 1488 its proprietor committed the custody of it to Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland, at that time warden of the west and middle marshes, when it is supposed that the Blenkinsopps abandoned it finally as a residence. The township comprises 4725 acres, and is situated on the road from Newcastle to Carlisle, and near the site of the Roman station Magna, now called Caer Voran, which latter name it must have received from the ancient Britons, probably from having been placed under the tutelage of the virgin goddess Minerva, in Welsh Caer Vorwen, or Morwen, signifying Maiden's fort: the foundations of buildings and traces of streets still appear evident to the view, and the Roman wall is strongest near this station, and at the distance of a quarter of a mile from it, is more than twelve feet high and nine broad.

The geological features of the district are generally interesting, and the township abounds in mineral wealth: coal of good quality is very extensively wrought by a company who hold the property under lease from Col. Coulson, of Blenkinsopp Hall; and the produce is sent to the south-west of Scotland, the north-east coast of Ireland, and the Isle of Man; there are also, near the collieries, quarries of grey slate and limestone, which are wrought by the same company. The Newcastle and Carlisle railway passes through the township, and attains its summit level a mile and a half to the west of the village of Greenhead, where four locomotive engines are usually stationed; and the Carlisle canal extends from the end of the railway to the Irish Sea. Blenkinsopp Castle, the seat of the ancient family of that name, and now in the possession of their descendant, John Blenkinsopp Coulson, Esq., is a venerable pile of grey massive walls, with a farm-house attached, used as the residence of the agent of the colliery. The chapel of Greenhead (see Greenhead) was consecrated, Sept. 11th, 1828. A school-house has been built by the coal company, and is conveniently situated between the village of Greenhead and the colliery.

BLANNERHASSET, with KIRKLAND, a township, in the parish of TORPENHOW, union of WIGTON, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Wigton; containing 224 inhabitants. A meeting-house for Independents was rebuilt in 1828.

BLETCHINGLEY (ST. MARY), a parish (formerly a borough and market-town), in the union of GODSTONE, First division of the hundred of TANBRIDGE, E. division of SURREY, 21 miles (S.) from London; comprising by computation 5600 acres, and containing 3546 inhabitants. The town, which is pleasantly situated on the road from Godstone to Reigate, is of considerable antiquity: a castle was erected here, soon after the Conquest, by Gilbert, Earl of Clare, which was demolished by Prince Edward, after the battle of Lewes, in 1264, and the foundations alone are now remaining. Fairs are held on May 10th and Nov. 2nd, for horses, hogs, and lean cattle. Shortly after quitting the London and Brighton railway near Reigate, the South-Eastern railway at this place enters a tunnel 1080 yards in length. A bailiff and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The borough received the elective franchise in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time it continued to return two members to parliament, until its disfranchisement by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45. The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 19. 4½., and in the gift of H. Chawner, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1185, and there are 90 acres of glebe. The church is a spacious and venerable structure, in the early style of English architecture, with a low tower; the south chancel is entirely occupied by a magnificent monument to the memory of the first Sir Robert Clayton, Knt., and his lady, whose effigies in white marble stand on a projecting base: the knight is represented in his robes, as lord mayor of London. There are several other monuments, of which the principal is that of Sir William Bensley, Bart., R.N., by Bacon. John Thomas, Bishop of Rochester, and Sir Thomas Cavendish, master of the revels to Henry VIII., were also interred here, and the former was at one time incumbent, as was also Archbishop Herring. There is a place of worship for Independents. Thomas Evans, in 1633, founded a free school for 20 boys, and endowed it with land now producing £20 per annum. The town is near a Roman road; and at Pendhill, in the parish, some workmen discovered part of the foundations of a Roman bath, the different apartments in which were paved, and some of the walls lined with Roman tiles. The union workhouse is a spacious building near the town, erected in 1839.

BLETCHLEY (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. by S.) from Fenny-Strat- ford; containing, with part of the chapelry of Fenny-Stratford, and the township of Water Eaton, 1415 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the London and Birmingham railway, of which the Bletchley and Fenny-Stratford station is situated here. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £29. 13. 1½.; net income, £456; patron, J. Fleming, Esq.: in 1810, land and a money payment were assigned in lieu of tithes. There is a school on the national system; and on the inclosure of the common, 25 acres were assigned for the benefit of the poor.

BLETSSOE (ST. MARY), a parish, in the hundred of WILLEY, union and county of BEDFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Bedford; containing 420 inhabitants. It comprises about 2000 acres; the soil is gravel and clay; the surface is rather hilly, and the meadows are occasionally flooded by the river Ouse, which runs through the parish. Here are the remains of an ancient castle, formerly belonging to Lord Bolingbroke, and part of which has been destroyed for the materials. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17, and in the patronage of Lord St. John: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £333. 18. 9., and there are 34 acres of glebe. A bequest of £8 per annum is applied to the support of a Sunday school. There is a mineral spring, but the water is seldom used medicinally.

BLEWBERRY (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WANTAGE, partly in the hundred of MORETON, but chiefly in that of READING, county of BERKS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from East Ilsley; containing, with the chapelries of Aston-Upthorp and Upton, and the liberty of Nottingham-Fee, 1096 inhabitants. The parish comprises upwards of 4000 acres, of which about 2500 are arable, and the rest pasture and meadow: the soil is partly of a cold chalky nature, but round the village it is a strong clay loam, and in other parts gravel and peat. A large stream, issuing from a bed of chalk, runs through the village, and is well stocked with trout; it turns several mills within three miles, and falls into the river Thames at Wallingford. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 6. 10½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Salisbury: the tithes of the prebendary of Blewberry have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1100, and the vicarial tithes for one of £232. 13.: there are $217\frac{1}{2}$ acres of appropriate glebe, and 1a. 3r. belonging to the vicar. In addition to the parochial church, there are chapels of ease at Aston-Upthorp and Upton. William Malthus, by will dated Nov. 16th, 1700, after specifying certain bequests, directed the residue of his estate to be sold, and the money to be invested in land, now producing a net income of about £916: the trustees allow £161 for the support of ten boys at Reading, and other sums for the instruction, clothing, and apprenticing of children. An almshouse for one poor man was founded and endowed with a gift of £271. 13. 4., by Mr. Bacon, in 1732; the lands are let for £38 per annum. A large edifice, called the Charter-house, supposed to have been used as a place of worship previously to the Reformation, was taken down a few years since. A field between Blewberry and Aston is thought to have been the scene of a severe conflict between the Saxons, under Ethelred and his brother Alfred, and the Danes, in which the latter were defeated with great slaughter; and in forming a new turnpike-road, in 1804, many human skeletons and military weapons were found near the spot. The parish is intersected by a Roman and a British road, termed respectively Ickleton and Grimsditch. There is an encampment of considerable extent on a hill called Blewberton; and Loughborough Hill, the loftiest eminence in the county, has also been crowned by an ancient work, apparently constructed for purposes of warfare.

BLICKLING (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of AYLSHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N. W. by N.) from Aylsham; containing 356 inhabitants. Before the Conquest the manor was in the possession of Harold, afterwards king of England; but William I. settled the whole on the see; and after the foundation of Norwich cathedral, the bishops held the demesne in their own hands, and had a palace here. Charles II., with his queen, visited the hall, in their progress through the county, in 1671. The edifice is of brick, in the Elizabethan style, and is nearly environed with large old trees, and situated in a beautiful park of about 700 acres. The road from Aylsham to Holt passes through the parish, which is bounded on the north-east by a branch of the river Bure, and comprises 2114a. 2r. 12p., of which 924 acres are arable, 755 meadow and pasture, and 401 woodland and plantations. The living is a rectory, with that of Erpingham annexed, valued in the king's books at £10. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Dowager Lady Suffield: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £400, and the glebe comprises 17 acres. The church, which is picturesquely situated near the hall, is in the decorated and later styles, and consists of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, with a low square tower. A school for girls, and a Sunday school for boys, are supported by Lady Suffield.

BLIDWORTH (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of MANSFIELD, hundred of THURGARTON, liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY, though locally in the wapentake of BROXTOW, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from Mansfield; containing, with the hamlets of Bottoms, Fishpool, and Rainworth, and the extra-parochial places of Lindhurst and Haywood Oaks, 1154 inhabitants. At the time of the Norman survey this formed a berewic to Oxton, and in the 3rd of Henry V. was given by that monarch to the college of Southwell. The parish comprises 5302a. 3r. 20p. The village is nearly in the centre of the ancient forest of Sherwood, in all the perambulations of which, from the reign of Henry I. to that of Charles II., it is mentioned as a forest town: it is pleasantly situated upon an eminence, surrounded by some of the finest sylvan scenery of the forest. A portion of the population is employed as frame-work knitters of stockings. A fair for sheep is held on old Michaelmas-day. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4, and in the alternate patronage of the two prebendaries of Oxton; net income, £188. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1769 and 1805; the glebe comprises 140 acres. The original church becoming dilapidated, the present edifice was erected in 1740, and re-roofed and enlarged, in 1839, by the Rev. John Downhall, incumbent, at an expense of above £1000. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. In a field near the village is a rocky formation of sand and gravel, commonly called plum-pudding stone; it is fourteen feet high, and eighty-four in circumference, and is supposed to have been a Druidical idol.

BLINDBOTHEL, a township, in the parish of BRIGHAM, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Cockermouth; containing 100 inhabitants. As a commutation in lieu of tithes, land was assigned to the impropiator in 1812. There is a small school, partly supported by a subscription of £7 per annum.

BLINDCRAKE, with ISELL and REDMAIN, a township, in the parish of ISELL, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Cockermouth; containing 347 inhabitants.

BLISLAND (St. Pratt), a parish, in the union of BODMIN, hundred of TRIGG, E. division of CORNWALL, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Bodmin; containing 688 inhabitants. A cattle fair is held on the Monday next after September 22nd. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 10.; net income, £571; patron and incumbent, Rev. F. W. Pye. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BLISWORTH (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of TOWCESTER, hundred of WYMMERSLEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Towcester; containing 882 inhabitants. It is intersected by the road from Northampton to Towcester, and comprises 1804 acres, including 50 occupied by the London and Birmingham railway, the annual value of which property in the parish is returned at £1400. The Grand Junction canal enters the parish by means of a tunnel from the adjoining parish of Stoke-Bruerne, and continues its course northward until it is joined by the Northampton canal. Here also is one of the first class stations on the line of the railway, which passes close to the village, near which occurs a cutting through blue limestone rock, about two miles long, with an average depth of 50 feet: the quantity of rock removed is estimated at 1,200,000 cubic yards, and the expense at £200,000. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 3. 9.; net income, £351; patrons, Trustees of J. Barry, Esq. As a commutation in lieu of tithes (with certain exceptions) land and a money payment were assigned in 1808. The free school is endowed with £11 per annum.

BLITHBURY, a hamlet, in the parish of MAVESYN-RIDWARE, union of LICHFIELD, N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD; containing 144 inhabitants.

BLITHFIELD (St. Leonard), a parish, in the union of TUXTETER, hundred of SOUTH PIREHILL, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Rugeley; containing, with Newton liberty and Admas-ton hamlet, 390 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 19. 2.; net income, £388; patron, Lord Bagot; appropriator, Bishop of Oxford. Elizabeth Bagot and Jane Jones, in 1729, gave land, now producing about £35 per annum, which is applied to the support of a school on the national system.

BLOCKHOUSE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the city, union, and county of WORCESTER; containing 1280 inhabitants. A district church was erected in 1834.

BLOCKLEY (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union of SHIPSTON, situated in a detached portion of the Upper division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Blockley and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, surrounded by Gloucestershire and a small portion of Warwickshire, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Moreton; comprising the townships of Blockley, and the hamlets of Aston Magna, Dorne, Ditchford, Draycot, and Paxford; and containing 2136 inhabitants, of whom 1412 are in the township of Blockley. It consists of 7571 acres, of which 3190 are arable, 4035 meadow and pasture, and 341 wood; the soil is rich and fertile, and the lands in good cultivation. There are several silk-mills, worked by small streams, which rise in Dovedale, a short distance hence. Fairs are held on the Tuesday next after Easter-week, for cattle, and Oct. 10th, for hiring servants; a manorial court is occasionally held under the Bishop of Worcester who is lord of the manor, and the petty-sessions for the division are held here. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £54; net income, £762; patron and appropriator, the Bishop: the tithes were commuted for land in 1772. The church is partly Norman, and partly in the early English style; the tower was rebuilt in 1725, at the expense of the inhabitants. A chapel of ease has recently been erected; and there is a place of worship for Baptists. Premises for a school, upon the national plan, were built about twelve years since by Lord Northwick; the endowment, arising from various sums bequeathed by the ancestors of his lordship, amounts to £12. 14. per annum. In a charter of King Burhred, dated 855, mention is made of a monastery, which then existed, and which was subsequently annexed to the bishopric of Worcester: the bishops had anciently a palace here. The Roman Fosse-way passed between this village and Moreton-in-the-Marsh. Urns and other Roman remains have been found on Moor Hill; and there are several chalybeate springs.

BLODWELL.—See LLAN-Y-BLODWELL.

BLOFIELD (St. Andrew), a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of BLOFIELD, E. division of NORFOLK, 7 miles (E.) from Norwich; containing 1112 inhabitants. It comprises about 2252 acres; and the road from Norwich to Yarmouth runs through the village, in which is a branch post-office. Petty-sessions are held at the Globe inn every alternate Monday. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £23. 6. 8.; net income, £896; patrons, Master and Fellows of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge: the glebe consists of about 62 acres, with a handsome house, erected in 1806. The church is in the later style, with a lofty square embattled tower, surmounted at each angle by a figure of one of the Evangelists. The Independents have a place of worship. The Rev. Charles Reve, a former rector, in 1729, bequeathed a rent of £10, with a schoolroom and a house for the master near the church, for the education of boys, and smaller sums for other charitable uses: another school, for girls, is supported by subscription. The rent of about 37 acres of land, awarded at the inclosure, is distributed in coal among the poor. The union of Blofield comprises 32 parishes or places, and contains a population of 10,555.

BLO-NORTON (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union and hundred of GUILT-CROSS, W. division of NORFOLK,

5 miles (S. by E.) from East Harling; containing 435 inhabitants. It comprises 1133a. 2r. 2p., of which 841 acres are arable, 227 pasture, and the remainder, wood and waste land, and roads. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 3.; patron and incumbent, Rev. Charles Howman Browne, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £330, and who has about 20 acres of glebe. The church, which is partly in the early, and partly in the decorated style, consists of a nave and chancel, with a square embattled tower. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists; and a school is supported by endowment. Under an inclosure act in 1822, 25 acres of land were awarded to the poor for fuel; and on the same occasion, $7\frac{1}{2}$ acres were added to $8\frac{1}{2}$ which had been left to the poor by Robert Browne, in 1765.

BLOOMSBURY, ST. GEORGE.—See LONDON.

BLOORE-IN-TYRLEY, a township, in the parish of DRAYTON-IN-HALES, union of DRAYTON, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Drayton; containing, with Hales, 561 inhabitants. Bloore Heath is distinguished as the scene of a sanguinary battle fought in 1459, between the Lancastrians, under the command of Lord Audley, and the Yorkists, under that of the Earl of Salisbury, in which the former were defeated, and about 2400 persons of distinction were slain, among whom was Lord Audley; a wooden cross, resting upon a stone pedestal bearing an inscription commemorative of the event, marks the spot on which his lordship fell. A school is principally supported by the Rev. A. H. Buchanan.

BLORE (St. Bartholomew), a parish, in the N. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, and of the county of STAFFORD; containing 333 inhabitants, of whom 273 are in the township of Blore with Swainscoe, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Ashbourn. The parish comprises about 1900 acres, and is bounded on the north by the rivers Manifold and Dove, and intersected by the road from Derby to Manchester; it commands, from its elevated situation, very extensive views, the Wrekin in Shropshire, and the Leicestershire hills being distinctly visible. There is excellent limestone, which is used for building; and lead-ore, in small quantity, is sometimes found in the limestone rocks. A fair is held for cattle and sheep on the 20th of September. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 8.; net income, £130; patron, Offley Shore, Esq.: the glebe consists of about 40 acres, with a house, newly built in the Elizabethan style. The church, erected in the fourteenth century, has a nave and chancel, with a square tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BLOXHAM, or BLOXHOLME (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of SLEAFORD, wapentake of FLAXWELL, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Sleaford; containing 67 inhabitants. This parish, situated near the road from Sleaford to Lincoln, comprises about 1200 acres, of which 700 are arable, 250 pasture and meadow, and the remainder waste; stone is quarried, and used as lime. The living is a rectory, to which the vicarage of Digby was united in 1717, valued in the king's books at £9. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of R. A. Christopher, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £209. 5. 2., and the glebe comprises 18 acres, with a house. The church is a neat edifice, and in the chancel are deposited the remains of many members of the Manners family, late the possessors of the lordship. A small school is supported by Lady M. Christopher.

BLOXHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BANBURY, hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Banbury; containing, with the chapelry of Milcombe, 1543 inhabitants. A petty-session is held by the county magistrates once every month. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17. 9. 4., and in the gift of Eton College, with a net income of £262: land and annual money payments were assigned in lieu of tithes in the 39th and 40th of George III. The church, which is justly admired for loftiness of elevation and beauty of design, was greatly damaged during the war between the houses of York and Lancaster, but was repaired in the reign of Henry VIII., and beautified by Cardinal Wolsey. It is principally in the early and decorated English styles, with some Norman remains, and a highly enriched tower of four stages, strengthened by angular buttresses ornamented with canopied niches rising to the third stage, and terminating in finials; the fourth stage, of smaller dimensions, gradually becomes octagonal, corresponding with the lofty crocketed spire by which it is surmounted. At Milcombe, in the parish, is a chapel of ease; and there is a place of worship for Baptists. There is a free school, established in 1831, which is endowed by the will of Mr. Job Faulkner, with the interest of £666. 13. 4. three per cent. consols.

BLOXWICH, a chapelry, or district, in the parish and union of WALSALL, S. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (N. N. W.) from Walsall. This place, from its vicinity to Walsall, participates to a considerable extent in the manufactures and trade of that town, and derives benefit from the Essington and Wyrley canal, which passes through the chapelry. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £143; patron, Bishop of Lichfield. The district church, dedicated to St. Thomas, is of modern erection. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Roman Catholics; also a national school.

BLOXWORTH (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of WAREHAM and PURBECK, hundred of COOMBS-DITCH, Wareham division of DORSET, 8 miles (S.) from Blandford; containing 306 inhabitants. It comprises about 3000 acres, of which 900 are arable, 400 pasture, 200 meadow, 80 woodland, chiefly coppice, and the remainder heath; the soil is various, in some parts clay, in others chalk, alternated with sand. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 7. 1.; net income, £230; patron, George Pickard, Esq. The church is an ancient structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower. There is a school on the national plan. On a hill called Woolsbarrow, situated on the heath, about a mile towards the east, are vestiges of a small fortification, supposed to be of Danish origin, the ramparts and trenches of which may be traced: near it are several tumuli.

BLUBBER-HOUSES, a township, in the parish of FEWSTON, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 8 miles (N. by W.) from Otley; containing 99 inhabitants. It comprises about 3600 acres, chiefly moorland and pasture, with a small proportion of arable land; the surface is strikingly varied, and the scenery bold. Brandith Craggs, a range of lofty rocks, is situated in the neighbourhood, where is a rocking-stone easily moved with one hand, though its weight cannot be less than 20 tons.

BLUNDESTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the incorporation, and hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3½ miles (N. W.) from Lowestoft; containing 592 inhabitants. It is situated on the navigable river Waveney, which forms its boundary on the south-west. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Flixton united, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Rev. George Anguish: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £610, and there are nearly 13 acres of glebe. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The Rev. Gregory Clarke, in 1726, gave land for the instruction of children, of the annual value of about £11.

BLUNHAM (St. EDMUND), a parish, in the union of BIGGLESWADE, hundred of WIXAMTREE, county of BEDFORD, 5¼ miles (N. N. W.) from Biggleswade, on the great north road; containing, with the hamlet of Muggerhanger, 1050 inhabitants. The parish is situated at the junction of the Ivel with the Ouse, the latter of which is navigable to Bedford; it comprises 2589 acres, of which 1785 are arable, 424 meadow, 250 pasture, and 130 plantation; the soil is light and convertible, the surface level, and the meadow lands subject to floods. A large proportion of the females are employed in the manufacture of pillow-lace, and in preparing straw-bonnet plat. In the reign of Edward H., the inhabitants obtained the grant of a weekly market on Wednesday, and of an annual fair on the festival of St. James, both which have long been discontinued. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £46. 2. 11., and in the patronage of the Countess de Grey; net income, £731, derived from land: the glebe comprises about 600 acres, with a residence. The church is a commodious, but plain structure; the interior and the tower appear of different dates; there are some ancient monuments, among which is one to Lady Susan Longueville, daughter and heiress of Charles de Grey, Earl of Kent, who died at the manor-house in 1625. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists; and a national school for boys is supported by Earl de Grey and the rector. Within the parish is a mineral spring, called Poplar Well.

BLUNSDON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of HIGHWORTH and SWINDON, hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, Cricklade and N. divisions of WILTS, 4¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Highworth; containing 79 inhabitants. This is supposed, from the numerous human bones, spurs, and military relics found, to have been the scene of hostilities during the parliamentary war. The parish comprises by measurement 1301 acres; and stone of excellent quality for building is found in abundance. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 19. 2., and in the patronage of John James Calley, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £305. The church is ancient.

BLUNSDON, BROAD, a chapelry, in the parish of HIGHWORTH, union of HIGHWORTH and SWINDON, hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, Swindon and N. divisions of WILTS, 3 miles (W. by S.) from Highworth; containing 831 inhabitants.

BLUNTISHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ST. IVES, hundred of HURSTINGSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from St. Ives; containing, with Earith chapelry, 743 inhabitants, of whom 740 are in the township of Bluntisham. This parish, which is bounded for nearly three miles on the south by the navigable river Ouse, contains two portions, of which the larger forms part of the manor and soke of Somersham, and the smaller a considerable manor belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Ely. In 1741, the place suffered materially from a dreadful hurricane, which threw down sixty barns and twelve dwelling-houses, and did much damage to other kinds of property. The living is a rectory, with Earith annexed, valued in the king's books at £32. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £1010; patron, Bishop of Ely. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Thomas Skeeles, in 1703, devised about 62 acres of fen land, now let for £32 per annum, for the endowment of a school; and the Rev. Samuel Saywell bequeathed 14 acres of pasture land, now let for £55. 10., also for the instruction of children. Lands, yielding a considerable rental, are also held in trust for the benefit of the poor, amongst whom the produce of other bequests is likewise distributed.

BLURTON, a chapelry, in the parish of TRENTHAM, union of STONE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Newcastle-under-Line; containing 876 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £189; patron and impropiator, Duke of Sutherland.

BLYBOROUGH (St. ALKMOND), a parish, in the union of GAINSBOROUGH, W. division of the wapentake of ASLACOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (S.) from Kirton-in-Lindsey; containing 197 inhabitants. This parish comprises 2353*a. 2r. 29p.*, and is situated on the road from Lincoln to Barton-on-Humber, by which it is bounded on the east; the soil is various, but chiefly consists of loam, clay, and sand, and the surface is rather level. Limestone is quarried for building, and the repair of roads. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19, and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £557, and there are nearly two acres of glebe, with a residence. A tessellated pavement was discovered a few years since in a field, a few inches below the surface, in a perfect state. There are mineral springs.

BLYMHILL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SHIFFNALL, W. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 6 miles (W. N. W.) from Brewood; containing 632 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 2433 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 10. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Earl of Bradford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £560, and there are 76 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres. Schoolrooms have been built chiefly at the expense of the rector.

BLYTH (St. MARTIN), a parish, portions of which are in the unions of DONCASTER, EAST RETFORD, and WORKSOP; partly in the N. and partly in the S. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK; and partly in the liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY, and partly in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $31\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Nottingham, and $151\frac{1}{2}$ (N. N. W.) from London, on the old road to York; containing 3488 inhabitants, of whom 811 are in the village of Blyth. This place, anciently called Blia and Blida, was chiefly noted in former times for its religious and charitable establishments. In 1088, a priory was founded in honour of the Blessed Virgin, by Roger de Builly and his wife Muriel, for monks of the Benedictine order, which, though considered as an alien priory, being in some respects subordinate to the abbey of the Holy Trinity, near Rouen, in Normandy, was spared at the suppression of alien priories, and subsisted till the general dissolution, when its revenue was estimated at £126. 8. 2. An hospital for lepers, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, was founded by Hugh de Cressy, lord of Hodssock, in the reign of John, for a warden, three chaplains, and brethren, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £8. 14.: of these buildings, as well as of a strong castle which is known to have been anciently erected here, there are scarcely any remains, having been demolished by wanton hands, or decayed by time; the monastic institution occupied the site and grounds of the present hall, a handsome mansion of considerable magnitude which stands near the church, and in a situation surrounded by beautiful scenery, and is the property of Henry Frederick Walker, Esq. The lord of the honour of Tickhill had a castle at Blyth, where he exercised the usual feudal rights of a lord paramount; and in the immediate neighbourhood was one of the five places which alone were licensed for holding tournaments, and several records are preserved of royal and noble blood having been shed in these dangerous sports.

The parish, nearly 11 miles in extreme length, contains the chapelries of Bawtry and Austerfield, and the townships of Barnby-Moor, Blyth, Hodssock, Ranskill, Torworth, and part of Styrrup; it comprises 15,477*a. 11p.* of fertile land, of which 1257 acres are in the township, and is intersected by the river Idle. The town, which is four miles from Bawtry, is pleasantly situated on the east bank of the Ryton, on a gentle ascent; and is clean and well built, and amply supplied with water. The market, which was formerly held on Wednesday, has been discontinued; the fairs are on Holy-Thursday and October 20th. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14. 9. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$.; gross income, £751; patrons and impropiators, Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church is a lofty structure, partly in the Norman style, and once formed the ante-choir of the splendid cruciform church of the priory; it has a handsome tower, in the later style of English architecture, with crocketed pinnacles. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends and Wesleyans; and a school is endowed with land producing £12 per annum. Almshouses for six aged people, supposed to have been originally an appendage to the hospital founded by Hugh de Cressy, have been lately rebuilt, and there are also almshouses for two aged women, endowed with £10 per annum, under the management of the Society of Friends, besides other charitable bequests for the relief of the poor.

BLYTH, NORTH, a township, in the parish of BEDLINGTON, union of MORPETH, E. division of CHESTER ward, county of DURHAM, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Morpeth; containing 123 inhabitants. Ralph de El- lyngeham was anciently possessed of a portion of the manor and of part of the fishery of Wansbeck. The village is situated on a peninsula upon the northern side of the river Blyth, opposite to the port and town of South Blyth, and is chiefly inhabited by fishermen and pilots. The manufacture of salt and earthenware was formerly carried on to a considerable extent, but has been wholly discontinued. There are several store-houses for corn, and a quay. A little to the north-east of the village is a large cluster of rocks, called the Row-cars, which appear at low-water mark, though there are five fathoms of water close to the ledge.

lordship of Newsham, and exclusively of that part of the town which is in the parish of Horton, 1921 inhabitants. The river and port were of much importance to the bishops of Durham in ancient times, and are named in the records with the Tyne, Wear, and Tees, as subject to their jurisdiction, with all the royal rights appertaining to their possession. The place was the property of a younger branch of the Cramlingtons in the reign of Elizabeth, and in the time of Charles I. was possessed by Robert Cramlington; but his estate being sequestrated by the parliament, it was afterwards purchased by a wealthy London merchant, by whom it was sold to Col. Thomas Ratcliff, and is now in possession of Sir M. White Ridley, Bart., a descendant of the family to which the martyred Bishop Ridley belonged. In August, 1795, the Duke of York, accompanied by Prince William of Gloucester, reviewed the troops encamped on the coast of Northumberland, upon Blyth sands, the whole force consisting of 13 regiments, who performed their various evolutions in the presence of nearly 60,000 persons.

The town, which is advantageously situated on the north side of the Blyth, at its influx into the North Sea, is remarkably pleasant and well built, and though at the commencement of the present century it was of slight importance, and its streets narrow and few, it is now extensively engaged in commerce, and ranks among the most bustling small sea-ports of the kingdom. The trade consists principally in the export of coal from the Cowpen and other collieries, and the importation of various articles of local consumption. The produce of the Bedlington iron-works, which are about three miles distant, is brought down the Blyth to this port for shipment; it includes a great number of locomotive engines and vast quantities of machinery, manufactured by Messrs. Longridge, and Co., and justly noted for their excellence, and which are sent to all parts of the world. In 1842, 8 foreign, and 120 coasting vessels, with cargoes, entered inwards; and 223 foreign, and 826 coasting vessels, entered outwards; 190,000 tons of coal were exported, and the amount of duties received in the same year was £1641. 9. 3.: the number of ships registered as belonging to the port and to Seaton-Sluice, is 100. The river near its mouth abounds with sea fish, and the higher parts of the stream are frequented by fresh-water fish of extremely fine quality. The harbour, the entrance to which is at all times free from obstruction, is quite secure, even during the most tempestuous weather, but accessible only to vessels of moderate burthen; the tide flowed over an extensive waste on the western side of it, but, with a view to counteract this, a quay has been formed on the margin of the river, and a dry dock, capable of receiving three vessels, were constructed in 1811. A circular stone lighthouse was built by Sir M. W. Ridley, in 1788, and there is also a beacon light, called the Basket-Rock light. The custom-house here had formerly the controul of the coast as far south as Cullercoats, where large quantities of coal were shipped, and the vessels had to pay their dues and clear out at Blyth, but since the Tyne has risen into such importance, the whole is now under Newcastle customs. Ship-building and repairing (for which latter purpose there is a patent slip), and also sail-making, are carried on; and there are some roperies, a large brewery, &c., and extensive timber, iron, and slate yards belonging to James Wright, Esq.; James Thoburn, Esq., of Paradise-row, who conducts some large agencies, is proprietor of a sail-loft, and Mr. J. Hodgson has an extensive business in corn. There are two steam, and three wind, flour-mills; and in the town are excellent and commodious inns, and vapour, shower, and warm baths. A bench of magistrates hold a monthly court.

The land in the chapelry is a good strong wheat soil, and the seams of coal beneath are of the best description for steam purposes, and are let by Sir M. W. Ridley to the owners of Cowpen colliery. The chapel was erected by the then Sir M. W. Ridley, in 1751: the living is a donative curacy, in the patronage of the present baronet, with a net income of £93. The improper tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £227. 6., payable to Sir Matthew, with the exception of a portion payable to the Duke of Northumberland, as joint impropiator of the tithes for the lordship of Newsham. There are places of worship for Presbyterians, Scottish Seceders, Wesleyans, and Methodists of the New Connexion. George Marshall, author of a miscellaneous volume of poems, and "Letters from an Elder to a Younger Brother," was born at the place.

BLYTHBURGH (HOLY TRINITY), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union and hundred of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Wangford; containing, with the hamlets of Hinton and Bulcamp, 837 inhabitants. The origin of this place has been ascribed to the Britons; but the only relics of antiquity that have been found are some Roman urns, which were dug up about 1768, which circumstance, together with the termination of the name, affords evidence of its having been a Roman station. In 654, a battle was fought at Bulcamp, between Anna, King of the East Angles, and Penda, King of Mercia, in which the latter was victorious, and the former was slain, together with his son Ferminus, and interred in the church, whence their remains were afterwards removed to Bury-St. Edmund's. A priory of Black canons, of uncertain foundation, was given by Henry I. to the abbey of St. Osyth, in the county of Essex, to which it remained subordinate till the Dissolution, when its revenue was valued at £48. 8. 10. The parish comprises 3711 acres, and is situated on the river Blyth; the quality of the land varies from a mixed soil to a sandy loam. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £45; patron, Sir Charles Blois, Bart.: the improper tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £505. The church, a spacious and handsome building, but much dilapidated, consists of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, with a lofty embattled tower; it was formerly profusely ornamented with paintings, sculpture, monumental brasses, and stained glass, but the three first were destroyed in the time of Cromwell, and of the last only a few fragments remain. The house of industry for the union and hundred of Blything is situated at the hamlet of Bulcamp, in the parish; the union comprises 49 parishes or places, and contains a population of 27,319. A portion of the ruins of the priory may still be discerned, and there are some slight remains of an ancient chapel, called Holy Rood chapel.

BLYTHFORD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Halesworth; containing 223 inhabitants. The parish, which is bounded on the south by the river Blyth, comprises 953 acres. The living is a private donative, of which the stipend is optional, in the patronage of the Rev. Jeremy Day. The church consists of a nave and chancel, with an embattled tower; the entrances on the north and south are through decorated Norman doorways.

BLYTH NORNEY, a hamlet, partly in the parish of BLYTH, and partly in that of HARWORTH, union of WORKSOP, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 2 miles (N.) from Blyth; containing 75 inhabitants. It is situated on the north bank of the river Idle, and opposite to the village of Blyth.

BLYTON (ST. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of GAINSBOROUGH, wapentake of CORRINGHAM, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. E.) from Gainsborough; containing, with the township of Wharton, 647 inhabitants, and comprising 4002*a.* 3*r.* The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12; net income, £399; patron and improprator, Earl of Scarborough: the tithes were commuted for land in the 36th of George III.; the glebe consists of 260 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is endowed with £20 per annum.

BOARDLEY, with HETTON, a township, in the parish of BURNSALL, union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE, and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 8 miles (N. N. W.) from Skipton; containing 191 inhabitants. This place forms a constablewick, and comprises about 4980 acres, stretching in a northerly direction on both sides of a rivulet to its source; a great portion of the soil is open moorland. At the time of the inclosure, 15*a.* 2*r.* 3*p.* were allotted to the poor in lieu of right of commonage.

BOARHUNT, a parish, in the union of FAREHAM, hundred of PORTSDOWN, Fareham and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2 miles (N. E.) from Fareham; containing 232 inhabitants. It comprises about 8000 acres of land, of which the surface is marked by gentle undulations, and the soil consists of chalk, sand, and clay. From the top of Portsdown Hill, which skirts the parish, is one of the finest views in England; beneath is the harbour of Portsmouth studded with shipping; in the distance is the famous anchorage of Spithead; while the lofty hills of the Isle of Wight close the landscape to the sea: on the other side is a richly wooded country, chiefly planted with oak, and a far extended valley which terminates at the foot of a range of hills; Portsdown fair is of fashionable resort. The living is a donative, in the patronage of T. Thistlethwayte, Esq., and is joined with the parish of Southwick: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £47. 2. The church is in the early English style, and was formerly the chapel of a Cistercian monastery, of which there are still traces. Five chantries were founded here by William of Wykeham. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. On that part of Portsdown within the parish, a monument has been erected, in memory of Lord Nelson, which also serves as a beacon. Several Roman urns have been found in the park of Mr. Thistlethwayte.

BOARSTALL (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of BICESTER, hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Bicester; containing 252 inhabitants. This place formed part of the ancient demesnes of the Anglo-Saxon kings, who had a palace here, which was frequently the residence of Edward the Confessor, when enjoying the pleasure of the chase in the forest of Bernwood. According to tradition, corroborated by the records of the manor, the forest was at that time infested by a wild boar, which, after committing great depredation, was killed by a hunter named Nigel, to whom the king granted some lands here to be held by the tenure of cornage, or the service of a horn. Nigel erected a spacious manor-house on these lands, which continued in the possession of his descendants till the beginning of the fourteenth century, when the estate was conveyed by marriage to Richard de Handlo, who, in 1322, obtained permission of the king to fortify his mansion at Boarstall, and convert it into a castle. In the early part of the civil war, Boarstall Castle was garrisoned for the king, but was evacuated in 1644, and immediately seized by the parliamentarian forces stationed at Aylesbury, from whom it was retaken by Col. Gage, and again garrisoned for the king; but, after holding out for some time, it was ultimately surrendered to General Fairfax in 1646. The old mansion was demolished by the late Sir John Aubrey, and the only part remaining is the gateway tower, which is quadrangular and defended by embattled turrets at the angles, with portions of the moat by which it was surrounded, and over which is a bridge of two arches, the gateway being secured by massive doors with iron plates and studs. The parish comprises by measurement 2550 acres, of which 100 are woodland, and the rest is divided between arable and pasture. It was formerly a chapelry in the parish of Oakley, from which it was separated in 1418. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Brill; improprator, Sir T. D. Aubrey, Bart. The church, erected in 1818 by the late Sir John Aubrey on the site of the former edifice, is a neat building. There are some small bequests for the poor.

BOBBING (ST. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union and hundred of MILTON, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (W. by N.) from Milton; containing 404 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 1070 acres. A fair is held on September 4th. The living is a vicarage not in charge, in the gift of the Rev. G. Simpson, who is also impropiator of one-third of the parish; the remainder is impropriate in R. Hinde, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £194. 12., and the vicarial for one of £140; and there are 35 acres of glebe. The church is composed of two aisles, two chancels, and a western tower. A benefaction of £50 from Ann Gibbon has been vested in land, now producing £6. 6. per annum, for which seven girls are instructed. At Key-street, a small hamlet in the parish, corruptly so called for Caius'-street (Caii Stratum), being situated on a Roman highway, is a gravel-pit of unusual size and depth, from which the Romans perhaps obtained part of the materials for making the road.

BOBBINGTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SEISDON, partly in the hundred of BRIMSTREE, S. division of SALOP, but chiefly in the S. division of the hundred of SEISDON and of the county of STAFFORD, 9 miles (S. W.) from Wolverhampton; containing 418 inhabitants, and comprising 2676*a. 3r. 9p.* The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £97; patron and impropiator, T. Whitmore, Esq., whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £543. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a free school was built, in 1792, by Hannah Cobbett, who endowed it with £1400 three per cents.

BOBBINGWORTH (St. GERMAN), a parish, in the union and hundred of ONGAR, S. division of ESSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Chipping-Ongar; containing 357 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises 1400 acres, is of very uneven surface, rising into hills of moderate elevation, and commanding in some parts pleasing, and in others highly enriched scenery; the village is built round a pleasant green, and has a cheerful aspect. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Capel Cure, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £446. 5., and there are 35 acres of glebe. The church, which is at some distance from the village, appears to have been erected at different periods; the chancel, which is the most ancient part, is of stone, and has a handsome east window of the decorated English style. A national school is supported by Mr. Cure.

BOCKENFIELD, a township, in the parish of FELTON, union of MORPETH, E. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Morpeth; containing 127 inhabitants. Near this place, which lies west from Eshott, and comprises 1970 acres, is an eminence called Helm-on-the-Hill, over which the road from Morpeth to Alnwick was once carried, but which is now avoided by a new branch, formed some years since, on its west side. Here was formerly a chapel, of which there are now no remains.

BOCKHAMPTON, with EASTBURY, a tything, in the parish and hundred of LAMBOURN, union of HUNGERFORD, county of BERKS, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (S. E. by E.) from Lambourn; containing 428 inhabitants, of whom 78 are in Bockhampton. It comprises, by survey in 1806, 1098*a. 1r. 15p.*

BOCKING (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BRAINTREE, hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 1 mile (N.) from Braintree; containing 3437 inhabitants. The parish comprises 4490*a. 1r. 12p.*, of which 3460 acres are arable, 617 meadow and pasture, 262 woodland, and 30 hop grounds; and is intersected by the river Blackwater, which puts in motion the machinery of several corn-mills and silk-factories. The lands, which rest on a substratum of clay partially mixed with chalk, are chiefly meadow; that portion under tillage produces fair average crops. The village, one of the most extensive in the county, consists of one principal street reaching to the town of Braintree, and containing several well-built houses. The living is a rectory, and the head of a deanery, which still exercises its ancient rights: it is valued in the king's books at £35. 10., and is in the gift of the Archbishop of Canterbury: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1360, and there are nearly 114 acres of glebe. The church, built partly of flints and stone, is a spacious and handsome structure, in the early English style, with a square embattled tower, and contains many interesting monuments. John Gauden, Bishop of Worcester, established a school for boys, and endowed it with land; now producing £50 per annum; and there are also a national, and a Lancastrian school. An almshouse, endowed with about £8 per annum, was built, by license of Henry VI., as a Maison Dieu, or "God's House," by John Doreward, who gave to it, and the chaplain of his chantry in the parish church, his manor of Tendring and a rent-charge on all his lands in this county; but this revenue, it is supposed, was lost at the Dissolution.

BOCKLETON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of TENBURY, chiefly in the Upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, Hundred-House and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, but partly in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, 5 miles (S.) from Tenbury; containing, with the hamlet of Hampton Charles in the latter county, 358 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 2500 acres, of which 2050 are in cultivation, viz., 1026 pasture, 936 arable, and 88 woodland, and there are also some cider orchards and hop grounds; the soil is in general a reddish clay, on a substratum of coarse lime or freestone, and the surface is gently undulated. It is surrounded on all sides, except the east, by the county of Hereford. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £127; patron, Thomas E. Miller, Esq.; appropriator, Treasurer in the Cathedral of Hereford: the glebe consists of rather more than 100 acres. The church has a chancel at the east end, a tower, and two Norman doorways on the north and south. There is a national school.

BOCONNOC, a parish, in the union of LISKEARD, hundred of WEST, E. division of CORNWALL, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Lostwithiel; containing 312 inhabitants. In 1644, during the parliamentary war, Charles I. resided for a short time at Boconnoc House, in the parish, where he had a narrow escape from assassination, having been fired at by a rebel while walking in the grounds. In the park are vestiges of lead-mines, of which one was wrought in the seventeenth century, and again about the middle of the eighteenth. The living is a discharged rectory, with which that of Broadoak was consolidated in 1742, valued in the king's books at £9. 17. 8.; patron, Lord Grenville. The tithes of Boconnoc have been commuted for a rent-charge of £185, and of Broadoak for one of £195; and in the latter parish is a glebe of

BODDINGTON (ST. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of TEWKESBURY, partly in the Lower division of the hundred of WESTMINSTER, and partly in that of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Cheltenham; containing 414 inhabitants. This place is distinguished as the scene of the last great battle fought, in 893, between Alfred the Great and the Danes, who, having entrenched themselves, were surrounded by the king with the whole force of his dominions, with the view of reducing them by famine. After having been compelled to eat their horses, many perished from hunger, and the remainder made a desperate sally upon the English; a great number fell in the action, but a considerable body effected their escape. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Staverton.

BODDINGTON, LOWER and UPPER (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BANBURY, hundred of CHIPPING-WARDEN, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 9½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Daventry; containing 675 inhabitants, of whom 324 are in the lower, and 351 in the upper, division. The parish, situated on the confines of Oxfordshire and Warwickshire, the three-shire-stone which marks the bounds of the respective counties being at its western extremity, comprises 3020*a.* 3*r.* 31*p.*, of which 1721*a.* 34*p.* are in Upper, and 1299*a.* 2*r.* 37*p.* in Lower, Boddington; the surface is diversified by several elevations, and the soil is in general clayey. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20, and in the gift of Emanuel College, Cambridge; net income, £757, derived from land. Richard Lamprey, in 1758, gave a tenement for a school-house; and the interest of £300, being the amount of different benefactions, is paid to a master for instructing poor children.

BODENHAM (ST. MICHAEL), a parish (anciently a market-town), in the union of LEOMINSTER, hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, 8½ miles (N. N. E.) from Hereford; comprising the townships of Bodenham, Bowley, Bryan-Maund, Whitechurch-Maund, and the Moor; and containing 1017 inhabitants, of whom 341 are in the township of Bodenham. The parish is intersected by the river Lug, and comprises 4974*a.* 3*r.* 3*p.*, of which the surface is hilly, and the soil is stiff clay. Walter Devereux, in 1379, obtained permission to hold a market on Tuesday, and a fair on the eve, day, and morrow of the Assumption of Our Lady, but they have been long discontinued. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 1. 5½.; net income, £686; patron, R. Arkwright, Esq.: the tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1802: the glebe consists of 469 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a small endowed school. Thomas Mason, Esq., in 1773, bequeathed nine acres of land, for the benefit of poor housekeepers.

BODENHAM, a tything, in the parish and hundred of DOWNTON, union of ALDERBURY, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Salisbury; containing, with the chapelry of Nunton, 307 inhabitants.

BODHAM (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of HOLT, W. division of NOR- FOLK, 3¼ miles (E.) from Holt; containing 292 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, 'valued in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of Thomas J. T. Mott, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £375. The church, which is in the later English style, consists of a nave and chancel, with a square embattled tower.

BODIAM (ST. GILES), a parish, in the union of TICEHURST, hundred of STAPLE, rape of HASTINGS, E. division of SUSSEX, 2 miles (S. W.) from Sandhurst, and 12 (S. S. E.) from Lamberhurst; comprising 1594 acres, and containing 377 inhabitants. A castle was erected here, in 1386, by Sir Edward Dalyngrudge, which, during the civil war in the reign of Charles I., was dismantled by the parliamentary troops; the remains are in some parts tolerably entire, and the whole, though in a dilapidated state, still forms a stately and magnificent pile. The parish is bounded on the south by the river Rother, which is here navigable; and on the north and north-east, by the county of Kent. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, valued in the king's books at £6. 18. 6½.; patron, Sir E. S. Thomas, Bart. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £320, and the glebe comprises 10 acres. The church is a neat edifice, in the later English style, with a low square embattled tower. Here is a day and Sunday school.

BODICOTT, a chapelry, in the parish of EAST ADDERBURY, union of BANBURY, hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, 1¼ mile (S. by E.) from Banbury; containing 729 inhabitants. It comprises about 1240 acres; the surface is gently undulated, and the scenery generally of pleasing character. The chapel, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is an ancient structure, in the decorated English style. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists.

BODMIN (ST. PETROCK), a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of TRIGG, E. division of CORNWALL; containing, with the borough of Bodmin, which possesses separate jurisdiction, 4643 inhabitants, of whom 4025 are in the old borough; but the parliamentary borough under the Reform Act includes within its limits 5901 inhabitants:

it is 20½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Launceston, and 234½ (W. S. W.) from London, on the western road. This place, in the Cornish language called Bosvenna, "the houses on the hill," and in ancient charters Bos-mana and Bod-minian, "the abode of the monks," owes its origin to a monastery founded by King Athelstan, in 936, on the site of a cell for four brethren, established by St. Petrock, about 518, and which had been previously a solitary hermitage, originally occupied by St. Guron. Historians are widely at variance concerning the claims which Bodmin possesses to the distinction of having been the primary seat of the bishopric of Cornwall. Dr. Borlase, whose opinion has been entertained by others, states that Edward the Elder, in 905, conferred upon it this honour, which it retained till 981, when the town, church, and monastery having been burnt by the Danes, the episcopal chair was removed to St. Germans. But this has been strenuously combated by Mr. Whitaker, in his work entitled "The Ancient Cathedral of Cornwall Historically Surveyed," wherein he shows that the see was founded in 614, and that St. Germans was made the original seat thereof, asserting, on the authority of a grant by King Ethelred, that the monastery of Bodmin was annexed by that monarch, in 994, to the episcopate of St. Germans, and that both places combined to furnish a title to the future prelates until the annexation of the bishopric of Cornwall to that of Crediton, in the county of Devon, in 1031, about twenty years after which Exeter was made the head of the diocese. He refers the Danish conflagration to the monastery of St. Petrock, at Padstow, and in this conclusion he is borne out by the flourishing state of the church at Bodmin, as described in Domesday book, wherein its possessions are enumerated, including 68 houses, with the privilege of a market there. This religious house, under different renewals of the establishment, the last of which was by one Algar, in 1125, appears to have been successively inhabited by Benedictine monks, nuns, secular priests, monks again, and canons regular of the order of St. Augustine, whose prior, from the circumstance of his possessing a gallows and a pillory, had evidently the power of inflicting capital punishment. Its revenue, at the Dissolution amounted to £289. 11. 11. : the site and demesne were granted to Thomas Sternhold, one of the first translators of the Psalms into English metre. St. Petrock was buried here; for, says Leland, "the shrine and tumber of St. Petrok yet stonndith in thest part of the chirche." The town appears to have increased rapidly after the Conquest, since the same antiquary describes the market as being "lyke a fair for the confluence of people," and enumerates, in addition to the parochial church and the cantuary chapel near it, two other chapels, a house and church of Grey Friars, begun by John of London, a merchant, about 1239, augmented by Edward, Earl of Cornwall, and in the time of Elizabeth converted into a house of correction for the county; and two hospitals, dedicated respectively to St. Anthony and St. George, besides the hospital of St. Lawrence, a mile off. Norden also says, "It hath been of larger recite then now it is, as appeareth by the ruynes of sundrye buyldings decayde." William of Worcester, citing the register in the church belonging to the Grey Friars, states that 1500 of the inhabitants died of the plague, about the middle of the fourteenth century. It was one of those decayed towns in the county to repair which an act was passed in the 32nd of Henry VIII.

In 1496, Perkin Warbeck, the pretended duke of York, on landing in Cornwall, assembled here a force of 3000 men, with which he marched to attack the city of Exeter; and, in 1498, an insurrection of the Cornish men was organized, under the influence of Thomas Flammoc, a lawyer, and Michael Joseph, a farrier, in this town, who, being chosen leaders, conducted the insurgents to Wells, where they were joined by Lord Audley, who placed himself at their head. The rebels continued their march into Kent, and encamped at Eltham, where, in the battle of Blackheath, they were surrounded by the king's troops, made prisoners, and dismissed without further punishment; but Lord Audley, Flammoc, and Joseph, were executed as ringleaders. During the depression of trade and agriculture, in the reign of Edward VI., the Cornish men, attributing their distresses to the Reformation, assembled at Bodmin to the number of 10,000, under the command of Humphrey Arundel, governor of St. Michael's Mount, and being countenanced by the inhabitants, encamped at Castle Canyke, near the town. The insurgents marched thence to besiege Exeter, demanding the re-establishment of the mass and the restoration of the abbey lands; but, after having reduced the inhabitants of that city to extreme privation, they were defeated by Lord Russell, who had been sent with a reinforcement to the relief of the citizens. Subsequently to their dispersion, Sir Anthony Kingston, provost-marshal, who had been sent to Bodmin to punish the insurgents, is said to have hanged the mayor at his own door, after having been hospitably entertained in his house. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., the town, which had no permanent garrison, was alternately occupied by each party, till, in 1646, General Fairfax finally took possession of it for the parliament. After the Restoration, Charles II. visited the place, on his journey to Scilly, and humorously declared it to be the most polite town through which he had passed, "one half of the houses being prostrate, and the remainder uncovered."

The town is situated on a gentle elevation rising out of the vale, between two hills, almost in the centre of the county; it consists of several streets, the principal of which is a mile in length; it is well paved, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The races, which formerly took place annually after the summer assizes, have been discontinued for several years; the course, which is one of the best in England, is about a mile and a half distant. In July an annual procession of the populace, on horseback and on foot, carrying garlands of flowers, was, till lately, made to a place in the vicinity, called Halgaver Moor: this ceremony, the memorial of some ancient festival, was called "Bodmin Riding." The manufacture of bone lace, which formerly flourished, has given place to that of shoes, a great quantity of which is exposed for sale in the neighbouring markets and fairs; there are also a large tan-yard and a brewery. A railway has been constructed to Wadebridge. The market is on Saturday: the fairs are on Jan. 25th, the Saturday preceding Palm-Sunday, the Tuesday and Wednesday before Whitsuntide, July 6th, and Dec. 6th, for horses and horned-cattle; large cattle fairs are also held in the hamlet of St. Lawrence, Aug. 21st, and Oct. 29th and 30th. The inhabitants were incorporated in the 12th century, by Richard, Earl of Cornwall; and charters were subsequently granted by Edward III., Richard II., Elizabeth, and George III. By the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., c. 76, the corporation now consists of a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, of whom the mayor and late mayor are justices of the peace, and hold petty-sessions weekly for the borough. The shire-hall is a substantial building of granite, 104 feet long and 56 broad, lately erected by the county, at an expense of £8000, upon a portion of the site of the ancient convent of Grey Friars, and was first opened at the Midsummer-sessions of 1838. Nearly adjoining, elegant and commodious lodgings for the accommodation of the judges of assize have been erected by the town council, at an expense of nearly £4000; and in consequence of these improvements, both the assizes were, by order of the privy council, July 6th, 1838, appointed to be holden at Bodmin, the summer assize only having been previously held here. The quarter-sessions for the county are also held at the place. The elective franchise was conferred in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time the borough has continued to return two members: the limits of the borough were extended for parliamentary purposes, in 1832, from 5279 acres to 13,651; the mayor is returning officer. The county gaol and house of correction, built in 1780, on Mr. Howard's plan, and since greatly enlarged, for the proper classification of prisoners, is a neat and compact building.

The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the gift of Lady Basset; net income, £283. The church, formerly the conventual church of the monastery, was rebuilt in 1472, and is a spacious structure, chiefly in the later style of English architecture, with a venerable tower on the north side, formerly surmounted by a lofty spire, which was destroyed by lightning in 1699; the interior contains some exquisitely carved oak, a large Norman font curiously sculptured, and several interesting monuments. Near the altar was a small chapel, taken down in 1776, in which the shrine of St. Petrock was preserved till the Reformation; and at the north side of the chancel is a fine altar-tomb of grey marble, resembling that of Henry VII. in Westminster Abbey, and on which is a recumbent effigy of Prior Vivian, removed from the ancient priory. In the churchyard is a building, supposed to have been a chantry chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas, with a crypt underneath; it was used, until a few years since, for the free grammar school, and is at present occupied as a national school for girls. There are places of worship for Bryanites, the Connexion of the Countess of Huntingdon, and Wesleyans. The grammar school was founded by Queen Elizabeth, who endowed it with £4. 13. 8. per annum, payable out of the Exchequer: no appointment has been made since the death of the late master. The poor law union of Bodmin comprises 21 parishes or places, and contains a population of 20,800. The county lunatic asylum was built in 1820, at an expense of £15,177, including the furniture; it is of an octagonal form, consisting of six ranges, each containing two galleries, and affording accommodation to 80 poor patients, and 28 others, who are admitted on terms proportioned to their rank and extent of accommodation. About a mile to the west of the town are some remains of the hospital of St. Lawrence, originally endowed for nineteen lepers, two sound men and women, and a priest, who were incorporated by Queen Elizabeth in 1582, from whom they received the grant of a market, now discontinued, and two fairs, still held. There are three intrenchments in the parish, namely, Castle Canyke, the Beacon (near the town), and one in Dunmere wood; and above the ford at Nantallon a Roman camp has lately been discovered, in which coins of Vespasian and Trajan, and some pottery have been found. On the north side of the town is a ruined tower, called Berry Tower, 418 feet above the level of the sea; it belonged to the chapel of the Holy Rood, and was built in the reign of Henry VII.

BODNEY (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of SWAFFHAM, hundred of SOUTH GREENHOE, W. division of the county of NORFOLK, 9 miles (N. N. E.) from Brandon; containing 98 inhabitants. This parish comprises 2605a. 18p., of which 1384 are arable, 1177 meadow and pasture, and 43 woodland and plantations; much ground is also rabbit-warren. The ancient hall was for some time the retreat of the nuns of Montargis, and of whom Eloise Adelaide de Bourbon, daughter of the Prince de Condé, assumed the veil here in 1805, and is interred at this place. The old Hall has been rebuilt in a handsome style, and is now the residence of S. M. Long, Esq. The living is a discharged rectory, united to that of Great Cressingham, valued in the king's books at £6. 7. 3½.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £195. The church is a plain thatched building, with an ornamented window, and a wooden belfry.

BOGNOR, a market and post town, chapelry, and bathing-place, in the parish of SOUTH BERSTED, hundred of ALDWICK, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, 7 miles (S. E.) from Chichester, and 67 (S. W. by S.) from London; containing 576 inhabitants. This place, anciently called Bogenor, implying, in the Saxon language, a rocky shore, was, prior to 1790, an insignificant village, inhabited only by a few labourers and fishermen; but in that year, Sir Richard Hotham, Knt., perceiving the natural advantages which it possessed, erected a handsome villa for his own residence, and several lodging-houses, which he furnished at considerable expense for the accommodation of visitors. It is chiefly resorted to by persons suffering from pulmonary complaints, and such as dislike the tumult and expense of more populous watering-places; it has also been visited by numerous members of the royal family. Bognor is divided into Upper and Lower, the former consisting of several beautiful marine villas, standing in grounds tastefully laid out; the latter comprising the town, pleasantly situated near the peninsula of Selsey, on a plain at the foot of the South Down Hills, which shelter it from the north and east winds. The parade and drive along the coast have of late years been greatly improved, and extend about two miles, forming a delightful promenade, and commanding most extensive sea and land views. The town is paved, macadamized, and supplied with water from pumps; and its internal regulation, under a general act of improvement passed in 1835, is vested in a body of commissioners. The warm and cold baths on the Steine are conveniently arranged, and for those who prefer the open sea there are numerous bathing-machines on the beach. There are two subscription libraries; and a handsome assembly-room, with refreshment and other apartments, was erected in 1837. Races occasionally take place on the sands. Bognor is celebrated for prawns and the silver mullet, great quantities of which are sent to London and Brighton; and off the coast are extensive oyster-beds. A large brewery here is noted for its ale; and there is a small manufactory for Roman cement, made from the Kidney rock which abounds in the sands. The markets, established within a few years, and for which a market-place has been erected, are on Thursday and Saturday; and a fair is held on the 5th and 6th of July. The living is a perpetual curacy; patron, Archbishop of Canterbury; net income, £107, with a good residence. The chapel, dedicated to St. John, is a neat building, with an embattled tower at the east end, and was consecrated in 1822. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. "The Jubilee school," for the instruction of 50 girls, who are also partly clothed, was founded by the late Princess Charlotte, and is in connexion with the National Society; and a lying-in institution, a clothing charity fund, a friendly society, and a garden allotment society, have been also established. In opening the rocks various fossils have been discovered; beautiful agates and pebbles, and, after storms and high tides, pyrites are found in profusion on the beach.

BOLAM, a township, in the parish of GAINFORD, union of AUCKLAND, S. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Bishop-Auckland; containing 119 inhabitants. This place is situated on a lofty ridge of limestone, commanding an extensive prospect to the south and west; and comprises 950 acres, of which 500 are arable, 438 grass land, and 12 wood; the soil, with a trifling exception of cold clay, is fertile and productive. The township is remarkable for a whinstone dyke, which proves itself to be of later formation than the coal-field through which it runs, as the coal is, on both sides of the stone where they have come in contact, converted into cinders: quarries are worked, supplying a material for the repair of roads. The rectorial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £62. 10. 11., payable to Trinity College, Cambridge, and the vicarial for £46. 10. A chapel has been recently erected. William Garth, father of the celebrated Sir Samuel, physician and poet, was a landowner in the place; and the name of the family occurs twice in the parochial register of Gainford in the year 1747.

BOLAM (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union, and partly in the W. division, of CASTLE ward, but chiefly in the W. division of MORPETH ward, and N. E. division of TINDALE ward, N. and S. divisions of NORTHUMBERLAND; comprising the townships of Trewick, Bolam, Bolam-Vicarage, Gallow-Hill, Belsay, Bradford, Harnham, and Shortflatt; and containing 603 inhabitants, of whom 66 are in the township of Bolam, and 17 in that of Bolam-Vicarage, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Morpeth. The place derives its name from being situated on a bol, or high swell of land. The manor was granted to Sir Gilbert de Bolam by King John, but in the time of Henry III. it was held by the son of Sir Walter de Bolam, and John and James de Calcey; and a mediety of it was afterwards the property of the Raymes' family: it subsequently became that of the Horsleys, whose heiress, in 1809, carried it in marriage to the present Lord Decies. The old town of Bolam had its grant of a market and fair from Edward I., and consisted of a castle, a church, and two rows of houses running from east to west, and is traditionally said to have had a population of 900 persons: the tower of the castle was standing some years since; and on the commanding hill near Bolam House, the seat of Lord Decies, where it stood, are intrenchments of a period anterior to the Conquest.

The parish comprises upwards of 7000 acres, of which 1116 are in the township of Bolam; a large portion of the soil is a dark earth, resting on clay, and there are fine portions of a sandy loam, with a substratum of freestone, and also coal and limestone; in the township of Bolam, a great part is rich grass land, interspersed with many thriving plantations, and a small but picturesque lake has been formed by the noble owner. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown; impropriators in trust, the Mayor and Corporation of Newcastle-upon-Tyne: the great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £247. 3. 8., and the vicarial for £72. 10. 6.; the glebe consists of about 130 acres. The township of Bolam-Vicarage comprises only the glebe land, lying on the eastern side of the church; the inappropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £5. 3. 6., and the vicarial for £5. 13. 9. The church, which is of the Norman style, is an ancient and rude structure. A branch of the Watling-street called the "Devil's Causeway," may be distinctly traced about a mile westward, near which are two large barrows, and a stone pillar of rude form, with a tumulus, which, on being opened, was found to contain a stone coffin. On an intrenched rock, on the north-eastern side of Bolam moor, is a circular British camp.

BOLAS, GREAT (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of WELLINGTON, Newport division of the hundred of SOUTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, 7 miles (N.) from Wellington; containing 288 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the road from Wellington to Drayton, comprises by measurement 1845 acres; the surface is pleasingly varied, and watered by the rivers Mees and Terne, which add greatly to the fertility of the soil and beauty of the scenery; there are two quarries of red sandstone, used for building. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 9. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Lord Hill: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £330, and there are about 49 acres of glebe. The church is a plain neat edifice, of comparatively modern erection, and in good repair. A school is supported by the incumbent.

BOLD, a township, in the parish and union of PRESCOT, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Prescot; containing 712 inhabitants. The present elegant mansion of Bold Hall was built after a design by Leoni; and the old Hall, a curious edifice, is now the farm-house belonging to it. The family of Bold resided here previously to the Conquest, and preserved an uninterrupted succession of male heirs down to the death of Peter Bold, Esq., parliamentary representative for the county, who died in 1761. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £335. 17. 4., payable to Trinity College, Cambridge, and the vicarial, for one of £117. 19. 5. Two small schools are supported by Lady B. Hoghton. The Rev. Richard Barnes, promoted to the see of Carlisle in 1570, and to that of Durham in 1577; and his brother, John Barnes, the chancellor, were natives of the place.

BOLD, a chapelry, in the parish of ASTON-BOTTE-RELL, union of CLEOBURY-MORTIMER, hundred of STOTTESDEN, S. division of SALOP, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Cleobury-Mortimer. The chapel is in ruins.

BOLDON (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of SOUTH SHIELDS, E. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Sunderland; comprising the rustic villages of East and West Boldon, and containing 915 inhabitants. The manor has been annexed, time immemorially, to the see of Durham, and gave name to a survey of the possessions of the bishopric, made in 1184, and called "Boldon Buke," it being the first manor which occurs in that record, and on account of the numerous references in it to the services in this district. On Boldon hills, in the spring of 1644-5, some severe conflicts occurred between the army under the command of the Marquess of Newcastle, and the Scots, who then held Sunderland. The parish is situated on the road from Newcastle to Sunderland, and contains by measurement 3700 acres, of which two-thirds are arable, and one-third grass land: in the valleys the soil is clay; the views from the higher grounds are fine and extensive, and the air is remarkable for its salubrity: the district abounds with limestone. The Shields and Pontop railroad, and the Brandling Junction railroad, run through the parish. There are several highly respectable mansions, among which are, the seat of Thomas Metcalfe, Esq.; the mansion of J. T. Wawn, Esq., M. P.; the rectory-house; and Scotch House, the property and residence of Thomas Wilkinson, Esq. The living of the parish of Boldon is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £24. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £539. 10., and there are 148 acres of glebe. The church, which is in West Boldon, is an ancient and very neat fabric, with a spiral tower, and with octagonal pillars and pointed arches; it stands on high ground, and the prospect from the churchyard extends over the whole of the level country to the northward, the lower vale of Tyne, and the rising grounds in Northumberland. At East Boldon is a parochial chapel. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The Rev. Henry Blacket, who died rector, in 1808, gave the interest of £200, in the $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cents., for the education of children, for which purpose a house was built in 1810; and another school for girls is partly supported by the rector. Ralph Harrison, Esq., in 1687, left £5. 17. per annum for the benefit of the poor of the place.

BOLDRE (St. JOHN), a parish, in the union of LYMINGTON, partly in the E. division of the hundred of NEW FOREST, and partly in the hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, Lymington and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2 miles (N.) from Lymington; including the chapelry of South Baddesley, and the tythings of Battramsley, Pilley with Warborne, Sway, and Walthampton; and containing 2888 inhabitants. This place, in the Domesday survey named Bovreford, or the ford for cattle, comprises by computation 6000 acres, and is separated from Lymington by the river and Boldre water. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Lymington and Brackenhurst annexed, valued in the king's books at £12; net income, £394; patron, J. B. Shrubbs, Esq.; impropriators, Joseph Weld, Esq., and others. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1811. The church, occupying an elevated site commanding an extensive prospect of great beauty and variety, is a very ancient and irregular edifice, with a low square embattled tower, singularly placed at the south-eastern part of the structure, and partially rebuilt in 1697. At Baddesley is a small chapel of ease, of modern architecture, erected and endowed by the Worsley family. A district church was built in Sway tything, in 1837, by subscription, with assistance from the Diocesan Society; and another, of plain design, was erected in 1839, by the same means. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. A school, for instructing and clothing 20 poor boys and 20 girls, was founded at Pilley, in the parish, by the Rev. William Gilpin, vicar, celebrated for his intense feeling and accurate delineation of natural beauty, and especially of that of forest scenery: he was born at Scaleby Castle, in Cumberland, about the year 1724, and reckoned among his ancestors the amiable reformer, Bernard Gilpin; he died here, April 5th, 1804.

BOLDRON, a township, in the parish of BOWES, union of TEESDALE, wapentake of GILLING-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 2 miles (S. W. by S.) from Barnard-Castle; containing 169 inhabitants. It lies in the manor and constablewick of Bowes, and comprises by computation 1340 acres. The road from Brough to Barnard-Castle passes north of the village. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £80. A national school, a branch of the endowed school at Bowes, is partly supported by an allowance of £10 per annum from the trustees.

BOLE (St. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of GAINSBOROUGH, North-Clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Gainsborough; containing 191 inhabitants. It comprises about 1460 acres of land, of which the soil is a strong clay, producing excellent red wheat, and the surface flat and liable to inundations from the river Trent, which divides the parish from the county of Lincoln. The Bole ferry is now a mile distant from the village, the river, about twenty years ago, having formed a new course, by which a part of the parish of Lea, in Lincolnshire, is now locally in Nottinghamshire. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 13. 4.; net income, £84; patron and impropriator, Prebendary of Bole in the Cathedral of York: there are 20 acres of glebe. The church is a small ancient structure, and has a handsome pinnaced tower with three bells.

BOLEHALL, with GLASCOTE, a township, in the parish and union of TAMWORTH, Tamworth division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 1 mile (S. S. E.) from Tamworth; containing 495 inhabitants, and comprising 1193 acres. The road from Atherstone to Tamworth crosses the township, which is also intersected by the Coventry canal and the Derby Junction railway.

BOLINGBROKE (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a market-town and parish, in the union of SPILSBY, W. division of the soke of BOLINGBROKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 30 miles (E. S. E.) from Lincoln, and 129 (N.) from London; containing 919 inhabitants. A castle was built by William de Romara, Earl of Lincoln, of which his descendant, Alicia de Lacey, was dispossessed by Edward II. Henry IV. was born in this fortress, and from it took the name of Henry of Bolingbroke: it was nearly demolished in the civil wars, the south-west tower being all that remains. At this period also the church suffered so considerably, that it was almost reduced to a ruin; one aisle of it only has been rebuilt, at the corner of which is a low tower. Bolingbroke is pleasantly situated in a wide and pleasant valley, near the source of a small river which runs into the Witham: the public road, formerly passing through the town to Spilsby, has been superseded by a new line about two miles distant, which ascends Keal Hill. There is a manufactory for earthenware. The market, formerly held on Tuesday, has been discontinued, but a fair is still held on St. Peter's-day. The town is within the jurisdiction of a court of requests, for the recovery of debts under £5, which extends through the soke, and is held under an act passed in the 47th of George III. The living is a discharged rectory, to which that of Hareby was united in 1739, valued in the king's books at £9. 19. 2., and in the gift of Charles Bosanquet, Esq.: the glebe consists of 345 acres, the income of which amounts to £456; and an excellent parsonage-house has lately been built, at a cost of £2000, by Mr. Bosanquet. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a free school, with a trifling endowment in lands. The village and district of New Bolingbroke have lately risen up on lands in the fen belonging to Bolingbroke; a curate has been appointed by the rector.

BOLLEN-FEE, a township, in the parish of WILMSLOW, union of ALTRINCHAM, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 6 miles (S. W.) from Stockport; containing, with the township of Chorley, 2212 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £378, and there is a glebe of £71 acres. A national school is supported partly by the rector.

BOLLINGTON, a township, partly in the parish of ROSTERN, but chiefly in that of BOWDON, union of ALTRINCHAM, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 5½ miles (N. by W.) from Nether Knutsford; containing 316 inhabitants. The tithes, of that portion of the township in the parish of Bowdon, have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £45, of which £30 are payable to the Bishop of Chester, and £15 to the vicar of Bowdon. At a place called Pump hill is a tumulus, in which human bones have been found.

BOLLINGTON, a township, in the parish of PRESTBURY, union and hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 2½ miles (N. by E.) from Macclesfield; containing 4350 inhabitants. The village lies on the banks of a small stream, called the Bolling, from which its name is derived. For more than twenty years it has been exceedingly prosperous: there are some cotton and silk factories, and collieries; and at Kerridge Hill, which is partly in this township and partly in that of Rainow, are quarries of freestone and slate, worked to a considerable extent, the produce being chiefly sent to the neighbouring towns. The Macclesfield canal passes through the township. A district church, dedicated to St. John, erected by grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners, was consecrated July 7th, 1834: the living, which is a perpetual curacy, was augmented in 1842 with £96 per annum, by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The Wesleyans have a meeting-house.

BOLLON, a hamlet, in the parish of CLAREBOROUGH, union of EAST RETFORD, North-Clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM; containing 103 inhabitants.

BOLNEY, a hamlet, in the parish of HARPSDEN, union of HENLEY, hundred of BINFIELD, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (S. S. E.) from Henley-upon-Thames. It was formerly a parish, but the church having become a ruin, the living has been united to the rectory of Harpsden.

BOLNEY (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of CUCKFIELD, partly in the hundred of BUTTINGHILL, but chiefly in the half-hundred of WYNDHAM, rape of LEWES, E. division of SUSSEX, 3¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Cuckfield; containing 713 inhabitants. The London and Brighton road, by way of Hixted, passes through the parish, within half a mile of the village. The land is chiefly arable and pasture, with a tract of wood, forming part of the forest of St. Leonard; it is generally poor, being a thin soil over sandstone, but in some places there is a good stiff clay. Sandstone abounds, and iron-ore is found. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 5. 2½; patron, Prebendary of Hove in the Cathedral of Chichester; impropiators, W. and C. Marshall, Esqrs.; net income, £162. A national school was erected in 1838.

BOLNHURST (St. DUNSTAN), a parish, in the hundred of STODDEN, union and county of BEDFORD, 7 miles (N. by E.) from Bedford, on the road to Kimbolton; containing 344 inhabitants. It comprises 2166*a. 3r. 13p.*, of which the surface is undulated, and the soil a stiff cold clay. The living is a rectory, endowed with only one-third of the tithes, and valued in the king's books at £9; net income, £159; patron, Rev. H. W. Gery; impropiators of the remaining two-thirds of the tithes, Capt. Duberly and others. A free school, founded by the Rev. Mr. Baker, in 1749, has an endowment of £12 per annum.

BOLSOVER (St. MARY), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union of CHESTERFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, 28½ miles (N. N. E.) from Derby, and 145½ (N. by W.) from London; containing, with the hamlets of Glapwell, Ockley, Whaley, Oxcroft, Stanfree, Shuttlewood, Woodside, and Woodhouse, 1512 inhabitants. This place, called Belesoure prior to the Conquest, was noted for a castle, erected immediately after by William Peveril, who obtained the grant of several manors in England. The castle, which was remarkably strong, after the extinction of the Peveril family, became a royal fortress, and sustained a siege in the war of the barons, by whom, together with the castle of the Peak, it was garrisoned against King John. In 1215, William, Earl of Ferrers, retook both these castles from the barons, and was made governor of them, as a reward for his fidelity. In the reign of Henry VII. the castle became the property of the Earl of Shrewsbury, and in that of Elizabeth was given to his step-son, Sir Charles Cavendish, who rebuilt the greater portion of it, and erected a magnificent suite of state apartments on the site of the original Norman structure which had become ruinous; and his eldest son, William, afterwards Duke of Newcastle, erected the spacious riding-house, and the long range of buildings, now in ruins, which crown the beautiful terrace. In these stately and splendid halls he thrice entertained Charles I. and his court, and upon one occasion, when the queen was present; expended £15,000. During the civil war, while the duke was abroad, the castle sustained a siege, and, after being defended for some time by the Marquess of Newcastle, surrendered to the parliamentarians, from whom it was purchased by Sir Charles, the duke's younger brother; it occupies a lofty eminence commanding an extensive prospect. The town is large and well built, and is pleasantly situated on rising ground, environed on every side, except where the ground forms a natural rampart, with a deep intrenchment. It is within the jurisdiction of the court for the honour of Peveril, held at Lenton, near Nottingham: a court leet belonging to the lord of the manor is held every third week, for the recovery of debts under 40s.; and there is a fair on Midsummer-day. The parish comprises about 5000 acres, and there are quarries of excellent building-stone, which is partially raised for the erection of the new houses of parliament, London. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 19. 4.; net income, £111; patron and impropiator, Duke of Portland. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1778. The church is a spacious structure, having portions in the Norman, intermixed with the later English, style, and many modern insertions; within is a sepulchral chapel belonging to the Cavendish family, in which are some splendid monuments. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. A schoolroom was erected in 1756, by the Countess of Oxford; and in 1761, Mrs. Smithson bequeathed £200 for portioning young women with £25 each, directing the overplus to be given to the poor. There is a ferruginous spring at the nunnery in this parish; and partly inclosing the town is a circular mound, supposed to have been a Danish camp.

BOLSTERSTONE, a chapelry, in the parish of ECCLESFIELD, union of WORTLEY, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 8½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Sheffield. This place is in the district of Hallamshire, and is bounded on the south-south-west by the river Euden, on the north-north-west by the Porter, and on the east by the Don; the land is chiefly arable, and the soil of various qualities. A thin seam of coal is now wrought, employing about 100 hands; as is also a quarry of fire-stone, of a peculiar kind, which employs a few hands more. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Trustees of J. Remington, Esq., with a net income of £119: the chapel is a plain square edifice, rebuilt in 1791, at a cost of nearly £600, raised by subscription. There is a place of worship for dissenters. A national school has an endowment of about £50 per annum, and a house for the master, bequeathed by John Hodgkinson in 1780.

BOLSTONE, a parish, in the Upper division of the hundred of WORMELOW, union and county of HEREFORD, 6 miles (S. S. E.) from Hereford; containing 83 inhabitants. On the east the parish is partly bounded by the river Wye; and it consists of 540 acres, with a soil of average fertility, and the surface is extremely well wooded. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Holm-Lacy: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £85.

BOLTBY, a chapelry, in the parish of FELIX-KIRK, union of THIRSK, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, 4¾ miles (N. E.) from Thirsk; containing 320 inhabitants. The township, which forms the manor of Ravensthorpe, comprises by computation 3600 acres of land; the village is situated in a picturesque vale at the foot of the Hamilton hills. The chapel is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. There is a school, to the master of which £5 are allowed annually by the devisees of the late Edward Manners, Esq.

BOLTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WIGTON, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 1½ mile (N. by W.) from Ireby; containing 1211 inhabitants, of whom 312 are in High-Side, and 899 in Low-Side. It abounds with coal and limestone, which are worked to a considerable extent. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 18. 4.; net income, £512; patron, Earl of Lonsdale. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A copper battle-axe was lately found in the moss at Bolton wood, four feet below the surface.

BOLTON, a chapelry, in the parish of EDLINGHAM, union of ALNWICK, N. division of COQUETDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6½ miles (W.) from Alwick; containing 128 inhabitants. It is memorable as the scene of a meeting which occurred, in 1209, between John, King of England, and William, King of Scotland, who proceeded in company from this village to Norham, where they conferred upon matters affecting their respective interests; and on the 5th of Sept., in the 5th of Henry VIII., a short time previously to the battle of Branxton, a congress was held here, at which several noblemen and other distinguished persons, with a train of about 26,000 troops, were present. An hospital for a master, three chaplains, thirteen lepers, and other lay brethren, was founded and endowed prior to 1225, by Robert de Roos, Baron of Wark, in honour of St. Thomas the Martyr, or the Holy Trinity, and made subordinate to the abbey of Rivaux, and the priory of Kirkham, in Yorkshire. Several stone chests and urns, containing ashes, charcoal, and fragments of human bones, together with a celt, have been discovered at a short distance from the place.

BOLTON, a chapelry, in the parish of MORLAND, WEST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Appleby; containing 353 inhabitants. About a mile north of the village, an iron bridge, thirty yards in length, was constructed across the Eden, at the expense of the landowners on both sides of the river, in 1816. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £61; patron, Vicar of Morland: the tithes were commuted for land in 1808. The chapel is dedicated to All Saints, and a grant of £100 was, a few years since, assigned by the Incorporated Society towards re-building it on a more extended plan. A meeting-house for Methodists was built in 1818; and a free school is endowed with £13 per annum.

BOLTON, a township, in the parish of BISHOP-WILTON, union of POCKLINGTON, Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 2¾ miles (N. W.) from Pocklington; containing 98 inhabitants. It comprises 960 acres by computation; and has a neat and pleasant village seated on a gentle acclivity. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £41. 4. 6., and the impropriate for one of £6. 2. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BOLTON, a township, in the parish of CALVERLEY, union of BRADFORD, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 1½ mile (N. N. E.) from Bradford; containing 683 inhabitants. This township, including the hamlets of Hodgsonfold, Lowfold, and Outlanes, with part of the hamlet of Undercliffe, comprises by measurement 699 acres; the surface is varied, and the scenery of pleasing character. Bolton House, the seat of John Hustler, Esq., is finely situated, commanding extensive views of the surrounding country; and Hollin Close, the handsome residence of George Thompson Lister, Esq., is surrounded with beautifully picturesque and romantic scenery. There are quarries of slate and flag stone in full operation; and the Bradford canal passes through the township. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BOLTON ABBEY, a chapelry, in the parish and union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCRoss, W. riding of YORK, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from Skipton; the township of Bolton Abbey containing 127 inhabitants. This place derives its name from its magnificent abbey of canons regular of the order of St. Augustine, founded originally at Embsay, in 1121, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Cuthbert, by William de Meschines and Cecilia his wife, and removed to this place, about the year 1151, by their daughter and heiress Adeliza, who had married William Fitz-Duncan, nephew of the king of Scotland. The establishment continued to flourish till the Dissolution, when its revenues were estimated at £302. 9. 3.: the demesnes were granted to Henry Clifford, Earl of Cumberland, from whose descendants it passed by marriage, in 1635, to Richard, second earl of Cork and first earl of Burlington. The estates continued in the Burlington family till the year 1748, when they were conveyed by Charlotte, daughter and heiress of the third earl, by marriage to the Duke of Devonshire, ancestor of the present proprietor. Of this once stately and magnificent structure the nave alone is perfect, and, from the period of its dissolution, has been appropriated as a parochial chapel; the north and south transepts and the choir are now in ruins. The choir, which is the most ancient part of the church, is in the Norman style of architecture, with later insertions; the walls in the lower part are ornamented with series of interesting arches and columns with enriched capitals; the windows, of later date, and apparently altered from the original openings, are in the decorated English style, and the east window, of magnificent design, was beautifully enriched with delicate tracery, now much broken and defaced: at the eastern extremity of the south side were four elegant sedilia, since greatly mutilated, and against the south wall a tomb, supposed to be that of Lord John Clifford, who was killed at the battle of Meaux, in France; on the north side of the high altar is a mural monument to Lady Margaret Neville, and in the south transept has been recently discovered a tomb with the inscription, "Hic jacet Xtopherus Wode qudm p̄r." There are some remains of the conventual buildings, part of which has been fitted up for the temporary use of the Duke of Devonshire, who occasionally visits the place during the grouse season.

The township comprises by computation 3000 acres, situated in the vale of the river Wharfe, which pursues its varied course through a district abounding with scenery of magnificent and romantic character, combining features of intense interest, among which the venerable remains of the abbey are conspicuous. The acclivities which inclose the vale are in some parts richly wooded; and in others, masses of rugged rock rise precipitously from the margin of the river, which flows almost under the east window of the abbey; towards the north of the ruins is a fine verdant expanse of level lawn, studded at intervals with clusters of elm and ash of stately growth, skirted by a thick wood of oak; interspersed with protruding rocks of barren aspect. In the distance are the venerable groves of Bolton Park, beyond which are seen the craggy heights of Simonseat and Bardon Fell, finely contrasting with the softer beauties of the luxuriant vale, which, gradually contracting its limits, scarcely affords a passage for the Wharfe, between the densely wooded banks, which overhang its stream: in this part of the vale is a beautifully picturesque cascade, formed by a tributary of the Wharfe, descending from a rocky glen into the river; near its disappearance in the deep cleft of a rock, which obstructs its course. The road leading from Skipton to Harrogate passes at the distance of about half a mile from the abbey. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £111; patron, the Duke of Devonshire. The free grammar school was founded in 1697, by the Honourable Robert Boyle, who endowed it with a rent-charge of £20, and other property, making in the aggregate an income of £100; the master has a good house and garden, and an annual sum of £5, for teaching writing and arithmetic. At Hazlewood is a school, founded by Sylvester Petyt, Esq., late of Barnard's-Inn, London, a native of the village of Storiths, who bequeathed a sum of money for the endowment of the school, the assistance of poor relatives, and the placing of children as apprentices; for these purposes, his trustees pay annually £111, of which £25 are received by the master of the school, who has also a good house and garden; £5 by the librarian at Skipton church, to which Mr. Petyt bequeathed a valuable library; and the remainder is appropriated to the apprenticing of ten poor children, and the relief of poor relatives.

BOLTON-BY-BOWLAND (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of CLITHEROE, wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCRoss, W. riding of YORK, 3½ miles (W.) from Gisburn, and 15 (W. by S.) from Skipton; containing 993 inhabitants. This place was anciently owned by the Pudsey family of Bolton Hall, of whom Sir Ralph Pudsey afforded to Henry VI. an hospitable asylum in his mansion after his defeat at the battle of Hexham. The manor was subsequently purchased by the late John Bolton, Esq., of Liverpool, for £42,000, and is now the property of Mrs. Anthony Littledale. The parish comprises by computation 4940 acres; the lands are mostly in good cultivation, and the prevailing scenery is pleasingly diversified. Bolton Hall, the seat of Mrs. Littledale, is an ancient mansion, beautifully situated in an extensive and tastefully embellished demesne; and in one of the apartments, a pair of boots, a pair of gloves, and a spoon left there by Henry VI., are carefully preserved. The village stands on one of the tributary streams flowing into the river Ribble, and a large fair, chiefly for cattle, is held there on the 28th of June and two following days. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Mrs. Littledale; the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £335, and the glebe comprises 100 acres, with a good house. The church is a venerable structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and contains a monument to Sir Ralph Pudsey, with a slab of grey Craven limestone, on which are sculptured, in bold relief, the effigies of himself, his three wives, and twenty-five children. There is a place of worship for Independents. A boys' school was endowed by Mr. Ralph Parker, of Hungrill, with 46*a.* 3*r.* 29*p.* of land, and a yearly sum of £3. 9. 6.; and a girls' school, by Mrs. Bridget Pudsey, with £100, and by Mr. Charles Dawson with £40, and a house and garden; this money has accumulated to £250, and is now invested in the three per cent. consols. About £15, arising from various sources, are annually distributed among the poor on St. Thomas's-day. There is a spring at Fooden, of which the water is strongly impregnated with sulphur; and at Holden is a picturesque cascade.

BOLTON-CASTLE, a chapelry, in the parish of WENSLEY, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANGWEST, N. riding of YORK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Middleham; containing 230 inhabitants. On the brow of a hill are the ruins of a castle, built by Richard, Lord Scrope, chancellor of England in the reign of Richard II., and endowed with £106. 15. 4. per annum, for a chantry of six chaplains. Mary, Queen of Scots, was kept a prisoner here for about two years, and was removed hence to Tutbury in 1569; she inscribed her name on a pane of glass, which was removed to Bolton Hall a few years since. During the parliamentary war, the castle was defended for the king by Colonel Scrope, and a party of the Richmondshire militia, and sustained a pressing siege, which terminated in its surrender to the insurgents in 1645. The north-eastern tower fell down in 1761, and the eastern and northern sides are entirely in ruins; the west front is in good repair. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Redmire annexed; net income, £115; patron, Rector of Wensley. The chapel is dedicated to St. Oswald. A small endowment in land was bequeathed by the Rev. Thomas Baynes in 1725, for the instruction of poor children.

Town Seal.

BOLTON-LE-MOORS (St. Peter), a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER; comprising the borough and market-town of Bolton, the chapelries of Blackrod, Little Bolton, Bradshaw, Harwood, Little Lever, and Turton, and the townships of Anglezarke, Great Bolton, Brightmet, Edgeworth, Entwistle, Darcy-Lever, Longworth, Lostock, Quarlton, Rivington, Sharples, and Tonge with Haugh; and containing 73,905 inhabitants, of whom 33,610 are in Great, and 16,153 in Little, Bolton, 43 miles (S. S. E.) from Lancaster, and 197 (N. W. by N.) from London. This place, which derives the adjunct to its name from its situation on the moors, was of little importance prior to 1337, when the emigrant Flemings, who fixed their residence here, introduced the manufacture of woollen-cloth, and laid the foundation of its future increase as a manufacturing town; and after the revocation of the edict of Nantz many of the French refugees, attracted by the means of employment which its trade at that time afforded, took up their abode in the town. At the commencement of the civil war in the reign of Charles I., the inhabitants espoused the cause of the parliament, by whom the town was garrisoned, and in whose possession it remained till 1644, when Prince Rupert, advancing with 10,000 men to the relief of Latham House, which was besieged by a body of 2000 parliamentary troops, compelled them to raise the siege, and retire into this town. Being joined by the Earl of Derby from the Isle of Man, the prince assembled his forces on the moor, to the south-west of the town, and there held a council of war, at which it was resolved to carry the place by storm. Pursuant to this, an assault was made with great spirit and bravery, which, however, was met by equal intrepidity from the garrison, now consisting of 3000 men; and the assailants, after performing numerous acts of valour, were compelled to retreat, with the loss of 200 of their force. A second council of war was then convened, and a second attack determined upon, which, at his earnest request, was entrusted to the Earl of Derby: this loyal nobleman, placing himself at the head of a gallant band of only 200 Lancashire men, principally his own tenantry and their sons, led on the van, by marching directly to the walls, where the conflict was for some time carried on with desperate valour on both sides; but the Earl, bearing down all opposition, entered the town, and put the whole garrison into the utmost consternation. The royalists pursued the enemy in every direction, killing all whom they encountered, and at last plundered the town, which remained for some time in their possession, but was ultimately given up to the parliament. After the disastrous battle of Worcester, the gallant earl, who had come from the Isle of Man to the assistance of Charles II., being taken prisoner, was condemned by a military tribunal at Chester, and sent under an escort to this place, where he was beheaded. The manor of Bolton, which is of considerable antiquity, was alienated by Roger de Maresey, with his other lands between the rivers Ribble and Mersey, to Ranulph de Blundeville, Earl of Chester, for 240 marks of silver, and a pair of white gloves, to be presented annually at Easter: it afterwards passed through the families of Ferrers and Pilkington, and was confiscated to the crown on the attainder of Sir Thomas Pilkington, in the 1st of Henry VII. for his adherence to the cause of Richard III., at the battle of Bosworth Field. Henry granted it to his relation, Thomas, Lord Stanley, then created Earl of Derby; but a considerable portion of the property having been confiscated by parliament, during the period of the Commonwealth, the manor of Bolton is at present held, in unequal proportions, by five lords.

The town, comprising the townships of Great and Little Bolton, which are separated by the rivulet Croal, has been greatly enlarged, under an act of parliament obtained in 1792, for inclosing Bolton Moor, of which more than 250 acres were divided into allotments, a portion of which is occupied with buildings. The powers of the commissioners appointed under that act were extended by an act in 1817, since which time three spacious squares, several ranges of buildings, and a few public edifices, have been erected; 428 houses in Great Bolton, and 196 in Little Bolton, were built during the year 1823, and considerable improvement has been made in the roads leading to the town. It is lighted with gas by a company incorporated in 1820, and the inhabitants are supplied with excellent water, brought from a distance of a mile and a half, by earthenware pipes, into a reservoir, which occupies a space of 22 acres, whence it is conveyed by an iron main of 13 inches diameter to the various parts of the town: this undertaking was effected at an expense of £40,000, subscribed in shares of £50 each, by a company, established in 1824, for whose use a handsome stone building has been erected, in front of which is an emblematical tablet representing a Naiad seated by a fountain, pouring water from a ewer to a thirsty child. The theatre is regularly open during the season; a new assembly-room was erected a few years since, in which also concerts take place occasionally; and there are three public libraries. The Exchange Buildings, erected in 1825, is a neat edifice of stone, with two Ionic columns at the entrance; the lower room, which is of ample dimensions, is appropriated to the transaction of general business, and fitted up as a news-room; the upper part contains a library and reading-rooms. A mechanics' institute was established in 1825; and temporary barracks have been provided for the accommodation of two companies of infantry.

The principal branch of MANUFACTURE, and to the introduction of which Bolton owes its present extent and importance, is that of cotton, in the improvement of which many ingenious and valuable discoveries originated in this town. Sir Richard Arkwright, a resident here, after he had established his works at Derby and Nottingham, brought the spinning-jenny and the water-frame machines to perfection; and Samuel Crompton, who was also an inhabitant of Bolton, invented a machine called the mule, combining the properties of both, for which, after receiving two several donations of £105 and £400, subscribed as acknowledgments of his merit, he was ultimately remunerated by parliament with a grant of £5000. Previously to the introduction of the cotton trade, some weavers, who arrived in this country from the palatinate of the Rhine, had added to the manufacture of woollen-cloth that of a fabric, partly composed of linen-yarn, chiefly imported from Germany, and partly of cotton. The chief articles were fastian, jean, and thickset: velvet, entirely of cotton, was first made here in 1756, and muslin, quilting, and dimity succeeded. After the introduction of the improved machinery, several factories were established, but, being chiefly worked by water, they were on a small scale; the subsequent employment of steam enabled the proprietors to enlarge their works, and the adoption of power-looms contributed greatly to improve and extend the trade: there are at present more than 20 factories, worked by steam-engines of the aggregate power of 700 horses. The bleaching-grounds are very extensive, and more than 10,000,000 pieces of cloth are annually bleached in the parish: among these are three large establishments, in each of which from 130,000 to 150,000 pieces are, on the average, bleached every month. There are also ten iron-foundries, some of them on a very large scale, and one employing 300 persons, chiefly in the construction of steam-engines; and machinery of all kinds, and mills of every description, are made to a great extent. The neighbourhood abounds with coal, and veins of lead-ore and of calamine have been worked at Rivington, but they have not been found productive. The Bolton and Leigh and the Kenyon and Leigh Junction railways connect the town with the Liverpool and Manchester railway at Kenyon; the whole line is nine miles and three-quarters in length. The canal from Manchester to Bolton was constructed in 1791; a branch to Bury diverges from it at Little Lever, in this parish. In 1837, an act was obtained for making a railway from Bolton to Preston, and by a subsequent act the company were enabled to extend and alter the line, and make collateral branches. The market days are Monday and Saturday: the fairs are on July 30th and 31st, and Oct. 13th and 14th, for horned-cattle, horses, pigs, and pedlery; and a fair for lean cattle is also held every alternate Wednesday, from Jan. 5th to May 12th. The market is held in the area of the new square, in the centre of which is a handsome cast-iron column, 30 feet high, rising from a pedestal in the form of a vase, and supporting a lantern, which is lighted with gas. The town was formerly within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, and its internal GOVERNMENT was under the regulation of officers appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor; but on the 11th Oct. 1838, a charter of incorporation was granted under the Municipal Act, and it is now governed by a mayor, 12 aldermen, and 36 councillors; and on May 9th, 1839, the queen decreed that a court of quarter-sessions should be held here: the number of magistrates is 14. It was made a parliamentary borough by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, with the privilege of returning two members to parliament, the right of election being vested in the £10 householders: the limits of the borough comprise 1748 acres. A court of requests has been established under an act passed in 1840, for the more speedy recovery of small debts within the town and other places in the county of Lancaster. The town-hall, a neat and commodious edifice, was erected, a few years since, at Little Bolton, at an expense of £2000; and it is in contemplation to erect a similar structure in Great Bolton, more suited to the importance of the town than the present rooms in which the business is transacted.

The parish comprises by computation 31,000 acres. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 3. 1½.; net income, £464; patron, and appropriator, Bishop of Chester. The church is a spacious structure, principally of later English architecture, and there are some interesting monuments in the chancel. A district church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected in 1825, at an expense of £13,412, partly defrayed by a grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners; it is a handsome edifice, in the later English style, with a tower: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Vicar of Bolton, and the net income, previously £121, was augmented in 1842 with £30 per annum by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The district church, dedicated to St. George, in Little Bolton, was erected by subscription, in 1796: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Trustees; net income, £168. The chapel, dedicated to All Saints, in Little Bolton, has been rebuilt, and is now a district church: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £128; patron, T. Tipping, Esq. A church, in the later English style, has lately been erected at Turton; and besides these, the district church of Emanuel, and the churches of Christ-church, Walmsley, Bradshaw, and Little Lever, have been built by subscription: the benefice of Emanuel church was augmented, in 1841, by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners with £81 per annum. There are numerous places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Unitarians, the Society of Friends, Swedenborgians, Methodists, and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school, containing 120 boys, was founded by Robert Lever, Esq., citizen of London, who, in 1641, bequeathed estates now producing about £400 per annum, with which the revenue of a school previously existing has been united, amounting in the whole to £485: there is a small exhibition to either of the Universities. Robert Ainsworth, the compiler of the Latin Dictionary, and Dr. Lempriere, the compiler of the Classical Dictionary, were masters of the school; and the former was educated here. A charity school was founded and endowed, in 1693, by Nathaniel Hulton, for the instruction of 30 boys and 30 girls; the income is £277. The "Churchgate Charity School" was founded, in 1714, by Thomas Marsden, Esq., who endowed it with a house, &c., now producing £14. 10. per annum; in addition, £10 per annum are allowed to the master from Brook's charity, accruing from pews in the parish church; and £20 per annum by the family of Popplewell. Another school for girls is supported by subscriptions from the Unitarians; and there are various Sunday schools, of which that in connexion with the parish church, is a large and handsome building of freestone, in the later English style, erected by subscription, in 1819, at an expense of £1800. A dispensary was established in 1814: a clothing society is supported chiefly by ladies, and a society for the relief of poor women during childbirth was formed in 1798. The union of Bolton comprises the entire parish, with the exception of Anglezarke, Blackrod, and Rivington, and, in addition, eleven other chapelries and townships; and contains a population of 97,519. There are several strong chalybeate springs in the parish. John Bradshaw, president of the court which sentenced Charles I. to the scaffold, is said to have been born near the town.

BOLTON-LE-SANDS, a parish, in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER; containing 1774 inhabitants, of whom 671 are in the township of Bolton, 4 miles (N.) from Lancaster. The parish comprises the townships of Bolton, Slyne with Hest, and Nether and Over Kellet; that of Bolton containing 1574*a.* 3*r.*, chiefly arable land. The village of Hest is advantageously situated on the eastern shore of Morecambe Bay, and is a place of resort for sea-bathing. There are lime-kilns in the township of Nether Kellet. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 15.; net income, £169; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Chester. The church was rebuilt in 1813. The free grammar school was founded in 1619, by Thomas Assheton, and has an income of £23, arising from the original endowment and subsequent benefactions.

BOLTON-PERCY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the AINSTY wapentake, W. riding of YORK; containing 1040 inhabitants, of whom 241 are in the township of Bolton-Percy, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Tadcaster. The parish, which is bounded on the south-west by the river Wharfe, comprises the four townships of Bolton-Percy, Appleton-Roebuck, Colton, and Steeton; and contains about 7320 acres, of which the soil is generally a strong clay, with portions of a lighter kind; the surface is level, and interspersed with small plantations and woods. Bricks and tiles are manufactured. The York and North-Midland railway passes through the parish, in which is an intermediate station. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £39. 15. 2½.; net income, £1540; patron, Archbishop of York. The church, built in 1423, by Thomas Parker, rector, is a neat structure, with a square tower, decorated with a quantity of stained glass, and contains several monuments to the Fairfax family. A national school is supported by the incumbent and Sir William Milner, lord of the manor. The poor have the interest arising from £532, left by several donors.

BOLTON-UPON-DEARNE (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of DONCASTER, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 7¼ miles (N. by E.) from Rotherham, upon the road from Doncaster to Barnsley; containing, with Goldthorpe, 671 inhabitants. At the time of the Conquest here was a church, with its attendant priest; also a mill; and the country appears to have been in a higher state of cultivation than the lands around. The place became the residence of several families of some consideration, and seems to have been from early times a rich and flourishing spot. It also lies on the line of road traced by those who consider that a Roman road existed from Templeborough to Castleford; and it is certain that there was a bridge over the Dearne here at a remote period, the pontage of which was early a subject of dispute, as is recorded in the Hundred rolls. The PARISH comprises by measurement 2400 acres, of which about one-third is grass, and the remainder arable: the soil is various; in some parts a strong clay, in others a light sand; and the substratum abounds with excellent sandstone, which is extensively quarried. The village is beautifully situated on the northern acclivities of the vale of Dearne, having a good bridge over the river, said to occupy the site of a Roman ford; and about a mile northward is the pleasant hamlet of Goldthorpe. A statute fair for hiring servants is held on the second Thursday in November. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £6. 15. 5.; net income, £88; patrons, the Executors of the late W. H. Marsden, Esq., in whom are vested the impropriate tithes, which have been commuted for a rent-charge of £580. 8. 3. The church is an ancient edifice, chiefly in the Norman style, with a tower at the west end. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The parochial school is endowed with £12. 10. per annum for the instruction of 20 children, from a charitable fund, principally arising from a bequest by Richard Bingley, in 1756, and one by Elizabeth Pashley, in 1759. There are several small rent-charges for distribution among the poor.

BOLTON-UPON-SWALE, a chapelry, in the parish of CATTERICK, union of RICHMOND, wapentake of GILLING-EAST, N. riding of YORK, 1¾ mile (N. E.) from Catterick; containing 960 inhabitants. It comprises the townships of Bolton, Whitwell, Riplin, Ellerton, Scorton, and Uckerby, and is separated from that of Catterick by the river Swale. Through Scorton, the Richmond mail passes on its way to the Cowton station on the Great North of England railroad. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Vicar of Catterick, with a net income of £86: the chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, is ornamented with a lofty tower, and its burial-ground contains a neat pyramidal monument, erected by subscription, in 1743, over the grave of Henry Jenkins, a native of this place, who died in the year 1670, at the age of 169, and is the oldest Englishman on record. A free school was founded in the beginning of the last century by Leonard Robinson; and there is also a large nunnery, with a ladies' boarding school attached.

BONBY (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, N. division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Barton-on-Humber; containing 386 inhabitants. This parish, in ancient records called Bondeby, is on the road from Barton to London, and comprises by survey 2427 acres, equally divided between arable and pasture; the eastern half is highland, part of the wolds, and the western half, part of the Ancholme level; the soil is a peat moor, upon a stratum of clay. There are some quarries of chalkstone, which is raised for manure. The Ancholme river and Ancholme canal pass through the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 4. 4.; net income, £233; patron and impropiator, Lord Yarborough. The church is an ancient edifice, with a square tower. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans. In the reign of John, an alien priory was established here by the prior and convent at Merton, to whom the church, with others, had been granted in the 4th of Henry IV., which was given to the Chartreux-house, at Beauval.

BONCHURCH (St. Boniface), a parish, in the liberty of EAST MEDINA, incorporation and Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E.) from Ventnor; containing 302 inhabitants. This place, lying on the verge of the Channel, and south coast of the island, is of remote antiquity, and its church, which is one of the oldest in the neighbourhood, appears to have been originally founded by some monks of the abbey of Lyra, in Normandy, who were sent over to convert the fishermen on this part of the coast to Christianity. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Shanklin annexed, valued in the king's books at £6. 15. 5.; net income, £134; patrons, Charles Popham Hill, Esq., and the Trustees of the late J. Popham, Esq. The tithes of Bonchurch have been commuted for a rent-charge of £51. 10., and the glebe consists of $4\frac{3}{4}$ acres. The church, a very ancient edifice, is in the earliest Norman style. Admiral Hobson was a native of the parish.

BONDGATE, with AISMUNDERBY, a township, in the parish and liberty of RIPON, W. riding of YORK, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (S.) from Ripon; containing 614 inhabitants, of whom 541 are in Bondgate. The township comprises about 2250 acres, and adjoins Ripon, of which Bondgate forms the southern suburb, and is within the borough. An hospital for two poor women was founded here by one of the archbishops of York, about the time of King John.

BONDINGTON, a hamlet, in the parish of DUNSTER, union of WILLITON, hundred of CARHAMPTON, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 16 inhabitants.

BONDS, with BARNACRE, a township, in the parish and union of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. N. E.) from Garstang; containing 628 inhabitants. Here are the relics of Greenhalgh Castle.

BONEHILL, a township, in the parish and union of TAMWORTH, S. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. W. by W.) from Tamworth; containing 323 inhabitants.

BONGATE, a township, in the parish of St. Michael, APPLEBY, EAST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND; containing 618 inhabitants.

BONINGALE, or BONINGHALL, a parish, in the union of SHIFFNALL, Shiffnall division of the hundred of BRIMSTREE, S. division of SALOP, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Shiffnall; containing 184 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the rectory of Stockton: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £231. 7. 6., and there are 11 acres of glebe.

BONNINGTON (St. Rumwald), a parish, in the union of EAST ASHFORD, partly in the liberty of ROMNEY-MARSH, but chiefly in the hundred of STREET, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, 7 miles (S. E. by S.) from Ashford; containing 155 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 1086 acres, of which 615 are pasture, 330 arable, 36 woodland, and 20 hops, and is situated in the undulated slope which lies between the Quarry hills on the north, and the extensive level of Romney-Marsh on the south: the surface is pleasingly diversified, chiefly with pasture and wood, and the soil is a stiff clay. The Grand Military, or Shorncliffe and Rye canal, crosses the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 12. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £125; patron, T. Papillon, Esq.: there are about 20 acres of glebe. The church is small.

BONNINGTON, SUTTON. — See SUTTON - BONNINGTON.

BONSALL (St. James), a parish, in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, S. division of the county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Wirksworth; containing 1496 inhabitants. This place, anciently called Bonteshall, comprises by computation 2338 acres: it was formerly a market-town, and is situated in a district strikingly diversified with hill and dale: among the latter, the most interesting is Bonsall Dale, of which the geological formation consists of four strata of limestone and three of toadstone. The neighbouring hills also abound with limestone, and lead-ore and lapis calaminaris are obtained in great quantities within the parish, and prepared on the spot, affording employment to many of the inhabitants. The village consists of numerous houses scattered over a considerable portion of ground, in the centre of which the ancient market-cross, bearing date 1687, consisting of a pillar, resting upon a base, to which is still an ascent of fifteen steps, and surmounted by a ball, is still remaining. The manufacture of combs is carried on to a moderate extent: about a third of the population is employed at the stocking and drawer frames, and there is a saw-mill for cutting the white semi-marble Hopton stone. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £201; patron, Dean of Lincoln: there are 67 acres of glebe, with a house. The church is a handsome and picturesque old structure, with some good pointed windows remaining, and a tower surmounted by an elegant octangular spire; the interior is adorned with a variety of neatly-executed mural monuments. There is a place of worship for General Baptists; and a school is endowed with £100 per annum, arising from tenements bequeathed by William Cragge, and his wife Elizabeth, in 1704, and of lands by Elizabeth Turnor, in 1763. Vestiges of a Roman road may be traced.

BONTHORPE, a hamlet, in the parish of WILLOUGHBY, union of SPILSBY, Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from the town of Alford; containing 14 inhabitants.

BONWICK, a township, in the parish of SKIPSEA, union of SKIRLAUGH, N. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Great Driffild; containing 29 inhabitants. Bonwick, or Bovingwick, is not named in the Domesday book, being probably included, with Skipsea and other parts of the parish, in the "adjacent lands" of the manor of Cleton. The place consists of two farms, respectively designated High and Low Bonwick. A rent-charge of £25. 5. 3. has been awarded as a commutation for the tithes, payable to the Archbishop of York.

BOOKHAM, GREAT (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of EPSOM, hundred of EFFINGHAM, W. division of SURREY, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Leatherhead; containing 963 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 3242 acres, of which 1446 are arable, 629 meadow and pasture, 264 woodland, 105 gardens and buildings, 23 public roads, and 775 common. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with a moiety of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £9. 17. $3\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £340; patron, W. Heberden, Esq., M.D., impropiator of the other moiety of the great tithes. The church is an ancient structure, in the early English style, and contains numerous handsome monuments. Sir George Shiers, Bart., in 1690, bequeathed a rent-charge of £36. 3. for apprenticing children, and other charitable purposes; and there is a national school, supported by subscription.

BOOKHAM, LITTLE, a parish, in the union of EPSOM, hundred of EFFINGHAM, W. division of SURREY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Leatherhead; containing 237 inhabitants. This parish, which is on the road from London to Guildford, and bounded by the river Mole, contains 945 acres, of which the soil comprises clay, gravel, and chalk. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 15. 7.; patron and incumbent, Rev. G. P. Boileau Pollen. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £154, and £10 are paid to the Vicar of Effingham; there are 41 acres of glebe. Certain tenements in London, producing about £65 per annum, were assigned by Sir Benjamin Maddox; a moiety to the clergyman, and the other moiety for the benefit of the poor and the parish clerk, and for repairing the church and the highways.

BOOLEY, a township, in the parish of STANTON-UPON-HINE-HEATH, union of WEM, Whitchurch division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP; containing 178 inhabitants.

BOOTH, a hamlet, in the township of KNEDLINGTON, parish of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, E. riding of YORK, 2 miles (S. W.) from Howden; containing 36 inhabitants. The village lies on the northern bank of the river Ouse, across which is a noted ferry.

BOOTH, NEW LAUND, with FILLEY-CLOSE and HALLAWS-REEDLEY, a township, in the parish of WHALLEY, union of BURNLEY, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2 miles (N.) from Burnley; containing 412 inhabitants.

BOOTH, OLD LAUND, a township, in the parish of MITTON, union of BURNLEY, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3 miles (N.) from Burnley; containing 481 inhabitants.

BOOTHBY (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the Higher division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, union and county of LINCOLN, 10 miles (N. W. by N.) from Sleaford; containing 214 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 12. $3\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £638; patron, J. Fullerton, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land in 1771.

BOOTHBY-PAGNELL (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of GRANTHAM, wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{2}$ -miles (N. N. W.) from Corby; containing 132 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 10. 5., and in the patronage of J. Litchford, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £312. 14., and there are upwards of 121 acres of glebe. A small school is partly supported by contributions.

BOOTHEN, a township, in the parish and union of STOKE-UPON-TRENT, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD; containing 144 inhabitants.

BOOTHS, HIGHER, a township, in the parish of WHALLEY, union of HASLINGDEN, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3 miles (E.) from Burnley; containing 3652 inhabitants.

BOOTHS, LOWER, a township, in the parish of WHALLEY, union of HASLINGDEN, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER; containing 2464 inhabitants.

BOOTLE (St. MICHAEL), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Ravenglass, and 282 (N. W. by N.) from London; containing 696 inhabitants. The name of this place, formerly written "Bothill," is supposed to be derived from the booths erected on a hill above the town, for the watchman whose duty it was to light the beacon on its summit, upon the discovery of any ships in the Irish Channel, which might appear to threaten a descent upon the coast. A Benedictine nunnery was founded at Seton, in the parish, by Gunild, daughter of Henry de Boyvill, fourth lord of Millorn, to which Henry IV. annexed the hospital of St. Leonard, in Lancaster: its revenue, at the Dissolution, was £13. 17. 4.: there are still some remains. The town is pleasantly situated within two miles of the sea: the houses are neatly built, and the inhabitants well supplied with water. The land in the neighbourhood is in a high state of cultivation, and the environs abound with pleasing scenery: the Corney and Bootle Fells, eminences in the adjoining forest of Copeland, afford extensive views; and from Black Coombe, which is nearly 2000 feet high, may be seen the coast of Scotland, the Isle of Man, and the mountains of North Wales. The trade is principally in corn, pork, and bacon, which are sent to Liverpool: the market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on April 5th and Sept. 24th, for the sale of corn, and for hiring servants; and April 26th and Aug. 3rd, for horses, horned-cattle, and sheep. The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 17. $3\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £436, and there are 14 acres of glebe. The church is a very ancient edifice, though much modernised by successive repairs; the interior contains some interesting monuments, among which is an effigy on a brass plate of Sir Hugh Askew, and has been lately enlarged by the addition of 230 sittings. A place of worship for Independents was built in 1780. The free school was founded, in 1713, by Henry Singleton, who endowed it with £200, which sum, with subsequent benefactions, produces about £20 per annum; and another school is partly supported by subscription. The poor law union of Bootle comprises 12 parishes or places, and contains a population of 5516. At Selker bay, a small inlet of the sea, are sometimes seen the remains of vessels, which are traditionally said to have been Roman galleys, sunk there at the time of an invasion by that people; and at Esk-Meots are vestiges of an encampment, where Roman coins and fragments of altars have been frequently discovered.

BOOTLE, a chapelry, in the parish of WALTON-ON-THE-HILL, union and hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Liverpool; containing, with the township of Linacre, 1962 inhabitants. The village, which is well built, and contains several good houses, is much resorted to during summer for the benefit of sea-bathing. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £164; patron, W. S. Millar, Esq. Rent-charges amounting to £235 have been awarded as commutations for the tithes, of which sum £200 are payable to the rector, and £35 to the vicar, of the parish. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary.

BOOTON (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of ST. FAITH'S, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 1 mile (E. S. E.) from Reepham; containing 241 inhabitants. It is intersected by the road from Norwich to Reepham, and comprises 1040 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 12. 6., and in the gift of H. Elwin, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £294, and there are about 23 acres of glebe. The church is chiefly in the decorated style, with a square embattled tower. A small school is partly supported by contributions; and at the inclosure, in 1811, twenty acres were allotted to the poor.

BORASTON, a chapelry, in the parish of BURFORD, union of TENBURY, hundred of OVERS, S. division of SALOP; containing 199 inhabitants.

BORDEAN, a tything, in the parish and hundred of EAST-MEON, union of PETERSFIELD, Petersfield and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Petersfield; containing 109 inhabitants.

BORDEN (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union and hundred of MILTON, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Sittingbourne; containing 860 inhabitants, and comprising 2143a. 2r. 37p. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 10., and in the gift of J. Musgrave, Esq., the proprietor: the great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £550, and the vicarial for one of £270, and there are about $3\frac{1}{2}$ acres of glebe, with a residence. The church, a handsome structure of flint, supposed to have been erected about the year 1005, comprises three aisles and three chancels, with a square tower at the western end; there are some Roman bricks mixed with the flint-stones in the building, and cemented with mortar, in the composition of which pulverized cockle-shells have been used; the chief entrance is under a Norman arch, and there are similar specimens of architecture in other parts of the edifice. In 1707, William Barrow left land for the benefit of widows and families who had never received parochial relief; the estates, which are in several parishes, return an income of £1500 a year. A British coin, and several relics of Roman antiquity, together with a great quantity of round stones, like cannon-balls, have been found in the neighbourhood; and Danes Hill, in the parish, is supposed to have taken its name from a great battle fought here when the Danes held a fort at Milton, some traces of which are still to be seen. Dr. Robert Plot, the natural historian of Oxfordshire and Staffordshire, was born at the manor-house of Sutton-Baron, in the parish, in 1641, where he died, April 13th, 1696.

BORDESLEY, a chapelry, in the parish and union of ASTON, Birmingham division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, adjoining the town of Birmingham, and containing 10,754 inhabitants. In the civil war of the seventeenth century, this was the scene of a skirmish between the army of Prince Rupert, who, in 1643, was sent to open a communication between Oxford and York, and a party of the parliamentarians, who, assisted by the inhabitants, had intrenched themselves at a place since called Camp Hill, in order to intercept his progress. During the Birmingham riots in 1791, Bordesley Hall was burnt by the mob. The chapelry was originally an inconsiderable hamlet, consisting only of a few scattered dwelling-houses, of which one, now remaining at Camp Hill, is of timber frame-work and plaster, with projecting upper stories; but, from its proximity to Birmingham, it has become an integral part of that town, and partakes largely in its trade, manufactures, and public institutions. It is pleasantly situated on the turnpike-roads to Coventry and Warwick, and contains some handsome continuous ranges of houses, and numerous detached mansions, inhabited by families of opulence connected with Birmingham. On the road leading to Coventry is an extensive establishment for staining, colouring, and marbling paper, in which the process, though facilitated by machinery worked by steam, affords employment to a considerable number of persons. The Birmingham canal, on the banks of which are various works, traverses the chapelry; and the Birmingham and Gloucester railway passes through it in its progress to join the London and Birmingham line. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £200; patron, Vicar of Aston; improPRIATORS, Trustees of the late Rev. G. Peake. The chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was built in 1822, at an expense of £14,235, by subscription among the inhabitants, aided by a grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners: it is in the later English style, combining a rich variety of architectural details. Alms-houses, one of which is appropriated as a chapel, have been built for twelve aged persons, by Mr. Dowell, whose widow appoints the inmates.

BORDESLEY, a hamlet, in the parish of TARDE-BIGG, union of BROMSGROVE, Upper division of the hundred of HALFESHIRE, Droitwich and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Bromsgrove. A Cistercian abbey, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, was built, in 1138, by the Empress Matilda, the revenue of which, a short time previously to the Dissolution, was estimated at £392. 8. 6.: the chapel, dedicated to St. Stephen, which subsisted for some time afterwards, formed part of it.

BOREHAM (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHELMSFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from Chelmsford; containing 1034 inhabitants. This parish derives its name from the Saxon, Bore, "a market," and Ham, "a village;" and is supposed to have been anciently a place of considerable importance. The land is generally elevated; the soil is fertile, though varying in quality, and the general appearance is greatly enriched with wood, which seems to have been formerly more abundant than at present. New Hall, in the parish, is part of a much larger mansion, greatly adorned by Henry VIII., who, having obtained the manor in exchange for other property, raised it into an honour: his daughter, the Princess Mary, also resided here for several years. It is now occupied by a society of English nuns, who were driven from Liege by the fury of the French republicans, and who now superintend the education of about eighty Roman Catholic young ladies. The village is pleasantly situated on the road to Colchester; and the Chelmer navigation bounds the parish on the south. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 3. 9., and in the patronage of the Bishop of London: the appropriate tithes, belonging to the Chancellor in St. Paul's cathedral, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £680, and the vicarial for one of £440; and there are 21 acres of glebe belonging to the appropriator, and 18 to the vicar. The church is a handsome edifice, consisting of a nave, with north and south aisles, and a chancel, between which and the nave rises a lofty square embattled tower; the south aisle was added by Sir Thomas Radcliffe, as a sepulchral chapel for his family, and contains an elegant monument with recumbent statues of Robert, first Earl of Sussex, his son, and grandson.

BORESFORD, with PEDWARDINE, a township, in the parish of BRAMPTON-BRYAN, union of KNIGHTON, hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, 3 miles (S. E.) from Knighton; containing 102 inhabitants. The Earls of Kinnoul enjoy a seat in the House of Lords, as Barons Hay, of Pedwardine.

BORLEY, a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Sudbury; containing 188 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises 776*a. 3r. 9p.*, and is bounded on the east by the river Stour, derives its name from the Saxon words signifying "Boar's Pasture." The manor, at the time of the Norman survey, belonged to Adeliza, Countess of Albemarle, half sister to William I., and descended to many illustrious families closely allied to the crown; it afterwards passed to the Waldegrave family, whose descendants are the present proprietors. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9, and in the gift of Earl Waldegrave: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £276. 10., and there are $10\frac{1}{2}$ acres of glebe. The church, which stands on an eminence commanding an extensive prospect, is a small ancient edifice, containing an elegant monument to the Waldegraves.

BORLEY, a township, in the parish of OMBERSLEY, union of DROITWICH, Lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER.

BOROUGHBRIDGE, a hamlet, in the parishes of LING, OTHERY, and WESTON-ZOYLAND, partly in the hundred of ANDERSFIELD, and partly in that of WHITLEY, union of BRIDGWATER, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 93 inhabitants. Collinson, the county historian, states the name to be derived from "a large borough or mount, very high and steep," and a stone bridge of three lofty arches, which here crosses the navigable river Parret: this mount is situated within an inclosure, on the eastern side of the river, and has generally been considered as formed by nature; but the same author supposes it to be a work of art, raised for a tumulus. It is crowned with the ruins of an ancient cruciform chapel, which was dedicated to St. Michael, and dependent on the Abbey of Athelney. Though previously in a dilapidated state, it was greatly damaged during the parliamentary war, when it was occupied as a military post by a small party of royalists, who, after having successfully resisted various assaults, were compelled to surrender to a body of parliamentarians, detached against them by General Fairfax.

BOROUGHBRIDGE, a market-town and chapelry, in the parish of ALDBOROUGH, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, $17\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from York, and 206 (N. N. W.) from London; containing 1024 inhabitants. This place, which has risen into importance since the decline of Aldborough, within half a mile of which it is situated, derives its name from a bridge erected here over the river Ure, soon after the Conquest, when the road was diverted from Aldborough, and brought through this town. In 1318, it was burnt by Earl Douglas, at the head of a band of Scots, who ravaged the northern parts of England; and, in 1322, a battle was fought near the bridge, between the forces of Edward II. and those of the celebrated Earl of Lancaster, in which the latter were defeated, and the earl having taken refuge in the town, which was assaulted on the following day, was made prisoner and conveyed to Pontefract, where he was soon afterwards beheaded. Of this battle, a memorial was exhibited in the number of human bones, swords, fragments of armour, and other military relics, which, in raising the bank of the Ure, in 1792, were found near the spot. The town, which has been greatly improved, is pleasantly situated on the southern bank of the river, over which a handsome stone bridge has been constructed, on the site of a former one of wood: the streets are partially paved, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from springs, and from the river. A court-house was built in 1836. The trade of the town is principally derived from its situation on the high road to Edinburgh. The market is on Saturday; and large fairs are held on April 27th, June 22nd, Aug. 16th, Oct. 23rd, and Dec. 13th, each for two days: the fair in June, which continues for a week, is chiefly celebrated for horses and hardware, and the others are for cattle and sheep. In the market-place, which is in the centre of the town, is a handsome fluted column of the Doric order, twelve feet high. The constables and other officers are chosen annually at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The elective franchise was conferred in the reign of Mary, from which time the borough returned two members to parliament, but was disfranchised by the act of the 2nd and 3rd of William IV., cap. 45.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy; net income, £83;

patron, the Vicar of Aldborough. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Wesleyans; and a national school, established in 1814, is supported principally by subscription, and an endowment of £100, given by Mrs. Scruton, in 1836. To the west of the town are three large pyramidal stones, ranged in a straight line, in a direction from north to south; the central one, which is the largest, is 30½ feet in height; they are vulgarly called the Devil's Arrows, and were originally four in number. The purpose of their erection is involved in obscurity: some suppose them to have been raised in memory of a reconciliation effected between Caracalla and Geta, sons of the Emperor Severus, who died at York. Camden considers them to have been Roman trophies; but though they may probably have been used by that people as meta in the celebration of their chariot races, their origin appears to be more remote, and Stukeley refers them to the earliest times of the Britons, and is of opinion that here was the great Panegyre of the Druids, where the inhabitants of the neighbouring district assembled to offer the sacrifices. From its proximity to Aldborough, a celebrated Roman station, it has become the depository of numerous relics, consisting of tessellated pavements and coins, several of which have been found here; and, in the immediate vicinity, the remains of a Roman wall are still discernible.

BOROUGH-FEN, an extra-parochial district, in the soke of PETERBOROUGH, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 5 miles (N. E. by N.) from Peterborough; containing 192 inhabitants.

BORROWBY, a township, in the parish of LEAKE, union of NORTH-ALLERTON, wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, N. riding of YORK, 5 miles (N.) from Thirsk; containing 401 inhabitants. It is situated on the road between Thirsk and Stokesley, and comprises by computation 1280 acres, including Gueldable, in which are 500 acres. The Bishop of Ripon is lord of the manor of Borrowby. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is endowed with £5. 10. per annum.

BORROWBY, a township, in the parish of LYTHE, union of THIRSK, E. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, 11¼ miles (W. N. W.) from Whitby; containing 81 inhabitants. This place was formerly styled Bergebi, as it appears written in Domesday survey, and was the property of the Mauleys, of Mulgrave, with which barony the estate has descended to the present lord: at the time of the Conqueror's survey it had been laid waste. The township comprises about 650 acres, situated in the western part of the parish. The village is on the acclivities of a narrow dale, and to the north of the road between Whitby and Guisborough.

BORROWDALE, a chapelry, in the parish of CROSTHWAITHE, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 6 miles (S. by W.) from Keswick; containing 369 inhabitants. The romantic scenery of this district has elicited deserved eulogy from numerous tourists. The Bowder stone, situated in the vale, is esteemed the largest detached piece of rock, entitled to the denomination of a single stone, in England; it is 62 feet in length, and 84 in circumference, and contains about 23,090 feet of solid stone, weighing upwards of 1771 tons: the upper part projects considerably over the small base on which it rests, and it is not unusual for parties of pleasure to regale under it. The celebrated black-lead, or wad, mine, is about nine miles from Keswick, near the head of the valley, in the steep side of a mountain facing the south-east, and has been opened at different places. The lead is found in lumps, or nodules, varying in weight from 1 oz. to 50lb., imbedded in the matrix; and the finer sort is packed in barrels, sent to London, and deposited in the warehouse belonging to the proprietors of the mine, where it is exposed for sale to the pencil-makers on the first Monday in every month: that of an inferior description is chiefly used in the composition of crucibles, in giving a black polish to articles of cast-iron, and in various anti-attribution compositions. Black lead is found in various parts of the world, but in none to so great an extent, and of the same degree of purity, as in this: an inferior kind has been discovered in the shires of Ayr and Inverness, in Scotland, but it is unfit for pencils. Here are also several quarries of blue slate: a copper-mine was formerly worked; and lead-ore exists to a limited extent in the mountain. A soft paleish substance, commonly called Borrowdale soap, is found, which, having undergone a chymical process, similar to that by which the black lead is hardened, is used for slate pencils. A fair for sheep is held on the first Wednesday in September. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £62; patron, Vicar of Crosthwaite. The chapel was rebuilt a few years since. On the summit of Castle Crag, a conical hill covered with wood, are vestiges of a military work. Near a lake at the lower extremity of the dale is a salt-spring, the water of which is of a quality somewhat similar to that of Cheltenham.

BORROWDON, a township, in the parish of ALLERTON, union of ROTHBURY, W. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing 165 inhabitants. It is situated about a mile south-west from Netherton, from which it is separated by a small stream; and belongs to various proprietors. About a mile and a half to the south-west stands Charity Hall, which was left to the poor of Rothbury parish, and from that circumstance derives its name. Several British axe-heads of flint have been found.

BORWICK, a chapelry, in the parish of WARTON, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3½ miles (S.) from Burton-in-Kendal; containing 214 inhabitants. Charles II. lodged for one night at Borwick Hall, on his way to Worcester, and his army encamped a short distance from it.

BOSBURY (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of LEDBURY, hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Ledbury; containing 1137 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the Ledbury and Worcester road, and comprises by computation 4500 acres, of which the soil is a stiff red clay, saturated with moisture, and the surface varied hill and dale. The Gloucester and Ledbury canal wharf is a mile distant. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with one-fourth of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £10. 3. 8.; patron, Bishop of Hereford: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £420, and the vicarial for one of £399. 18. The church, which is in various styles, is an ancient edifice, containing some interesting monuments. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a grammar school, endowed by Sir Rowland Morton, has an income of about £135. Mr. Bridges, of Tiberton Court, bequeathed £5 per annum for apprenticing a child; and there are several other small bequests for the benefit of the poor. The bishops of Hereford had a palace here, the remains of which have been converted into farm-offices.

BOSCASTLE, a small sea-port (formerly a market-town), in the parishes of FORRABURY and MINSTER, hundred of LESNEWTH, E. division of CORNWALL, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Camelford, and 230 (W. by S.) from London; containing 807 inhabitants. This place takes its name from a castle erected by some of the family of Bottereaux, who settled here in the reign of Henry II., of which only the site remains. The town is romantically situated on the northern coast, and contains several respectable houses. A pilchard fishery, established a few years since, but soon afterwards relinquished, contributed greatly to the improvement of the quay, which is accessible to ships of 300 tons' burthen. The port is a member of the port of Padstow, and a considerable trade is carried on in corn, Delabole slate, and manganese, of which last there is a mine in the neighbourhood. The fairs are on August 5th, for lambs, and November 22nd, for ewes and cattle. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and some remains of an ancient chapel dedicated to St. John, are visible.

BOSCOBEL, an extra-parochial district, in the union of SHIFFNALL, Hales-Owen division of the hundred of GRIMSTREE, S. division of SALOP, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Shiffnall; containing 18 inhabitants. Boscobel House is celebrated in history as the place where Charles II. concealed himself, in Sept. 1651, after the disastrous battle of Worcester, secure in the incorruptible integrity of five brothers, in humble life, named Penderell: the house has been considerably modernised, but the place of concealment, called the Sacred Hole, is carefully preserved, and in front of the house is a Latin inscription, traced with white pebbles in the pavement, recording the circumstance. The Royal Oak, thought to have sprung from an acorn of the parent tree, to which the unfortunate monarch retired for greater security when his pursuers were searching the house and out-buildings, stands near the middle of a large field, adjoining the garden; it is surrounded by an iron-railing, and has an inscribed brass plate affixed to it.

BOSCOMB (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union and hundred of AMESBURY, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Amesbury, on the road between Salisbury and Marlborough; containing 156 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 17. 1.; net income, £330; patron, Bishop of Salisbury. Four almshouses were endowed with a rent-charge of £24, by John Kent, Esq., by will proved in 1710. This was once the residence of the celebrated Richard Hooker, who held the living, and here wrote some part of his "Ecclesiastical Polity."

BOSHAM (Holy Trinity), a parish, in the union of WEST BOURNE, hundred of BOSHAM, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Chichester; containing, with the tythings of Broadbridge, Creed, Fishbourne, Gosport, and Walton, 1091 inhabitants. This place, called by the Saxons Bosenham, probably from the woods by which it was surrounded, was anciently of great importance, and, in the reign of Edward the Confessor, was the occasional residence of Earl Godwin, whose son Harold, afterwards King of England, sailing from Bosham on an excursion of pleasure, in 1056, was driven by a storm on the Norman coast, and made prisoner by Count Ponthieu. In the time of Henry II. the place was constituted the head of a hundred and manor, and endowed with various immunities, which were fully confirmed by James I., and of which several are still recognised. The parish is bounded on the east and south by the harbour of Chichester, and the inhabitants are chiefly employed in the oyster-fishery; the village is pleasantly situated at the upper extremity of the creek to which it gives name, and is neatly built. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 11. 3.; net income, £106; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Chichester, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1318. 13., and who possess a glebe of 88 acres. The church, built about the year 1120, by William Warlewast, Bishop of Exeter, was made collegiate for a dean and five secular canons or prebendaries, and invested with many privileges, and was a royal free chapel, exempt from ecclesiastical jurisdiction till the Dissolution, when it was made parochial: it is a stately edifice, chiefly early English, with some Norman details, and later additions. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a national school was built in 1833. A small monastery for five or six brethren was founded, in 681, by Adelwach, and placed under the superintendence of Dicul, an Irish monk. Herbert, secretary to Thomas à Becket, and afterwards made cardinal by Pope Alexander III., and author of the "Life of Becket," was a native of the place.

BOSLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of PRESTBURY, union and hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Congleton; containing 552 inhabitants. The manor, which belonged, after the Conquest, to Hugh Mara and the Baines, of Monteith, passed in 1327 to Isabel, mother of King Edward III., and from Henry VI. came by grant to the Stanleys in 1454, and was afterwards held by Lord Monteagle, the hero of Flodden; from his son, it passed to the Fittons about 1540, and is now vested in their successor, the Earl of Harrington. The parish is situated on the London road from Manchester to Derby, and comprises about 2500 acres; it is skirted by the river Daine, and intersected by the Macclesfield canal. There are a silk-spinning manufactory and a cotton-mill, in which upwards of 100 people are employed. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £82; patron, Vicar of Prestbury: the glebe comprises about 30 acres. A chapel has been built in the adjoining township of North Rode, and a school was lately erected by the incumbent, assisted by a grant from the National Society, at a cost of £250.

BOSSALL (St. Botolph), a parish, partly in the wapentake of BIRDFORTH, but chiefly in that of BULMER, N. riding of YORK; consisting of the chapelries of Butter-Crambe and Claxton, and the townships of Bossall, Harton, Sand-Hutton, and part of Flaxton-on-the-Moor; and containing 1184 inhabitants, of whom 77 are in the township of Bossall, 4 miles (S.) from Whitwell, and 10 miles (N. E.) from York. The parish comprises 9820 acres, and is bounded by the river Derwent on the south and east, and intersected by the road from York to Scarborough. The village was formerly large, but at present consists of only three or four houses: foundations of buildings have been discovered in an adjoining field, thence called "Old Bossall." Courts leet are held for the several manors in the parish. - The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12; net income, £445; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Durham. The church is a handsome cruciform structure, with a steeple rising from the centre. A chapel of ease at Sand-Hutton has been recently rebuilt, and finished in a handsome antique style, with painted glass windows, at the expense of James Walker, Esq.; and at Flaxton and Butter-Crambe are other chapels. A leaden box, containing about 300 small silver Saxon coins, was discovered when ploughing a field at Flaxton, in the year 1807.

Seal and Arms.

BOSSINEY-WITH-TREVENA, formerly a borough and market-town, in the parish of TINTAGELL, union of CAMELFORD, hundred of LESNEWTH, E. division of CORNWALL, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W.) from Camelford, and 231 (W. by S.) from London; containing 296 inhabitants, of whom 219 are in the village of Trevena. This place consists of two villages, about a quarter of a mile distant from each other, situated on a bleak and rugged part of the northern coast. A fair is held at Trevena, on the first Monday after Oct. 19th. Bossiney was made a free borough in the reign of Henry III., by Richard, Earl of Cornwall, brother to that monarch; and a mayor, whose office is merely nominal, is chosen annually by a jury of burgesses empanelled by his predecessor, at the court leet held in Oct., when constables and other inferior officers are likewise appointed. The elective franchise was conferred in the 7th of Edward VI., from which time the borough returned two members to parliament, until it was disfranchised by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45. The town-hall, a small building, is appropriated also to the use of a charity school, which is chiefly supported by the mayor and burgesses, who appoint the master, and allow him a salary of £20 per annum. There are some remains of King Arthur's castle, on the top of a stupendous rock, formerly part of the main land, but now connected with it only by a narrow isthmus: the summit comprises an area of thirty acres of pasture; but the acclivities are so steep that it is almost inaccessible to the sheep that graze on it.

BOSSINGTON, a tything, in the parish of PORLOCK, union of WILLTON, hundred of CARHAMPTON, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 133 inhabitants.

BOSSINGTON (St. James), a parish, in the union of STOCKBRIDGE, hundred of THORNGATE, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Stockbridge; containing 60 inhabitants. A new church was erected in 1840. The Roman road from Salisbury to Winchester passes through the place.

BOSTOCK, a township, in the parish of DAVENHAM, union and hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Middlewich; containing 190 inhabitants. The Grand Junction railway passes about a mile to the west of the village. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £75. 11. 6.

BOSTON (St. Botolph), a borough, port, market-town, and parish, and the head of a union, locally in the wapentake of SKIRBECK, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 34 miles (S. E.) from Lincoln, and 116 (N.) from London; containing 12,942, and, with the extra-parochial grounds in the union, 13,507 inhabitants.

Arms.

This place derived its name from St. Botolph, a Saxon, who founded a monastery here, about the year 650; from which circumstance it was called Botolph's Town, since contracted to Boston. The monastery, which was erected on the north side of the present church, was destroyed by the Danes, in 870, and its remains have been converted into a dwelling-house, styled Botolph's Priory. From the discovery of the foundations of several buildings, urns, and other relics of antiquity, in 1716, the place is supposed to have been of Roman origin; and, according to Dr. Stukeley, the Romans built a fort at the entrance of the river Witham, over which they had a ferry, at a short distance to the south of the town. In the reign of Edward I., Robert Chamberlayne, having assembled some associates disguised as ecclesiastics, secretly set fire to the town, and, while the inhabitants were endeavouring to extinguish the flames, plundered the booths of the rich merchandise exposed for sale at the fair, and burnt such goods as they were not able to carry away; and so rich is the town represented to have been at the time of this fire, that veins of melted gold and silver are said to have run in one common current, down the streets. In 1285, Boston suffered greatly from an inundation of the river, and the mercantile ardour of the inhabitants being checked by the plunder of the fair and the conflagration of the town, its prosperity began to decline. In the early part of the reign of Edward II., it was made a staple port for wool, leather, tin, lead, and other commodities, which soon gave a new impulse to the spirit of commercial enterprise; and the settlement in England of the Hanseatic merchants, who established a guild here, tended so powerfully to revive the former prosperity of the town, that, in the reign of Edward III., it sent deputies to three grand councils held at Westminster, and contributed 17 ships and 261 men towards the armament for the invasion of Brittany.

The TOWN is situated on the banks of the river Witham, which divides it into two wards, east and west, connected by a handsome iron bridge of one arch, erected by the corporation, in 1807, at an expense of £22,000, under the superintendence of Mr. Rennie. The streets are well paved, and lighted with gas, under acts passed in the 16th and 46th of George III., for the general improvement of the town, and many handsome buildings have been erected; but the inhabitants are scantily supplied with water, which the more opulent collect from rain, in cisterns attached to their houses, and the poorer bring from the river, or from pits in the neighbourhood. Frequent attempts to procure a better supply, by boring, have failed; and in Feb. 1829, after expending £1800, the last undertaking was relinquished. There are two subscription libraries; a handsome suite of assembly rooms, built by the corporation in 1820; a commodious theatre, erected in 1806; and a theatre of arts, exhibiting views of various cities, with appropriate moving figures, which is open every Wednesday evening. About half a mile from the town are Vauxhall Gardens, which, during the season, are brilliantly illuminated, and numerous attended; they were designed by Mr. Charles Cave in 1813, and comprise about two acres of ground: in the centre is an elegant saloon sixty-two feet wide.

The TRADE of the port, from an accumulation of silt in the river, which impeded its navigation, had begun to decline about the middle of the last century, but was revived by forming a canal, deepening the river, and enlarging the harbour. The exports consist chiefly of the agricultural produce of the county; the imports are timber, hemp, tar, and iron, from the Baltic; and a considerable coasting trade is also carried on, which of late years has rapidly increased. Since the fens adjoining the town have been drained and cultivated, a tract of rich land, of nearly 70,000 acres, has been obtained, which, besides producing grain, feeds a great number of sheep and oxen, remarkable for their size and fatness: oats in great quantity are shipped to various parts of the coast, and wool to the manufacturing districts in Yorkshire, whence coal and other articles are brought in return. The quay, which is conveniently adapted to the loading of vessels, is accessible to ships of 100 tons' burthen. The custom-house, a commodious building, was erected at the public expense, and the pilot-office was built in 1811; the establishment of the latter consists of a master, twelve pilots, and a few supernumeraries. The river Witham is navigable to Lincoln, from which place, by means of canals communicating with the Trent, there is an inland navigation to almost every part of the kingdom. About 40 boats are employed in the fishery, and shrimps of superior quality, soles, smelts, and herrings are taken in profusion: in 1772, the corporation erected a fish market, which was taken down, and a new one upon a larger scale erected, in 1816. The market is on Wednesday and Saturday, and is abundantly supplied with poultry, a large quantity of which is sent to London every week, also with vegetables and fruit. The fairs are on May 4th for sheep, and the day following for cattle; Aug. 11th, which is called the Town fair; Nov. 30th, and the three following days, for horses and horned-cattle; and Dec. 11th, for horned-cattle only.

Boston is a BOROUGH by prescription, and, according to a charter bestowed by Henry VIII., and confirmed and extended by Elizabeth and other sovereigns, the government was vested in a mayor, (who was also clerk of the market and admiral of the port,) a recorder, deputy-recorder, 12 aldermen, 18 common-councilmen, a judge and marshal of the admiralty court, and other officers. The court of admiralty, granted by Queen Elizabeth, and which had a jurisdiction extending over the whole of the adjacent coast, was abolished by the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., c. 76; and under this act the corporation now consists of a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors; the number of borough magistrates is nine, but the magistrates for the division exercise a concurrent jurisdiction. A court of record, for the recovery of debts to any amount, is held before the mayor, the alderman who is a magistrate, and the town-clerk, who is likewise registrar of the court. The petty-sessions for the wapentakes of Skirbeck and Kirton are held weekly at the public office in Bridge-street; the general quarter-sessions for the parts of Holland are held here and at Spalding; and a court of requests, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5, is held once a fortnight, under an act obtained in the 47th of George III. The elective franchise was conferred in the reign of Edward VI., since which time the borough has returned two representatives to parliament. The right of election was formerly vested in the members of the corporation, the sons of aldermen, and eldest sons of common-councilmen, residing as householders within the borough, and in the resident freemen generally, in number 400; but, by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, it was extended to the £10 householders of the borough, the limits of which, comprising 4574*a. 2r. 8p.*, were enlarged by the act of the 2nd and 3rd of the same reign, cap. 64, and now include 4614 acres. The mayor is returning officer. The guildhall is an ancient building, in the council-chamber of which is a fine portrait of Sir Joseph Banks, presented by him when recorder of Boston. The gaol is a handsome building, at the south end of the town, erected in 1811.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £33. 6. 8.; net income, £360, the greater part of which is paid out of the proceeds of certain lands granted by Philip and Mary; and out of the same fund £200 are received by a lecturer, the vicar and lecturer standing in the place of two presbyters named in that grant; patrons and impropiators, Mayor and Corporation, who, by the Municipal Act, are required to dispose of the advowson. The tithes for the eastern division of the parish were commuted for land and a money payment in 1810. The church is a magnificent structure, in the decorated English style, erected in 1309, with a lofty square tower surmounted by an octagonal lantern turret, in the later English style; the tower, which is 300 feet high, and was once illuminated during the night, forms a conspicuous landmark for mariners traversing the North Sea. An additional church was erected, a few years since, by subscription: the living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £100 per annum by the corporation, who are the patrons. There are places of worship for General and Particular Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Methodists, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school, founded and endowed in 1554, under the above grant of Philip and Mary, is under the control of the trustees for charitable purposes appointed under the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV.: the schoolroom was built in 1567, and a convenient house for the master in 1826. A school was founded, in 1707, by Mr. Laughton, who endowed it with lands in Skirbeck, producing about £50 per annum, since augmented by other benefactors; and a Blue-coat school, founded in 1713, for clothing and instructing boys and girls, and two national and Lancastrian schools, established in 1815, are supported by subscription. A general dispensary was instituted in 1795. The poor law union of Boston comprises 27 parishes or places, and contains a population of 34,680. Of the numerous monastic establishments which formerly existed in the town and its vicinity, there remain only some slight vestiges of the Black, or Dominican friary, established in the year 1288. The ancient church of St. John, formerly the parish church, has been totally removed, but the cemetery is still used as a burying-ground. John Fox, the celebrated martyrologist, was a native of the town. Boston confers the title of Viscount on the Irby family.

BOSTON, a village, forming, with CLIFFORD, a township, in the parish of BRAMHAM, Upper division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Wetherby; containing 1566 inhabitants, of whom 1014 are in Boston. This large and commanding village is of recent growth, and has arisen in consequence of the discovery, in 1744, of a mineral spring here, called Thorp Arch Spa, on account of Thorp Arch, in the vicinity, affording the nearest accommodation for visitors, before the building of the village of Boston, the first house having been erected in 1753. The water is of a saline taste, and of a slightly sulphureous smell, and is possessed of purgative and diuretic qualities: it is taken in larger quantities than the Harrogate water, and is efficacious in cases of general relaxation, bilious, and dyspeptic complaints, and glandular obstructions. Its analysis, in 1784, exhibited in one gallon, an ounce of inflammable air, fixed air, and muriatic salt; 16 grains of calcareous and selenitical earth, and a small quantity of iron suspended in fixed air. For the accommodation of the visitors to this place of fashionable resort, there is a pump-room, with hot and cold baths, the conveniences and benefits of which, together with the salubrity of the air, and the picturesque situation of the spot, in a valley, on the southern side of the river Wharfe, (the village communicating with Thorp Arch by a good stone bridge,) contribute greatly to increase the sanative effect of the spa water. A chapel of ease to the church at Bramham, a neat plain building, erected on land given by Mr. Samuel Tate, was consecrated in 1815: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £146; patron, Vicar of Bramham. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and at Thorp Arch is a charity school, founded by Lady Elizabeth Hastings.

BOSWORTH, HUSBAND'S (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MARKET-HARBOROUGH, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Hardborough; containing 953 inhabitants. The river Welland bounds the parish on the south and south-east, and the Avon on the north-west; and the Grand Union canal crosses the western part of it, being conducted through a tunnel, 1170 yards in length, to the northern side of the village. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £24. 15. 7½; net income, £929; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. T. Mayne. The church had its spire greatly damaged through a storm of thunder and lightning, in July, 1755. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics. A school for boys is partly supported by a bequest of £15 per annum; another for girls is maintained by Mrs. Mayne; and a third for boys and girls, partly by Miss Turville.

BOSWORTH, MARKET (St. PETER), a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER; comprising the chapelries of Barleston, Carlton, Shenton, and Sutton-Cheney, and part of the townships of Barton-in-the-Beans and Osbaston; and containing 2539 inhabitants, of whom 1135 are in the town of Market-Bosworth, 7 miles (N. by W.) from Hinckley, which is the post town, and 13 (W. by S.) from Leicester. This place, in Domesday book called Bosworde, takes the prefix to its name from a market granted to the inhabitants in the reign of Edward I. The neighbourhood is celebrated as the scene of a decisive battle which took place on the 22nd of Aug., 1485, between Richard III. and the Earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII.: this battle, the last of the sanguinary conflicts between the houses of York and Lancaster, was fought on Redmoor Plain, in the lordship of Sutton-Cheney, a long tract of uneven ground extending in the direction of Atherstone, from about a mile below Bosworth, now inclosed, and since that event better known as Bosworth Field. On a hill, about two miles south-west of the town, is a small spring, inclosed with rough stones, in the form of a small pyramid or obelisk, which bears the name of "King Richard's Well," where that monarch, according to tradition, quenched his thirst during the action; and this circumstance has been commemorated by Dr. Parr, who visited the spot in 1813, in a short Latin inscription, placed immediately above the spring. Numerous swords, shields, spurs, and other military relics, have been dug up at different times in the neighbourhood.

The town, which is pleasantly situated on an eminence, contains some respectable houses, and is well supplied with water. The manufacture of worsted-stockings is carried on here, and in the adjacent villages, to a considerable extent; and great facility has been given to trade by the Ashby and Coventry canal, which, passing within a mile of the town, affords a medium for supplying it with coal and other articles. The soil is good, but often clayey; it rests on gravel, with a substratum of sand, and it is remarkable that the best land is on the hills. There is a market on Wednesday; and fairs are held on May 8th, for horses, horned-cattle, and sheep, and July 10th, which is called the Cherry fair; there are also statute fairs on Oct. 2nd and about a fortnight before Martinmas. The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £55. 18. 4.; net income, £903; patron, Sir W. W. Dixie, Bart., of Bosworth Hall: the tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1794. The church is a spacious ancient structure, with a beautiful spire, and contains many interesting monuments, among the finest of which is one to some members of the Dixie family. There are chapels of ease at Barleston, Carlton, Shenton, and Sutton-Cheney. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents. The free grammar school, which is open to all boys of the parishes of Bosworth and Cadeby, was founded in 1593, by Sir Wolstan Dixie, Knt., who endowed it with lands, and with two fellowships of £30, and four scholarships of £10 per annum each, at Emanuel College, Cambridge. In consequence of some abuses, the affairs were in Chancery for nearly 50 years, during the greater part of which time the establishment was discontinued; but, in 1827, new premises were begun, which were opened on the 1st of Feb. 1830, and form a very handsome pile. The Rev. Anthony Blackwall, an eminent critic and classical scholar, was master, and the celebrated Dr. Johnson, for a short time, usher; and Richard Dawes, the learned critic, was educated here under the former. The poor law union of Bosworth comprises 28 parishes or places, and contains a population of 13,600. This is the birth-place of Thomas Simpson, the eminent mathematician, who died here in 1761, and was interred at Sutton-Cheney, where a tablet has lately been erected to his memory.

BOTCHERBY, a township, in the parish of ST. CUTHBERT, CARLISLE, CUMBERLAND ward, union of CARLISLE, E. division of CUMBERLAND; containing 125 inhabitants.

BOTCHERGATE, a township, in the parish of ST. CUTHBERT, CARLISLE, CUMBERLAND ward, union of CARLISLE, E. division of CUMBERLAND; containing 5460 inhabitants.

BOTCHESTON, a hamlet, in the parish of RATBY, union of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from Market-Bosworth; containing 37 inhabitants.

BOTESDALE, a chapelry and post-town (formerly a market-town), in the parish of REDGRAVE, union and hundred of HARTISMERE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 25 miles (N. N. W.) from Ipswich, and 86 (N. E. by N.) from London, on the road to Norwich; containing 633 inhabitants. The name, a contraction of Botolph's Dale, is derived from Botolph, the tutelar saint of the chapel, and from the dale in which the place is situated. The town consists principally of one long street, which extends into the parishes of Rickingham Superior and Inferior; the houses are indifferently built, but the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from wells. A small fair for cattle and pedlery is held on Holy-Thurs-day; and courts leet and baron are held at Whitsuntide; at the former of which constables and other officers are appointed. The chapel is a small and rather mean building, but of some antiquity. A free grammar school for six boys was founded and endowed, in 1561, by Sir Nicholas Bacon.

BOTHAL (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of MORPETH, E. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing the townships of Ashington with Sheepwash, Bothal-Demesne, Longhirst, Oldmoor, and Pegsworth, and 800 inhabitants, of whom 249 are in the township of Bothal-Demesne, 3 miles (E.) from Morpeth. This place, before the Conquest the property of Gisulf, the Saxon, was part of the estate forfeited by Mowbray, Earl of Northumberland, and from the early part of the 12th century was in the hands of the family of Bertram, from whom, in 1362, it passed by marriage to Sir Robert Ogle, who bequeathed his paternal estate to his son Robert, and the barony of Bothal to his younger son John; but the former, with a force of 200 men, seized upon the barony, from which, however, he was subsequently ejected. On the failure of John's issue, in 1465, Robert, great grandson of Sir Robert Ogle (who distinguished himself in the cause of the house of York, and was created Lord Ogle, of Ogle), succeeded to the barony, which is now the property of the Duke of Portland, to whose grandfather it descended through the heiresses of the families of Cavendish, Duke of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Hollis, Duke of Newcastle-under-Line, and Harley, Earl of Oxford. The parish is bounded on the south by the river Wansbeck, and comprises, with Hebburn chapelry, 15,290 acres, of which 12,050 are arable, 2720 pasture and meadow, and 520 woodland; the soil is in general of poor quality, being a stiff clay; but the country abounds in beautiful wood and rock scenery. Coal is abundant in the south-eastern part of the parish, and there is an extensive quarry of freestone on the bank of the Wansbeck, and one of whinstone near Causey Park. The village is romantically situated in a small vale on the north of the river Wansbeck, and is sheltered on all sides by a beautiful range of hills, which surround it in the form of an amphitheatre. The LIVING is a rectory, with the rectory of Sheepwash annexed, valued in the king's books at £25; patron, Duke of Portland: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1377. 15., and there are 105 acres of glebe, with a house. The church, of which the foundation is very ancient, contains an altar-tomb of alabaster, with the recumbent effigies of a member of the Ogle family and his lady. There is a chapel at Hebburn, rebuilt in 1793, at the joint expense of the rector of Bothal, and the proprietors of the chapelry. On the north bank of the Wansbeck, between the villages of Bothal and Morpeth, in the middle of a rich hanging wood, and surrounded by the wildest and most romantic scenery, are the remains of an oratory, dedicated to the Virgin Mary. A considerable portion of the ancient baronial castle is now in ruins; but the gateway, built in the reign of Edward III., was, a few years since, repaired and fitted up as an occasional residence for the steward.

BOTHAMSALL (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of EAST RETFORD, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 4½ miles (W. N. W.) from Tuxford; containing 325 inhabitants. It comprises 2267 acres, and is intersected by the river Meden. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £52; patron and impropiator, Duke of Newcastle. Henry Walters, in 1692, founded a free school at Houghton, which is endowed with £25 per annum; and the inhabitants are entitled to the privilege of sending a certain number of children to that and the school at West Drayton. There is a tumulus, called Castle Hill, a little westward from the village of Bothamsall.

BOTHEL, a township, in the parish of TORPENHOW, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 4 miles (W.) from Ireby; containing, with the township of Threapland, 455 inhabitants. This is a long straggling village: the vicinity abounds with limestone, and there are kilns for burning it. A school is endowed with 27 acres of land, yielding £42 per annum.

BOTHENHAMPTON (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of BRIDPORT, liberty of LODERS and BOTHENHAMPTON, Bridport division of DORSET, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. E. by S.) from Bridport; containing 533 inhabitants. It is situated within a quarter of a mile of the great western road, and about the same distance from Bridport Harbour, on the southern coast: there are some quarries of excellent building-stone. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £46; patron, Sir M. H. Nepean, Bart. A national school is supported by subscription.

BOTH-HERGESTS, a township, in the parish and union of KINGTON, hundred of HUNTINGTON, county of HEREFORD; containing 244 inhabitants.

BOTLEY, a hamlet, in the parish of CHESHAM, union of AMERSHAM, hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM; containing 499 inhabitants.

BOTLEY, a tithing, in the parishes of CUMNER and NORTH HINKSEY, union of ABINGDON, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W.) from Oxford; containing 155 inhabitants.

BOTLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of SOUTH STONEHAM, hundred of MANSBRIDGE, Southampton and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 6 miles (S.) from Southampton; containing 904 inhabitants, of whom 436 are in the North portion, and 468 in the South. This parish, originally called Botleigh, comprises 1790*a. 1r. 2p.*, of which 982 acres are arable, 198 pasture, 84 common, and 474 woodland and coppice; it is situated on the river Hamble, which is navigable for boats up to the village, and turns several corn-mills in the parish. A considerable trade in flour, timber, hoops, and coal is carried on; and a paper-mill affords employment to about forty persons. A market for corn is held on Wednesday, and a cattle market every alternate Monday; and fairs, chiefly for toys and pedlery, are held on Shrove-Tuesday, Whit-Tuesday, and the Tuesday before St. Bartholomew's-day; for cheese, on Feb. 20th, and May 28th; and for cattle, on July 23rd, Aug. 20th, and November 13th. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £391. 17. 8., and there are about 21 acres of glebe. The old church, which stands nearly a mile to the south of the village, consists only of a nave and chancel, and contains an ancient and curious font. A new church, erected at an expense of £2400, was consecrated in August, 1836; it contains 550 sittings, of which half are free, and has a handsome steeple. A strong chalybeate spring near the church was formerly in great repute, but is now disused.

BOTOLPH-BRIDGE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, county of HUNTINGDON, 2 miles (S. W. by W.) from Peterborough. The living is a rectory, united, in 1721, to that of Orton-Longville, and valued in the king's books at £8. 6. $10\frac{1}{2}$.. The church is desecrated.

BOTTESFORD (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of GRANTHAM, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 7 miles (W. N. W.) from Grantham; containing, with the hamlets of Easthorpe and Normanton, 1375 inhabitants. From the discovery of various relics of antiquity, this place is supposed to have been occupied by the Romans. The Grantham canal passes through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £51. 5.; net income, £993; patron, Duke of Rutland: the tithes were commuted for land in 1770. The church is a spacious cruciform structure, with a tower supporting a spire at the western end; it has been the burial-place of the noble family of Manners since the dissolution of monasteries, at which period several monuments to the memory of deceased members of that family were removed hither from the conventual church at Belvoir. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. In 1711, the Rev. Abel Ligonier and Anthony Ravell bequeathed 32 acres of land for teaching 28 boys; the schoolmaster receives from the charity £31. 10. per annum, and instructs other children.

BOTTESFORD (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, partly in the W., but chiefly in the E., division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (W.) from Glandford-Brigg; containing, with the townships of Ashby, Bottesford, Burringham, Holme, Yaddlethorpe, and part of that of East Butterwick, 1586 inhabitants, of whom 153 are in Bottesford township. The parish is of considerable size; much of the land is fertile, and of various qualities of soil, but a great extent is sterile and swampy moor, some portions of which, however, have been lately improved by draining, and by warpage from the Trent. The living is a discharged vicarage, united, in 1727, to the vicarage of Messingham, and valued in the king's books at £10: the tithes of Ashby, Bottesford and Yaddlethorpe, were commuted for land and corn-rents, under an inclosure act, in 1794, and those of Burringham, Holme, and East Butterwick have been commuted for a rent-charge. The church is an ancient structure of a mixed character of architecture, with a square tower, and Norman porch. There are places of worship at Ashby and Burringham for Wesleyans, and one at Yaddlethorpe for Primitive Methodists.

BOTTESLAW, a township, in the parish and union of STOKE-UPON-TRENT, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD; containing 65 inhabitants.

BOTTISHAM (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of NEWMARKET, hundred of STAINE, county of CAMBRIDGE, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Newmarket; containing 1484 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 5000 acres, of which 400 are pasture, and the rest arable, with the exception of a few acres of woodland. A considerable part of the village was destroyed by fire in 1712. The petty-sessions are held here. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16; net income, £258; patrons and impropriators, Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1801. The church contains the tomb of Elias de Beakingham, justiciary of England in the reign of Edward I. At Bottisham Lode is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Sir Roger Jenyns, Knt., founded a school in 1730, and endowed it with £20 per annum; and a national school was erected in 1838. A moiety of the income of an endowed almshouse at Eastham, founded by Giles Breame, Esq., in 1621, is paid to three poor men of this place; and the poor derive benefit from a bequest of £118. 3. 9. per annum by the Rev. W. Pugh, late vicar, who died in 1825; £25 per annum by Henry Sheppard; and £5 per annum, by another benefactor. A small priory of Augustine canons, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin and St. Nicholas, was founded at Anglesey, in the parish, by Henry I., the revenue of which, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was £149. 18. 6. : the site is now occupied by a farm-house, in the walls of which a portion of the conventual buildings is visible. Soame Jenyns, author of the "Evidences of Christianity," and a volume of poems, was a native of the parish.

BOTTOMS, a hamlet, in the parish of BLIDWORTH, union of MANSFIELD, hundred of THURGARTON, liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY, though locally in the wapentake of BROXTOW, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM; containing 250 inhabitants.

BOTUSFLEMING, a parish, in the union of ST. GERMANS, S. division of the hundred of EAST, E. division of CORNWALL, 3 miles (N. W.) from Saltash; containing 250 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 15. 7½.; net income, £190; patron and incumbent, Rev. William Spry. In the centre of a field, on the northern side of the village, stands a pyramidal monument, erected to the memory of Dr. William Martin, of Plymouth, who died in 1762.

BOTWELL, a hamlet, in the parish of HAYES, union of UXBRIDGE, hundred of ELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX; containing 373 inhabitants.

BOUGHTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of DOWNHAM, hundred of CLACKCLOSE, W. division of NORFOLK, 1¼ mile (N.) from Stoke-Ferry; containing 209 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1323a. 1r. 27p., of which 721 acres are arable, 519 meadow and pasture, 24 woodland and plantations, and 43 common allotted to the poor at the inclosure. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10; patron, Sir W. J. H. B. Folkes, Bart. : the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £410, and the glebe comprises 30 acres, with a small house. The church is an ancient structure in the early English style, with a square embattled tower.

BOUGHTON, a hamlet, in the parish of WEEKLEY, hundred of CORBY, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 2½ miles (N. E. by N.), from Kettering. Here was formerly a chapel.

BOUGHTON (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BRIXWORTH, hundred of SPELHOE, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 3¾ miles (N.) from Northampton; containing 389 inhabitants. This parish, formerly called Buckton, is bounded on the west and north by the river Nene, and intersected by the road from Northampton to Leicester, and comprises by computation 1273 acres: limestone is quarried, principally for the roads. A chartered fair for cattle and for manufactured wares is held on the 24th of June, and two following days. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 9. 7.; net income, £296; patron, Col. Vyse. The church is in ruins; but there is a chapel, lately rebuilt, in which Divine service is performed. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Some remains still exist of an ancient family mansion, the residence of Lord Strafford.

BOUGHTON, a parish, in the union of SOUTHWELL, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 1¾ mile (N. E. by E.) from Ollerton; containing 309 inhabitants, and comprising 1750 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell, to whom also the impropriation belongs; net income, £300.

BOUGHTON-ALUPH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of EAST ASHFORD, hundred of WYE, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Ashford; containing 524 inhabitants. It is bounded on the east by the river Stour, and comprises about 2000 acres, of which the soil is, to a great extent, chalky. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 5.; patrons, Trustees of Dr. Breton; impropriator, Rev. J. Billington: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £600, and there are 23 acres of glebe. The church is a spacious cruciform structure, built of flint and ashlar-stone, with a low central tower.

BOUGHTON, GREAT, a township, and the head of a union, in the parish of ST. OSWALD, CHESTER, Lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER; containing 949 inhabitants. The township is intersected by two turnpike-roads to Chester, one from Whitchurch, and the other from Nantwich; and near their junction has been formed a considerable village, which unites with one of the streets of Chester. The Chester and Nantwich canal, and the Chester and Crewe railway, also pass through it; and the river Dee adjoins on the west. Across the middle of the township stretches a belt of deep rich loam, which, from its proximity to Chester, lets at a high rate for garden ground; the rest is a clayey soil, held by milkmen, butchers, &c. The poor law union of Great Boughton comprises 99 parishes or places, of which 96 are in Cheshire, and 3 in the county of Flint, North Wales; and contains a population of 49,085.

BOUGHTON-MALHERB (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of HOLLINGBOURN, hundred of EYHORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 1½ mile (S. W. by S.) from Lenham; containing 512 inhabitants. This parish is divided by a ridge of hills into two districts, Boughton Upland and Boughton Weald, the latter so called from its situation within the Weald of Kent. The family of Wotton resided here for a considerable period, and this is the birthplace of its most accomplished member, Sir Henry Wotton, who was employed by James I. in several foreign embassies, and whose biography is written by Izaak Walton. The remains of the mansion, on a panel in which is inscribed the date 1579, have been converted into a farm-house. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 15., and in the patronage of Earl Cornwallis: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £300, and the glebe comprises six acres. The church is situated on the summit of the ridge of hills, and is a handsome edifice with a square tower at the west end; it contains several interesting monuments to members of the family of Wotton, and a mural tablet to the memory of Dr. Sharpe, chaplain to Queen Elizabeth, James I., and Prince Henry. There is a national school.

BOUGHTON-MONCHELSEA (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of MAIDSTONE, hundred of EYHORNE, and extending into the hundred of MAIDSTONE, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 4 miles (S. by E.)

from Maidstone; containing 1106 inhabitants. It comprises 1693*a.* 3*r.* 5*p.*, and is intersected by a ridge of hills, the summit of which forms the northern boundary of the Weald of Kent, and on the southern declivity of which are several stone quarries. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 13. 4.; net income, £395; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church is a small edifice, with a handsome tower, and has been partly rebuilt, the body of it having been destroyed by fire, in 1832; there are some remarkable monuments, especially one to the memory of Sir Christopher Powell. A school is partly supported by subscription.

BOUGHTON, SPITTLE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of GREAT BOUGHTON, and county of the city of CHESTER; containing 191 inhabitants.

BOUGHTON-UNDER-BLEAN (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of FAVERSHAM, hundred of BOUGHTON-UNDER-BLEAN, lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Faversham; containing 1373 inhabitants. This place derives its distinguishing epithet from the adjacent forest of Blean, which was anciently the haunt of wild boars, wolves, and other beasts of chase; but the description applies more particularly to the situation of that part of the parish which is now called South-street. The parish comprises 2349*a.* 3*r.* 27*p.*, of which 1220 acres are arable, 274 meadow, 161 pasture, 109 wood, 262 hops, 209 orchards, 18 homesteads, and 45 gardens. Boughton-street is on elevated ground, and was not built till after the formation of the present high road to Canterbury, through the king's forest of Blean, before which time the old Watling-street crossed the river Stour at Shalmsford bridge, and entered Canterbury near the castle. A fair for toys and pedlery is held on the Monday after St. Peter's-day. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 4. 9½.; net income, £300; patron, Archbishop of Canterbury; appropriators, the Dean and Chapter. The church contains several ancient monuments, and its internal architecture is of a pleasing character; the spire fell down about the close of the sixteenth century. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and 28 acres of land, and other considerable charities, have been bequeathed for the benefit of the poor. In 1716, a human skeleton, by the side of which lay a sword and a brass coin struck in the reign of Antoninus Pius, was dug up.

BOULBY, a hamlet, in the parish of EASINGTON, E. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, 11 miles (N. W. by W.) from Whitby. This place is noted for its extensive alum-works, which were begun in 1615, and were carried on for a number of years, but were suspended for a considerable period prior to 1700, when they were re-opened, and have been regularly worked ever since; they now produce yearly between 700 and 800 tons of alum, and between 400 and 500 tons of sulphate of magnesia, employing about eighty persons, chiefly boys; they contain various petrifications of ammonitæ, or snake stones, trochitæ, and shells of the bivalve kind. George Westgarth, Esq., the resident agent of the works, has a commodious mansion.

BOULDON, a township, in the parish of HOLDGATE, union of LUDLOW, hundred of MUNSLOW, S. division of SALOP; containing 61 inhabitants.

BOULGE (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WOODBRIDGE, hundred of WILFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (N. N. W.) from Woodbridge; containing 45 inhabitants, and comprising 545 acres by measurement. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Debach annexed, valued in the king's books at £3. 12. 1.; patron and incumbent, Rev. O. S. Reynolds: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £133, and there are nearly 4 acres of glebe. The church is very small.

BOULMER, with SEATON-HOUSE, a township, in the parish of LONG HOUGHTON, union of ALNWICK, S. division of BAMBROUGH ward, N. division of NORTH-UMBERLAND, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Alnwick; containing 153 inhabitants. The township comprises 363*a.* 1*p.*, all arable land, with the exception of about 30 acres of grass. The village is situated on the seashore, and is chiefly inhabited by fishermen, whose boats are moored in Boulmer bay, a natural basin environed by rocks, 800 yards long, and 400 broad, and the entrance to which is 12 feet deep at low water. Here is a coast-guard station; and a life-boat of the best construction is under the auspices of the Newcastle Society and the Duke of Northumberland. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £78. 19. 6., with 11*s.* 6*d.* for the parish clerk, and the impropriate for one of £27. 12. A school has been established by the Duke of Northumberland, and is supported by his Grace.

BOULSDON, with KILLCOT, a tything, in the parish and union of NEWENT, hundred of BOTLOE, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 1½ mile (S. by W.) from Newent; containing 417 inhabitants.

BOULSTON.—See BOLSTONE.

BOULTHAM (St. HELEN), a parish, in the Lower division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, union and county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Lincoln; containing 72 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 15. 2., and in the patronage of the Trustees of the late R. Ellison, Esq.; net income, £126. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1803.

BOULTON, a chapelry, in the parish of St. PETER, DERBY, union of SHARDLOW, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 3½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Derby; containing 171 inhabitants. It comprises 791*a.* 3*r.* 4*p.*, and is intersected by the Derby canal. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the proprietors of land in the chapelry; net income, £120. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1802; the glebe comprises about 80 acres.

BOURN (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CAXTON and ARRINGTON, hundred of LONGSTOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, 1½ mile (S. E. by E.) from Caxton; containing 909 inhabitants. Here was formerly an ancient castle, which was destroyed during the war with the barons in the reign of Henry III. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 15. 10., and in the gift of Christ's College, Cambridge: the great tithes, belonging to the college, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £593, with a glebe of 219 acres, and the incumbent's tithes for one of £188. 13., with a glebe of 4 acres. A school, established in 1819, is endowed by the Countess De la Warr with £20 per annum. A mineral spring here was formerly in high repute.

BOURN, with WRECKLESHAM, a tything in the parish and hundred of FARNHAM, W. division of SURREY; containing 991 inhabitants:

BOURN-MOOR, in the parish of HOUGHTON-LE-SPRING, union of CHESTER-LE-STREET, N. division of EASINGTON ward and of the county of DURHAM; containing 891 inhabitants. This township, bounded by Bidick on the north, was separated from that district about eighty years since, probably on account of the population attached to the collieries: the name appears to have been derived from the stream called Moors-burn, which falls into the river Wear in Lumley Park. It comprises 500 acres, of which 375 are arable, 100 grass land, and 25 waste. At New Lambton, in the township, is a brine well, 97 fathoms deep, where salt-works were established in 1815. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BOURNE (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a parish, and the head of a union, in the wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 36 miles (S.) from Lincoln, and 97 (N.) from London; containing, with the hamlets of Cawthorpe and Dyke, 3361 inhabitants. This place takes its name from a stream of remarkably pure water, issuing from a copious spring contiguous to the town, near the Castle Hill, and called the Bourn-Eau; ourn being the Saxon term for brook or torrent. Though little of its early history is known, the town is supposed, from the discovery of Roman coins and tessellated pavements, to have been anciently of some importance. When the Danes invaded England in the ninth century, Marcot, the Saxon lord of Bourne, with a few of his own vassals and a detachment from Croyland Abbey, after an obstinate engagement, defeated a party of them who had made an inroad into this part of Lincolnshire. Prior to the time of Edward the Confessor, a castle was erected here, of which only the trenches and mounds are discernible: it appears to have included an area of more than eight acres. In 1138, Baldwin, a descendant of Walter Fitz-Gilbert, to whom the town was given by William Rufus, founded a priory for canons of the order of St. Augustine, the site alone of which, now called the Trenches, is visible: the revenue, at the Dissolution, was £197.17.5. In the seventeenth century, Bourne was twice nearly destroyed by fire. The parish comprises about 10,000 acres: the town, which is intersected by the Hull, Lincoln, and London north road, consists principally of one very long street, the houses in which are in general modern and well built. A considerable trade in leather was formerly carried on, and several extensive tan-yards were at work; but this branch of industry has now altogether declined. A canal has been constructed to Spalding and Boston, by which means it is supplied with coal, timber, and other commodities. The market is on Saturday; the fairs are on April 7th, May 7th, and October 29th. The county magistrates hold a meeting every Saturday; and courts of session for the parts of Kesteven are held quarterly. The town-hall, erected at an expense of £2500, on the site of a former one, built by William Cecil, lord treasurer in the reign of Elizabeth, is a spacious handsome edifice, under which is the market-place.

The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; patron and impropiator, the Hon. Charles Compton Cavendish. An allotment of 232 acres of land was made to the vicar in lieu of tithes, in 1768, and is let on lease, producing £320 per annum. The church, though spacious, appears to be only part of a larger structure; it is very ancient, and is principally Norman, but contains several portions in the early and later styles of English architecture, and has two towers of mixed character, of which the southern is considerably higher than the other, and is crowned with pinnacles; it had formerly two towers at the west front, one of which was taken down about 135 years since. The interior, which has lately been repewed, and greatly beautified and repaired, consists of a nave, north and south aisles, and chancel; on each side of the nave are some massive round pillars and arches. The western entrance is a fine specimen of the later style, and over it is a large window of good composition. Within are some interesting monuments, a finely enriched font of the later style, and a stoup under a crocketed canopy; also a slab to the memory of the Rev. W. Dodd, vicar, and Elizabeth his wife, the parents of the Rev. Dr. Dodd, who was born here in 1729, and was executed at Tyburn for forgery, in June, 1777. There are places of worship for Presbyterians and Wesleyans. A grammar school for 30 children was founded in 1653, and endowed with £30 per annum and a schoolhouse by William Trollope, Esq., who also endowed an hospital for six aged men; and William Fisher, by will, in 1627, endowed with land then let at £30 per annum, an almshouse for the same number of women: a national school, established in 1830, is endowed with £42 per annum. The poor law union of Bourne comprises 37 parishes or places, and contains a population of 19,832. There is a mineral spring in the town, which was formerly of great repute. William Cecil, created Baron Burleigh by Queen Elizabeth, was born here in 1521.

BOURNE (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of WHITCHURCH, hundred of EVINGAR, Kingsclere and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Whitchurch; containing, with the tythings of Binley, Bourne, Egbury, Stoke, Swampton, and Week, 1152 inhabitants, of whom 384 are in Bourne tything. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Hurstbourn-Priors: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £110, and the glebe comprises 63 acres. The estate of the Earl of Portsmouth is charged with the annual payment of £16.16. to a mistress for teaching 18 children, with a house rent-free; the building has been lately enlarged, and 130 children are taught by a master and mistress, to the former of whom his lordship allows £21, and the remainder of the expenses is raised by subscription.

BOURNE, EAST (ST. MARY), a post-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of EASTBOURNE, rape of PEVENSEY, E. division of SUSSEX, 7 miles (S.) from Hailsham, and 64 (S. E.) from London; containing 3015 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises 4393a. 1r. 38p., is situated on the coast of the English Channel, which at this place was formerly remarkable for the loss of vessels; and is bounded on the south-west by the bold promontory of Beachy Head, the sides of which are worn into numerous hollows and caverns by the incessant violence of the sea; it is divided into four parts, called Eastbourne, Southbourne, Meads, and Sea-Houses. Eastbourne is pleasantly situated beneath the brow of a lofty hill, and consists chiefly of four streets; the bathing is excellent, the water clear and pellucid, the sands dry, and the cliffs lofty and picturesque. Assemblies are held occasionally in a suite of rooms at the Lamb inn. A strong circular fortification, called the Redoubt, comprising barracks, store-houses, and a magazine, surrounded by a deep intrenchment, has been erected on the beach, in connexion with a line of martello towers on the coast, and there are several coast-guard stations. The market, formerly on Saturday, is discontinued; but fairs are held on March 12th for pedlery, and October 11th for sheep. Very fine shell-fish are caught in great abundance on the coast.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £26. 1. 8.; patron, Treasurer in the Cathedral of Chichester; impropiators, Earl of Burlington and the Gilbert family. The great tithes have been commuted for rent-charges of £879 to the impropriate rector, £33. 10. to other impropiators, and £36. 17. to the rector of Folkington; the vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £550; the glebe contains 3 acres. The church is a handsome edifice, chiefly in the early English style, with a fine tower at the west end. A chapel of ease was erected in 1838, on the road between Southbourne and Sea-Houses, in the lancet style, with a square embattled tower, surmounted by small pinnacles; it contains 528 sittings, of which 260 are free. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. A national school was erected in 1814, and a neat edifice for the education of infant children was erected, in 1838, at the expense of the Earl and Countess of Burlington. The poor law union of Eastbourne comprises 14 parishes or places, and contains a population of 7950: the workhouse was originally cavalry barracks, which, on the formation of the union, were converted to their present purpose. Coins and other Roman relics have been found at various times, and, in 1717, a tessellated pavement and a bath were discovered; from which and other circumstances the town has strong claims to the disputed site of the Roman settlement Anderida Civitas. On the downs are several barrows; and on the road to the cliffs, contiguous to some chalk-pits, is the site of a chapel dedicated to St. Gregory. At Holywell, a mile west from the town, is a chalybeate spring, the water of which is similar to that of Clifton Wells. Eastbourne was the birthplace of Mortimer, the celebrated historical painter; and Davies Gilbert, LL.D., late president of the Royal Society, and author of several works, is buried here.

BOURNE, WEST (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of WESTBOURNE and SINGLETON, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Chichester; containing, with the tythings of Aldsworth, Hermitage, Nutbourne, Prinsted, and Woodmancot, 2093 inhabitants. The village, which was formerly a trading town of some importance, is pleasantly situated on a small stream, which is crossed by a bridge uniting the hamlet of Hermitage (through which passes the road from Chichester to Portsmouth) with the small brisk sea-port of Emsworth, in the county of Southampton.

On the south is Thorney Channel, passable at low water for carriages to and from Thorney Island. A court for the recovery of debts under 40s. is held every three weeks, and courts leet and baron occasionally. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 10. 5., and in the gift of the Rector, with a net income of £280: the rectory is a sinecure, valued at £24. 13. 4.; net income, £870; patron, Major R. B. Newland. The church is a neat commodious structure, in the later English style, with a well-proportioned spire of British oak, erected by the Earl of Halifax, formerly the munificent proprietor of Stansted Park; the principal entrance is approached by an avenue of eight yew-trees, remarkable for their size, and on the arch of the doorway are carved the heraldic bearings of Lord Maltravers, with an inscription almost illegible, of about the time of Edward IV. A national school was erected in 1836. Henry Smith bequeathed land, in 1642, now producing £60 per annum, for the apprenticing of children, and for the poor. The union of West Bourne comprises 12 parishes, and contains a population of 6668.

BOURNEMOUTH, a village, in the parish, union, and hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, Ringwood and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, about 6 miles (W. by S.) from Christchurch. This village, which is situated on the sea-shore, has recently become a place of fashionable resort for sea-bathing, and, from a secluded and unfrequented spot, has been tastefully laid out in a series of handsome detached villas of pleasing character, in various styles of architecture. A spacious hotel, commanding an extensive view of the sea, with the Isles of Wight and Purbeck, was built by the late Sir G. Jervis, the proprietor of the lands, for the reception of visitors; and a range of commodious baths has been erected on the beach, forming together a handsome suite of buildings, from the centre of which rises a tower of picturesque character, into which the flues of the various chimneys are conveyed.

BOURTON, a tything, in the parish and hundred of SHRIVENHAM, union of FARRINGDON, county of BERKS, 7 miles (S. W. by S.) from Great Farringdon; containing 396 inhabitants, and, according to a survey in 1838, comprising 1182 acres. There is a school, the instruction in which is chiefly gratuitous.

BOURTON, a hamlet, in the parish, union, hundred, and county of BUCKINGHAM, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E.) from Buckingham; containing 48 inhabitants.

BOURTON, a chapelry, in the parish and liberty of GILLINGHAM, union of MERE, Shaston division of DORSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Mere; containing 901 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar and Inhabitants; net income, £50. The chapel has been enlarged within the last few years. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BOURTON, with EASTON, a tything, in the parish of BISHOPS' CANNINGS, union of DEVIZES, hundred of POTTERNE and CANNINGS, Devizes and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 216 inhabitants.

BOURTON, BLACK (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of WITNEY, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (S. W.) from Witney; containing 331 inhabitants, and comprising about 2250 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage; net income, £151; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £95. The church is in the early English style; in the chancel are the remains of Sir Arthur Hopton, ambassador to the court of Spain in the reign of Charles I., and at the east end of the north aisle are several monuments to the Hungerford family; the pulpit is of stone, exquisitely sculptured in the decorated English style.

BOURTON, FLAX, a parish, in the union of BEDMINSTER, hundred of PORTBURY, E. division of SOMERSET, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Bristol; containing 232 inhabitants. This place derives the adjunct by which it is distinguished from other places of the same name, from the manor having anciently belonged to the Abbot of Flaxley, in the county of Gloucester. The parish is situated at the base of a chain of hills forming the commencement of the Mendip range, and, from the higher grounds, commands a fine view of the Bristol Channel, with the distant sea; it comprises an area of 621*a. 2r. 3p.* of fertile land. The village is pleasantly situated on the road to Weston-super-Mare, at the extremity of the parish; and the Bristol and Exeter railroad passes in the immediate vicinity. The living is annexed to that of Nailsea, and is in the patronage of Mrs. Mary Brown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £95. The church is a small edifice, chiefly in the Norman style, with a low embattled tower; the entrance is under a beautiful arch of Norman character; in the churchyard are the remains of a very ancient cross.

BOURTON, GREAT and LITTLE, a township, in the parish of CROPREY, union and hundred of BANBURY, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (N.) from Banbury; containing 593 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel, dedicated to St. Michael. The tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1777. A free school is endowed with land devised by Mr. Thomas Gill, in 1666, producing a net income of £23 per annum.

BOURTONHOLD, a hamlet, in the parish, union, hundred, and county of BUCKINGHAM; containing 614 inhabitants. For this place overseers are separately appointed.

BOURTON-ON-THE-HILL (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of SHIPSTON, partly in the Upper division of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, and partly in the Upper division of that of WESTMINSTER, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (W. by N.) from Moreton; containing 542 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with Moreton annexed, valued in the king's books at £14; net income, £675; patron and incumbent, Rev. S. W. Warneford: the tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1821. Sir Thomas Overbury, an ingenious writer in the reign of James I., who was poisoned while a prisoner in the Tower, was born here in 1581.

BOURTON-ON-THE-WATER (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of STOW-ON-THE-WOLD, Lower division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Stow; containing 943 inhabitants. The living is a rectory with Lower Slaughter annexed, valued in the king's books at £27. 2. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Wadham College, Oxford; net income, £475. The church is a modern edifice, having a tower at the western end, rising from a rustic basement, with Ionic pilasters at the angles, and surmounted by a balustrade, urns, and cupola; within is a colonnade of the Ionic order. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists; and a school is endowed with £12 per annum, accruing from property bequeathed by Anthony Collett, Esq., in 1719. The Roman Fosse-way passes through the parish; and about a quarter of a mile from the village is a square entrenchment, where coins, and other relics of the Romans, have been discovered: a paved aqueduct was formerly visible on one side of it.

BOURTON-UPON-DUNSMOOR (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of RUGBY, Rugby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Dunchurch; containing, with the tything of Draycot, 390 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 17. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Mrs. Shuckburgh; net income, £350. The tithes were commuted for land in 1765.

BOUSTEAD-HILL, a township, in the parish of BURGH-UPON-THE-SANDS, union of CARLISLE, CUMBERLAND ward, and E. division of CUMBERLAND, 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Carlisle; containing 74 inhabitants.

BOVENEY, LOWER, a chapelry, in the parish and hundred of BURNHAM, union of ETON, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2 miles (W.) from Eton; containing, with the liberty of Upper Boveney, 362 inhabitants. The chapel, in which divine service is performed once a month, is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

BOVERIDGE, a tything, in the parish of CRANBORNE, union of WIMBORNE and CRANBORNE, hundred of MONCKTON-UP-WIMBORNE, Wimborne division of DORSET; containing 174 inhabitants.

BOVEY, NORTH (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of NEWTON-ABBOT, hundred of TEIGNBRIDGE, Crockernwell and S. divisions of the county of DEVON, 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. W. by S) from Moreton-Hampstead; containing 660 inhabitants. The lords of this manor formerly exercised the power of inflicting punishment for capital crimes. The vicinity is noted for mines of tin, which are worked to a considerable extent. A fair for cattle is held on the Monday next after Midsummer-day. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £22. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Earl of Devon: the tithes were commuted for a rent-charge of £325, and there are 26 acres of glebe. There is a parochial school.

BOVEY-TRACEY (St. THOMAS à BECKET), a parish, in the union of NEWTON-ABBOT, hundred of TEIGNBRIDGE, Teignbridge and S. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Chudleigh; containing 1823 inhabitants. This place derives the affix to its name from the family of the Traceys, Barons of Barnstaple, to whom the manor anciently belonged, and descendants of William de Tracey, who took the lead in the assassination of St. Thomas à Becket of Canterbury, in 1170. An encounter took place between the royalist and parliamentary forces on Bovey-Heathfield. The parish is pleasantly situated near the road from Exeter to Plymouth, and comprises 7186*a. 22p.* of fertile land; the substrata are chiefly coal of inferior quality, granite, and stone. A manufactory for earthenware has been established on Bovey-Heathfield, for which purpose the remains of an ancient building, formerly the priory of Indiho, and subsequently a private mansion, were appropriated in 1772. A canal from Teignmouth to Ventiford bridge, about four miles from the village, and also a railroad from the Haytor Rocks to the same place, have been constructed by Geo. Templar, Esq., for the conveyance of wrought granite; and they also afford facility for bringing coal, sea-sand, and lime, and sending away Bovey coal, and pipe and potter's clay, which are found here in great plenty. The place is under the government of a portreeve and bailiff; the latter, chosen at the court leet of the lord of the manor, is, after having served that office, appointed portreeve. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £26. 2. 1., and in the patronage of the Crown: the impropriation is in the landholders: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £430, and the glebe comprises 7a. 1r. 10p., with a house. The church is a large edifice, in the early English style, of which it displays some interesting details. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. The parochial school is endowed with a house and garden for the master, and with £35 per annum, arising from lands purchased with the aggregate of various bequests; and a national school for 200 scholars has been erected at an expense of £250.

BOVINGDON (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of HEMEL-HEMPSTEAD, hundred of DACORUM, county of HERTFORD, 4 miles (S. W.) from Hemel-Hempstead; containing 1072 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises by admeasurement 3700 acres, and contains the villages of Felden and Bourn-End, is situated near the Grand Junction canal, and the London and Birmingham railway. Straw-platting is extensively carried on by the women and children. The living is a perpetual curacy, constituted in 1834, (prior to which this was a chapelry in the parish of Hemel-Hempstead,) and endowed with the vicarial tithes, also by the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, and by the patron, the Hon. Granville D. Ryder. The impropriate tithes belong to the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, and have been commuted for a rent-charge of £710; the vicarial have been commuted for £190, and there are 11 acres of glebe. The church is a very ancient edifice, exhibiting marks of Anglo-Saxon origin. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans in the village, and for Independents in Box Lane; and schools for the instruction of the poor are supported by voluntary contributions.

BOW, or NYMETT-TRACY (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of CREDITON, hundred of NORTH TAWTON, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, 7¼ miles (W. by N.) from Crediton; containing 973 inhabitants. The manor anciently belonged to the Tracey family, one of whom, Henry Tracey, obtained in 1258 the grant of a weekly market, and an annual fair, both of which have been discontinued; but fairs for cattle are held on the 9th of March, the 20th of May, and 22nd of November. The parish comprises by computation 3400 acres. The living, to which the chapelry of Broad Ny-mett has been annexed, is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 8. 9., and in the patronage of Sir Thomas Lethbridge, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £370, and the glebe comprises 80 acres. The church is a neat edifice. John Gould, in 1682, endowed a school with £12 per annum, and a house for the use of the master; and a parochial school is supported by subscription.

BOW, or STRATFORD-LE-BOW (St. MARY), a parish, in the borough of TOWER HAMLETS, union of POPLAR, Tower division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, 4½ miles (E. N. E.) from London; containing 4626 inhabitants. This place derives its name "Stratford" from an ancient ford over the river Lea, on the line of the Roman stratum, or road from London to Durolitum (Layton, in Essex). It is said that Matilda, queen of Henry I., passing this dangerous ford, narrowly escaped being drowned, and consequently ordered a bridge to be erected, from the arched form of which the village received the adjunct to its name. This bridge, which is supposed to have been the first of its kind erected in the kingdom, was by some referred to the time of Alfred the Great, whose arms were carved on the central stone: it consisted of three groined arches, of which the central arch was considerably larger than the rest, and, from its inconvenient narrowness, a wooden platform was constructed on the outside of one of the parapets, for the accommodation of foot passengers. An act for rebuilding it was obtained in 1834, and a new bridge was opened with much ceremony on the 14th of Feb. 1839, consisting of one flat elliptical arch, 66 feet in span, rising to the height of 13 feet from the water level, and defended with solid parapets. The village is pleasantly situated; the streets are paved, and lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are supplied with water by the East London Company's works. The manufacture of porcelain, formerly carried on to a considerable extent, has been discontinued; and the fair held at Whitsuntide has, within the last few years, been entirely suppressed. A little to the north of the town, the Eastern-Counties' railway joins the Northern and Eastern-Counties' railway, and after crossing the river Lea pursues its course to Ilford, in the county of Essex. The parish is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests held in Whitechapel for the recovery of debts under 40s.; three headboroughs and a constable are annually appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor.

It was formerly a chapelry in the parish of Stepney, from which it was separated in 1730. The LIVING is a rectory; net income, £319; patrons, Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford, by whom an addition was made, a few years since, to the stipend of the rector. The church, founded in the reign of Henry II., is an ancient structure, partly in the Norman, and partly in the early English style, with a low square tower, having a small turret at one of the angles; the east window is ornamented with the figures of Moses and Aaron, and of the Twelve Apostles, in stained glass. There are places of worship for Wesleyans, Baptists, and Roman Catholics; that for the first-named, though belonging to the congregation in this place, is situated within the parish of Bromley-St. Leonard. The free school was founded, in 1613, by Sir John Jolles, who endowed it for thirty-four boys of this parish and that of Bromley. Another school for fifty boys was founded, in 1701, by Mrs. Prisca Coburne, who endowed it with houses and lands at that time producing £40 per annum; but, from the increased value of the property, the income, on the expiration of the present leases, will amount to £500: a schoolroom has been built for 100 children of each sex, the school being under the inspection of the rectors of Bow, and four adjoining parishes.

A national school is supported by subscription. Sir John Jolles also founded and endowed almshouses for eight people; and there are other charitable bequests for the relief of the poor, among which is one of £1400 in the funds under the will of Mrs. Margaretta Browne, dated in 1826, out of the dividends of which the sum of £20 is paid to the rector.

BOWBRIDGE, a hamlet, in the parish and union of STROUD, hundred of BISLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (S. E. by S.) from Stroud, pleasantly situated on the road to London, and intersected by the Thames and Severn canal. There are three large establishments for the manufacture of superfine woollen-cloths, and two dyeing establishments, of which that for the dyeing of black cloth, belonging to Messrs. Joseph and John William Partridge, is the most extensive in the kingdom; the other for fancy colours, conducted by Mr. Nathaniel Partridge, is also upon a very large scale, and is celebrated for the brilliancy of its colours, and especially for fine scarlet, for which the water of the place is peculiarly favourable.

BOWCOMBE, a hamlet, in the parish of CARISBROOKE, liberty of WEST MEDINA, ISLE OF WIGHT incorporation and division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 93 inhabitants.

BOWDEN, GREAT (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of MARKET-HARBOROUGH, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E.) from Harborough; containing, with that town, 3698 inhabitants. The parish comprises upwards of 3000 acres, principally rich grazing land; the river Welland bounds it on the south, and a branch of the Union canal passes near the village. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £86; patrons, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. There are two trifling endowments for the instruction of children, one given by John Durrad in 1723, and the other by the Rev. Robert Atkins.

BOWDEN, LITTLE (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of MARKET-HARBOROUGH, hundred of ROTHWELL, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (E. S. E.) from Harborough; containing, with the hamlet of Little Oxendon, 439 inhabitants. The parish, situated on the border of Leicestershire, from which it is separated by the river Welland, comprises by computation 2366a. 2r. 10p., of which three-fourths are pasture, and one-fourth arable, the surface being moderately undulated, and the soil of the most productive quality. It is closely connected with Harborough by means of two bridges over the Welland, and the roads from that town to Northampton and Kettering intersect the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 4. 2.; net income, £293; patron and incumbent, Rev. John Barlow. The tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1779: Mrs. West, author of "Letters to a Young Man," and other works, resides in the parish.

BOWDEN'S-EDGE, a township, in the parish and union of CHAPEL-EN-LE-FRITH, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E.) from Chapel-en-le-Frith; containing 1021 inhabitants.

BOWDON (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of ALTRINCHAM, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER; comprising the chapelries of Altrincham and Carrington, the townships of Ashley, Baguley, Bowdon, Dunham-Massey, Hale, Partington, and Timperley, and parts of the townships of Agden and Bollington; and containing 9373 inhabitants, of whom 549 are in the township of Bowdon, 1 mile (S. W. by S.) from Altrincham. The parish comprises by admeasurement 16,918 acres. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £24, and in the gift of the Bishop of Chester: the tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting altogether, for the bishop, to £1671. 6., and for the vicar, to £364; and an additional rent-charge of £27 is paid to the rector of Northen, in lieu of a portion of the tithes of the township of Baguley: the vicar's glebe comprises $37\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The rectorial tithes are leased by the bishop to the Earl of Stamford and Warrington, who, as lord of the barony of Dunham-Massey, appoints four churchwardens for the parish. The church is an ancient structure, commanding an extensive and pleasing panoramic view of the surrounding country: it was annexed to the see of Chester by Henry VIII., on the dissolution of Birkenhead priory, to which it had been given by Hamon de Massey, the fifth of that name. There are three chapels of ease, viz., Altrincham, built in 1799; Carrington, built about 1760, at the cost of the Countess of Stamford; and Ringway, the date of which is uncertain. Edward Vawdrey, about the year 1600, gave £4 per annum towards the endowment of a grammar school: the schoolroom was rebuilt at the expense of the parishioners, about 1670, and again in 1806. A national school is supported by subscription; and there are also a school for boys at Scamons Moss, and one for boys and girls at Littleheath, the latter founded and endowed by the late Mr. Thomas Walton. The Earl of Warrington, in 1754, gave £5000, now amounting to £5610 three per cent. reduced bank annuities, for educating or apprenticing children of the parish, and for the relief of the poor of this and the parish of Barnwell-All Saints. A Roman road passed through the parish.

BOWER-CHALK (Holy Trinity), a parish, in the union of WILTON, hundred of CHALK, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Wilton; containing 447 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to the consolidated rectory of Broad Chalk and vicarage of Alvediston.

BOWER-HINTON, with HURST, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of MARTOCK, union of YEOVIL, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 688 inhabitants.

BOWERS-GIFFORD (St. Margaret), a parish, in the union of BILLERICAY, hundred of BARSTABLE, S. division of ESSEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Rayleigh; containing 249 inhabitants. It comprises about 2400 acres, and is bounded on the south by Holly and East havens, which afford a navigable communication with the Thames. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £25, and in the patronage of Mrs. Curtis; net income, £564. The church is a small ancient edifice, with a tower surmounted by a shingled spire, and consists only of a nave and chancel.

BOWES (St. Giles), a parish, in the union of TEESDALE, wapentake of GILLING-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 6 miles (W. by N.) from Greta-Bridge; containing 850 inhabitants, of whom 763 are in the township of Bowes, and 87 in that of Gillmonby. This place, from its situation on one of the Roman military roads, and from the discovery of numerous relics of Roman antiquity (among which was a votive inscription to the Emperor Adrian, on a stone slab, used in the time of Camden as the communion table in the church), appears to have been the site of a Roman station, which most antiquaries have identified with the Lavatrae of Antonine, where the first Thracian cohort was stationed, in the reign of Severus, and where also, towards the decline of the Roman empire, were fixed the head-quarters of the "Numerus Exploratorum," and their prefect, under the "Dux Britanniae." At the time of the Conquest, there were still vestiges of a town, which had been destroyed by fire, from which circumstance Camden supposes the present name of the place to be derived; and within the vallum of the Roman fortress, and with part of the materials, a castle was soon afterwards built by Alan, Earl of Richmond, of which there are considerable remains, occupying the summit of an eminence declining on the south towards the river Greta. The village consists principally of one street, nearly three-quarters of a mile in length, and has long been celebrated for its boarding-schools, to which numerous pupils are sent from London, on grounds of economy. It is situated near the verge of Stanemore, and on the banks of the Greta, over which, at the distance of two miles, is a natural bridge of picturesque character, called "God's bridge," formed by a rude arch of limestone rock, sixteen feet in the span, and twenty feet in breadth, affording a passage for carriages. Lead-ore, iron-stone, and some coal are found in the neighbourhood. The market, which was held on Friday, and a fair on Oct. 1st, have both fallen into disuse. The LIVING is a perpetual curacy; net income, £90; patron and impropiator, T. Harrison, Esq. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A free grammar school was founded in 1693, by William Hutchinson, Esq., who endowed it with an estate now producing £258 per annum, for the instruction of children and for supplying the poor with coal, for which latter purpose Mr. Joseph Kipling, in 1762, bequeathed a rent-charge of £2. Fifty boys and fifty girls are instructed on the national plan. Numerous coins of Nero, Vespasian, Faustina, Severus, and of the Lower Empire; fragments of ornamental pottery; a gold medal of Nero; and brass medals of Nerva and Antoninus Pius, have been found on the site of the Roman station; and more recently, on the inclosure of some common lands, an aqueduct for the conveyance of water from Levar pool, a distance of nearly two miles, for the supply of the Roman baths, was discovered. The ramparts of the station may still be traced in some parts of the area, though nearly obliterated. This place is interesting as the scene of Mallet's pathetic ballad of "Edwin and Emma," whose real names were Roger Wrightson and Martha Railton, both of whom, according to the parish register, were interred here, in the same grave, March 15th, 1714.

BOWSDEN, a hamlet, in the parish of LOWICK, union of GLENDALE, E. division of GLENDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $9\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Wooler. The ancient family of Carr sold their paternal estate here to the late Sir Francis Blake, Bart. The village is long and scattered. A sepulchral urn was turned up by the plough, several years since, at Bowesden-Hollins; and in the year 1800, some workmen, in levelling a barrow in the neighbourhood, discovered two inverted urns, containing calcined human bones.

BOWLAND, with LEAGRAM, a township, in the parish of WHALLEY, union of CLITHEROE, Lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of LANCASHIRE, 9 miles (W.) from Clitheroe; containing 273 inhabitants, of whom 133 are in Little Bowland.

BOWLAND-FOREST, HIGH, a township, in the parish of SLAIDBURN, union of CLITHEROE, W. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK; containing 181 inhabitants. It includes the hamlets of Dunslop, Batterax, and Burnend, and comprises, with Low Bowland-Forest, (both forming the district called Bolland Liberty) 17,800 acres. Here was anciently a forest, a small part of which has been inclosed; and the office of bow-bearer of this forest is held by Peregrine Edward Townley, Esq., lord of the liberty, who purchased the property of the Duke of Buccleuch.

BOWLAND-FOREST, LOW, a township, in the chapelry of WHITEWELL, parish of WHALLEY, union of CLITHEROE, partly in the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, and partly in the Lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of LANCASHIRE; containing 330 inhabitants.

BOWLD, a hamlet, in the parish of IDBURY, union of CHIPPING-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD; containing 59 inhabitants.

BOWLEY, a township, in the parish of BODENHAM, union of LEOMINSTER, hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD; containing 206 inhabitants.

BOWLING, a chapelry, in the parish and union of BRADFORD, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 1 mile (S. E.) from Bradford; containing 8918 inhabitants. This place derived its name, originally Bolling, from the family of the Bollings, who for many generations were lords of the manor, and proprietors of large landed property in the neighbourhood. After the death of Tristram Bolling, in 1502, the manor was conveyed by his daughter and sole heiress, by marriage, to Sir Richard Tempest, of Bracewell, in whose family it remained till about the middle of the 16th century, when it became the property of Henry Saville, Esq., who, in 1668, sold it to Francis Lindley, Esq., barrister-at-law, ancestor of Sir Francis Lindley Wood, Bart., of Hickleton; and after passing through various hands, it was purchased, in 1834, by John Green Paley, Esq., the present proprietor and lord of the manor. The township is situated on the slope of a hill on the east side of Low Moor, and comprises by computation 1438 acres, of which by far the greater portion is pasture; the surface is varied, and the surrounding scenery in some parts enlivened with plantations. Bolling Hall, the residence of Thomas Paley, Esq., barrister-at-law, and a magistrate for the West riding, is a stately and spacious mansion of venerable aspect, and one of the most interesting structures of the kind in the county; it consists of a centre, and two projecting semi-octagonal wings, of two stories each, with embattled parapets, and lighted with large oriel windows, and flanked at each extremity by a massive square tower of three stages, of which one, apparently of earlier date than the other, is surmounted by a square turret at one of the angles; the grand hall in the centre is lighted by a spacious window, formerly containing numerous shields of armorial bearings in stained glass, several of which have been replaced by the proprietor. The mansion was anciently surrounded with a large park, well stocked with red deer, and embracing much diversity of scenery. Townhill House, the seat of Francis Duffield, Esq., is a handsome mansion, pleasantly situated. The substratum abounds with coal and iron-ore, which have been wrought for more than half a century by the Bowling Iron Company, whose works here are the most extensive in the north of England; the accumulated heaps of refuse from the mines, forming huge mounds surrounding the excavations, have been planted with trees, adding greatly to the aspect of the neighbourhood. The village consists chiefly of one long street, rising by a gradual ascent from the town of Bradford to Dudley Hill, on the Wakefield road; the houses are of stone and well built, and there are numerous clusters of modern cottages inhabited chiefly by persons employed in the iron-works. The church, dedicated to St. John, and consecrated in Feb. 1842, was erected at the sole expense of the Iron Company, at a cost of £4000; it is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles, and surmounted by a well-proportioned spire, and contains 1000 sittings, of which 300 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £150; patron, the Vicar of Bradford. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans; and a national school, with a dwelling-house for the master and mistress, was built in 1838, by the Iron Company, at an expense of £800, on land given by John Green Paley, Esq., and is supported by the founders.

BOWNESS (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WIGTON, CUMBERLAND ward, and E. division of the county of CUMBERLAND; comprising the townships of Anthon, Bowness, Drumburgh, and Finland; and containing 1488 inhabitants, of whom 624 are in the township of Bowness, 14 miles (W. N. W.) from Carlisle. The parish comprises by measurement 9294 acres, of which 4953 are arable, 1088 meadow, 3152 common, moss land, or peat, and 42 wood. The village stands on a rocky promontory, commanding a fine view of the Solway Firth, on the coast of which it is situated; and occupies the site of the Roman station Tunnocellum, where, according to the Notitia, a marine cohort (cohors prima Ælia Classica) was placed. At the distance of about a mile was the western extremity of the Picts' wall, vestiges of which are conspicuous in various parts of the parish, as well as of Gabrosentum, another Roman station. Coins and other relics of the Romans, among which was an image of the god Terminus, have been discovered; and from the foundations of houses and streets, which cultivation has exposed to the view, this place has evidently been of greater extent than it is at present. The ship canal from Carlisle terminates near the village. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 13. 11½.; net income, £393; patron, Earl of Lonsdale: there are 57 acres of good glebe land, and 272 acres of common, the latter partly cultivated, and very inferior. Thomas Pattinson, in 1785, gave £610 for the instruction of children belonging to this and some neighbouring parishes; the proceeds are applied to the school at Drumburgh. Robert Troutbeck, in 1706, bequeathed the sum of £50 for persons not receiving parish relief; the money was laid out in the purchase of three acres of land at Wigton, now producing £12 per annum.

BOWNESS, a post-town, in the parish of WINDERMERE, KENDAL ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 9 miles (W. N. W.) from Kendal. This village, which contains the parish church, is beautifully situated on the eastern shore of Windermere Lake, in a district abounding with picturesque scenery; and from the many objects of deep interest in its immediate vicinity, has been steadily advancing in extent and importance, as a place of favourite resort for the numerous visitors, who, in their excursions to the lakes, take up their abode here during the summer months. Two excellent inns, and many lodging-houses, have been built in the village for their accommodation; and in the neighbourhood several handsome villas have been erected by persons whom the beauty of the situation has induced to fix their permanent residence here. Pleasure-boats, with fishing tackle, and every requisite apparatus for parties visiting the lake, are in constant attendance, and cars are always in readiness for excursions in the environs, which afford a rich display of romantic scenery, and in many points command extensive views of highly varied and strikingly impressive beauty. The char of the lake is in high repute, and is potted in great quantities, and sent to all parts of the country. A free grammar school was established in 1637, and has an endowment of about £60 per annum; and a new school-house was lately erected, at an expense of £1500, by Mr. Bolton, of Storr's Hall, in the parish. The building, which is spacious and elegant, is situated on a hill overlooking the village, and contains two large schoolrooms; the first stone was laid by William Wordsworth, Esq., of Rydal Mount, the eminent poet, in 1836, and the school was opened in 1839.

BOWOOD, a tything, in the parish of NETHERBURY, union and hundred of BEAMINSTER, Bridport division of DORSET, 2¾ miles (W. S. W.) from Beaminster. A chapel of ease, capable of accommodating upwards of 500 persons, was erected by subscription a few years since.

BOWOOD, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union and hundred of CALNE, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, 3½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Chippenham; containing 68 inhabitants. Here is the magnificent seat of the Marquess of Lansdowne, by whom a school, for the benefit of this and the adjacent places of Derry-hill, Sandylane, and Studley, established in 1814, is wholly maintained.

BOWSCALE, a township, in the parish of GREYSTOCK, union of PENRITH, LEITH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 10 miles (W. N. W.) from Penrith; containing 31 inhabitants.

BOWTHORP, with MENTHORP, a township, in the parish of HEMINGBROUGH, union of HOWDEN, wapentake of OUSE and DERWENT, E. riding of YORK, 7 miles (E. by N.) from Selby; containing 82 inhabitants, of whom 38 are in Bowthorpe. The township comprises about 1595 acres; the hamlet is situated on the west bank of the Derwent.

BOWTHORPE (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of FOREHOE, E. division of NORFOLK, 3½ miles (W. by N.) from Norwich; containing 34 inhabitants. It comprises 750 acres, all in one farm. The church was, at the beginning of the seventeenth century, used as a storehouse for grain, but, by a decree in chancery, obtained in 1635, it was restored to its original purpose; in 1792, it was unroofed, but a large portion of the walls still remains. The living was formerly a rectory, in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of the College of St. Mary-in-the-Fields, at Norwich, who, in 1522, petitioned the bishop for its reduction to a curacy: since 1635 the living has been a donative.

BOX (St. THOMAS à BECKET), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHIPPENHAM, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, 7 miles (S. W. by W.) from Chippenham; containing 2274 inhabitants. An extensive bed of freestone of a peculiar quality exists here, called Bath stone, from the circumstance of the greater part of that city having been built with it; it forms a considerable article of exportation to almost every part of the empire. At a short distance north-west of the village, which is beautifully situated in a rich valley, and on the road from London to Bath, is a mineral spring, containing a very large proportion of sulphur and carbonic acid; and at Box is a station for the Great Western railway, which passes through the parish, and here enters a tunnel, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile in length, 30 feet wide, and 25 feet high above the rails, and having 11 shafts for affording air and light, each 25 feet in diameter, and some of them nearly 300 feet in depth from the surface of the ground. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15. 8. 9.; patron and incumbent, Rev. H. D. C. S. Horlock; impropiator, W. Northey, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £490. 6. 4., and the vicarial for one of £408. 3. 8.; £10 are annually paid to the rector of Hazlebury; and there is an acre of glebe. A charity school has an income of nearly £30 a year, arising from lands. On Cheney Court farm, north of the spa, and about five miles from Bath, a variety of coins was dug up in 1813, indicating that a large Roman villa once existed on the spot; and several Roman pavements are in the premises near the church.

BOXDEN, with HANDFORTH, a township, in the parish of CHEADLE, union of STOCKPORT, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Stockport; containing 2394 inhabitants, of whom 1713 are in Boxden.

BOXFORD (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of NEWBURY, hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Newbury; containing, with the tything of Westbrook, 612 inhabitants, and comprising 2769*a. 2r. 23p.*, according to a survey in 1839. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. Wells, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £880, and who has a glebe of $10\frac{1}{2}$ acres. In the church is a monument to James Anderton. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is partially supported by subscription.

BOXFORD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union, and partly in the hundred of COSFORD, but chiefly in that of BABERGH, W. division of SUFFOLK, 16 miles (W. by S.) from Ipswich; containing, with the hamlet of Hadleigh, 1121 inhabitants. The parish, which comprises about 1840 acres, was formerly a place of considerable trade. Fairs are held on Easter-Monday, and the 21st of December. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £650, and the glebe consists of $38\frac{1}{2}$ acres. A free grammar school was established by Queen Elizabeth, in the 36th of her reign; but there are now taught in it only a few poor boys.

BOXGROVE (St. MARY AND St. BLASE), a parish, in the union of WEST HAMPNETT, hundred of Box and STOCKBRIDGE, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Chichester; containing, with the hamlets of Crocker-Hill, East Hampnett, and part of Seabeach, and the tythings of Halnaker and Strellington, 736 inhabitants. It comprises about 2974 acres, of which the soil consists of chalk, gravel, and loam. The splendid mansion of Goodwood is beautifully situated on the south side of the Downs, surrounded by a park of 1200 acres, planted with timber of stately growth; the interior contains numerous lofty and spacious apartments, superbly fitted up, and embellished with paintings and statuary by the first artists. Races are held on the Harroway, and a stand has been erected which will accommodate 3000 persons. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the great tithes, excepting Halnaker Park; it is valued in the king's books at £9. 5. 5., and the Duke of Richmond is patron and impropiator: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £900, and there are 7 acres of glebe. The church was the conventual church of an alien priory, founded by Robert de Haia, in the reign of Henry I., and made subordinate to the abbey de l'Essay, in Normandy; it is a handsome cruciform structure, in the Norman style, with a central tower; the nave has been nearly destroyed, but the remainder of the interior is a beautiful specimen of the later Norman, and has an imposing grandeur of effect. There are numerous sepulchral monuments, several of which are altar-tombs of Sussex marble, under arched recesses, pierced in quatrefoil, and surmounted with crocketed canopies. The priory was originally founded for three brethren of the Benedictine order, to which others were added by Roger St. John, son-in-law of the founder, and the number, in 1149, was augmented to fifteen by his sons William and Thomas: on the dissolution of alien priories it was made denizen, and the gross revenue, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was £145. 10. 2. There are also other remains of the monastic buildings, parts of which have been converted into dwelling-houses, consisting chiefly of the refectory, which has been made a barn; and on the north of the church is a Norman doorway, opening into the cloisters, which led to the monastic dwellings. In 1740, Mary, Countess Dowager of Derby, granted in trust some land and a rent-charge of £140 a year, for the erection and endowment of almshouses for twelve women, six of Boxgrove, four of East Lavant, and two of Tangmere, and a dwelling-house for a schoolmaster; and in addition to the almshouses, two schoolrooms have been built, in which children are instructed on the national plan. Near Strellington, the Roman road crosses the parish diagonally, from the south to the north-east, at Sea Beach farm; and the remains of Halnaker House form a picturesque object.

BOXLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of HOLLINGBOURN, hundred of MAIDSTONE, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Maidstone; containing 1398 inhabitants. An abbey for Cistercian monks was founded here, in 1146, by William d'Ipres, Earl of Kent, who subsequently assumed the cowl at Laon, in France. Henry III. granted to the society the privilege of holding a weekly market, and the abbot was summoned to parliament in the reign of Edward I. Edward II. resided at the abbey during the siege of Leeds Castle, at which time he signed a charter for the citizens of London. At the Dissolution the revenue was estimated at £218. 19. 10.; and the site, with a portion of the estates, was granted to Sir Thomas Wyatt, the poet. The abbey contained a celebrated rood, which, together with the image of St. Rumbald, was taken away, and publicly destroyed at St. Paul's Cross, in 1538: there are still some remains of the buildings. The parish is noted for the manufacture of paper of a superior quality. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 19. 2.; net income, £834; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church is a neat small edifice, with a handsome square tower. A national school was established in 1832, and a school for 20 girls is chiefly supported by Mr. and Mrs. Whatman. An extensive rabbit-warren, part of the possessions of the abbey, lies beneath the chalk hill; and there was another near Penenden Heath (about half of which is in this parish), but it has been brought into cultivation. A small stream that rises just below the church, and runs through the village, is stated to petrify wood with an incrustation resembling brown unpolished marble.

BOXTED (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of LEXDEN and WINSTREE, Colchester division of the hundred of LEXDEN, N. division of ESSEX, 5 miles (N.) from Colchester; containing 856 inhabitants. It comprises 3082 acres, of which 2432 are arable, 576 meadow, and 74 woodland, and is bordered on the north by the navigable river Stour. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 13. 9.; patron, Bishop of London; impropiator, J. Josselyn, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £520, and the vicarial for one of £220; the glebe belonging to the impropiator comprises more than 61 acres; the vicar's, not quite four. The church is an ancient edifice with a tower, and has been repewed within the last few years; it contains an elegant monument to Sir Richard Blackmore, physician to William III., and author of several medical and other works. A school is supported by voluntary contributions.

BOXTED, a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of BABERGH, W. division of SUFFOLK, 5 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Clare; containing 200 inhabitants. This place has long been the residence of the Poley family, whose descendant, the Rev. G. W. Poley, is the present proprietor; the family mansion is a spacious and ancient edifice. The living is a rectory not in charge, consolidated with that of Hartest: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £375. 10. The church is a small edifice, adjoining the chancel of which is a family vault of the Poles, containing some monuments of very delicate sculpture, in marble. There is a charity, amounting to about £10 per annum, with an equal amount for the poor of the parish of Hartest.

BOXWELL (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of TETBURY, Upper division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S ASH, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Wotton-under-Edge; 6 miles (W.) from Tetbury; containing, with Leighterton, 334 inhabitants. This place derives its name from a plantation of box-trees, one of the most considerable in the kingdom, and from a copious spring of water that issues from it. A nunnery was established at a very early period, which is said to have been destroyed by the Danes, and of which the possessions were subsequently annexed to the abbey of Gloucester. Charles II. rested at the ancient manor-house on his route from Boscobel to Bristol; and Prince Rupert, when governor of that city, made it a place of frequent resort. The parish comprises 2243 acres, of which 30 are box-wood, 100 woodland, about 300 pasture, and the remainder arable; it is situated on the road from Cheltenham to Bath; the soil is fertile, and there are some good quarries of oolite freestone. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £23. 4. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$.; patron and incumbent, Rev. R. W. Huntley: the tithes, including those of Leighterton, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £375, and there are 68 acres of glebe. The church is a very ancient structure, with a tower and campanile turret. There is a chapel of ease at Leighterton; and a parochial school is supported by the Huntley family. In a field at Leighterton is a large barrow.

BOXWORTH (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of St. Ives, hundred of PAPWORTH, county of CAMBRIDGE, 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Caxton; containing 326 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 12. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of George Thornhill, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £490, and the glebe comprises 126 acres. The church contains a monumental bust of Dr. Saunderson, F.R.S., the blind professor of mathematics at the University of Cambridge; he died and was buried here, in 1759. A school is supported by the lord of the manor, the rector, and the curate.

BOYATT, a tything, in the parish of OTTERBOURNE, union of HURSLEY, hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 160 inhabitants.

BOYCUTT, a hamlet, in the parish of STOWE, union of BUCKINGHAM, hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, though locally in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Buckingham; containing 35 inhabitants.

BOYLSTONE (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of UTTOXETER, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Ashbourn; containing 343 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 0. 2.; net income, £260; patron and incumbent, Rev. W. Hurst. An allotment of land and money payments were assigned in 1783, in lieu of tithes. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BOYNTON (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of BRIDLINGTON, wapentake of DICKERING, E. riding of YORK, 2 miles (W. by N.) from Bridlington; containing 100 inhabitants: It is on the road from Bridlington to Malton, and comprises by computation 2100 acres, the property of Sir George Strickland, Bart., whose family were anciently seated at Strickland, in the county of Westmorland, but the principal branch of which has been settled here more than two centuries. Boynton Hall, the residence of the baronet, is a lofty and handsome mansion, beautifully situated upon an eminence in a richly wooded park, on the acclivities of which are some fine plantations, and a large sheet of water ornaments the grounds. On an elevated ridge, south of the hall, is a pavilion, erected by the late Sir George, from which is obtained an extensive prospect, both of sea and land, particularly of Bridlington bay and the eastern heights of the wolds. The village is in the vale of a rivulet flowing in an eastern direction to the coast. The living is a discharged perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £7. 14. 2., and in the patronage of Sir George Strickland, the impropiator, with a net income of £141: land and a money payment were assigned, in 1777, in lieu of tithes. The church, which was rebuilt in the early part of the last century, consists of a nave and chancel, with a handsome tower; in the chancel are several monuments to the Strickland family. The poor have the interest of a few small sums.

BOYTON, a parish, in the union of LAUNCESTON, partly in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, N. division of the county of DEVON, but chiefly in that of STRATTON, E. division of CORNWALL, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Launceston; containing, with the hamlet of Northcott, in Devon, 600 inhabitants. The parish comprises between 4000 and 5000 acres; the soil is clay, and in general very shallow, the surface rather hilly; there is a considerable quantity of coppice. The Bude and Launceston, or Tamar, canal intersects the parish. A fair is held on August 5th. The living is a perpetual curacy, net income, £123; patron, Rev. G. Prideaux; impropiator, H. Thompson, Esq. Between this place and North Tamerton is an ancient thatched building, called Hornacott Chapel, now occupied by a labourer.

BOYTON (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of WOODBRIDGE, hundred of WILFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 8 miles (E. by S.) from Woodbridge; containing 239 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1650 acres; the soil is for the most part light and heathy, with some few acres of marsh, and the surface level; the district is intersected by the river Ore, which forms a communication with Butley Creek, or Eye. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 12. 1.; net income, £365; patrons, Trustees of Mrs. Mary Warner. An almshouse was built in 1743, and liberally endowed by Mrs. Warner.

BOYTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of WARMINSTER, hundred of HEYTESBURY, Warmiuster and S. divisions of WILTS, 1 mile (W. by S.) from Codford; containing, with the township of Corton, 360 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated near the road from Bath to Salisbury, and intersected by the river Willey, comprises by measurement 3720 acres. The mansion-house of the Lamberts, adjoining the church, is an ancient edifice in the Elizabethan style, the grounds of which retain their original character; and the terrace, walks, and hedges of yew-trees still remain as they probably appeared in 1660. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £27. 17. 3½., and in the patronage of Magdalen College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £560, and the glebe comprises 20 acres. The church is an ancient and picturesque structure, in the early and decorated English styles, with a porch of elegant design; the interior is embellished with a beautiful circular window, and in the south aisle is a sepulchral chapel, now belonging to the Lambert family, but originally built by the Giffards, of whom Sir Alexander Giffard, the friend of the younger Long Espée, was interred here. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and a parochial school is supported by subscription. Aylmer Bourke Lambert, the celebrated botanist, was born here.

BOZEAT (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of WELLINGBOROUGH, hundred of HIGHAM-FERRERS, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 5½ miles (N.) from Olney; containing 845 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the border of Bedfordshire, comprises 2537a. 3r. Sp., of which above 120 acres are woodland; the surface is in some parts hilly, especially at the north end, and in others level; the soil is a cold clay, and limestone is quarried. The road from Wellingborough to Olney passes through the village. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Strixton consolidated, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £183; patron, Earl Spencer; impropiators, Representatives of the late Dr. Laurence, Archbishop of Cashel: the glebe comprises 120 acres. Land and annual money payments were assigned in 1798, in lieu of tithes. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BRABOURNE (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of EAST ASHFORD, franchise and barony of BIRCHOLT, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, 7 miles (E. by S.) from Ashford; containing 889 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 3504 acres, and is crossed by the railway from London to Dover. Extensive cavalry and infantry barracks were erected a few years since. A fair for toys and pedlery is held on the last day in May. The living is a vicarage, with the rectory of Monk's-Horton consolidated, valued in the king's books at £11. 12. 6., and in the gift of the Archbishop of Canterbury: the great tithes of Brabourne, belonging to his Grace, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £613, with a glebe of 82 acres, and those of the incumbent for one of £270, with a glebe of one acre, and a residence. The church is very ancient, and contains numerous interesting monuments. There is a chapel for Calvinistic Baptists; and a school is partly supported by subscription.

BRACEBOROUGH, or BRACEBURGH (St. Margaret), a parish, in the union of STAMFORD, wapentake of NESS, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (N. E.) from Stamford; containing, with the hamlet of Shillingthorpe, 231 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £195: corn-rents were assigned in the 39th and 40th of George III. in lieu of tithes. There is a fine spring called the Spa, with a convenience for bathing; its waters are beneficial in cases of scurvy.

BRACEBRIDGE (All Saints), a parish, in the union, and liberty of the city, of LINCOLN, county of LINCOLN, 2¼ miles (S. by W.) from Lincoln; containing 127 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £3. 9. 9½., and in the patronage of Mrs. Bromehead; net income, £203; impropiators, Anne Gibbeson and another. Edward Wells, in 1604, bequeathed a house and land for the instruction of children; and a small school is partly supported by subscription.

BRACEBY (St. Margaret), a parish, in the union and soke of GRANTHAM, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 4½ miles (W. by N.) from Falkingham, 7 miles (E.) from Grantham; containing 155 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, united to that of South Grantham : the appropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £132. 17. 6., payable to the Prebendary of South Grantham, and the vicarial for one of £55. A school is partly supported by Sir W. C. Welby, Bart., and the Rev. W. Potchet.

BRACE-MEOLE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union, and partly within the borough, of SHREWSBURY, N. division of SALOP, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.) from Shrewsbury ; containing 1195 inhabitants. It comprises 2487*a.* 3*r.* 3*p.*, of which 1079 acres are arable, 1382 meadow, pasture, and homesteads, and 25 woodland. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5 ; net income, £361 ; patron, Ven. Edward Bather, Arch-deacon of Salop ; impropricators, the Landowners. A national school has been established. The Shrewsbury house of industry, a noble and spacious building, stands in the parish.

BRACEWELL (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 9 miles (W. by S.) from Skipton ; containing 153 inhabitants. This place, in ancient documents Breis-well and Brais-well, signifying "the well on the bray" or "brow," together with the adjoining hamlet of Stock, the property of T. Hastings Ingham, Esq., of Marton, originally belonged to the Saxon chiefs, Ulchil and Archil, lords of the respective manors. After the Conquest, they were granted to Roger de Tempest, who held them in the reign of Henry I., and they continued in the possession of that family till about the middle of the 17th century, when they were alienated, and subsequently became the property of Earl de Grey, the present lord. The parish comprises by computation 1920 acres ; the surface is beautifully undulated, and the hills are covered with luxuriant verdure ; the lands are chiefly in pasture. The ancient manor-house, now a ruin, consisted of a centre, with two boldly projecting wings, built of brick in the reign of Henry VIII. ; and to the north of it are the remains of a former house of stone, in which an apartment, called "King Henry's parlour," was the retreat of Henry VI. There are some quarries of excellent limestone, which is used both for building and for burning into lime. The village is pleasantly situated and neatly built : on the north, the parish adjoins the turnpike-road between Gisburn and Skipton, and the Leeds and Liverpool canal passes about two miles east of the church. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £2. 2. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$., net income, £123 ; patron and impropricator, Earl de Grey. The church, nearly adjoining the manor-house, and probably founded by the Tempest family, is an ancient structure, chiefly in the Norman style, and was enlarged by the addition of a north aisle in the reign of Henry VII. ; it has a plain Norman doorway on the south, and a similar arch divides the chancel from the nave ; it contains the family-vault of the Tempests, whose armorial bearings embellish several of the windows. On the summit of two hills, called Howber and Gildersber, are remains of military works, said to have been thrown up by the army of Prince Rupert, on its march through Craven, in 1664.

BRACKEN, a township, in the chapelry of KILNWICK, union of DRIFFIELD, Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 6 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Great Driffield ; containing 9 inhabitants. It is on the road from Beverley to Malton, and comprises about 600 acres. The village was formerly populous, and contained a chapel, the cemetery belonging to which remains undisturbed.

BRACKENBOROUGH, a chapelry, in the parish of LITTLE GRIMSBY, union of LOUTH, wapentake of LUDBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Louth ; containing 63 inhabitants.

BRACKENFIELD, a chapelry, in the parish of MORTON, union of CHESTERFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, 4 miles (N. W.) from Alfreton ; containing 459 inhabitants. The chapelry, which consists of the townships of Brack-enfield and Woolley, comprises 1557*a.* 24*p.*, and is skirted by the North-Midland railway. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Rector of Morton ; net income, £32, derived from the interest of £1000, Queen Anne's Bounty. A rent-charge of £176. 15. has been awarded as a commutation of the tithes. The chapel, which is a very old edifice, is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

BRACKENHILL, a township, in the parish of ARTHURET, union of LONGTOWN, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 4 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Longtown ; containing 373 inhabitants. In this township is the small hamlet of Easton, which anciently gave name to a parish, long since included within those of Arthuret and Kirk-Andrews-upon-Esk.

BRACKENHOLME, with WOODHALL, a township, in the parish of HEMINGBROUGH, union of HOWDEN, wapentake of OUSE and DERWENT, E. riding of YORK, 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Howden ; containing 77 inhabitants. It is situated in the vale of the Derwent, and comprises about 1200 acres : the village is on the road from Howden to Hemingbrough.

BRACKENTHWAITE, a township, in the parish of LORTON, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Keswick ; containing 116 inhabitants. The neighbourhood abounds with beautiful and picturesque scenery.

BRACKLEY, an incorporated market-town, a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of KING'S-SUTTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 20 miles (S. W. by S.) from Northampton, and 64 (N. W. by W.) from London ; containing 2121 inhabitants, of whom 887 are in the parish of St. James, and 1234 in that of St. Peter, which includes the hamlet of Halse. This place derives its name from the Anglo-Saxon Bracken, signifying fern, with which the neighbourhood formerly abounded : it was a Saxon burgh of considerable importance, but was greatly injured by the Danes. In the reign of John, Saher de Quincy, Earl of Winchester, joined the confederate barons at Stamford, who marched to Brackley, whence they sent a remonstrance setting forth their grievances, to the king, who was then at Oxford. In the reign of Henry III., two splendid tournaments were held on a plain, called Bayard's Green, near the town. Edward II., who conferred many privileges upon Brackley, made it a staple town for wool; and in the reign of Edward III., having become famous for its trade, it sent three representatives, as "Merchant Staplers," to a grand council held at Westminster. In the time of Henry VIII., the plague raging violently at Oxford, the fellows and scholars of Magdalen College removed to this town, and resided in an hospital founded by Robert le Bossu, Earl of Leicester, about the middle of the twelfth century, and of which there are considerable remains, the chapel, with a broad low tower on the north-west side, being still entire.

The town, which was formerly of much greater extent, is on the border of Buckinghamshire, and is situated on the declivity of a hill, near a branch of the river Ouse, which has its source in the immediate vicinity: it is divided into two portions, New and Old; the latter, which is the smaller, is without the limits of the borough. The principal street, nearly a mile in length, extends from the bridge up the acclivity of the hill, and contains many good houses, which are mostly built of stone; there is an abundant supply of water. The inhabitants are chiefly occupied in the making of bobbin-lace, and boots and shoes. The market is on Wednesday; the fairs, principally for horses, horned-cattle, and sheep, are on the Wednesday after Feb. 25th, the second Wednesday in April, the Wednesday after June 22nd, the Wednesday after Oct. 11th (a statute fair), and Dec. 11th, which is a great fair for cattle and wearing apparel. The inhabitants are supposed to have received their first charter of incorporation in the reign of Edward II., and subsequent charters were granted in the 2nd and 4th of James II., by which the government is vested in a mayor, six aldermen, and twenty-six burgesses. The elective franchise was conferred in the 1st of Edward VI., from which time the borough returned two members to parliament, but was disfranchised by the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45. The town-hall, a handsome building in the centre of the town, supported on arches, under which the market is held, was erected, in 1706, by Scroop, Duke of Bridgewater, at an expense of £2000.

Brackley comprises the parishes of St. Peter and St. James, which, though ecclesiastically united, are distinct as regards civil affairs; the former consists of 3716 acres, and the latter of 430a. 3r. 36p. The living is a consolidated vicarage, valued in the king's books at £19. 1. 6.; net income, £359; patron, Duke of Sutherland; impropricators, Trustees of the late Duke of Bridgewater. Under an inclosure act, in 1829, land and a money payment were assigned in lieu of tithes; and under the recent act, inappropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £167. 10., and vicarial for one of £238. 6. 10. The church of Saint Peter is an ancient building, with a low embattled tower, and contains a Norman font of curious design. St. James, formerly a parochial church, is now a chapel of ease. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The free grammar school was founded about the year 1447, by William of Wainfleet, who endowed it for ten boys, with £13. 6. 8. per annum, which sum is paid by Magdalen College, Oxford, to whom the site of the ancient hospital was granted at the time of its dissolution. A national school is supported by subscription. Almshouses for six aged widows were founded by Sir Thomas Crewe, in 1633, and endowed with a rent-charge of £24, which was increased, in 1721, by his descendant, Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham, with an additional charge of £12. The poor law union of Brackley comprises 30 parishes or places, of which 25 are in the county of Northampton, 3 in that of Buckingham, and 2 in that of Oxford, and contains a population of 13,508. The site of a castle, built by one of the Norman barons, is still called the Castle Hill. Samuel Clarke, an eminent orientalist, and one of the coadjutors of Walton in publishing the Polyglott Bible, was born here, in 1623; and Dr. Bathurst, Bishop of Norwich, who died in 1837, was also a native.

BRACKNELL, a large posting-village, in the parish of WARFIELD, hundred of COOKHAM, county of BERKS; 4 miles (E.) from Wokingham, on the road to Windsor.

BRACON-ASH (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of HENSTEAD, hundred of HUMBLEYARD, E. division of NORFOLK, 6 miles (S. W.) from Norwich; containing 293 inhabitants. The road from Buckenham to Norwich intersects the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of Miss Berney; net income, £245. The church is partly in the early, and partly in the decorated style, and consists of a nave, chancel, and south aisle, with a mausoleum on the north side, belonging to the Berney family. Lord Thurlow was born at the old Hall in 1730.

BRADBORNE (All Saints), a parish, partly in the hundred of APPLETREE, but chiefly in that of WIRKSWORTH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Ashbourn; comprising the townships of Aldwark and Ballidon, the chapelries of Atlow and Brassington, and the hamlet of Lea-Hall; and containing 1303 inhabitants. Tissington Hall was garrisoned for the king by its owner, Col. Fitz-Herbert, in 1643. The parish abounds with limestone. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 3. 4.; net income, £119; patron and impropricator, Duke of Devonshire. There is a chapel of ease at Ballidon. A school is partly supported by subscription.

BRADBURY, a township, in the parish and union of SEDGEFIELD, N. E. division of STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 2½ miles (E.) from Rushyford, and 10½ (S. by E.) from Durham; containing 167 inhabitants. Mr. Cade, the antiquary, considered the name of this place to be a corruption of Brimesbury, where King Athelstan encamped in 937, when he gained a decisive victory over the Danes; but it is more probable that this battle was fought at Bramby, in Lincolnshire. The place is thought to have been, shortly after the Conquest, the property of the family of L'Isle, and probably passed from them to the De la Poles; the families of Thornton, Lumley, Neville, Bowes, and others, subsequently held lands here, and some possessions are also stated in the records to have belonged to the convent of Durham. The township is bounded on the south-east by the river Skerne, which separates it from the parish of Great Aycliffe, and comprises 2043 acres, in equal portions of arable and pasture; the surface is rather level, and pretty well wooded, and presents almost every variety of soil. £3000 have recently been expended in effectually draining the marshes, which promise to become good grazing land. The Great North of England railway, which has a station here, runs through the township for two miles. Richard Wright, Esq., of Sands House, is the chief proprietor. Here was formerly a chapel of ease, dedicated to St. Nicholas, of which there are no vestiges; the curate's house is still standing. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £233; and there is a glebe of 63 acres.

BRADBY, a chapelry, in the parish of REPTON, union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERBY, 3 miles (E.) from Burton; containing 298 inhabitants. Near the chapel is the site of an ancient baronial mansion, which was fortified by royal license in the year 1300; its materials are supposed to have been used by the first Earl of Chesterfield, in the erection of a residence, which he garrisoned for the king, in 1642, and which, after a short defence, was captured by a strong detachment sent by Col. Gell; it was taken down in 1780. The living is a donative; net income, £80; patron, Earl of Chesterfield. The inhabitants marry and bury at Repton. A school for boys, and another for girls, were established by the late Earl and Countess.

BRADDEN (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of TOWCESTER, hundred of GREEN'S NORTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Towcester; containing 171 inhabitants. This parish, bounded on the south-east by the river Tow, comprises by measurement 1011 acres; the soil is generally strong, inclining to clay; the surface rather hilly, with gentle inclinations and slopes; and the meadows are subject to occasional floods: stone is quarried for road-making. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 6. 8.; net income, £227, arising from 192 acres of land, allotted, at the inclosure of the parish, in lieu of tithes; patron and incumbent, Rev. C. Ives. A school is partly supported by the lord of the manor and the clergyman.

BRADENHAM (St. BOTOLPH), a parish, in the union of WYCOMBE, hundred of DESBOROUGH, county of BUCKINGHAM, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from High Wycombe; containing 226 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 3. 9., and in the patronage of Mrs. A. Hearle; net income, £190. Catharine Pye, by deed dated in 1713, gave land for the instruction of children.

BRADENHAM, EAST (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SWAFFHAM, hundred of SOUTH GREENHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (N. W.) from Shipdham; containing 368 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2340*a.* 3*p.*, of which 1013 acres pay a modus of £34. 8. in lieu of tithes. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 2. 8½., and in the patronage of Thomas Adlington, Esq.: the remainder of the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £352. 9., and the glebe comprises a little more than three acres, with a house. The church is a spacious structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower; it was thoroughly repaired in 1833, and contains some handsome monuments. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a national school is chiefly supported by the rector.

BRADENHAM, WEST (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of SWAFFHAM, hundred of SOUTH GREENHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (N. W.) from Shipdham; containing 364 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 1682*a.* 3*r.* 30*p.*, of which 972 acres are arable, 615 pasture and waste, and 95 wood and plantation. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 1. 10½.; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Ely: the appropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £210, and the vicarial for one of £160; and there are nearly eight acres of glebe, belonging to the bishop, and nearly 58 to the vicar. The church, situated on an eminence, is an ancient structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower at the west end of the south aisle: in the chancel are three sedilia of stone, and a piscina of elegant design. A school is partly supported by the lord of the manor. At the inclosure, in 1802, about 12 acres of land, now worth £14 per annum, were awarded to the poor.

BRADESTON.—See BRAYDESTON.

BRADFIELD (St. ANDREW), a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of THEALE, county of BERKS, 8 miles (W.) from Reading; containing 1042 inhabitants. The parish comprises 4057*a.* 3*r.* 19*p.*, according to a survey made in 1838. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 7. 8½.; net income, £788; patron and incumbent, Rev. H. Stevens. The parochial school, or school of industry, was established by the parish officers for the purpose of giving employment and instruction to poor children; the arrangements are superintended by the family of the rector, who chiefly support another school. The union of Bradfield comprises 29 parishes or places, of which 25 are in Berks, 3 in the county of Oxford, and 1 in the county of Southampton; and contains a population of 15,557. A monastery was founded here by King Ina, before 699.

BRADFIELD (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union and hundred of TENDRING, N. division of ESSEX, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Manningtree; containing 995 inhabitants. It is bounded on the north by the river Stour, and comprises by computation 2270 acres; the greater portion of the land rises to a considerable elevation above the marshes; and the soil, chiefly a fine impalpable loam, is uncommonly fertile. A fair is held on the last Monday in July. The living is a discharged vicarage, united, with Manningtree, to the rectory of Mistley, and valued in the king's books at £12. 13. 4.: the great tithes, belonging to the trustees of the late Col. Rigby, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £422, with a glebe of 32 acres, and those of the incumbent for one of £193, with a glebe of 11 acres. The church is an ancient edifice, partly in the later English style, and partly of a much earlier date. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Sir Harbottle Grimston, master of the rolls under Charles II., and an eminent writer on the law, was born here.

BRADFIELD (St. GILES), a parish, in the TUNSTEAD and HAPPING incorporation, hundred of TUNSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from North Walsham; containing 195 inhabitants. The living, consisting of one mediety, is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 15. 7¼., and in the patronage of Lord Suffield; the other mediety is a donative, annexed to the vicarage of Thorpe-Market. The tithes of the rectory have been commuted for a rent-charge of £160, and those belonging to the vicar of Thorpe for one of £55; and there are $2\frac{1}{2}$ acres of glebe. The church is chiefly in the early style, and consists of a nave and chancel, with a square tower; the font is handsomely sculptured.

BRADFIELD, a chapelry, in the parish of ECCLESFIELD, union of WORTLEY, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Sheffield; containing 6318 inhabitants. The place comprises about 33,700 acres, and is in a mountainous part of the county, and surrounded by uncultivated and barren moors, lying between the river Don and the borders of Derbyshire; the Loxley, the Ewden, and several smaller streams intersect the chapelry, winding through it in various directions. The district abounds with slate, flag, and fire and building stone, and much of the land forms that part of the Duke of Norfolk's manors of Hallamshire, called Bradfield, Westnall, and Waldershelf. Game abounds on the moors, and is strictly preserved. Fairs are held on June 17th and December 9th. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £186, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Ecclesfield, who, with the curate of Bradfield and others, has the impropriation. The chapel is an ancient edifice, with a tower, and was repaired about 1800, by the feoffees of sundry parcels of land, consisting of about 250 acres, appropriated by a decree of the Commissioners of Charitable Uses, 13th James I., for the repairs of the chapel and defraying the expenses attending the celebration of divine service, being such as are usually discharged by a church-rate: the income is about £170 per annum. There are district churches at Stainington and Wadsley, and a chapel at Bolsterstone. The Wesleyans have a place of worship. A school at Lower Bradfield, founded in 1706, by Thomas Marriott, is endowed with a house (in which the master resides), a croft, and a garden, besides a rent-charge of £10; and a school in connexion with the Establishment has been lately built by the liberality of Mrs. Remington, of Broomhead Hall, on a site given by the feoffees. Near the church is a Saxon camp in a very perfect state, and on the moors are several Druidical remains: many Roman coins have also been found.

BRADFIELD-COMBUST, commonly called BRADFIELD-MANGER (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of THINGOE, hundred of THEDWASTRY, W. division of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Bury-St. Edmund's; containing 192 inhabitants, and comprising 836 acres. It is situated on the road from Bury to Sudbury. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 19. 7., and in the patronage of the Rev. H. J. Hasted: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £230, and the glebe comprises five acres. This is the birthplace, and was the residence, of Arthur Young, the celebrated writer on agriculture, and author of various miscellaneous works.

BRADFIELD-ST. CLAIR, a parish, in the union of THINGOE, hundred of THEDWASTRY, W. division of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (S. E. by S.) from Bury-St. Edmund's; containing 240 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 4. 7.; patron and incumbent, Rev. Robert Davers: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £272. 15., and there are 29 acres of glebe.

BRADFIELD-ST. GEORGE, or MONKS-BRADFIELD, a parish, in the union of THINGOE, hundred of THEDWASTRY, W. division of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Bury-St. Edmund's; containing 479 inhabitants. An inconsiderable fair is held at Whitsuntide. The living is a rectory, united with that of Rushbrook, and valued in the king's books at £11. 17. $3\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £550; patron, Marquess of Bristol. The church stands upon the highest ground in this part of the county, and has a very lofty square tower, from the summit of which sixty parish churches may be seen; in one of the upper windows, on the south side, is a representation of St. George and the Dragon, in painted glass. There is a small place of worship for Baptists. Thomas Sparke, in 1721, gave property for the instruction of four children.

BRADFORD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of HOLSWORTHY, hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, Holsworthy and N. divisions of DEVON, 6 miles (N. E. by E.) from Holsworthy; containing 530 inhabitants. It comprises 3454a. 8r. 9p., and is situated on the river Torridge. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 8. 4., and in the patronage of the Rectors of East Down, Bratton-Fleming, and Goodleigh: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £350. 10., and the glebe consists of about 70 acres, with a house. The church is a plain edifice. The Rev. William Bickford, in 1745, gave a small endowment for the instruction of six children.

BRADFORD, a township, in the parish and union of MANCHESTER, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (E. by S.) from Manchester; containing 911 inhabitants.

BRADFORD, a township, in the parish of BAMBROUGH, union of BELFORD, N. division of BAMBROUGH ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Belford; containing 34 inhabitants. It is situated on the west side of the small river Warn, near the road between Belford and Alwrick, and not very far from the North Sea.

BRADFORD, a township, in the parish of BOLAM, union of CASTLE ward, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 12 miles (W. S. W.) from Morpeth; containing 38 inhabitants. This ancient place was one of the manors of the Bolam barony, and had free tenants in it, who held of the chief lord by knight's service. In the time of Henry III. the families de Bradford, de Preston, and de Croxton occur among the landed proprietors; soon afterwards the Middletons, now represented by the family of Monck, obtained possessions here; and of other owners at various periods may be named the Ogles and Swinburnes: the township is at present the property of Sir Charles M. L. Monck, Bart., and Sir J. E. Swinburne, Bart. It occupies a bare situation on the south bank of the Blyth-water rivulet, and comprises about 1030 acres of land; a little to the south-east is the beautiful demesne of Belsay. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £64. 2., and the vicarial for £8. 2. 6.

BRADFORD (ST. GILES), a parish, in the union of WELLINGTON, hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, W. division of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Taunton; containing 550 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the river Tone, and within a quarter of a mile from the great western road, comprises 1735a. 3r. 22p. : freestone is quarried, and the canal from Bridgewater to Tiverton affords facility of water-carriage. A cattle fair is held on the third Monday in September. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 17. 6.; net income, £120; patron and incumbent, Rev. W. Burrige; improprators, the Landowners. The church is an ancient edifice.

Arms.

BRADFORD (St. Peter), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 10 miles (W. by S.) from Leeds, 34 (S. W.) from York, and 196 (N. N. W.) from London; comprising the townships of Allerton, North Bierley, Bowling, Bradford, Clayton, Eccleshill, Heaton, Manningham, Shipley, and Wilsden, and the chapelries of Haworth, Horton, and Thornton; and containing 105,257 inhabitants, of whom 34,560 are in the town. This place during the heptarchy formed part of the extensive parish of Dewsbury, from which it appears to have been separated soon after the Conquest. The manor, which in the Domesday survey is described as a barren waste, was given to Ilbert de Lacy, who attended the Conqueror from Normandy, and fought under his standard at the battle of Hastings; Ilbert had also 150 manors in the county, which he formed into a seigniory, called the Honour of Pontefract; and in the same family was vested likewise the barony of Clitheroe, in the shire of Lancaster. The frequent intercourse between the proprietors of these extensive estates, which were separated by a wide tract of dreary, rugged, and uninhabited country, rendered some intermediate station requisite either for refreshment or security, in a journey of such difficulty and danger, at a time when feudatory wars were raging between the various chieftains among whom the lands were divided; and the comparatively fertile and pleasant vale in which the town of Bradford is situated, appears to have been selected for that purpose. There is evidence of a castle existing here in the time of the Lacys, which, as a baronial seat, would naturally assume that character; and the inhabitants in its immediate neighbourhood, whom even the temporary residence of a chieftain and his retinue would attract, are styled burgesses in an inquisition taken after the death of Henry de Lacy, the last Earl of Lincoln. In this inquisition, which is dated 1316, notice also occurs of a fulling-mill, a soke corn-mill, a market on Sunday, and other particulars, from which it would appear that the town, originating in the residence of the Lacy family, had already attained no inconsiderable degree of importance. In the time of Henry III., the town of Bradford paid more tallage to the king than Leeds, though smaller in extent. During the wars between the houses of York and Lancaster, it suffered much from the hostilities of the contending parties; and the inhabitants, though firm adherents of the house of Lancaster, received from Edward IV. exemption from toll, and a grant of two annual fairs of three days each. From this time the town continued to prosper without interruption, and, in the reign of Henry VIII., had become equal to Leeds in extent and population, and far exceeded it in manufacturing importance.

During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., the town was garrisoned for the parliament, whose cause the inhabitants zealously supported; and in 1642, it was attacked by a detachment of the royalist forces from Leeds, that took post at Undercliffe, in the immediate vicinity; but after one or two assaults, in which they were repulsed, the assailants retreated to Leeds, from which a stronger detachment was sent with no better success. Sir Thomas Fairfax soon afterwards took the command of the garrison in person, over whom the Earl of Newcastle, who had fixed his head-quarters at Wakefield, obtained a signal victory at Adwalton Moor; the parliamentarians, after their defeat, retreated to Bradford; and the Earl, who had taken up his head-quarters at Bolling Hall, and brought his artillery to bear on the town, commenced a regular siege. Fairfax, seeing the dangerous position in which he was placed, endeavoured to make his escape by a desperate sally, in which Lady Fairfax, who accompanied him, was made prisoner, but generously sent back with an escort by the earl in his own carriage; the town surrendered, and was garrisoned by the royalists, from whom, after the Earl of Newcastle had marched against the Scots, it was taken by Col. Lambert for the parliamentarians, in whose possession, after one or two attempts to retake it, it ultimately continued. The prosperity of the town received a severe check during this struggle; its trade was so much impeded, that nearly half a century elapsed before it recovered its former importance, and Leeds, which had always been inferior to it as well in population as in extent, now became greatly its superior in both. The woollen manufacture, for which it had, from a very remote period, been celebrated, and for which it is noticed by Leland in the reign of Henry VIII., was at its height in the reign of Charles I.; but after the breaking out of the parliamentary war, the town lost its consequence as the principal seat of that manufacture, and languished till the middle of the last century, when it began to revive; and on the subsequent introduction of the worsted manufacture, it fully recovered its previous importance, and has since that time been rapidly advancing in prosperity.

The town is pleasantly situated at the junction of three fertile valleys, and is supposed to have derived its name from a ford over one of the tributary streams, which, rising in the western hills, flows through it into the river Aire; it is built partly in the bottom, but principally on the acclivities, of the valley, at various elevations; and though some of the streets in the more ancient part are narrow and irregularly formed, most of those of more modern date are spacious and handsome. The houses are chiefly of stone, roofed with slate, and many of them are large and substantially built; and in the suburbs are numerous excellent houses and pleasant villas, inhabited by the merchants and the proprietors of the various factories in Bradford and its vicinity. The streets are well paved, and lighted with gas from works erected at an expense of £15,000, by a proprietary of 600 £25 shareholders, under an act obtained in the 3rd of George IV., subject in its provisions to an act of the 43rd of George III., for paving, lighting, watching, and improving the town and neighbourhood. The inhabitants were until lately very inadequately supplied with water from works established by a company, incorporated by act of parliament in 1790; the water was conveyed by pipes from a spring at Brown Royd Hill into a reservoir at Westgate, capable of holding only 15,000 gallons; some of the larger houses, which were not supplied from this source, had wells attached to them, and the remainder were supplied by water-carriers from wells belonging to various proprietors, most of which were sunk to a depth of more than 100 yards. Great efforts have, however, been made, for some years, to obtain a more ample supply from Manywells, a copious spring of pure water, about eight miles from the town, for which purpose a company of shareholders recently subscribed a capital of £45,000, for whose incorporation an act was passed in 1842, and the inhabitants now enjoy a tolerable supply of excellent water. The air, though sharp, is healthy; and the environs abound with pleasing and picturesque scenery. A subscription library, containing a well assorted collection of nearly 8000 volumes, supported by 140 shareholders and annual subscribers of a guinea each; and a public newsroom, supported by 200 subscribers, were opened in 1828, in the Exchange Buildings, a handsome structure of freestone in the Grecian style, erected at an expense of £7000, by a proprietary of £25 shareholders. It comprises various apartments, of which those on the ground-floor are appropriated to the library and newsroom, and on the first-floor is a spacious and elegant assembly-room for concerts, balls, exhibitions, and public meetings: the late Miss Jowett bequeathed £1000 towards liquidating the outstanding claims for the erection of the edifice. A mechanics' institution was formed in 1825, but after a short time discontinued; and in 1832, another was established, for which an appropriate building was erected, in 1839, at an expense of £3300; and it is situated at the junction of Well-street with the new road to Leeds, and contains a theatre for the delivery of lectures, a library of 3000 volumes, and a museum, in which is a good collection of specimens in natural history, antiquities, various models, and machinery: an exhibition, including also a good collection of paintings, was opened to the public for fifteen weeks in 1840, and the receipts for admission amounted to £2345. Two newspapers, the Chronicle and the Courier, were published in the town in 1825; the former was discontinued in 1826, and the latter in 1828: in 1834, the Observer was begun, and is still in circulation; and in 1842, the Herald was established, of which the first number was published in January, but which was discontinued at the close of the year.

The staple TRADE is the worsted manufacture; the woollen manufacture is also carried on to a considerable extent in several parts of the parish, and that of cotton on a smaller scale. For the spinning of worsted-yarn, and the weaving of worsted goods, there are not less than 112 large mills in the parish, of which 38 are situated in the town; in these are 88 steam-engines of the aggregate power of 2059 horses, and 20 water-wheels of 87 horse power; and the number of persons engaged is 10,896. In the woollen manufacture are six extensive mills, chiefly in the adjoining townships, the machinery of which is propelled by 5 steam-engines of 150 horse power, and one water-wheel of 12 horse power, and the number of persons employed is 681; and in the cotton manufacture are two mills, worked by a steam-engine of 14 horse power, and 3 water-wheels of 22 horse power, affording occupation to 98 persons; a very considerable number of persons are also engaged in hand-loom weaving. The Piece Hall, in Kirkgate, was erected by the merchants and manufacturers, in 1773, for the exhibition and sale of worsted stuffs, and is a neat building, 144 feet in length, and 36 in breadth, containing an upper and lower chamber; and though the larger manufacturers display and sell their goods in the spacious warehouses attached to their factories, still, on market days, the hall is crowded with numerous manufacturers from neighbouring places, and by multitudes of dealers who resort to the town as the principal mart of the worsted manufacture; it is open every Thursday from ten till half past eleven in the morning, and from two till three in the afternoon. Much business is transacted on Monday in the woollen trade; and of late years, a considerable trade in English and foreign wool has sprung up, large quantities of which are transmitted hence to the various parts of the clothing district. The quantity of wool consumed in the manufactures of the parish in the year 1840, was 17,135,704 pounds; nearly equal to the aggregate quantities of Keighley, Bingley, Halifax, and Wakefield. A chamber of commerce, consisting of the principal wool-staplers, spinners, manufacturers, and merchants, was established in 1837. The Bradford Canal, which communicates with the Leeds and Liverpool canal at Shipley, affords facility of conveyance for the manufactures of the town, and also for the rich mineral produce of the surrounding district, which abounds with coal, limestone, and freestone of excellent quality; it is three miles in length, and has a fall of 87 feet in its whole extent, with 12 locks, and was opened in 1774. The market, which is amply supplied with corn, cattle, and provisions of all kinds, is on Thursday; and fairs for horses, cattle, sheep, and various articles of merchandize, are held on March 3rd, June 17th, and Dec. 9th; the last two continuing for three days each. The new market-place, built by the lord of the manor in 1824, comprises a spacious area, round which are ranged shops for butchers, poulterers, green-grocers, and dealers in other necessaries; and above, on three sides of the area, are ranges of stalls and shops for the sale of fancy articles: the market for cattle is held in an inclosed area in Duke-street, but swine, of which great numbers are brought to the town, are exposed for sale in the streets. By the act of the 2nd and 3rd of William IV., the town was invested with the elective franchise, and constituted a BOROUGH, with the privilege of returning two members to parliament; the right of election is vested in the resident £10 householders, and the returning officer is appointed by the sheriff of the county; the borough comprises the townships of Bradford, Manningham, Bowling, and Horton. The town is within the jurisdiction of the magistrates for the West riding, and two constables are appointed annually at a vestry meeting held in the parish church; a court of requests in Darley-street is held under an act of the 33rd of George III. for the recovery of debts not exceeding forty shillings; and a court for the recovery of debts not exceeding £15, within the honour of Pontefract, is held every third Wednesday. The adjourned Midsummer quarter-sessions for the West riding are held here. The court-house is a handsome building of freestone, in the Grecian style; in front is a rustic basement projecting boldly from the centre, above which is a handsome portico of four Ionic columns, supporting an entablature and cornice surmounted with a triangular pediment. The watch-house, with a depôt for fire-engines, was built in 1837, at a cost of £1400.

The PARISH comprises by computation 33,323 acres, of which 1198 are in the township of Bradford; a very considerable portion is hilly moor, affording but indifferent pasture; and the land under cultivation being divided into small farms, occupied chiefly by persons who are also employed in the domestic woollen and stuff manufactures, or in the factories, the system of agriculture pursued is susceptible of much improvement. The soil near the town, and generally in the lower parts of the parish, is a rich loam on a substratum of clay, and the lands in the bottoms of the valleys produce abundant crops. The substratum is rich in mineral produce, abounding with coal, iron-stone, freestone, and mill-stone grit, all of which are extensively wrought; of the last the town is mostly built; it is raised in large blocks, and, together with great quantities of flag-stone, is sent to London, and some of the principal towns in the kingdom. The mill-stone grit is abruptly cut off to the east and south of the town by the coal-measures, which form the northern boundary of the large Yorkshire coal-field; and in these strata are found the rich iron-ores which are so extensively used in the Low Moor, Bowling, and Bierley iron-works. The coal is of two kinds, distinguished as the black bed and the better bed; the former found at various distances from the surface with a roof of argillaceous iron-stone, and the latter about forty yards below the former, varying in thickness, and extending to the magnesian limestone formation in the south. To these valuable mines and quarries, and to the numerous rivulets that intersect the parish, may be in a great degree attributed the importance of the town, as the principal seat of a wide and prosperous manufacturing district.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £20; net income, £437, with a good house; patrons, the Trustees of the late Rev. C. Simeon. An afternoon lectureship was founded, in the seventeenth century, by Peter Sunderland, Esq., who also presented part of the communion-plate. The parish church is a spacious and venerable structure, in the perpendicular style, with a massive square embattled tower, strengthened by double buttresses at the angles, and crowned with angular and central pinnacles, rising from a perforated parapet; the western entrance is through a handsome arch, above which is a large window, in the later English style; the south porch is modern; the walls of the aisles are strengthened with buttresses of several stages, and those of the nave are embattled. The nave is separated from the aisles by a series of finely clustered columns, and lighted by a range of large clerestory windows; and the east window, which is of modern insertion, is large, enriched with tracery, and embellished with some portions of ancient stained glass. On the north of the chancel is a monument by Flaxman, to Abraham Balme, Esq., with a representation of age instructing youth, in which the figures are beautifully sculptured; within the ancient Bolling chapel, is an elegantly sculptured monument to William Sharp, Esq., and in the chancel is a handsome marble monument, erected by Miss Hartley, to the memory of her deceased parents. The church-yard having become too small for the parish, was enlarged, in 1817, and, in 1833, the church was repaired and new fronted. Christ Church, erected on a site presented by Benjamin Rawson, Esq., and for which the stone was given from his quarries at Baildon, by William Thompson, Esq., of Kirk Hammerton, was completed, in 1815, at an expense of £5400, raised by subscription, towards which a lady unknown contributed £800, through the Rev. Dr. Gaskin, of London; it is in the later English style, with a square tower, and was enlarged in 1826 by the assistance of the Incorporated Society, and in 1836 new roofed, and repaired at an expense of £1000, towards which the Society granted £50; it contains 1354 sittings, of which 600 are rented, and the remainder free; the communion-plate was presented by the late John Jarratt, Esq. The incumbency is a perpetual curacy; net income, £160; patron, the Vicar of Bradford. The churches dedicated to St. James and St. John are described under the article Horton, in which township they are situated, as also a church in the township of Manningham. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Primitive Methodists, Wesleyans, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics; the gateway of the Unitarian meeting-house is an ancient massive piece of masonry, removed from Howley Hall after its demolition. The Free Grammar School, which is of very early date, was refounded and richly endowed by Edward VI.; and by charter of Charles II., in 1662, was placed under the direction of thirteen governors, of whom the vicar of Bradford is one ex officio, and by whom the master, who must have the degree of M.A., either at Oxford or Cambridge, and the usher, are appointed; and by the same charter, the Archbishop of York was made visitor. The school-house was rebuilt by the governors on a more eligible site, under an act of parliament, in 1818, and the present spacious and handsome structure comprises a neat dwelling-house for the master, and a library for the use of the scholars; the endowment exceeds £500 per annum, and the number of scholars on the foundation is by the statutes limited to fifty; the scholars are eligible to exhibitions founded in Queen's College, Oxford, by Lady Elizabeth Hastings. A school, in which 200 boys are taught by a master, who has a salary of £70, with a house, and a supply of coal; and another, in which are seventy girls, are maintained by subscription. A national school, in which are 300 boys, was established in 1831, and a school of industry, in which are sixty girls, in 1833; they are both supported by subscription, and have lending libraries attached to them. There is also an infants' school, in which are 170 children.

At Undercliffe, about a mile to the north-east of the town, is the Airedale Independent College, originally founded at Heckmondwike, in the parish of Birstal, in 1756, and in 1783 removed to North Oram, in the parish of Halifax; the institution was refounded in 1800, in the township of Idle, for the education of young men intended for the ministry of the Independent denomination, and continued to be carried on there, under the superintendence of the Rev. William Vint, till 1834, when it was ultimately established in its present situation a short time previously to that gentleman's decease. The college was endowed in 1803 with £5000 three per cent.

consols, by Edward Hanson, Esq., who for the three years preceding had paid for the maintenance and instruction of two students; the endowment was subsequently augmented by Mrs. Bacon, of Bradford, with estates at Fagley and Undercliffe, and with £1500 in money, towards the erection of the present building; and the annual income, from the endowment, including donations and subscriptions, is now about £850. The course of study pursued in the college, which has been recently incorporated with the London University, comprises the Hebrew, Syriac, Greek, Latin, French, and German languages; the mathematics, natural and moral philosophy, the belles lettres, divinity, ecclesiastical history, and the various subjects connected with the leading object of the institution. The buildings, erected after a design by Mr. Clarke, architect, of Leeds, form a handsome edifice of freestone, with a stately portico, and occupy a considerable eminence; they afford accommodation for twenty students, each of whom has a private study and separate bed-room, and contain a library, lecture-room, and dining-room, with apartments for the tutors, one of whom is always resident, and every requisite arrangement for the purposes of the college. The present tutors are the Rev. Walter Scott and the Rev. W. B. Clulow: connected with the college is the Independent place of worship in High-street, erected under the superintendance of Mr. Pritchett, architect of York, and containing 700 sittings. At Horton is a Baptist College, founded in 1804, which is described in the article Horton (which see). The Dispensary, a large and handsome building, in Darley-street, erected in 1827, at an expense of £3500, and supported by subscription, afforded, in 1840, relief to 1666 out-patients, of whom 878 were visited at their own homes, and to 92 in-patients, who were admitted in that year; the institution is gratuitously attended by three medical officers, and three dispensing apothecaries. The Infirmary, in Westgate, erected in 1842, at a cost of £5000, contains wards for 60 patients, and is gratuitously attended by two physicians, two surgeons, and two apothecaries. The lying-in charity was founded, in 1798, by the late Mrs. Rich; and the Benevolent, or Strangers' Friend, Society, in 1813; both are supported by subscription, and administer extensive relief. A vagrant office has been opened at the courthouse, which distributes about £50 per annum, in providing lodging and food for such destitute travellers as are not deemed incorrigible vagrants. There are various bequests for distribution among the poor, of which one of £400, by Miss Mary Jowett, has been invested in the purchase of £500 four per cent. annuities. The union of Bradford comprehends the whole of the parish, except the township of Haworth, and eight townships in the parishes of Birstal and Calverley, including in the whole twenty-two townships, and containing a population of 132,164. The learned and eloquent John Sharp, Archbishop of York, in the reign of William III., was a native of the place.

BRADFORD-ABBAS (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of DORSET, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Sherborne; containing 652 inhabitants. It comprises 1139*a*. 1*r*. 30*p*., of which 774 acres are arable, 336 pasture, and 29 woodland; the soil is partly of a sandy and partly of a stony nature; the surface is hilly, and where flat subject to inundation; the river Ivel passes through the district. The living is a vicarage, with which the rectory of Clifton-Mabank was united in 1824, valued in the king's books at £7. 17. 11., and in the gift of the Warden and Fellows of Winchester College, who exchanged the living of Milbourne Port for this, in 1824. The Marquess of Anglesey has commuted his share of the great tithes for a rent-charge of £193. 17. 11.; the Warden and Fellows also receive £45 per annum out of the same, and the vicarial tithes of the parish have been commuted for £156; the glebe belonging to the impropriator comprises nearly nine acres, and to the vicar nearly 9½. The church is an elegant structure in the later English style, with a lofty square embattled tower of graceful elevation. The Rev. William Preston, in 1738, gave an estate, now worth £24 per annum; and in 1781, Mark West and William Read gave property producing £12. 5. per annum; for which sums children are educated on the national system.

BRADFORD, GREAT (HOLY TRINITY), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of BRADFORD, N. and Westbury divisions, and Trowbridge and Bradford subdivisions, of WILTS, 8 miles (S. E.) from Bath, 31½ (N. W.) from Salisbury, and 102 (W. by S.) from London; comprising 11,272 acres, and including the chapelries of Atworth, Holt, Limpley-Stoke, Winsley, and South Wraxall, and the tythings of Leigh with Woolley, and Trowle; the whole containing 10,563 inhabitants, of whom 3836 are in the town. This place, from a ford over the river Avon, was called by the Saxons Bradenford, of which its present name is a contraction. During the heptarchy, a battle took place here, between Cenwalh, king of the West Saxons, and a formidable party of his own subjects, who had rebelled against him, under the command of his kinsman Cuthred, when the latter was defeated with great slaughter. In 706, Aldhelm, bishop of Sherborne, founded an abbey at the place, which he dedicated to St. Lawrence, and which, after its destruction by the Danes, was rebuilt and converted into a nunnery by Ethelred, who annexed it to a larger establishment of the same kind at Shaftesbury, in 1001. The town is beautifully situated on the acclivity of a steep hill, forming part of a line of eminences on the northern side of the river Avon, over which are an ancient bridge of four, and a modern bridge of nine, arches, both affording agreeable prospects. The view of the town, which consists of three regular streets ranged above each other at different elevations on the side of the hill, is strikingly picturesque; the houses, built of stone, are in general handsome, and many of them elegant; and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from springs. Various designs have been carried into effect for the improvement of the town; and in 1839 an act was passed for paving, lighting, watching, and improving it; some of the streets have been widened, and considerable alterations made for the furtherance of business. A book society and a newsroom have been recently established, and are well supported. The principal branch of manufacture is that of woollen-cloth, which is said by Leland to have flourished in the reign of Henry VIII., particularly that composed of the finer kind of Spanish and Saxony wool, for the dyeing of which the water of the river is highly favourable. There are numerous factories, affording employment to many men, women, and children, in the town and neighbourhood. Ladies' cloth, kerseymere, and fancy pieces; are also manufactured to a considerable extent. The Kennet and Avon canal, which provides an increased facility of conveyance to various parts of the kingdom, passes close to the town, and a commodious wharf has been constructed on its bank. The Great Western railway company, also, were authorized, by their act, to construct a branch from the main line to Bradford. The market is on Saturday; the fairs are on Trinity-Monday, and the day after St. Bartholomew's day; the latter held at Bradford-Leigh, a hamlet in the parish.

Bradford sent members to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I., but since that time it has made no return. The petty-sessions are held here alternately with Trowbridge; and a court of requests, for the recovery of debts under £5, the jurisdiction of which extends over the hundreds of Bradford, Melksham, and Whorwels-down, is held, under an act passed in the 47th of George III., every third Tuesday, alternately with Trowbridge and Melksham. A small oratory, on the south-western side of the bridge, formerly belonging to the monastery of St. Lawrence, has been converted into a place of confinement for offenders, previously to their committal to the county gaol. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, with Westwood annexed, valued in the king's books at £10. 1. 3.; net income, £596; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The church, a spacious handsome structure, suffered greatly from fire in 1742, and has undergone extensive repair; the windows contain some modern stained glass, the altar is embellished with a good painting of the Last Supper, and there are several stately monuments of marble. A district church, dedicated to Christ, has been recently erected, of which the incumbent has a net income of £150; and there are chapels of ease at Atworth, Holt, Limpley-Stoke, Winsley, and South Wraxall, in the parish. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, the Society of Friends, the Connexion of the Countess of Huntingdon, Wesleyans, and Unitarians. A free school is endowed with an estate at Holt, purchased with £240 given by Mr. Francis Smith, and with the dividends on £240 three per cents., given, in 1805, by Mr. John Shawbridge, who also bequeathed £400 in the same stock, directing the interest to be distributed among the poor: the endowment for the school amounts to £40 per annum, for which thirty-two boys are educated. Another school has an endowment of £10 a year. There are also two almshouses, one founded by Mr. John Hall, for aged men, the other for aged women; they are supposed to have been an appendage to the monastery, of which, and also of other religious establishments formerly existing there are still some slight remains. The poor law union of Bradford comprises eight parishes or places, of which seven are in Wilts, and one in Somerset, and contains a population of 13,379. Many curious fossils have been found in the quarries adjoining the town.

BRADFORD-PEVERELL (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of DORCHESTER, hundred of GEORGE, Dorchester division of DORSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Dorchester; containing, with the hamlet of Muckleford, 355 inhabitants. The parish, which comprises by measurement 2180 acres, is situated on the river Frome, and bounded on the north by the main road from Dorchester to Yeovil, and on the south by the road to Bridport. There is an old Roman way in a straight line from the village to Dorchester; and several tumuli are in the vicinity, some of which, on being opened, were found to contain urns, burnt bones, coins, and various other relics of the Romans. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 2. 11.; net income, £229; patrons, Warden and Fellows of Winchester College: corn-rents were assigned in lieu of tithes in 1798, and there are about 50 acres of glebe, with an excellent house. The church is a plain edifice; a good arch separates the chancel; and on stained glass in one of the windows is the coat of arms of William of Wykeham.

BRADFORD-WEST, a township, in the parish of MITTON, union of CLITHEROE, W. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 2 miles (N.) from Clitheroe; containing 366 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 1700 acres, chiefly in pasture; it is intersected by the road from Grindleton to Waddington, and the river Ribble passes on the south-east, at a very short distance from the village.

BRADING (St. Mary), a market-town and parish, in the liberty of EAST MEDINA, Isle of Wight incorporation and division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (S.) from Ryde, and 95 (S. W.) from London; containing 2701 inhabitants. The parish comprises 9555 acres, of which 8156 are arable, pasture, cottages, and gardens; the remainder being the cliff, the harbour of Brading, and roads and waste. The town, formerly of considerable importance, as appears from its being styled "the King's town of Brading" in the legend of its common seal, is situated to the south of the harbour, by which it may be approached by vessels of small burthen. Repeated attempts have been made to exclude the sea by an embankment, the last of which was by Sir Hugh Myddelton, the projector of the New River, who had effected this, when, during a wet season, the works, which had been raised at an expense of £7000, were completely destroyed by a spring tide. In the parish is Sandown fort, a regular quadrangular fortification, flanked by four bastions, and encompassed by a ditch; it was constructed, in the reign of Henry VIII., on a level with the beach, and, having been greatly neglected after the rise of the English navy, was repaired during the late war, and is now the most considerable fortress in the island. The town consists principally of one long street, the houses in which are irregularly built; the inhabitants are plentifully supplied with water from public wells. The market, which is amply supplied with corn, is on Monday; and fairs are held on the 12th of May and 2nd of October. The government, by charter of incorporation, granted prior to the reign of Edward VI., is vested in a senior and junior bailiff, two justices,

(who are the bailiffs of the preceding year,) two constables, a steward, and other officers; the bailiffs are appointed at the court leet of the town. The town-hall, now used as a schoolroom, is a very small building; the lower part of which contains a prison, and is also used for the market. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £20, and in the gift of Trinity College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1645, of which £1285 are payable to the college, £330 to the incumbent, and £30 to an impropiator; the glebe attached to the living consists of $3\frac{1}{2}$ acres, and that belonging to the college of $16\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church, one of the most ancient in the kingdom, is said to have been built, in 704, by Wilfred, Bishop of Chichester, who here baptized his first converts to Christianity; it is a spacious structure, with a tower, and some probable remains of Saxon architecture are preserved in the nave, though it has undergone many alterations in other parts. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national, and a day and Sunday, school are supported by subscription.—See BEMBRIDGE.

BRADLE, a tything, in the parish of CHURCH-KNOWLE, union of WAREHAM and PURBECK, hundred of HASILOR, Wareham division of the county of DORSET; containing 97 inhabitants.

BRADLEY, a tything, in the parish of CUMNER, union of ABINGDON, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Abingdon; containing 7 inhabitants.

BRADLEY, a township, in the parish of MALPAS, union of WREXHAM, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 2 miles (S. E. by E.) from Malpas; containing 99 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £72.

BRADLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the hundred of APPLETREE, union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, S. division of the county of DERBY, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Ashbourn; containing 271 inhabitants. It comprises 2374a. 3r. 23p., of which the soil is, in a nearly equal proportion, strong and light. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 19. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £262, and the glebe comprises 55 acres. The church is a small ancient structure. There is a chalybeate spring, but it is not much used.

BRADLEY, a tything, in the parish and union of CREDITON, hundred of WEST BUDLEIGH, Crediton and N. divisions of DEVON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Crediton.

BRADLEY, with SINWELL, a tything, in the parish of WOTTON-UNDER-EDGE, union of DURSLEY, Upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Wotton; containing 2504 inhabitants.

BRADLEY, a hamlet, in the chapelry of HOLT, parish of MEDBOURNE, union of UPPINGHAM, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Rockingham. A small priory of Augustine canons was founded here, in the reign of John, by Robert Bundy, or Burneby, the revenue of which, at the time of the suppression, was £20. 15. 7.

BRADLEY (ST. GEORGE), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, wapentake of BRADLEY HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (S. W.) from Great Grimsby; containing 106 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 10. 10., and in the patronage of Sir John Nelthorpe, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £245, and there are nearly 7 acres of glebe.

BRADLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BASINGSTOKE, situated in a detached portion of the hundred of OVERTON, Basingstoke and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Basingstoke; containing 125 inhabitants. It comprises about 1100 acres, of which 850 are arable, 23 meadow, and 220 woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 13. 4., and in the patronage of C. E. Rumbold, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £185, and there are 21 acres of glebe. The church is a small plain edifice, with 80 sittings, of which 20 are free.

BRADLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of FLADBURY, union of DROITWICH, Middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Droitwich and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Droitwich; containing, with the hamlet of Stock, 251 inhabitants, of whom 160 are in Bradley.

BRADLEY, BOTH, a township, in the parish of KILDWICK, union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWGROSS, W. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Skipton; containing 557 inhabitants. This township, which consists of the two hamlets of Upper and Lower Bradley, comprises by computation 1630 acres, the property of the Earl of Burlington; the soil is fertile, and stone is quarried. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £66. 15. 7., of which £43. 15. 7. are payable to the Dean and Chapter of Christ-Church, Oxford, and £23 to the vicar of the parish. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans, and a burial-place belonging to the Society of Friends.

BRADLEY-FIELD, a hamlet, in the chapelry of UNDERBARROW, parish, union, and ward of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (W.) from Kendal.

BRADLEY, GREAT (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of RISBRIDGE, W. division of SUFFOLK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Haverhill; containing 544 inhabitants; and comprising by computation 2306 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 1. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Trustees of the Rev. W. S. Parr Wilder, the present incumbent: the tithes produce £650 per annum, and the glebe comprises about 50 acres. The church is an ancient structure.

BRADLEY-IN-THE-MOORS (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the W. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, union, and S. division of the county, of STAFFORD, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Penkridge; containing, with the liberties of Billington and Woollaston, part of Alstone, Brough, and Rule (the three last having been heretofore deemed extra-parochial), and part of Apeton, 649 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement nearly 6000 acres of fertile land, and is situated near the Liverpool and Birmingham railway, and the Grand Trunk canal. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £75; patron and impropiator, Lord Stafford. The church is a neat and substantial structure. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The free grammar school is of early and obscure foundation; the endowment arises from land producing about £130 per annum.

BRADLEY-IN-THE-MOORS (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CHEADLE, S. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Cheadle; containing 72 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £58; patron and impropiator, Earl of Shrewsbury. The impropriate rectory is valued in the king's books at £17. 11. 8.

BRADLEY, LITTLE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of RISBRIDGE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (N. by E.) from Haverhill; containing 33 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 976 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 0. 10., and in the patronage of W. and C. Lamprell, Esqrs.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £250. The church, though small, is of very considerable antiquity, with a round tower; in it lies buried John Day, the celebrated printer, and it contains also some ancient and curious monuments.

BRADLEY, MAIDEN (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MERE, partly in the hundred of NORTON-FERRIS, E. division of the county of SOMERSET, but chiefly in the hundred of MERE, Warminster and S. divisions of WILTS, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Mere; containing, with the tything of Yarnfield, 700 inhabitants. The parish is the property of the Duke of Somerset, who has a seat here, and comprises 4208 acres, of which 1400 are arable, 1860 pasture, 506 down, and 362 wood; the soil is various, and for the most part good rich land. The district abounds with romantic and interesting scenery; there are two singular knolls of chalk, separated from each other by the turnpike-road leading to Wincanton. Fairs, formerly of importance, are held on April 25th and September 21st. About three-quarters of a mile to the north-east of the village, and now forming part of the buildings of a farm called Priory farm, are the remains of an hospital, founded by Manasser Biset, about the close of the reign of Stephen, or the beginning of that of Henry II., and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, for leprous women, under the care of some secular brethren (who were afterwards changed by Herbert, Bishop of Sarum, into a prior and canons of the Augustine order), and of which, at the Dissolution, the revenue was £197. 18. 8. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £111; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. The church contains a monument, finely executed, to the memory of Sir Edward Seymour, Bart., of political celebrity in the reigns of Charles II., William and Mary, and Anne. A school is supported by subscription.

BRADLEY, NORTH (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of WESTBURY and WHORWELSDOWN, hundred of WHORWELSDOWN, Whorwelsdown and N. divisions of WILTS, 2 miles (S.) from Trowbridge; containing, with the tything of Southwick, 2427 inhabitants, of whom 1043 are in North Bradley tything. The parish is bounded on the west by the river Frome, and comprises by measurement 3978 acres, of which 2764 are pasture, 927 arable, and 287 woodland; the soil is for the most part a strong clay, and the surface hilly, except to the north, where a small portion is level. Bradley stream enters from the south, and, pursuing a northern course, empties itself into the Trow. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11; net income, £398; patrons and impropiators, Warden and Fellows of Winchester College. In the tything of Southwick, at the extremity of the parish, an additional church, called Christ Church, was erected under the auspices of the late Dr. Daubeney, Archdeacon of Sarum, and incumbent of the parish, at an expense of more than £10,000, of which £3000 were contributed by himself; it is an elegant structure, in the later English style, and forms a beautiful and deeply interesting feature in the landscape; it contains 700 sittings, of which 350 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy, of the net value of £159, and in the patronage of the vicar of North Bradley: in an extensive garden and shrubbery, adjoining the churchyard, is the minister's house, an elegant building. At a short distance from the parish church is a neat edifice of Bath freestone, erected and endowed, in 1808, as an asylum, by the Archdeacon, for the reception of aged persons of respectable character, reduced to poverty; and attached to the asylum is a school. The endowment consists of property invested in the funds, producing about £120 per annum. A building, called the Vicar's poor-house, was erected by the same munificent benefactor, for the reception of twelve poor persons. There is one place of worship for Wesleyans, and two for Particular Baptists.

BRADLEY, WEST, a parish, in the union of WELLS, hundred of GLASTON-TWELVE-HIDES, E. division of SOMERSET, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Glastonbury; containing 116 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the vicarage of East Pennard: the appropriate tithes, payable to the Bishop of Bath and Wells, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £30, and those belonging to the incumbent for one of £50; there is a glebe of $12\frac{1}{2}$ acres.

BRADMORE, a parish, in the union of BASFORD, N. division of the wapentake of RUSHCLIFFE, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Nottingham; containing, with the hamlet of Parbrook, 416 inhabitants. The parish is on the Nottingham and London road, through Loughborough, and comprises by computation 1560 acres. The living is a vicarage, annexed to that of Bunny: the church, with the exception of the steeple, was destroyed by fire, and has not since been rebuilt.

BRADNINCH (St. DISEN), a parish (formerly a borough and market-town), having separate jurisdiction, in the union of TIVERTON, locally in the hundred of HAYRIDGE, N. division of DEVON, 8 miles (N. E.) from Exeter, and 170 (W.) from London; containing 1714 inhabitants. This place, anciently called Braineis, was of some importance in the time of the Saxons: in the reign of John it received many privileges, which were increased by Henry III., and in the reign of Edward III. it was annexed to the duchy of Cornwall. In this and in the preceding reign it sent representatives to parliament, from which, on account of its poverty, it was excused in the time of Henry VII.

on the payment of a fine of five marks. During the civil war the town suffered considerably, from its proximity to Exeter, and was alternately in the possession of the royalists and the parliamentarians; and in the year 1665 it was almost destroyed by fire. The parish comprises 4351*a.* 27*p.*, of which 4184 acres are arable, meadow, pasture, and orchard. The town is pleasantly situated on an eminence, environed by hills on all sides except the south and south-west, and consists principally of neatly thatched and white-washed cottages. The woollen trade was formerly carried on, but little now remains; the chief branch of manufacture at present is that of paper, for which there are three mills, affording employment to sixty or seventy of the inhabitants. Iron-ore has been found in the neighbourhood, but works have not yet been established. The Bristol and Exeter railway passes by the town. The market has been discontinued; but small fairs are held on May 6th and October 2nd.

The first charter of incorporation was granted by Reginald, Earl of Cornwall, and others were bestowed by King John and James I.; the latter of these, as enlarged in 1667, is the governing charter, under which the corporate body consists of a mayor, twelve masters, and an indefinite number of free burgesses, with a recorder, town-clerk, two serjeants-at-mace, and constables; the mayor, late mayor, and recorder, are justices of the peace for the borough. The corporation holds a court of session quarterly: the mayor's court, for the recovery of debts under 40*s.*, is held monthly; and the petty-sessions are also held monthly, and frequently every Monday. The guildhall is a small building. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £102; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of Windsor, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £584, and who have 120 acres of glebe. The church is an ancient structure, with a tower and other portions of later date; the chancel is separated from the nave by a richly carved oak screen; the whole was repaired in 1842, and with such skill and success that the original character of the venerable structure has been preserved in all its pristine beauty. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Schools are conducted on the national system; and two sums of £50 each have been lately bequeathed to the mayor and burgesses, upon trust, to be distributed in bread to the poor every Christmas. Bradninch gives the title of Baron to the Dukes of Cornwall, who are styled Barons of Braines.

BRADNINCH, a precinct, in the county of the city of EXETER, S. division of DEVON; containing 55 inhabitants.

BRADNOP, a township, in the parish and union of LEEK, N. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (E. S. E.) from Leek; containing 442 inhabitants, many of whom are employed in copper-mines. A house and garden, of the value of about £5 per annum, are attached to a school here.

BRADON, NORTH and SOUTH (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of LANGPORT, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Ilminster; containing 41 inhabitants. The living is a sinecure rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 4. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Wyndham family: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £55, and the vicarial for one of £50. The church is in ruins. Adjoining this parish was one called Gouze Bradon, now depopulated, and the church and other buildings entirely destroyed.

BRADPOLE (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of BRIDPORT, hundred of BEAMINSTER-FORUM and REDHONE, Bridport division of DORSET, 1 mile (N. N. E.) from Bridport; containing 1357 inhabitants. It comprises 998*a.* 2*r.* 16., of which 566 acres are arable, 182 meadow, 100 pasture, and 18 woodland. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 13. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £199. The church is ancient, and appears to be of the era of Henry VII. The inhabitants formerly interred their dead at Bridport, but, by a composition made in 1527, they were allowed to inter in their own churchyard, on paying annually a small acknowledgment to the rector of Bridport.

BRADSHAW, a chapelry, in the parish and union of BOLTON, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3 miles (N. E.) from Bolton-le-Moors; containing 827 inhabitants. Bradshaw Hall was the property and residence of John Bradshaw, who presided at the trial of Charles I. Here are extensive bleaching-grounds. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £136; patron, Vicar of Bolton. A collection of books, given by Mrs. Isherwood, is kept in the chapel. A school has lately been erected.

BRADSHAW, an ecclesiastical district, in the parish and union of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Halifax; containing 3499 inhabitants. This district was formed subsequently to the erection of a church here in 1838; the scenery is strikingly diversified, and from the summit of Soil-hill is a very extensive view, embracing the cathedral and city of York, with the adjacent country for 40 miles around. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the various worsted-mills, in wool-combing and handloom weaving, and in the collieries and quarries within its limits, which are in extensive operation. The church, dedicated to St. John, was erected at an expense of £1200, of which £800 were given by the late Mrs. Elizabeth Wadsworth, and the remainder by the Parliamentary Commissioners; it is a neat structure in the early English style, with a square tower, and contains 350 sittings, of which 125 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Halifax, with a net income of £150; the first incumbent minister is the Rev. Edward Ramsden, M.A., one of the trustees of the late Mrs. Wadsworth. There are places of worship for Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Methodists of the New Connexion. A national school was erected by Mrs. Wadsworth, who endowed it with £20 per annum; and that lady also bequeathed funds for the erection and endowment of six almshouses for aged females; the buildings were completed in 1841, and form a neat range, in the Elizabethan style.

BRADSHAW-EDGE, a township, in the parish and union of CHAPEL-EN-LE-FRITH, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W.) from Chapel-en-le-Frith; containing 1850 inhabitants.

BRADSTONE (St. NUN), a parish, in the union of TAVISTOCK, hundred of LIFTON, Lifton and S. divisions of DEVON, 4 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Launceston; containing 166 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 7. 2., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £210, and there are 50 acres of glebe.

BRADWELL (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Stoney-Stratford; containing 381 inhabitants. It is situated near the Wolverton station of the London and Birmingham railway, and comprises 1671*a. 2r. 27p.*, of which 161 acres are woodland. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the great tithes, valued in the king's books at £5. 11. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £250, and there are six acres of glebe. The sum of £13. 13. is applied annually in relieving the poor, and towards instructing children.

BRADWELL, a township, in the parish of SANDBACH, union of CONGLETON, hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Sandbach; containing 344 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £323. 0. 3., of which £159. 7. 7. are payable to the impropiator, £158. 11. 8. to the vicar of the parish, and £5. 1. to the rector of Brereton.

BRADWELL, a township, in the parish of HOPE, union of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Tideswell; containing 1273 inhabitants, who are chiefly engaged in the lead and calamine works in the vicinity, the manufacture of these articles being carried on to a considerable extent. About the year 1807, a huge natural excavation, called the Crystallized Cavern, was discovered; it is approached by a narrow entrance, leading to a spacious area, the sides of which are lined with crystallizations of singular beauty, and its separate parts are recognised by different names, such as the Grotto of Paradise, the Grotto of Calypso, Music Chamber, &c. There are meeting-houses for Wesleyans and Unitarians. A place called the Castle, near the junction of the Noe and the Bradwell water, is supposed to have been the site of a Roman station, which comprised a square area, measuring 310 feet by 270; several Roman remains have been found.

BRADWELL (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (S. W.) from Great Yarmouth; containing 270 inhabitants. Breydon Water bounds the parish on the north. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £28, and in the patronage of the Rev. George Anguish: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £630. The church contains a monument to the ancient family of Vesey, and an octagonal font on an ascent of two steps.

BRADWELL ABBEY, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Stoney-Stratford; containing 21 inhabitants. A priory of Black monks, dedicated to St. Mary, was founded, about the time of Stephen, by Meinfelin, Baron of Wolverton, originally as a cell to the monastery at Luffield; the revenue, in the 23rd of Henry VIII., was £53. 11. 2.; the site is now occupied by a farmhouse.

BRADWELL-JUXTA-COGGESHALL (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of BRAINTREE, hundred of WITHAM, N. division of ESSEX, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Great Coggeshall; containing 293 inhabitants. It derives its name, originally Broadwell, from a copious spring to the north of the Hall: the river Pant, or Black-water, flows through a small hamlet in the parish, to which it gives its name. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12, and in the gift of M. P. C. Brunwin, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £345, and the glebe consists of 31 acres. The church is a small edifice, with a tower, and contains several ancient and handsome alabaster monuments. A school is supported by subscription.

BRADWELL-NEAR-THE-SEA (St. THOMAS THE APOSTLE), a parish, in the union of MALDON, hundred of DENGIE, S. division of ESSEX, 12 miles (E.) from Maldon; containing 1034 inhabitants. The parish is situated at the mouth of the river Black-water, and is bounded on the east by the North Sea; it comprises 4733*a. 3r. 18p.*, of which 3156 acres are arable, 972 pasture, and 60 wood. Camden places the Saxon city of Æthancestre at or near this place, which he also identifies with the Roman station Othona, where the Numerus Fortensium was posted under a commander styled Count of the Saxon shore, at the decline of the Roman empire in Britain. A fair is held on the 24th of June. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £48, and in the gift of the Rev. T. Schreiber: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1300, and there are nearly 254 acres of glebe, with a house, built by Sir H. Bate Dudley, between 1781 and 1786. The church, rebuilt in 1706, is a handsome edifice, with a stone tower surmounted by a lofty spire, and is situated on elevated ground commanding fine prospects. An ancient chapel, called Capella-de-la-Val, of uncertain foundation, has long been in ruins. There is an endowed school in the parish.

BRADWOOD-WIDGER, a parish, in the union of HOLSWORTHY, hundred of LIFTON, Lifton and S. divisions of DEVON, 6 miles (N. E.) from Launceston; containing 923 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 5000 acres, the soil of which is chiefly clay, and the surface hilly; it is bounded by the river Bradwood on the south and north, and the river Carey on the west. The place belonged to the Priory of Frithelstock, and, on the dissolution of monasteries, was conferred by Henry VIII. on the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. A fair is held on the Tuesday next after Midsummer-day. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of German's-Week annexed, valued in the king's books at £8. 3. 4.; net income, £148; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter. About 70 acres of glebe are attached to the curacy. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BRADWORTHY (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BIDEFORD, hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, Holsworthy and N. divisions of DEVON, 7 miles (N. by W.) from Holsworthy; containing 1081 inhabitants. The reservoir of the Bude canal, occupying an extent of 75 acres, is chiefly in the parish. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Pancrassweek annexed, valued in the king's books at £25. 5. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £243; impropiators, Mrs. E. Langdon and

Rev. R. Kingdon. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BRAFFERTON, a township, in the parish of AYCLIFFE, union of DARLINGTON, S. E. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Darlington; containing 211 inhabitants. The township, which is situated on the line of the Great North of England railway, contains 2312 acres, and comprises the ancient manor of Ketton, which was granted by Bishop Carilepho to the convent of Durham, and is now the property of the Rev. Sir Charles Hardinge, Bart. While Ketton was in the occupation of the late Charles Colling, who died in 1830, it was celebrated for its fine breed of short-horned cattle. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £220. 16. 8., of which £144. 10. are payable to the vicar, £73 to the Dean and Chapter of Durham, and £3. 6. 8. to the prebendary of the eighth canon of Durham cathedral. A church school was built here in 1823, and is supported by subscription.

BRAFFERTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of EASINGWOULD, wapentakes of HALLIKELD and BULMER, N. riding of YORK; containing 873 inhabitants, of whom 179 are in the township of Brafferton, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Boroughbridge. The parish includes the townships of Helperby and Thornton-Bridge, and comprises 4565 acres: the village adjoins Helperby on the east side of the river Swale. The Great Northern railway intersects Pill-Moor. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 15. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £307; appropriator, the Archbishop of York. The church was rebuilt in 1832, at the expense of £1300, raised by subscription. A school is conducted on Dr. Bell's plan; and the poor have, with other smaller charities, the rent of ten acres of land, now producing £16 a year. Brafferton Spring, north-east of the village, is a noted fox-cover.

BRAFIELD-ON-THE-GREEN (St. LAWRENCE) a parish, in the union of HARDINGSTONE, hundred of WYMMERSLEY, S. division of NORTHAMPTONSHIRE, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Northampton; containing 428 inhabitants. The parish consists of 1273 acres, generally of a fertile and productive soil. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to that of Little Houghton, and valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$.

BRAILES (St. GEORGE), a parish, in the union of SHIPSTON-UPON-STOUR, Brailes division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Shipston; containing, with the hamlets of Chelmscott and Winderton, 1284 inhabitants. Prior to the Conquest, this lordship was in the possession of Edwin, Earl of Mercia; and subsequently, including the hamlets of Chelmscott and Winderton, it yielded to the Conqueror "no less than £55 yearly, with 20 horse loads of salt." Henry III., in 1248, granted a charter for a market to be held here on Monday, which has been long discontinued; also a fair, on the eve of the festival of St. George and the two following days, now inconsiderable. In the 13th of Edward I., William de Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, then owner of the manor, claimed by prescription, and was allowed certain privileges; viz., a gallows, with assize of bread and beer. The parish contains 5407 acres of land, of which about 2000 are arable and 3000 pasture; the village is situated on the turnpike-road to Banbury, and is of considerable extent. There is a manufactory for livery shag, plush, &c., in which nearly 100 persons are employed. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £25; net income, £344; patron, Samuel Thornton, Esq.; impropiator, George Bishopp, Esq., M.D. Under an inclosure act passed in 1784, land and annual money payments were assigned, in lieu of all tithes and moduses, for Lower Brailes. The church was probably erected in the time of the Conqueror, and was given, in the reign of his son, Henry I., to the canons of Kenilworth; it is a large and handsome edifice, combining the early, decorated, and later English styles, with a lofty tower supported by tall buttresses, and crowned with battlements and pinnacles, containing six bells; the interior was modernised in 1824. A guild, consisting of a warden, brethren, and sisters, was founded in the church by Richard Nevill, Earl of Warwick; the revenue, in the 37th of Henry VIII., was £18. 13. 2., out of which a grammar school was then supported. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends and Roman Catholics. A free school, probably founded about the end of the reign of Henry VIII., is endowed with an improved income of £70. There are also a school for girls, and one for infants, besides a school for Roman Catholic children; and several bequests have been made for the benefit of the poor, of which the principal is one by William Prestidge in 1732, now producing £36 per annum. There was anciently a chapel at Chelmscott, in which a chantry for four priests was founded by Thomas de Pakinton, of Brailes, in 1322. In Upper Brailes, at the distance of $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile from the church, is a chalybeate spring, the water of which has been used with considerable advantage in cases of scrofula.

BRAILSFORD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, 7 miles (N. W. by W.) from Derby; containing, with the township of Ednaston, 756 inhabitants, of whom 539 are in that portion exclusive of the township. The parish comprises 4296a. 33p., and is situated on the great road between London and Manchester. It formerly belonged to the family of Brailsford, from whom it passed by marriage to the Bassetts, and from them in the same way to the Shirley family. The living is a rectory, with that of Osmaston annexed, valued in the king's books at £9. 19. 2., and in the gift of the Rev. W. A. Shirley: the tithes have been commuted for a gross rent-charge of £500, and the glebe comprises about 72 acres, with a residence. The church, which stands on an eminence, is a handsome edifice, with an elegant tower; some portions are of the Norman style, but it is chiefly of the early part of the fifteenth century. There are two places of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is supported by subscription.

BRAINTFIELD (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of HERTFORD, hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of St. ALBAN'S, though locally in the hundred of HERTFORD, county of HERTFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Hertford; containing 201 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Abel Smith, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £326, and there are about 35 acres of glebe. According to Matthew Paris, this was the first ecclesiastical preferment held by the celebrated Thomas à Becket; and a small pond near the parsonage-house still bears his name. A school is supported by subscription.

BRAINTREE (St. MICHAEL), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 11 miles (N. by E.) from Chelmsford, and 40 (N. E.) from London; containing 3670 inhabitants. This place is described in Domesday book under the head of "Raines," including also the village of "Raine," to which it was at that time a hamlet, and from which it was separated in the reign of Henry II. From its situation on the road leading from London into the counties of Suffolk and Norfolk, it is supposed to have derived considerable benefit from the numerous pilgrims who passed through it, on their way to the shrines of St. Edmund, at Bury, and Our Lady of Walsingham; and the population having consequently increased, it was made a market-town in the time of John. In the early part of the reign of Elizabeth, the Flemings, as has been supposed, fleeing from the persecution of the Duke of Alva, settled at Braintree, and introduced the manufacture of woollen-cloth; but it appears that that manufacture had existed long before, it being noticed so early as 1389, in an act of parliament intitled "The clothes of certain counties tacked and folded shall not be put to sale before they be opened." The town is pleasantly situated on an eminence, and consists of several streets irregularly formed and inconveniently narrow: the houses in the central part, now the only remaining portion of the old town, are in general ancient, and many of them are built of wood; but in the principal street, which is the grand thoroughfare, are many well-built modern houses. The woollen trade has given place to the manufacture of silk, which has been introduced into the neighbourhood within the last 40 years, and in its various branches now affords general employment to a rapidly increasing population. The manufacture of silk-crape has more recently been established; in this branch about 1400 people are employed by the Messrs. Courtauld in the towns of Braintree, Bocking, and Halstead, in machine-making, spinning, weaving, dyeing, and crape-finishing. The total number of persons employed in the silk trade in these three towns, in 1838, was about 2210, of which 660 were crape-weavers in hand and power looms, 450 silk-weavers in other branches, and 1100 factory hands. Straw-platting has also been lately introduced, and affords occupation to a considerable number of females. The market, which is said to be equal to any in the county, is on Wednesday; and the fairs commence on May 7th and October 2nd, each continuing for three days, and the latter is a great mart for cattle and hops. The county magistrates hold a petty-session for the division on alternate Wednesdays. Braintree is the place for nominating and returning two knights for the northern division of the shire.

The parish comprises 2249*a. 1r. 19p.* The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 3. 4., and in the patronage of Lady Stewart; net income, £212; impropiator, Earl of Winchilsea. The church, a spacious structure on the summit of a mount, apparently the site of an ancient camp, is principally of later English architecture, with a tower in the early style, surmounted by a shingled spire of later date, and was enlarged in the reign of Henry VIII., the expense having been defrayed out of the proceeds of many plays performed in it, during the interval from 1523 to 1579, of which several curious particulars are recorded in the churchwardens' accounts. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Methodists. An ancient grammar school, in which the eminent naturalist, John Ray, received his education, is supported partly by an endowment of land, now let for £18 a year, bequeathed by J. Coker, Esq., partly by an annuity of £45, left by the Rev. James Burgess, and partly by voluntary contributions. In the reign of Charles I., Henry Smith, alderman of London, who, from the habit of wandering like a beggar, accompanied by his dog, obtained the appellation of "Dog Smith," bequeathed £2800 to the poor of this and 13 other parishes; and there are many other charities in the town, yielding altogether nearly £200 per annum. The union of Braintree comprises 14 parishes or places, and contains a population of 15,097: the workhouse, calculated for the reception of 300 inmates, cost £6342. About half a mile distant there were, till lately, the ruins of a very ancient church, founded before the Conquest, and formerly the parish church: the site of a Roman camp, now called the Cherry Orchard, is pointed out; and many sepulchral urns, fragments of Roman pottery, and Roman coins, have been found, besides three British gold coins, supposed to be those of Boadicea. This was the scene of one of the earlier martyrdoms, that of Richard Pygott, in the reign of Mary. Samuel Dale, M. D., editor of the "History and Antiquities of Harwich," resided here, and assisted Mr. Ray in collecting the more rare plants in Essex; and the Rev. Mr. Challis, Professor of Astronomy at Cambridge, is a native of the place.

BRAISEWORTH, a parish, in the union and hundred of HARTISMERE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. S. W.) from Eye; containing 151 inhabitants. It is within the parliamentary borough of Eye. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 8. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Major-General Sir E. Kerison, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £195, and there are 20 acres of glebe. The church is in the early style, and consists of a nave and chancel; the entrances on the north and south sides are through Norman doorways, that on the north being exceedingly rich in workmanship.

BRAITHWAITE, a township, in the parish of CROTHWAITE, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Keswick; containing 318 inhabitants. The village lies at the foot of Winlatter-Fell, the summit of which, gained by a steep ascent of two miles and a quarter, embraces prospects of a most sublime character. A woollen manufactory is carried on; and lead-mines have been worked.

BRAITHWAITE, a detached hamlet, in the parish of ST. MARY, CARLISLE, union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 6 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Hesket-Newmarket; containing, with Middle-sceugh, 181 inhabitants.

BRAITHWAITE, a hamlet, in the parish of KIRK-BRAMWITH, union of DONCASTER, Upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Thorne; containing 107 inhabitants. It is situated on the north bank of the river

Don, and nearly a mile from the village of Kirk-Bramwith.

BRAITHWELL (St. James), a parish, partly in the union of DONCASTER, and partly in that of ROTHERHAM, S. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK; containing, with the chapelry of Bramley, 800 inhabitants, of whom 447 are in the township of Braithwell, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Rotherham. In acknowledgment of a subscription raised here towards the ransom of Richard I., when made captive in Germany, a charter for a market and fair was granted to this place on his return from the Holy Land; the former is disused, but the latter is held on the first Wednesday in May; and a cross still remains in the centre of the village, with an inscription in Norman French, dated 1191, commemorating the event. The parish comprises 2930 acres, of which 69 are waste, and the soil is partly limestone, and partly clay; in the township of Braithwell are 1368 acres of arable land, 502 meadow, and 7 wood. The country is high, and slightly inclined to the south-east; a great part of the township of Braithwell is uninclosed, and cultivated in very long slips of ground belonging to various proprietors, which gives the surface a bleak appearance in that neighbourhood, but in other portions there is a considerable quantity of wood. The inhabitants manufacture stockings of excellent quality; red-ochre is also made, and lime burnt. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown: all the tithes of Bramley township belong to the vicar, and the impropiator of the rest of the parish is the Earl of Scarborough: the incumbent's tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £351, and those of the Earl for £368. The church is an ancient edifice, with a square tower; an arch, of very early style, separates the chancel from the nave. At Bramley is a chapel of ease; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The school was founded in 1693, by John Bosvile, who, it is said, endowed it with £700, but the endowment has been lost for more than a century. In 1818, the Rev. Thomas Bosvile gave £250 for the instruction of ten children; and £16 per annum, the bequest of John Gledall and Christopher Waterhouse, in 1681, are divided amongst the poor twice in the year. There are several powerful springs, of which the chief are the Town well, and Holy well.

BRAKES, a township, in the parish of LEINTWARDINE, union of LUDLOW, hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD; containing 156 inhabitants.

BRAMBER (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union and hundred of STEYNING, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX, 1 mile (E. S. E.) from Steyning, and 50 miles (S. by W.) from London; containing 138 inhabitants. This place was formerly noted for a castle built by the descendants of William de Braiose, upon whom it was bestowed by the Conqueror; and in the reign of Edward III., the castle was garrisoned by John de Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, for the protection of the town and shore from the expected attack of the French, who were hovering off the coast. The town is situated on the river Adur, which is navigable for small vessels; and though once of considerable extent and importance, consists at present only of a few cottages. It was a borough by prescription, and returned members to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I.: after that time it frequently omitted, and was occasionally represented, in conjunction with Steyning, till the 7th of Edward IV., from which period it regularly continued to return two representatives, until its disfranchisement in the 2nd of William IV. The parish comprises by computation 850 acres, of which 280 are arable, 425 down, and 145 pasture. The living is a discharged rectory, endowed with only one-third of the tithes, with the vicarage of Buttolphs united, and valued in the king's books at £10. 6. 8.; it is in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford, impropiators of the remaining two-thirds of the tithes of Bramber, and of all the rectorial tithes of Buttolphs. The appropriate tithes of Bramber have been commuted for a rent-charge of £113. 6., and those of the rectory for one of £56. 13. In 1837, the patrons gave an acre of glebe, on which the Rev. Thomas Grantham, the rector, erected a handsome parsonage. The church, formerly cruciform, is a small ancient edifice, consisting only of a nave and chancel, but containing some fine portions in the Norman style, with a low square tower. The ancient and once formidable castle, occupied a quadrilateral area, 560 feet in length, and 280 in breadth, surrounded by a wide and deep moat; the remains consist principally of part of a square Norman tower, of great solidity, some detached portions of the walls to the north-west, and the mount whereon stood the keep. It was garrisoned by the parliamentary forces during the civil war. On altering a road near the river, an old bridge, of excellent workmanship, was discovered, on which was formerly a chapel; and at Beddington was an hospital, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, of which the founder is unknown.

BRAMCOTE, a parish, in the union of SHARDLOW, S. division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 5 miles (W. by S.) from Nottingham; containing 732 inhabitants. The parish occupies several lofty hills, and the scenery, interspersed with some large and handsome mansions, is highly picturesque; from the village, situated on a considerable eminence, and one of the prettiest in the county, is a fine view of the town of Nottingham, and of the country for many miles round. Coal is obtained on the moor, and excellent bricks are made to a great extent; a number of persons are also employed in the lace and stocking manufacture. The Nottingham canal passes through the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Attenborough: on the inclosure of land, in 1771, $4\frac{1}{2}$ acres were allotted to the vicar. The church stands on an abrupt eminence. A square rock here is a natural curiosity.

BRAMCOTT, a hamlet, in the parish of BULKINGTON, union of NUNEATON, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (S. E.) from Nuneaton; containing 73 inhabitants.

BRAMDEAN (St. Simon and St. Jude), a parish, in the union of ALRESFORD, hundred of BISHOP'S SUTTON, Droxford and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (S. by E.) from New Alresford; containing 225 inhabitants. The parish is pleasantly situated, and in the village, which is irregularly built, and of rural appearance, are several handsome detached residences; the surrounding scenery is picturesque, and the view of the vale of Bramdean, as seen from the church, which is on the brow of a hill, is very beautiful. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 14. 9½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £224, and there are 10½ acres of glebe. The church, which has recently been repaired, and decorated in an appropriate style, by the Rev. C. Walters, rector, forms, from its beautiful situation, partly embowered among trees, an interesting feature. Near the manor-house of Woodcote is a tessellated pavement in tolerable preservation.

BRAMERTON (St. Peter), a parish, in the union and hundred of HENSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, 4¼ miles (S. E. by E.) from Norwich; containing 229 inhabitants. It comprises 728*a. 3r. 34p.*, and is bounded on the north by the navigable river Yare, from which rises an extensive and beautiful common, in the hills of which are found a great variety of fossils. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of Robert Fellowes, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £250, and there are 22 acres of glebe, and a handsome and commodious parsonage-house. The church, which is chiefly in the decorated style, consists of a nave and chancel, with a square embattled tower: the interior was repewed, and thoroughly repaired in 1839. The Rev. William Berney, in 1715, bequeathed £100 for the instruction of children, or the relief of the poor.

BRAMFIELD, HERTS.—See BRAINTFIELD.

BRAMFIELD (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, 8 miles (N.) from Saxmundham; containing 746 inhabitants. It comprises 254*6*a. 3r. 25p., of which the soil is chiefly clay, and the surface level. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £172; impropiator, Robert Howard, Esq.: there are 4 acres of glebe, with a small parsonage-house. The church, chiefly in the decorated style, consists of a nave and chancel, which are separated by an exquisitely carved screen; the tower is circular and detached, and seems to have belonged to a more ancient church. In the chancel is a splendid monument to Arthur Coke and his lady; the former represented in a kneeling, and his lady in a recumbent posture, with an infant in her arms: there are also numerous memorials to the Rabett family, who have resided at Bramfield Hall for more than four centuries. On Castle Hill is a mound or encampment moated; and not far from it, a few years since, several bronze halberd-spear heads were found.

BRAMFORD (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, 2¼ miles (W. N. W.) from Ipswich; containing 881 inhabitants. The Stow-Market and Ipswich canal crosses the parish. The living is a vicarage, with Bursall united, valued in the king's books at £13. 3. 9.; net income, £79; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. A school has been established on the national plan.

BRAMHALL, a township, in the parish and union of STOCKPORT, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Stockport; containing 1396 inhabitants. The manorial mansion is a curious edifice of timber and brick, plaitered over, standing on elevated ground, and possesses great interest, as part of the wooden building is supposed to date as far back as the reign of King John; at the south-east angle is the domestic chapel, apparently of the time of Richard III., having a flat pannelled roof, and a considerable quantity of painted glass in the windows, and containing the remains of several deceased members of the family of Davenport, the branch of which residing at this seat became extinct in 1829.

BRAMHAM (All Saints), a parish, in the Upper division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK; comprising the townships of Bramham and Clifford, with the modern village of Boston, and containing 2760 inhabitants, of whom 1194 are in the township of Bramham with Oglethorpe, 4¼ miles (S. S. E.) from Wetherby. A battle was fought here, in 1408, between Sir Thomas Rokeby, sheriff of Yorkshire, and the Earl of Northumberland, in which the earl was defeated and slain, and by which the possession of the crown was secured to Henry IV. The extensive village of Bramham is pleasantly situated in the vale of a small rivulet, on the great north road, the neighbourhood of which is undulated, and abounds with rich and beautiful scenery; there are good stone-quarries for building and other purposes. Here is the residence of George Lane Fox, Esq. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 7. 6.; net income, £159; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. The church is an ancient and elegant structure, in the decorated English style. There are chapels of ease at Boston and Clifford; and places of worship for Wesleyans and Ranters. A fund of £14 per annum, arising from land purchased by bequests, is appropriated to the instruction of children; and national schools have also been established. There are visible remains of the Watling-street, on Bramham Moor, a mile north of the village: from the middle of this moor is an extensive prospect of a well-cultivated district, which abounds also with freestone, limestone, and coal.

BRAMHOPE, a chapelry, in the parish of OTLEY, Upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Otley; containing 350 inhabitants. This chapelry, which is situated on high ground, overlooking the valley of Wharfedale, comprises 1290 acres of fertile land. John Dyneley, Esq., is lord of the manor. The village is irregularly built on elevated ground, and the surrounding scenery is pleasingly varied. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of six Trustees, appointed by the founder, and has a net income of £50: land was assigned to the impropiator, in lieu of tithes, in 1805. The school is endowed with an allotment producing £9 per annum.

BRAMLEY (All Saints), a parish, in the union and hundred of BASINGSTOKE, Basingstoke and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4½ miles (N. by E.) from Basingstoke; containing 428 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 3. 6½.; patrons and impropiators, Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford. The great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £510, and the vicarial for one of £150; and there are about 21½ acres of glebe belonging to the impropiators, and nearly five to the vicar. A school is partly supported by subscription.

BRAMLEY, a parish, in the union of HAMBLEDON, First division of the hundred of BLACKHEATH, W. division of SURREY, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Guildford; containing 970 inhabitants. This parish, described in the Norman survey under the name of Bronlegh, comprises about 4420 acres, and, in the southern part, abounds with natural beauties, particularly where it adjoins Hascomb and Dunsfold: the Arun and Wey Junction canal crosses it. In its ecclesiastical concerns it is annexed to the parish of Shalford, under the title of Shalford cum Bramley: the church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is built in the form of a cross, with a small chapel on the south side, and is of the character of the 15th century; it contains several neat monuments.

BRAMLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of St. PETER, and liberty of the borough of LEEDS, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Leeds; containing 8875 inhabitants. The chapelry is on the Leeds and Halifax road, and comprises by computation 2387 acres, of which a considerable portion is the property of the Earl of Cardigan, lord of the manor. The substratum abounds with slate of good quality, and with freestone of great firmness of texture, in high repute for building, and of which great quantities are raised and sent to most of the principal towns in the kingdom, by the Leeds and Liverpool canal, which passes through the township, and connects the two great ports of Liverpool and Hull. The village is pleasantly situated near the new Stanningley road, on a boldly undulated and richly wooded eminence, overlooking Airedale; it is nearly a mile in length, built chiefly of stone, and, viewed in connexion with the scenery of the vale beneath, has a very imposing aspect. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of woollen cloth, for which there are not less than twenty large mills, in full operation, in the village and adjacent hamlets in the township, Stanningley, Rodley, Newlay, and White-Cote; and many are also engaged in the freestone quarries of Bramley Fall, on the south side of the river Aire.

The chapel, supposed to have been originally founded by the monks of Kirkstall Abbey, has undergone so many alterations, that little of its ancient character remains; it was enlarged in 1833, when a spire was added to it, at an expense of £700, raised by subscription; it is a plain neat structure, containing about 650 sittings. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Leeds, with a net income of £289. A church, dedicated to St. Thomas, has been erected at Stanningley, on a site given from the glebe by the Rev. Thomas Furbank, the incumbent of Bramley. There are places of worship for Baptists, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans; and contiguous to the chapel are an infants' day school, and a national Sunday school. An allotment of land, including an augmentation on the inclosure of the common, now producing £25 per annum, is appropriated to the instruction of boys; and another allotment, producing £6 per annum, to the instruction of girls. £34 yearly, derived in the same manner, are distributed in cloth for shirting among the poor not receiving parochial aid; and £18 annually, the produce of land bequeathed by William Clough, Esq., are given in sums varying from 3s. to 7s. each. Rebecca Perigo, wife of a small clothier of this place, fell a victim to the artifices of the notorious Mary Bateman, who upon pretence of dissolving a spell under which they fancied themselves labouring, administered poison to her and to her husband, with a view to screen herself from punishment for having stripped them by degrees of all their property; the husband, however, who survived, brought the criminal to justice, and she was executed in 1809.—See STANNINGLEY.

BRAMLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of BRAITHWELL, union of ROTHERHAM, S. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Rotherham; containing 353 inhabitants. This place formerly belonged to the abbey of Roche, the abbot of which had a grange here, that became, after the Dissolution, a seat of the Spencers. The family of Eyre lived in a house, called the Hall, in the village, for several generations. The township comprises about 977 acres of land. The chapel is a small ancient fabric, endowed with the rectorial tithes, and annexed to Braithwell: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £269. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BRAMPFORD-SPEKE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of St. THOMAS, hundred of WONFORD, Wonford and S. divisions of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Exeter; containing 393 inhabitants. The parish is pleasantly situated on the river Exe, by which it is bounded on the east; the scenery is richly varied, and derives great beauty and interest from the proximity of the river. The number of acres is about 1500; the soil is rich and fertile, and the lands in a high state of cultivation. A fair, chiefly for pleasure, is held at Michaelmas. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £216; improprators, the family of May: the glebe comprises 39 acres of moderately good land. The church is an ancient cruciform structure, with a handsome embattled tower. The parochial school affords instruction to about 40 children; and there is a small endowment of £5 per annum for the education of poor children.

BRAMPTON (St. MARTIN), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND; containing, with the townships of Easby and Naworth, 3304 inhabitants, of whom 2754 are in the town, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Carlisle, and 305 (N. by W.) from London. According to Camden, this was the site of the Roman station Bremetenracum, which some modern writers, with more probability, have fixed at Old Penrith. The town sustained extensive damage during the wars of Edward II., of which, as well as of its earlier importance, it still exhibits evident marks. In Nov. 1715, a large force, under the command of Mr. Forster, who had received a general's commission from James Stuart, entered the town, where they proclaimed the Pretender, and hence marched to Penrith; and during the rebellion of 1745, the young Pretender led his troops hither, to observe the motions of Gen. Wade, who was mistakenly reported to be marching from Newcastle to the relief of Carlisle; and after remaining here several days, he proceeded to Carlisle, which had surrendered to his arms. The town is situated between the small rivers Irthing and Gelt, tributaries to the Eden, about one mile south of the former, and two and a half from the point where they unite; and lies about two miles south of the Picts' wall, in a deep narrow vale embosomed in hills. It consists of two principal streets irregularly built, and a spacious market-place; the houses have been mostly rebuilt, and are of handsome appearance, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water. The only branch of manufacture is that of gingham, in which nearly 700 individuals are employed: there are two public breweries. The railway between Newcastle and Carlisle passes a mile and a half to the south, and is connected with the town by a good road, and also by means of the Earl of Carlisle's railway, which reaches to the extensive coal and lime works at Tindal Fell, and by which coal and lime are brought hither in abundance. The market is on Wednesday, and is well supplied with corn, admitted toll-free; and fairs are held on April 20th, the second Wednesday after Whitsuntide, the second Wednesday in Sept., and the 23rd of Oct., for horned-cattle, horses, and pigs. The county magistrates hold a petty-session every alternate Wednesday; and courts leet and baron for the barony of Gilsland are held, at Easter and Michaelmas, in the town-hall, a neat octagonal edifice, with a cupola, erected by the Earl of Carlisle, in 1817, on the site of the former hall, in the market-place, the lower part being formed into a piazza, under which butter, eggs, poultry, &c., are sold on the market-day.

The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £466; patron and impropiator, Earl of Carlisle: in 1777, land was assigned in lieu of tithes. The present church was built, in 1788, out of the chapel and tenements of an almshouse, and with the materials of the old church, the chancel of which is still remaining on the southern bank of the river Irthing, about a mile west of the town, being only used for the performance of the funeral service for those who are interred in the cemetery: the new church was greatly enlarged in 1827, at an expense of £1800, on which occasion the Rev. Mr. Ramshay presented the parish with five bells and an organ. There are places of worship for Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and Presbyterians. A national school, for about 250 children of both sexes, built by the Earl of Carlisle, in 1817, is supported by voluntary contributions; and an infants' school was established in 1825. The poor law union comprises 14 parishes or places, and contains a population of 10,525. Two miles east of Brampton, and about a mile south of the river Irthing, commanding a fine view of the vale of St. Mary, through which that river flows, is Naworth Castle, the ancient baronial seat of the lords of Gilsland, and now the property of the Earl of Carlisle, the earliest notice of which occurs in the 18th of Richard II. The walls, including two large square towers in the front, besides others at the angles, inclose a quadrangular area, each side of which measures 40 paces: the hall, 70 or 80 feet in length, and of proportionate width and height, displays all the magnificence of feudal grandeur, and is embellished with portraits, brought from Kirk-Oswald Castle, of the kings of England prior to the union of the houses of York and Lancaster. The chapel, to which there is a descent of several steps, is very ancient, and is decorated with a profusion of armour, and with paintings of the patriarchs and kings of Israel and Judah; the pulpit and stalls are of carved oak. The dungeons of the castle, which were the prison for the barony, are still in their original state; they consist of three cells underground, and one above, and the strong iron rings, to which the prisoners were chained, are yet remaining. To the north-east of Brampton is a high conical hill, called the Mote, about 300 feet above the level of the streets, and from the summit of which, now planted with trees, a most extensive view of the surrounding country is obtained: at some distance from the base are vestiges of an intrenchment, and a breastwork of considerable strength. It is supposed to have been a Danish encampment, or probably a place of security for the removal of property in case of invasion, as, from the steepness of the acclivity, a small number of men on the summit might overpower an assailing multitude. It was formerly used as a seat of justice for the barony of Gilsland, and at present it forms a link in the chain of telegraphic communication between the northern parts of England and the southern parts of Scotland. To the south of the town is a fine quarry of freestone, where the Romans obtained part of the materials for building the great wall, vestiges of which are still visible. Walton House occupies the site of a Roman station on the Picts' wall; and on the rocky banks of the Gelt are some Roman inscriptions of the time of Agricola, one of whose legions was stationed near Brampton.

BRAMPTON (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of CHESTERFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Chesterfield; containing, with Cutthorpe township, 3937 inhabitants. The parish, which was formerly part of that of Chesterfield, is situated on the road from Chesterfield to Bakewell, and comprises by measurement 8000 acres; coal and iron-stone are found in abundance, and clay of good quality for pottery-ware is also plentiful. There are very extensive works for brown earthenware, employing several hundreds of persons; a manufactory for tobacco-pipes on a large scale, and an iron-foundry of comparatively small extent; and many of the inhabitants are occupied in a mill for the making of candle-wicks, which is situated near the boundary of the parish. The mines of coal and iron-stone are in active operation; and there are quarries of stone for building and repairing the roads, and slate of a very durable nature. The living is a perpetual curacy; patron and appropriator, Dean of Lincoln: the great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £410, and those of the incumbent for one of £90; there are $13\frac{1}{2}$ acres of glebe belonging to the appropriator, and 12 to the curate. The church, which was rebuilt at a remote period, and repaired within the last twenty years, contains some ancient monuments to the family of Clarke. A district church, dedicated to St. Thomas, was consecrated in 1832, the expense of its erection having been borne partly by subscription, and partly by the Parliamentary Commissioners: it stands on the Chatsworth road, about a mile west of the town of Chesterfield, and is in the style of architecture prevailing in the fourteenth century, presenting a pleasing object in the surrounding landscape. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln; net income, in 1835, £49, augmented, in 1841, by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists; and national schools have been established. In the eastern moor are vestiges of a burying-place, called Cor Lowe, considered to be of greater antiquity than the period of the Roman occupation of Britain. The place was for some time the residence of Dr. Edmund Cartwright, inventor of the power-loom and carding-machine, who was incumbent.

BRAMPTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, union and county of HUNTINGDON, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (W. by S.) from Huntingdon; containing 1164 inhabitants. This parish, which is seated on the navigable river Ouse, and on the road from London to Cambridge, comprises 3110 acres, of which about three-fourth parts are arable, and the soil is generally sandy, but fertile. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 1. 4.; net income, £160; patron and appropriator, Prebendary of Brampton in the Cathedral of Lincoln, the tithes belonging to whom have been commuted for a rent-charge of £93. 10. The church is partly in the decorated, and partly in the later, English style, with a fine south porch, enriched with elegant tracery; it was rebuilt in 1635, and repewed in 1835. Schools are supported by Lady Olivia B. Sparrow. Samuel Pepys, secretary to the Admiralty in the reigns of Charles II. and James II., and elected President of the Royal Society in 1684, was born here.

BRAMPTON, a chapelry, in the parish of TORKSEY, union of GAINSBOROUGH, wapentake of WELL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Gainsborough; containing 130 inhabitants.

BRAMPTON (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of AYLSHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Aylsham; containing 263 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 441 acres, and is bounded on the east by the navigable river Bure; the soil is variable, the arable land being principally loam, and the surface is somewhat uneven. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of R. Marsham, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £148. 19. 4., and there are about 14 acres of glebe. The church is chiefly in the early English style, and consists of a nave, chancel, and south aisle, with a tower circular at the base and octangular above. From several urns containing calcined bones, this is conjectured to have been the place of interment connected with the Roman station at Burgh, on the opposite side of the river.

BRAMPTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of MARKET-HARBOROUGH, hundred of CORBY, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Harborough, on the road to Rockingham; containing 104 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 2387 acres; there are good quarries of stone for building. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 6. 8.; net income, £346; patron, Earl Spencer: there are 28 acres of glebe, with a residence. The church is a fine specimen of the early perpendicular style, with a lofty spire, and contains some sepulchral brasses rather mutilated, and an ancient mural monument, with two figures kneeling in the costume of the time, belonging to the Norwich family, formerly lords of the manor. A school for girls is endowed with property given by Sir John Norwich, in 1659, and now let for £5. 10. per annum. There is a house in the parish, formerly an inn, known as the "Hermitage," which appears to have been a religious house, once surrounded by a moat. The learned Richard Cumberland, afterwards Bishop of Peterborough, was some time rector.

BRAMPTON (St. Peter), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (N. W.) from Wangford; containing 322 inhabitants. It comprises 2002a. 1r. 5p., and is situated on the road from Halesworth to Beccles. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the Rev. G. O. Leman: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £433. 5. 6., and there is a good and commodious rectory-house, with a glebe of about 12 acres. The church consists of a nave and chancel, with an embattled tower. A Sunday school is endowed with £9. 6. 8. per annum; and the rents of an estate are applied to the repairs of the church, the relief of the poor, and other purposes.

BRAMPTON, a township, in the parish of LONG MARTIN, EAST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Appleby; containing 304 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £165, and there is a glebe of nearly 40 acres.

BRAMPTON-ABBOTS (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of ROSS, hundred of GREYTREE, county of HEREFORD, 1 mile (N.) from Ross; containing 197 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises by computation 1500 acres, is situated on the left bank of the river Wye, and in the heart of a rich and fertile district, abounding with picturesque and romantic scenery; it is intersected in the eastern part by the road from Ledbury to Ross. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £321. 2. 6., and the glebe comprises 8 acres. Schools are supported by the minister.

BRAMPTON-BIERLOW, a township, in the parish of WATH-UPON-DEARNE, union of ROTHERHAM, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 6 miles (S. E.) from Barnsley; containing 1704 inhabitants. This place, which is situated on the Dearne and Dove canal, in a district abounding with coal, comprises 3168a. 2r. 14p., of which 1633 acres are arable, 1203 grass land, 245 wood, 76 homesteads, orchards, &c., and 9 canal; it is principally the property of Earl Fitzwilliam, who is lord of the manor. Extensive iron-works have been established, and several mines of coal have been opened by the Earl, which are in full operation, affording employment to the principal part of the population. A national school was built by the Trustees of the Rev. George Ellis, who bequeathed land for the education and relief of the poor; it is a spacious and handsome building, erected at an expense of £865; the master has, besides his salary, £12 per annum from a bequest by John Higson, Esq., who died in 1814. The poor's land, producing £8. 15., and an allotment at the inclosure of the parish, producing £37. 10., are appropriated to the payment of the poor's rates; and there are also some small rent-charges, bequeathed for the relief of the poor.

BRAMPTON-BRYAN (St. Barnabas), a parish, in the union of KNIGHTON, partly in the hundred of KNIGHTON, county of RADNOR (South Wales), but chiefly in the hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, 10 miles (W. by S.) from Ludlow; containing, in the English portion, with the township of Boresford with Pedwardine, 250 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 3000 acres, of which 1200 are arable, 1470 pasture, and 330 woodland, and is bounded on the north by the river Teme, and intersected by the road from Ludlow to Knighton. The village was nearly destroyed in the parliamentary war, and the castle was burnt by the royalists in 1643, and is now in ruins, which consist chiefly of an arched gateway, flanked by two circular towers, and fragments of the outer walls. Sir Robert de Harley obtained this castle and estate in the reign of Edward II., by marriage with the co-heiress of Sir Bryan de Brampton, and it has since continued in that noble family. A great fair for horned-cattle, horses, and sheep, is held on June 22nd. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 11. 0½., and in the gift of the Earl of Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £345, and there are 16 acres of glebe. The church, which was destroyed in 1643, was rebuilt in 1650, and is a plain edifice, containing 350 sittings, of which 150 are free: the Earl of Oxford, lord treasurer, was buried here. About a mile from the church is Coxwall Knoll, on the summit of which are vestiges of a camp anciently occupied by the brave Caractacus, and now overgrown with oak-trees. A school is endowed with property given by the second Earl of Oxford, in 1720, amounting to £18 per annum. The Earl of Kinnoul sits in the house of peers as Lord Hay, of Pedwardine, in this parish.

BRAMPTON, CHAPEL, a parish, in the union of BRIXWORTH, hundred of NEWBOTTLE-GROVE, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 4½ miles (N. N. W.) from Northampton; containing 229 inhabitants, and comprising 1233 acres. The road from Northampton to Leicester passes through the village. Chapel Brampton, in ecclesiastical matters, is annexed to Church Brampton, and the church has long been demolished.

BRAMPTON, CHURCH (St. BOTOLPH), a parish, in the union of BRIXWORTH, hundred of NEWBOTTLE-GROVE, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Northampton; containing 169 inhabitants. The parish, situated on the road from Northampton to Leicester, and bounded by the river Nene on the east, comprises by computation 1125 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £25. 19. 7., and in the patronage of Corpus Christi College, Oxford; net income, £400, arising from 332 acres of land allotted long since in lieu of tithes; there is a glebe-house. The church is partly in the decorated, and partly in the later, style of English architecture, and contains a large circular font; the stairs of the rood-loft and some ancient benches remain. There are parochial and Sunday schools.

BRAMPTON-EN-LE-MORTHEN, a township, in the parish of TREETON, union of ROTHERHAM, S. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 5¼ miles (S. E. by E.) from Rotherham; containing 139 inhabitants. Two centuries since, this place was the residence of several families of property and consequence; and in the church of Treeton is a choir called Brampton choir, which is paved with monumental stones placed over the remains of the families of Vesey, Bradshaw, and Lord, who had mansions in the village, which have long been deserted by their owners. The freeholders of Brampton acknowledge no mesne manor over them. The township comprises by computation 1090 acres: the road from Rotherham to Tickhill passes about two miles north of the village.

BRAMPTON, LITTLE, with ROD and NASH, a township, in the parish of PRESTEIGN, union of KNIGHTON, hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD; containing 162 inhabitants.

BRAMSHALL (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of UTTOXETER, S. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Uttoxeter; containing 170 inhabitants, and comprising 1276a. 1r. 38p. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 3. 9., and in the patronage of Lord Willoughby de Broke: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £145, and there are nearly 43 acres of glebe. The church was erected at the expense of Lord Willoughby de Broke.

BRAMSHAW (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of NEW FOREST, partly in the hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, but chiefly in the N. division of the hundred of NEW FOREST, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (N.) from Stony Cross; containing, with the hamlets of Furzley and Brook, and the extra-parochial places of Eyeworth-Lodge and Amberwood-Cottage, 793 inhabitants, of whom 474 are in Southampton, and 319 in Wiltshire. The parish comprises by measurement 3560 acres, and is intersected by the road from Southampton to Salisbury. In that portion of the New Forest which lies on its borders to the south-east, William Rufus was killed by an arrow, shot by Walter Tyrrell at a stag, but, glancing by the animal, it struck the royal breast, and occasioned the monarch's death: a stone, erected on the spot where the oak-tree stood whence the arrow was shot, commemorates the event. The living is a vicarage, described in the king's books as not in charge; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Salisbury. The rectorial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £149, and the vicarial for one of £60; and there are about 20 acres of glebe, a portion of which is in Lyndhurst: the vicarage-house was erected, in 1841, in lieu of a former one, supposed to be more than 300 years old. Of the ancient church, which stands upon an eminence, and overlooks a considerable portion of the New Forest, the nave alone is standing; the east end, and north and south aisles, being entirely new; in the building of which, in 1829, some very grotesque heads were found inclosed in the old walls, and have been preserved. There are places of worship for Calvinists and Wesleyans; and a national school is supported by subscription.

BRAMSHILL, GREAT, a tything, in the parish of EVERSLEY, union of HARTLEY-WINTNEY, hundred of HOLDSHOT, Odiham and N. divisions of HAMPSHIRE, 1½ mile (N. W. by N.) from Hartford-Bridge; containing 175 inhabitants.

BRAMSHILL, LITTLE, a tything, in the parish of EVERSLEY, union of HARTLEY-WINTNEY, hundred of HOLDSHOT, Odiham and N. divisions of HAMPSHIRE; containing 10 inhabitants.

BRAMSHOTT (St. MARY), a parish, in the hundred of ALTON, Petersfield and N. divisions of HAMPSHIRE, 4½ miles (W. by N.) from Haslemere; containing, with the hamlet of Liphook, 1313 inhabitants. The parish, which includes part of Wolmer Forest, comprises about 3270 acres, and is situated on the London and Portsmouth road; the soil is a sandy loam, and the surface uneven; sandstone is quarried. Fairs for live stock are held on the first Wednesday in March, and June 11th. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 9. 2.; net income, £613; patrons, Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford: there are 45 acres of glebe, with a rectory-house. The church is a very ancient cruciform edifice, principally in the early English style, with a low tower surmounted by a spire; the nave was rebuilt and considerably enlarged a few years since. A national school is supported by endowment.

BRAMWITH, KIRK (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DONCASTER, Upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 7 miles (N. N. E.) from Doncaster; containing, with the hamlets of Braithwaite, Hawkhouse-Green, and part of Kirkhouse-Green, 251 inhabitants, of whom 54 are in Kirk Bramwith township. The parish, which is bounded on the south by the river Don, comprises by measurement nearly 2000 acres, of which about 1000 are arable, 10 woodland, and the remainder pasture and meadow. The village is situated opposite to Sand Bramwith, and the hamlets are in the higher part of the vale. Kirkhouse-Green is partly in the adjoining township of Moss, and parish of Campsall. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Lancaster: the tithes have been commuted for £455, and there are about 50 acres of glebe. The church, which is small, and of the simplest form, originally consisted of a nave and chancel, divided by a circular arch, having indented mouldings rising from Saxon columns; and a tower at the west end is the only addition that has been made to the original design: it contains a large octagonal font, doubtless coeval with the first foundation of the church soon after the Conquest; and the principal entrance, where the arch has the hawk's-head ornament, the cable, and the indentations, is probably of equal antiquity. The Rev. W. Good, in 1641, bequeathed 5 roods of land for teaching a child.

BRANCASTER (St. MARY THE VIRGIN), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of SMITHDON, W. division of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Burnham Westgate, and 192 (N. N. E.) from London; containing 913 inhabitants. This place has been identified with the Roman station Brannodunum, at which an eminent commander, styled Count, or Earl, of the Saxon shore, presided over a troop of Dalmatian cavalry, for the defence of the coast against the Saxon invaders: the castle and station occupied about eight acres, between the staith and village, where numerous coins, vessels, and other relics have been found. The parish is on the road from Lynn to Wells, and comprises 367*a.* 30*p.*, of which 2162 acres are arable, 10 pasture and meadow, 700 common, 135 marsh, 587 salt-marsh, 26 woodland, 7 ozier ground, and 37 gardens. Malting is carried on to some extent by the proprietor of a large malt-house, who also owns several vessels, of from 70 to 120 tons' burthen, which trade to and from the place in corn, coal, malt, timber, oil-cake, &c. The staith is situated on a commodious creek, which has at spring tides from 9 to 11 feet of water, and crosses the salt-marshes to the ocean through Brancaster bay. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £24, and in the patronage of Thomas Woodham, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £821. 14., and there is a glebe of $7\frac{1}{2}$ acres, with a handsome parsonage-house. The church, which is in the early English and decorated styles, consists of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, with a square embattled tower, and was thoroughly repaired in 1832. A free school and almshouses were built by Robert Smith, about the close of the sixteenth century, and endowed with 72 acres of land by his sister; the endowment produces about £70 per annum.

BRANCEPETH (St. BRANDON), a parish, in the unions of DURHAM, AUCKLAND, and LANCHESTER, N. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, comprising the townships of Brandon with Byshotles, Crook with Billy-Row, Hedley-Hope, Hemlington-Row, Stockley, and Wellington; and containing 2151 inhabitants, of whom 352 are in the township of Brancepeth, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Durham. The name is supposed to be a corruption of Brawn's path, in allusion to the number of wild boars that formerly infested the district, and for the purpose of hunting which the Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III., frequently resorted to this place, where his maternal ancestors, the Nevills, had a fortress, which was almost entirely taken down by the late Matthew Russel, Esq., who erected on its site the present Brancepeth Castle. Coal is found, and there are some quarries of stone. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £60. 10. 5., and in the patronage of R. E. D. Shafto, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £985. 12. The church is a fine cruciform edifice, highly decorated within; the chancel is stilled and wainscoted with oak carved in tabernacle work, and has an ornamented ceiling. A national school has been established in the township of Brancepeth, and others in various parts of the parish, which are supported by voluntary contributions. There are some medicinal springs of a vitriolic and sulphureous kind.

BRANDESTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of PLOMESGATE, hundred of LOES, E. division of SUFFOLK, 4 miles (S. W.) from Framlingham; containing 555 inhabitants. The Hall was for many generations the seat of the Revet family. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 13. 4., and in the patronage of certain trustees for charitable purposes, in whom also the impropriation is vested; net income, £100: there is a glebe of about 16 acres, with a good residence. The church consists of a nave and chancel, with an embattled tower.

BRANDISTONE cum GUTON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of St. FAITH'S, hundred of EYNSFORD, E. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Recpham; containing 137 inhabitants. The parish is chiefly the property of Magdalen College, Oxford, and comprises 757*a.* 2*r.* 24*p.*, of which 634 acres are arable, 103 meadow and pasture, and 20 common. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 12. 8*½.*, and in the gift of the College: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £240, and the glebe comprises $11\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church consists of a nave, chancel, and north aisle, with a circular tower, the upper part octagonal, at the west end of the aisle; the font is Norman. There was formerly another church, dedicated to St. Swithin. 20 acres of land, let for £20 per annum, were bequeathed by Mr. Gurney, for the use of the poor; and a small school is partly supported by the rector.

BRANDON, with BYSHOTTLES, a township, in the parish of BRANCEPETH, union of DURHAM, N. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Durham; containing 467 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 3460 acres. The village is occasionally called East Brandon, to distinguish it from a farm-hold within the township, bearing the name of West Brandon. Here is a paper-manufactory; and a national school has been established. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £311. 15. 10. On the summit of Brandon Hill is an oblong mount, or tumulus, supposed to have been either the site of a beacon, or the burial-place of some departed hero.

BRANDON, a township, in the parish of EGLINGHAM, union of GLENDALÉ, N. division of COQUETDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Whittingham; containing 147 inhabitants. The township comprises 1020 acres, mostly arable land, with about 20 of wood; the surface is undulated, and the soil light and gravelly, and good for barley and turnips; the whole is the property of Robert Lancelot Allgood, Esq., of Nunwick, and is divided into two farms, respectively occupied by John Davison, Esq., of Tritlington House, and Thomas James, Esq., of Brandon Hall. Brandon White House, to the east of the village, was the seat of the Collingwood family, who possessed the estate for a long period of years. A chancel wall and numerous tombs indicate the site of an ancient church.

BRANDON (St. PETER), a market-town and parish, in the union of THETFORD, partly in the hundred of GRIMSHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, but chiefly in the hundred of LACKFORD, W. division of SUFFOLK, 40 miles (N. W.) from Ipswich, and 78 (N. N. E.) from London; containing 2002 inhabitants. The parish comprises 6759a. 10p., of which the soil is generally a sandy loam, and the substratum chalk; the meadow land is flat, and subject to floods. The town consists of two portions, designated Town-street, and Ferry-street, a mile distant from each other; the latter, which is the chief portion, and through which runs the road from London to Lynn, lies on the southern bank of the Little Ouse, or Brandon river, which forms the northern boundary of Suffolk, and is here crossed by a neat stone bridge, and which is navigable to Thetford and Lynn. Imbedded in a stratum of chalk, a mile westward from the town, lie continuous strata of the finest flint, of which gun-flints are made in abundance, and conveyed to various parts of the world, employing about 200 hands in the manufacture of them. In addition, there is a considerable traffic in corn, seeds, malt, coal, timber, iron, bricks, tiles, &c.; and there are some extensive rabbit-warrens in the neighbourhood, from which 150,000 rabbits are sent annually to the London markets. About 160 females are employed in preparing and cutting rabbit and hare skins for making hats, and felts for the clothiers in Yorkshire. A brewery has also been established. The market is on Thursday, for corn and seeds; there are fairs on Feb. 14th, June 11th, and Nov. 11th; and a fair is held at Broomhall, about half a mile distant, on July 7th, for stock.

The LIVING is a rectory, with that of Wangford annexed, valued in the king's books at £20. 18. 1½., and in the patronage of Thomas Everard Cartwright, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a gross rent-charge of £560, and there are 102 acres of glebe. The church, which is situated midway between the two towns, is in the later style, and consists of a nave, chancel, and south aisles, with a lofty embattled tower at the west end. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. A free school was founded, in 1646, by Robert Wright, who endowed it with a rent-charge of £40; it was further endowed with 8 acres of land under the Bedford Level act, and with 3 under the Brandon Inclosure act, producing £11. 18. per annum. Joanna, widow of John Wright, in 1664, bequeathed £13 per annum for keeping the school-house in repair, and for the relief of the poor; there is an almshouse in Ferry-street for seven widows, founded by Humphrey Hall, in 1698; and almshouses, founded by a person named Curteis, for three parishioners, were rebuilt near the church in 1840. Various bequests have been made for the benefit of the poor, amounting in the aggregate to about £100 per annum. Brandon Camp, a square earth-work guarded by a single trench and a rampart, is supposed to have been the Bravinium of the Romans, and to have been occupied by Ostorius Scapula previously to his decisive victory over the brave Caractacus. The Duke of Hamilton and Brandon takes his English title from the place.

BRANDON, a hamlet, in the parish of WOLTSTON, union of RUGBY, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 6 miles (E. S. E.) from Coventry; containing 252 inhabitants, and consisting of 1946 acres. Here was anciently a castle, built soon after the Conquest, either by Geoffrey de Clinton, or his son-in-law, Norman de Verdune, and which was garrisoned in the 7th of Richard I., and destroyed by the barons in the reign of Henry III. It is supposed to have been rebuilt by Theobald, a descendant of Norman, who appears to have enjoyed the privilege of free warren in all his demesne lands here, together with a court leet, gallows, and assize of bread and beer: there are no remains. A second-class station of the London and Birmingham railway is situated in the hamlet, the rateable annual value of which property in it is returned at £1400.

BRANDON, PARVA (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of FOREHOE, E. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Wymondham; containing 222 inhabitants. It comprises about 1000 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 3. 9., and in the patronage of F. R. Reynolds, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £315, and the glebe comprises 17 acres, with a small rectory-house. The church is in the later English style, with a square embattled tower. A school is supported.

BRANDBURTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SKIRLAUGH, N. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK; containing 718 inhabitants, of whom 34 are in the township of Moortown, and 681 in that of Brandsburton, S½ miles (N. E.) from Beverley. The church of St. John de Beverley had property here so early as the time of Athelstan, by whom a grant of lands was made to that establishment; and among the families who held possessions in the place at an early date, occurs that of St. Quintin. The village, which is large, well-built, and in a very flourishing condition, is situated on the lower road from Hull to Bridlington and Scarborough, conveyances to which places pass through it daily. Here is a large show for horses on the 11th of April; and a fair is held on May 14th. Petty-sessions were formerly held on every Thursday at the Cross Keys Inn, but they have been removed to Leven. The market-cross stands in the centre of the village. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £24. 13. 4.; net income, £895; patrons, Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge. The church, which is principally in the later style of English architecture, is situated on a slight eminence, and when seen from the south-west is highly picturesque, the old trees about it adding greatly to the effect; it is of considerable size, and consists of a nave, side aisles, and chancel, with a low embattled tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans, and another used alternately by the Independents and Primitive Methodists. The sum of £37, partly arising from a bequest of £100 by Mr. Francis Barker, is annually paid to a master for teaching poor children; and in another school fifteen are paid for by the trustees of Emanuel Hospital, Westminster. In 1601, the manor was assigned in trust to the lord mayor and aldermen of London, by Lady Dacres, for the benefit of Emanuel Hospital.

BRANDBY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of EASINGWOLD, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK, 14 miles (N. by W.) from York; containing, with Stearsby, 304 inhabitants. The parish, which is situated on the road from York to Helmsley, comprises 304*sa.* 20*p.*, of which 1425 acres are arable, 1169 pasture, 219 woodland, and 165 moor; the soil, which varies in different situations, is rich in the vale, and light on the hills; the surface is undulated, and the scenery picturesque. Good limestone is quarried for building and other purposes. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 8. 11½., and in the patronage of F. Cholmeley, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £588, and there are 68 acres of glebe. The church, which is surmounted by a handsome cupola, was erected in 1770. There is a Roman Catholic chapel at Brandsby Hall; and a parochial school is supported by the Rev. Robert Swann, M.A.

BRANDS-FEE, a liberty, partly in the parish of HITCHENDEN, hundred of DESBOROUGH, and partly in the parishes of GREAT and LITTLE MISSENDEN, union of AMERSHAM, hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3½ miles (N. N. E.) from High Wycombe.

BRANDY-STREET, a hamlet, in the parish of SELWORTHY, union of WILLITON, hundred of CARHAMPTON, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 29 inhabitants.

BRANSBY, a township, in the parish of STOW, union of GAINSBOROUGH, wapentake of WELL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (N. W.) from Lincoln; containing 107 inhabitants.

BRANSCOMBE (St. WINIFRED), a parish, in the union of HONITON, hundred of COLYTON, Honiton and S. divisions of DEVON, 4¾ miles (E.) from Sidmouth; containing 956 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the south and east by the British Channel; in some parts its scenery is beautiful and romantic. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £18. 15. 10., and in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, the appropriators: the great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £268, and those of the incumbent for one of £225, with a glebe of 3 acres. The founder of Wadham College, Oxford, was buried here.

BRANSDALE, EAST SIDE, a hamlet, in the parish of KIRKBY-MOORSIDE, union of HELMSLEY, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK, 11 miles (N. W.) from Pickering; containing 134 inhabitants. This place, and Brandsdale, West Side, are two united townships, and comprise together about 3000 acres of land: they are separated by a stream running in a direction from north-north-west to south-south-east. There is a chapel of ease in the hamlet of Cockan, in the township.

BRANSDALE, WEST SIDE, a township, in the parish of KIRKDALE, union of HELMSLEY, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK, 11 miles (N. by W.) from Helmsley; containing 80 inhabitants. The Hodge beck divides this township from Brandsdale, East Side.

BRANSFORD, a chapelry, in the parish of LEIGH, union of MARTLEY, Lower division of the hundred of PERSHORE, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 4¾ miles (W. S. W.) from Worcester; containing 277 inhabitants, and comprising 1026 acres. It is crossed from north to south by the road from Worcester to Hereford. The chapel is dedicated to St. John the Baptist: the living is vicarial; impropiator, Earl Somers.

BRANSGORE, a chapelry, in the parish and hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, Ringwood and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (N. E. by N.) from Christchurch. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £73; patron, Vicar of Christchurch. The chapel was built in 1822, at an expense of £2800, defrayed by the Parliamentary Commissioners, and is a neat edifice, in the later English style, with a tower and spire. National schoolrooms were built by subscription, in 1839, at an expense of £210.

BRANSON, a township, in the parish and union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (S. W. by W.) from Burton; containing 441 inhabitants.

BRANSTON, or BRAUNSTON (St. GUTHLAKE), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 9 miles (S. W. by W.) from Grantham; containing 333 inhabitants, and comprising about 2200 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 10. 5.; net income, £350, derived from land; patron, Duke of Rutland: there is a good rectory-house. The church has been recently embellished with a handsome east window, and the interior refitted with open seats; the pulpit is of stone, after the model of that of St. Peter's, Oxford.

BRANSTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union, and liberty of the city of LINCOLN, county of LINCOLN, 4½ miles (S. E.) from Lincoln; containing 1122 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 17. 11.; net income, £677; patron and incumbent, Rev. P. Curtois: land was assigned in 1801, in lieu of tithes. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Branston Hall school is principally supported by Mr. Melville.

BRANTHAM (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of SAMFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 1 mile (N. by E.) from Manningtree; containing 404 inhabitants. It comprises 1922*a.* 2*r.* 20*p.*, of which 1860 acres are in cultivation; the river Stour, which here divides into two branches, is navigable on the southern side of the parish. The living is a rectory, with that of East Bergholt consolidated, valued in the king's books at £25. 10.; and in the patronage of Emanuel College, Cambridge: the tithes of the two parishes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £1320, and there are 42½ acres of glebe. There was formerly a chapel in the hamlet of Catawade.

BRANTHWAITE, a township, in the parish of DEAN, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 6 miles (S. W.) from Cockermouth; containing 300 inhabitants. Several years since, a considerable quantity of a ferruginous kind of limestone, called catscalp, was obtained here, and sent to the iron-works at Clifton and Seaton; but this branch of trade has ceased. There are quarries of white freestone, a woollen-manufactory, a paper-mill, and two corn-mills. The Methodists have a place of worship.

BRANTINGHAM (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BEVERLEY, partly in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, and partly in the wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, E. riding of YORK; comprising the townships of Thorpe-Brantingham and Ellerker, and containing 635 inhabitants, of whom 112 are in the township of Thorpe-Brantingham, 2 miles (S. E. by E.) from South Cave. It comprises 3370 acres, chiefly arable and pasture land, besides some thriving plantations, which contribute much to the beauty of the scenery. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 9. 2.; net income, £176; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Durham. The church is in the perpendicular style, with some traces of Norman architecture in the porch. There is a chapel of ease at Ellerker, probably more ancient than the church; it is in the decorated English style, but has been much altered, and reduced in its dimensions.

BRANTON, a township, in the parish of EGLINGHAM, union of GLENDALE, N. division of COQUETDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9¼ miles (S. S. E.) from Wooler; containing 119 inhabitants. Some antiquaries have supposed that this is the Roman station Bremenium. The township comprises 1143 acres, of which two-thirds are arable, and the remainder pasture, including 16 acres of plantation. There is a fine free-stone quarry, out of which Lilburne tower was built. The village, which is small, is situated on the south side of the Breamish, and at a short distance to the west of the road from Morpeth to Wooler. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £60. 10. There is a place of worship for Presbyterians.

BRANTON, or BRAMPTON, a hamlet, in the parish of CANTLEY, union of DONCASTER, S. division of STRAFORTH and TRICKHILL wapentake, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (S. E.) from Doncaster; containing 286 inhabitants. The river Torne passes at a short distance east of the village. A national school was opened in 1835, which is also used as a chapel of ease on Sunday evenings.

BRANTON-GREEN, with UPPER DUNSFORTH, a township, in the parish of ALDBOROUGH, Upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 3½ miles (S. E.) from Boroughbridge; containing 163 inhabitants. This place is situated near the right bank of the river Ouse. A portion of the land was assigned in lieu of tithes, under an inclosure act, in 1770.

BRANXTON, a parish, in the union of GLENDALE, W. division of GLENDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 4¾ miles (E. S. E.) from Coldstream, and 9¼ (N. W.) from Wooler; containing 261 inhabitants. This parish comprises by measurement 1535 acres, and is situated about half a mile to the south of the road from Wooler to Coldstream. The battle of Flodden, in 1513, was principally fought here: the Earl of Surrey drew up his men, after crossing the Till, on the flat ground immediately under Kingchair, or Kingshire Hill, the foot of which bounds the parish, and lies to the south of it. The battle was hotly contested from the south to the north of the parish, especially about the church and village, and thence to the north of the Wooler road; and there is still standing in Westfield, about 150 yards from the turnpike-road, on Sir Henry Askew's property, an unhewn pillar of basalt, about five feet high, and more than three feet in diameter, commemorative of the battle: it is called the King's stone, and is said to point out the place where King James fell. In June, 1524, a skirmish took place between the Lord of Fowberry, at the head of 100 cavalry, and a party of Scottish infantry, who, in number about 500, crossed the Tweed, for the purpose of plundering traders resorting to Berwick fair; but they were driven back with considerable loss. There are several quarries of whinstone, applicable for making roads, and building farm-houses. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £3. 6. 8.; net income, £200; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Durham; impropiators, the Landowners: the glebe-house was built in 1838, and commands extensive prospects. The church was rebuilt in 1844, in the Norman style, at a cost of £500; a very ancient arch, supposed to be nearly 800 years old, and which divides the chancel from the nave, was preserved in the rebuilding: of 134 sittings, five only are not free. A national school is supported by subscription, aided by £5 from Sir Henry Askew, and £2 from Lady Stanley. Some very fine jaspers and moss agates have been found, and swords and balls, some of which are in the possession of the Askew family, have been ploughed up at various times. The Rev. Percival Stockdale, a writer of considerable merit, was born here, in 1733, during the incumbency of his father.

BRASCOTE, a hamlet, in the parish of NEWBOLD-VERDON, union of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER; containing 55 inhabitants.

BRASHFIELD, a hamlet, in the parish of MITCHELMERSH, hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 399 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for dissenters.

BRASSINGTON, a chapelry, in the parish of BRADBORNE, hundred of WIRKSWORTH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 3¾ miles (W. by N.) from Wirksworth; containing 776 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £87; patron and impropiator, John Story, Esq. The chapel exhibits various styles, from the Norman to the later English. A plot of land of about 5 acres was given by Mr. Thurston Dale, in 1742, and is now in the occupation of a schoolmaster, who instructs twelve children in a national school.

BRASTED (ST. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of SEVEN-OAKS, hundred of CODSHEATH, lathe of SUTTON-

AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Seven-Oaks; containing 1130 inhabitants. It is situated near the South-Eastern railway, and comprises 4300 acres by computation, of which about 2500 are arable, 250 meadow and pasture, 100 hops, and the remainder wood, coppice, and church land. A fair is held on Holy-Thursday. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £22. 6. 8.; net income, about £600; patron, Archbishop of Canterbury. A national school was commenced in 1825.

BRATTLEBY (St. Cuthbert), a parish, in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Lincoln; containing 168 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1060 acres; the soil is various, and near the village is good grazing land; limestone and lias are quarried in the higher grounds. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 10.; net income, £260; patrons, Master and Fellows of Balliol College, Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land at the inclosure; the glebe comprises 185 acres. The church has been rebuilt, but parts of the ancient walls still remain. A school is endowed by Edward Wright, Esq., lord of the manor.

BRATTON, a chapelry, in the parish and hundred of WESTBURY, union of WESTBURY and WHORWELSDOWN, Westbury and S. divisions, and Trowbridge and Bradford subdivisions, of WILTS, 3 miles (E. N. E.) from Westbury; containing 729 inhabitants. Bratton Castle is a strong encampment, where the Danes, after their defeat by the Saxons, held out for fourteen days. On the slope of the hill beneath it is the figure of a horse, cut out, as tradition relates, by the troops of Alfred, in memory of the victory which they obtained on Eddington Down: several fragments of military weapons have been dug up in the vicinity. The chapel is dedicated to St. James. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists.

BRATTON-CLOVELLY, a parish, in the union of OAKHAMPTON, hundred of LIFTON, Lifton and S. divisions of DEVON, 9 miles (W. S. W.) from Oakhampton; containing 870 inhabitants, and comprising about 9000 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 5. $2\frac{1}{2}$.; net income £412; patron, Bishop of Exeter. On an eminence, about three miles northward, is Broadbury Castle, an ancient earthwork defended by a single vallum and fosse.

BRATTON-FLEMING (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of BARNSTAPLE, hundred of BRAUNTON, Braunton and N. divisions of DEVON, 7 miles (N. E. by E.) from Barnstaple; containing 708 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement about 6000 acres, and is bounded by valleys remarkable for their romantic beauty; there are quarries of slate for paving. In 1838, an act was passed for inclosing waste lands, when about three acres were appropriated for recreation. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £29. 15. 5., and in the gift of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for £435, and there is an excellent glebe, with a house in the Elizabethan style. The church, which was rebuilt about 150 years ago, is of very plain architecture, with the exception of two east windows of the perpendicular style, the only part of the original edifice remaining. There is a fellowship in Caius College, founded by the Rev. Mr. Wortley formerly incumbent, and appropriated to the natives of the parish, if such can be found; and a national school is supported by subscription. There are numerous barrows on Bratton Down; and at Nightacott, in the neighbourhood, are six upright stones, the supposed remains of a Druidical circle.

BRATTON-SEYMOUR (Holy Trinity), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of NORTON-FERRIS, E. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Wincanton; containing 103 inhabitants. It comprises 1093a. 2r. 36p., of which 790 acres are pasture, 218 arable, and 73 woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 4. 7., and in the alternate patronage of Sir Ralph Lopes, Bart., and Mr. John Hodges: the tithes have been commuted for £132, and there are nearly 59 acres of glebe.

BRAUGHIN (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BISHOP-STORTFORD, hundred of BRAUGHIN, county of HERTFORD, 10 miles (N. E.) from Hertford, and 28 (N.) from London; containing, with part of the hamlet of Puckeridge, 1358 inhabitants. This place, in the Norman survey called Brachinges, and by the Saxons Brooking, from the streams and meadows in its vicinity, was anciently a town of considerable importance, and a demesne of the Saxon kings: by some historians it is supposed to have been a Roman station, and the remains of a camp may still be distinguished. The town is pleasantly situated on the small river Quin, near its confluence with the Rib, and still exhibits traces of its former greatness. The market, which was granted in the reign of Stephen, has been discontinued, but a fair is held on Whit-Monday and the following day. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £19. 13. 4.; net income, £192; patron, Rev. W. Tower: in 1812, land and corn-rents were assigned in lieu of all tithes. The church is a handsome and spacious edifice, with a square embattled tower surmounted by a spire. There is a place of worship for Independents. A school has a small endowment, left by the late Marmaduke Tennant; and a national school for girls is supported by subscription, by the rent of a cottage and field, and by the needlework done in the school. On a lofty eminence, to the south of the village, are the remains of an encampment, of which part of the vallum and fortifications may be traced; the form is quadrilateral, and the area contains nearly 40 acres; the south-western angle is rounded, and on the north it is defended by a triple rampart.

BRAUNCEWELL (All Saints), a parish, in the union of SLEAFORD, wapentake of FLAXWELL, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Sleaford; containing 125 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from London to Lincoln, and including the hamlet of Dunsby, comprises 2430 acres by measurement. Since the improvements of the last century; and the introduction of extraneous manures, the soil, formerly poor, has been much enriched, and the church and village which had fallen into decay, have been rebuilt: freestone of the upper oolite formation is quarried. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Anwick, and the rectory of Dunsby united, valued in the king's books at £9. 8. $11\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £580; patron, Marquess of Bristol. The church, a very substantial structure, was rebuilt in 1814, at the cost of two individuals.

BRAUNSTON, anciently BRANDESTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of DAVENTRY, hundred of FAWSELEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Daventry; containing 1469 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 2962 acres, and the small brook Leam separates it from Warwickshire; the road from Daventry to Coventry, forming part of the Holyhead road, passes through it; and the Oxford and Grand Junction canals unite in the parish. The village, which once consisted of two detached portions, called Great and Little Braunston, commands, from the brow of a steep declivity, an extensive opening into Warwickshire. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £31. 2. 11.; net income, £837; patrons, Principal and Fellows of Jesus' College, Oxford: about 390 acres of land were assigned in lieu of tithes, in 1766, and there is an excellent glebe-house, lately erected. The church is in the decorated English style, consisting of a nave, north and south aisles, and a chancel, with a handsome square embattled tower, crowned with pinnacles at the angles, and surmounted by a crocketed octangular spire, rising to the height of 150 feet: standing on a bank, it forms a fine feature in the country, and is visible for many miles round. There are places of worship for Calvinistic Baptists and Wesleyans; and a national school is supported partly by an endowment of £29 per annum, arising from land bequeathed by Mr. William Makepeace, in 1733. A pit on the side of the old road to Daventry has produced a large number and variety of organic remains, and an almost complete series of rocky stratifications; and some very scarce plants have been found. Dr. Edward Reynolds, Bishop of Norwich, and an able political writer, was incumbent of the parish.

BRAUNSTON, or BRANSTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and soke of OAKHAM, county of RUTLAND, 2 miles (S. W.) from Oakham; containing 443 inhabitants. It comprises between 1500 and 2000 acres, of which the greater portion is arable; the soil is various, but chiefly clay, of inferior quality. An act of parliament was passed, in 1801, for inclosing the waste lands. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Hambleton: the church is a small neat edifice. A rent-charge of £5 for the instruction of children, was given by Augustine Burton, in 1614.

BRAUNSTONE, a chapelry, in the parish of GLENFIELD, union of BLABY, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Leicester; containing 195 inhabitants. This place, which is separated from the parish of Aylestone by the river Soar, comprises about 1700 acres, of which the soil is partly clay, and partly of lighter quality, forming good arable and pasture lands, and the surface pleasingly diversified with hill and dale. The chapel is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

BRAUNSTONE-FRITH, an extra-parochial district, in the union of BLABY, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from Leicester; containing 7 inhabitants.

BRAUNTON (St. BRANNOCK), a parish, in the union of BARNSTABLE, hundred of BRAUNTON, Braunton and N. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from Barnstaple; containing 2274 inhabitants. The parish, which is supposed to derive its name from that of its patron saint, comprises about 10,500 acres, and is bounded on the west by the Bristol Channel, and on the south by the navigable river Taw, at the mouth of which is a lighthouse. A tract of land, comprising about 900 acres, and formerly overflowed by the sea, is considered the richest in the county: there is a mine of manganese. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 3. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £450; patron and appropriator, Dean of Exeter. There is a place of worship for Independents. A free school was founded by the Rev. William Chaloner, in 1667, the endowment of which was augmented by Arthur Acland, Esq., in 1690, and the income is now £75; there is also a charity school with £4 per annum, arising from land. The remains of some ancient chapels exist.

BRAWBY, a township, in the parish of SALTON, union of MALTON, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from New Malton; containing 218 inhabitants. This place is situated at the confluence of the Seven and Dove rivers with the Rye, and comprises by computation 1080 acres of fertile land. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £13. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BRAWITH, with KNAYTON, a township, in the parish of LEAKE, union of THIRSK, wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, N. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Thirsk; containing 404 inhabitants. It is situated on the east bank of the small river Codbeck, and the two townships together comprise about 1390 acres. Brawith Hall is a neat mansion, the property of the late Mr. Consett, who, in 1839, bequeathed his extensive estates to his nephew, named Preston, then eleven years of age, but to accumulate in the hands of trustees until 1860.

BRAXTED, GREAT (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of WITHAM, N. division of ESSEX, 2 miles (E. by N.) from Witham; containing 410 inhabitants. Tiptree Heath, which takes its name from the manor belonging to an ancient priory here, which was given to Cardinal Wolsey for the endowment of his two colleges, originally formed part of the great forest of Essex; it is now inclosed. A fair for cattle and toys is held on the 25th of July. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19, and in the patronage of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for £600, and the glebe comprises 65 acres. The church is a small ancient edifice, with a tower surmounted by a shingled spire, and is seated on an eminence commanding an extensive prospect: it displays some remains of Norman architecture. There is a parochial school. A priory of Black canons, in honour of St. Nicholas, was founded at Tiptree, in the parish, in the reign of Edward I., which, at the time of its dissolution, had a revenue of £22. 6. 4.

BRAXTED, LITTLE (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union and hundred of WITHAM, N. division of ESSEX, 1 mile (E.) from Witham; containing 126 inhabitants. It comprises an area of about three miles in circumference, and formed, at the time of the Norman survey, part of the private estate of the Bishop of London. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 6. 8., and in the gift of Sir W. Rush: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £153, and the glebe consists of 7 acres. The church is an ancient edifice, with a circular chancel. The poor have some small bequests.

BRAY (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of COOKHAM, hundred of BRAY, county of BERKS; containing, with that part of the town of Maidenhead which is in the parish, 3728 inhabitants. This place is by some considered to occupy the site of the Roman station Bibracte: it now forms part of the royal demesne, being included within the liberty of Windsor Forest, and enjoys some privileges, among which is exemption from toll in the adjacent market-town. The manor-house of Ockwells, an ancient structure, was a hunting-seat of King Henry III., and subsequently the property of the family of Norreys, who had also two other manors in the parish. The house was built by Sir John Norreys, in the reign of Edward IV.: in the hall is a large bay window, filled with coats of arms in stained glass, in fine preservation, among which are those of Henry III. and his queen Margaret, the abbey of Abingdon with the mitre, and of the Norreys family several times repeated. The site of the present manor-house of Creswell, now called Philberts, was formerly occupied by a magnificent palace, inhabited by Nell Gwynne, mistress to Charles II. Fuller, in his Worthies, relates a story of a vicar of this parish, who unhesitatingly conformed to every change of religion that took place during the reigns of Henry VIII. and his three immediate successors, being steady in the exercise of one principle only, which was, to live and die "Vicar of Bray." The parish comprises by measurement nearly 10,000 acres. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £25. 4. 4½.; net income, £500; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Oxford: in 1814, land was assigned in lieu of vicarial tithes. The church is a spacious edifice, with a tower on the south side, and contains some ancient memorials of the family of Norreys. A school for boys was founded by William Cherry, Esq., who endowed it with £500, to which Townley Ward, Esq. gave £100 three per cents.; and there is also a national school for girls at Bray Wick, endowed with £16 per annum by the late Whitshed Keene, Esq., of Hawthorn Hill. Jesus' Hospital was founded in 1627, by William Goddard, Esq., for forty poor persons, six of whom must be free of the Fishmongers' Company, under whose management it is placed; attached is a chapel. Sir John Norreys, in 1605, gave eighteen parcels of land, with tenements, which are assigned rent-free to the poor.

BRAY-EATON.—See EATON, BRAY.

BRAY, HIGH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BARNSTAPLE, hundred of SHERWILL, Braunton and N. divisions of DEVON, 7 miles (N. by W.) from South Molton; containing 314 inhabitants. It comprises 3790a. 2r. 25p., of which 1447 acres are arable, 533 meadow and pasture, 311 wood, and 1400 common land. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 6. 8., and in the patronage of T. P. Acland, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £360, and there are 89½ acres of glebe.

BRAYBROOK (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MARKET-HARBOROUGH, hundred of ROTHWELL, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 2½ miles (S. E.) from Harborough; containing 420 inhabitants. The parish is a mile from the road between Harborough and Kettering, which bounds it on the north; and comprises by computation 2778a. 2r. 39p., of which 2543 acres are pasture, 215 arable, and 20 plantation; the soil is of first-rate quality, and watered by numerous streams; and the village is very healthy. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £23. 6. 10½.; net income, £600; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. Field: there are 313 acres of glebe, and a spacious house. The church is a very handsome edifice, in the decorated English style, consisting of a nave, north and south chancel, and two aisles; in the south chancel is an elaborately wrought monument to Sir Nicholas Griffin. There is a place of worship for Baptists. Braybrook gives the title of Baron to the family of Neville-Griffin.

BRAYDESTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLOFIELD, E. division of NORFOLK, ½ a mile (S.) from Blofield; containing 126 inhabitants. It comprises about 700 acres, of which 378 are arable, and 139 marsh land, and is bounded on the south by the navigable river Yare, from the valleys of which the land rises in gentle acclivities: the soil varies from a fine (in some places stiff) brick earth to a light sand; the prospects from the high land over the vale of the Yare are much admired. The Norwich and Yarmouth railway passes through the parish. The living is a discharged rectory, united to that of Strumpshaw, and valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.: the church, which is chiefly in the perpendicular style, consists of a nave and chancel, with a square tower. The ruins of another church, dedicated to St. Clement, were pulled down about twenty-five years ago. Three Roman urns, containing calcined bones, were found in digging a sand-pit near the site of the demolished church.

BRAYDON, a hamlet, in the parish of PURTON, union of CRICKLADE and WOOTTON-BASSET, hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, Cricklade and N. divisions of WILTS, 4½ miles (S. S. W.) from Cricklade; containing 60 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £55, and the vicarial for one of £50.

BRAYFIELD, COLD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2¾ miles (E. by N.) from Olney; containing 83 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Lavedon. As a commutation in lieu of tithes, land and a money payment were assigned in 1801.

BRAYTOFT (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, Wold division of the wapentake of CANDLESHOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Spilsby; containing 235 inhabitants. It comprises 1815a. 2r. 26p., and is situated on the road from Spilsby to Burgh and Skegness: by a drainage navigation which approaches within three miles, corn may be forwarded to the market at Boston. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 3. 6., and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £322. 18., payable to the incumbent, and one of £18. 7., belonging to an impropriator; the glebe consists of 31½ acres. The church is built chiefly of brick: the nave is supported by five pointed arches, springing from octangular pillars, and surmounted by a row of clerestory windows, and above the arch, which opens into the chancel, is a painting of the Spanish Armada; the font is ancient, and adorned with escutcheons emblazoned with devices representing the Saviour's passion; the east end of each aisle is taken off by screen-work for a chapel; the porch was rebuilt in 1715, and the tower in 1747. A national school for several parishes is chiefly supported by subscription. The family of Braytoft resided here in 1281; their ancient residence was taken down in 1698. Braytoft was the birthplace of the late Rev. T. Scott, M.A., author of a very copious Biblical Commentary, and various other publications of considerable merit.

BRAYTON, with ASPATRIA, a township, in the parish of ASPATRIA, union of WIGTON, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 9 miles (N. N. E.) from Cockermouth; containing 988 inhabitants.

BRAYTON (St. Wilfrid), a parish, in the union of SELBY, Lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK; comprising the townships of Barlow, Brayton, Burn, Gateforth, Hambleton, and Thorpe-Willoughby; and containing 1974 inhabitants, of whom 307 are in the township of Brayton, 1 mile (S. W.) from Selby. The parish comprises by measurement 10,690 acres, of which 660 are woodland, and is partly skirted by the river Ouse, and intersected by a canal which connects that river with the Aire; the soil is principally of a sandy nature, but its quality varies, and in some parts it is of a reddish cast; the surface is generally level. Brayton Barf and Hambleton Haugh, two noted hills, covered with trees, are conspicuous objects in this flat district, and are seen at a great distance. The Leeds and Selby railway passes through the parish, one of the intermediate stations being at Hambleton. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 14. 4½.; net income, £268; patrons, Hon. E. R. Petre and the Prebendary of Wistow, the former of whom is impropiator: the glebe comprises 140 acres, with a good residence. The church exhibits various styles of architecture: the tower is Norman, surmounted by an octagonal lantern, from which rises a lofty spire, in the later English style; the south doorway, and the arch leading into the chancel, are Norman, highly enriched; the chancel is in the decorated, and the nave in the later, English style. At Barlow, three miles from the parish church, is a small chapel, a plain brick building, rather ancient; and there is also a chapel of ease at Gateforth, built in 1825, a white brick edifice, and cruciform, erected at the expense of Humphrey Osbaldeston, Esq.

BREADSALL (All Saints), a parish, in the union of SHARDLOW, hundred of APPLETREE, though locally in that of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 3 miles (N. E. by N.) from Derby; containing 620 inhabitants. This place was, for several centuries, the property of the ancient family of the Harpurs, now the Crewes, of whose mansion there are still some picturesque remains near the church. A house of friars Eremites, afterwards converted into a priory of Augustine monks, was established at an early period, as is supposed by some member of the Dethic family; its revenue at the Dissolution amounted to £18. 0. 8.; the remains, still called the Priory, were converted into a residence. The parish is situated on the North-Midland railway, the Derby and Eaton canal, and the road to Chesterfield, and comprises by measurement 1002 acres of fertile land: there are large quarries of coarse grit-stone. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £28. 2. 8½.; net income, £580, arising from land, allotted in lieu of tithes, in 1815; patron, Sir G. Crewe, Bart. The church is a large handsome structure, with a lofty spire, in the early and decorated English styles, and having a fine Norman arch at the principal entrance; it contains some rich specimens of carved oak, and an ancient stone font; on the south side of the chancel is a monument to the memory of Dr. Erasmus Darwin, the poet, who died here in 1802. A school, erected in 1788, is endowed with £10. 8. per annum, arising from a bequest of £200 by the Rev. John Clayton, in 1745; and another school, for girls, is chiefly supported by the rector. There are remains of a Roman encampment; and in a field belonging to the glebe is a very perfect tumulus, crowned by a venerable oak. John Hieron, a non-conformist divine of some celebrity, was incumbent from 1644 till 1662.

BREAGE (St. Breage), a parish, in the union of HELSTON, W. division of the hundred of KERRIER and of the county of CORNWALL, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Helston; containing 6166 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Falmouth to Penzance, and is bounded on the south by the sea for nearly seven miles; it abounds in mineral ores, chiefly copper and tin, with some lead and manganese, and zinc. The largest tin-mine in the county, Wheal Vor, is situated here; it employs from 1200 to 1500 persons, and the expense of working it averages £40,000 per annum. Stone of good quality for building is found in abundance, and Tregonning Hill consists almost entirely of granite, which is extensively quarried; there is also a quarry of china-stone. The number of acres is estimated at 7000, the greater portion of which is profitable land, and in good cultivation. A fair for cattle is held on the 18th of June, and there is also another fair. The living is a vicarage, with those of Cury, Germoe, and Gunwalloe annexed, valued in the king's books at £33, and in the patronage of the Crown; impropiators, Mrs. Richards and others. The great and small tithes of Breage have been commuted for rent-charges of £628. 10. and £510 respectively. The church is a handsome structure, in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and other denominations of Methodists; and two national schools, one at Wheal Vor, and one adjoining the vicarage, both supported by subscription. There are some remains of Pengersick Castle, consisting of a tower of several stages, with a good stone staircase, supposed to have been built in the time of Henry VII. The ancient manor-house of Godolphin, now the property of the Duke of Leeds, confers the title of Baron upon the lords of that name.

BREAMORE (St. Mary), a parish and liberty, in the union of FORDINGBRIDGE, Ringwood and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Fordingbridge; containing, with the tything of Outwick, 647 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Avon, which forms its eastern boundary; and comprises 2651a. 21p., of which 1244 acres are arable, 306 water mead, 311 dry pasture, 358 woodland, 231 down, and 85 homesteads, orchards, &c. The living is a donative; net income, £540; patron and impropiator, Rev. T. C. May. A priory of Black canons, dedicated to St. Michael, was founded by Baldwin de Redveris, and his uncle Hugh, about the end of the reign of Henry I.: at the time of its suppression, the establishment consisted of a prior and nine canons, and the revenue amounted to £200. 5. 1.

BREANE (St. BRIDGET), a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of BEMPSTONE, but locally in the hundred of BRENT with WRINGTON, E. division of SOMERSET, 8½ miles (W.) from Axbridge, and 16 (N.) from Bridgwater; containing 126 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1126*a. 3r. 4p.*, chiefly arable, and is bounded on the north by Uphill bay and the Bristol Channel, on the west by Berrow bay, and on the east by the river Axe. The sea, in 1825, broke through a natural barrier of sand hills, and inundated a considerable portion of the land. The village is situated on the margin of Berrow bay. Breane Down is an elevated peninsula, extending a mile into the sea, and strikingly conspicuous from various parts of the surrounding country. A great quantity of samphire is gathered on the shore, and pickled previously to being conveyed to the inland towns. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 0. 5., and in the patronage of W. Willis, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £260, and there are more than 25 acres of glebe.

BREARTON, a township, in the parish of KNARESBOROUGH, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 3½ miles (N. N. W.) from Knaresborough; containing 201 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1560 acres. A chapel of ease was built in 1836, containing 150 sittings, of which 110 are free, in consideration of a grant of £100 from the Incorporated Society. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £150. 6. 8., payable to the prebendary of Beechill and Knaresborough, with the exception of 6*s. 8d.*, which are payable to the vicar of the parish.

BREASTON, a chapelry, in the parish of SAWLEY, union and hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 7¾ miles (E. S. E.) from Derby; containing 712 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Risley. A rent-charge of £361, payable to the prebendary of Sawley, has been awarded as a commutation for the tithes, and there is a glebe of nearly 24 acres. The chapel is dedicated to St. Michael.

BRECCLES, LITTLE, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of SHROPHAM, W. division of NORFOLK. This was anciently a distinct parish, the living of which, a rectory, was annexed to Shropham before 1332: the church has long been demolished.

BRECKENBROUGH, with NEWSHAM, a township, in the parish of KIRBY-WISK, union of THIRSK, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, 4 miles (W.) from Thirsk; containing 181 inhabitants. It is situated in a fertile and well-wooded district, near the confluence of the Swale and Wisk rivers, and includes within its limits Breckenbrough House, a handsome mansion, with pleasant grounds and thriving plantations. The family of Lascelles anciently had a castellated residence here, of which there are now no remains.

BRECKLES (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of WAYLAND, W. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Watton; containing 160 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1600 acres, the property of Sir E. Kerrison, Bart. There was formerly a lake of 100 acres, which was drained about 40 years since, and now affords rich pasturage. The Hall is an ancient mansion of brick, in the Elizabethan style. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 17. 11.; net income, £41, arising from augmentations by Queen Anne's Bounty; patron and impropiator, Sir E. Kerrison. The church is an ancient structure in the early and later English styles, with a circular tower, and contains a large Norman font, elaborately sculptured. A school is supported by Lady Kerrison.

BREDBURY, a township, in the parish and union of STOCKPORT, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 2¼ miles (N. E. by E.) from Stockport; containing 3301 inhabitants. The Peak Forest canal passes in the vicinity. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £156. 1. 1.

BREDE (St. GEORGE), a parish, in the union of RYE, partly in the hundred of STAPLE, but chiefly in that of GOSTROW, rape of HASTINGS, E. division of SUSSEX, 4 miles (S. by W.) from Northiam; containing 1151 inhabitants. This parish, distinguished by the divisions of Broad Oak and Brede High, is bounded on the south by the Brede channel, which is navigable for barges, and over which is a bridge; and is intersected, in the eastern portion, by the road from London to Rye. It comprises 4834*a. 3r. Sp.*, of which 1960 acres are arable, 1091 pasture, and 1316 woodland; the soil is favourable for the growth of hops, which are successfully cultivated. The village is pleasantly situated on a hill, commanding extensive and finely varied prospects. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 10. 5.; net income, £702; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. W. Maher. The church, chiefly in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower surmounted by a low spire, consists of a nave, aisles, and chancel, the whole thoroughly repaired in 1840. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans at Broad Oak; and a national school is supported by subscription. The union workhouse is in the parish. Dr. Horne, Bishop of Norwich, in 1790, was a native of Brede.

BREDENBURY, a parish, in the union of BROMYARD, hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Bromyard; containing 46 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 540 acres, of which the soil is of a clayey nature, and the surface for the most part hilly; it is intersected by the road from Leominster to Bromyard. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £2. 1. 10½., and in the patronage of Charles Dutton, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £53. 9., and the glebe consists of 50 acres, of which 30 are in the parish of Bockleton. The church is a neat small edifice.

BREDFIELD (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of WOODBIDGE, hundred of WILFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 2½ miles (N.) from Woodbridge; containing 468 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 1067 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, with which Lowdham and Pettistree were consolidated in 1827, and valued in the king's books at £4. 4. 2.; it is in the patronage of the Crown. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £318, and the glebe comprises 27 acres. There is a small place of worship for Baptists; and a school is supported by subscription.

BREDGAR (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union and hundred of MILTON, lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from Sittingbourne; containing 540 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 1727 acres, of which 1072 are arable, 400 pasture, 180 woodland, and 21 hops; the soil is in many parts a good marl, and the substratum chalk; the surface is undulated, and in the higher grounds, crowned with woods. A fair is held on the first Monday after the 29th of June. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9; patron and impropiator, Sir E. C. Dering, Bart.: the great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £375, and the vicarial for one of £210, and there are about 2 acres of glebe, with a house and garden. The church, which was built about five centuries ago, is partly of Norman architecture, and, prior to the Dissolution, had a small college attached to it: it is endowed with land for repairs. A Methodist meeting-house was erected about 1800. William Thatcher, in 1718, gave £100, which sum, with £30 subscribed, was invested in land, now yielding a net rental of £18. 12., devoted to parochial instruction.

BREDHURST (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of HOLLINGBOURN, hundred of EYHORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from Chatham; containing 131 inhabitants. The ancient village is said to have stood at a short distance, near a wood, where several wells are still visible. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Rector of Hollingbourn, and endowed with the tithes, which have been commuted for a rent-charge of £130: there are 9 acres of glebe. The church is a small edifice, consisting only of one aisle and a chancel, with a tower surmounted by a low spire: adjoining it is a small ruinous chapel, in the early English style, formerly the burial-place of the family of Kemsley. There are a small dissenters' place of worship, and a national school.

BREDICOT (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of PERSHORE, Lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 3 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Worcester; containing 53 inhabitants, and comprising 378 acres. The Birmingham and Gloucester railway passes to the east of the church. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 18. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £120; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Worcester.

BREDON (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of TEWKESBURY, chiefly in the Middle, but partly in the Upper, division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 3 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Tewkesbury; containing, with the chapelries of Norton and Cutsdean, and the hamlets of Bredon, Hardwick with Mitton, Kinsham, and Westmancote, 1567 inhabitants. This place was given by Ethelbald, King of Mercia, previously to the year 716, to his kinsman Eanulph, in order that he might found a monastery here, in honour of St. Peter, which, previously to the Conquest, was annexed to the bishopric of Worcester. The parish comprises by computation between 5000 and 6000 acres, and is situated on the road between Tewkesbury and Pershore; the river Avon, which is navigable for small boats, separates it from Gloucestershire; the soil is in general strong, producing good wheat and beans. The Birmingham and Gloucester railway passes through the village, where there is a second-class station. From the summit of Bredon Hill (on which are quarries of stone suitable for building) is a pleasing view of the vales of Evesham and Cotswold, including the winding course of the Severn: the top of the hill is crowned by a Roman encampment, with a double trench. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £72. 11. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £1498, arising from 1100 acres of glebe, assigned in lieu of tithes, under inclosure acts, in 1775 and 1808; patron, Jacob Jones, Esq.: there is a glebe-house in good repair. The church has some specimens of Norman architecture, with a fine spire, and contains a monument to the memory of Dr. Prideaux, who was dismissed from the bishopric of Worcester during the parliamentary war. There are chapels of ease at Cutsdean and Norton; and at Milton are the ruins of a chapel. In the hamlet of Westmancote is a place of worship for Baptists. The Blue-coat school was founded in 1718, by William Hancocke, Esq., who endowed it with lands, which, with accumulations, now produce £115 per annum; and a national school is supported by subscription. An almshouse for eight single women was founded, in 1696, by Catherine Reed, who endowed it with tithes, since exchanged for 138 acres of land, worth £143 per annum.

BREDWARDINE (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of HAY, hundred of WEBTREE, county of HEREFORD, 11 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Hereford; containing 409 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2200 acres, and is intersected by the road from Hay to Hereford. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 8. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £190; patron and incumbent, Rev. N. D. H. Newton; impropiator, Sir Velters Cornwall, Bart. A school is supported by an endowment called "Jarvis's charity." On the banks of the Wye, about two miles above Moccas, are the ruins of Bredwardine Castle, in which the gallant Capt. Cornwall was born. A monument in Westminster Abbey, erected, by a vote of both houses of parliament, records his heroic achievements.

BREDY, LITTLE, a chapelry, in the parish of LONG BREDY, union of DORCHESTER, hundred of UGGSCOMBE, Dorchester division of DORSET, 7 miles (W. by S.) from Dorchester; containing, with the hamlet of Kingston-Russell, 281 inhabitants, of whom 196 are in Little Bredy. The chapelry comprises by measurement 1637 acres, and is situated one mile south of the London mail road, through Dorchester, to Exeter: the soil is generally calcareous, and the surface hilly: there is a large quarry, from which the stone for erecting Winterborne Abbey was obtained. The river Brede, or Bride, has its source in a small lake here, called Bride Head, near which is a Druidical circle of stones. The chapel of ease, dedicated to St. Michael, was rebuilt about 15 years since: the chancel of the former edifice remains, and, from its style of architecture, is supposed to have been erected in the thirteenth century. Here is a school on the national plan, for the instruction of the children of the poor.

BREDY, LONG (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of DORCHESTER, hundred of EGGERTON, Dorchester division of DORSET, 8 miles (W.) from Dorchester; containing, with the hamlet of Upper Kingston, 340 inhabitants. It comprises 2060*a.* 1*r.* 19*p.*, of which 1213 acres are meadow and pasture, 764 arable, and 7 woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 12. 1., and in the patronage of R. Williams, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £460, and there are 75 acres of glebe. A school-house was erected, in 1829, at the cost of the rector, the Rev. Lundy Foot.

BREEDON (St. MARY AND St. HARDULPH), a parish, in the union of SHARDLOW, hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 5½ miles (N. E. by N.) from Ashby-de-la-Zouch; containing 2625 inhabitants, and comprising the township of Staunton-Harrold, the hamlets of Tonge and Wilson, and the chapelry of Worthington with Newbold liberty. The parish comprises by computation between 2000 and 2500 acres: the soil in general is very strong, and chiefly calculated for growing wheat, and the surface is hilly. The village is situated at the foot of an elevated limestone rock, on the summit of which stands the church: there are considerable lime-works. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 2. 8.; net income, £205; patron and impropiator, Earl of Stamford and Warrington: in 1759, land and money payments were assigned in lieu of all tithes for the manor. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. By deed, in 1736, Francis Commins gave £300 towards the support of a school for boys; and Eliza Commins £583 for a girls' school, on which endowments a national school has been established. A cell for Black canons was founded, soon after 1144, by the prior and monks of St. Oswald, at Nosthall, to whom the church and some lands here had been given by Robert Ferrers, Earl of Nottingham; its revenue, at the Dissolution, amounted to the sum of £25. 8. 1.: the church which belonged to it is now the parochial church.

BREEM, a chapelry, in the parish of NEWLAND, union of MONMOUTH, hundred of St. BRIAVELL'S, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 5½ miles (W. by S.) from Blakeney; containing 441 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £52; patron, Vicar of Newland. The chapel is dedicated to St. James.

BREIGHTMET, a township, in the parish and union of BOLTON, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2¼ miles (E. by N.) from Great Bolton; containing 1309 inhabitants. In 1729, William Hulton gave land for the erection of a school-house, which was built in 1750, and is endowed with about £30 per annum.

BREIGHTON, a township, in the parish of BUBWITH, union of HOWDEN, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 5¼ miles (N. W. by N.) from Howden; containing 204 inhabitants. The village lies on the eastern bank of the river Derwent, opposite to the ferry of Menthorpe. The farm of Gunby, in the parish, was given by the Conqueror to his standard-bearer, Gilbert Tison, whose posterity took the name of De Guneby, and resided in the old mansion-house for many generations.

BREINTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the hundred of GRIMSWORTH, union and county of HEREFORD, 2 miles (W.) from Hereford; containing 362 inhabitants. This place comprises 1539*a.* 28*p.*, of which about two-thirds are arable; on the south it is bounded by the river Wye. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £1. 10., and in the patronage of the Dean of Hereford; appropriators, the Dean and Chapter, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £210, and those of the incumbent for one of £135. Schools are partly supported by endowments.

BREMILL (St. MARTIN), a parish, chiefly in the union of CALNE, but partly in that of CHIPPENHAM, hundred of CHIPPENHAM, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, 4¼ miles (E.) from Chippenham; containing 1550 inhabitants. This parish comprises by computation 6000 acres: the soil is chiefly a sandy loam; the surface is partly hilly, and partly a fine vale; and facilities of communication are afforded by the Wilts and Berks canal. The Roman Watling-street passed through the parish, and in the vicinity is the course of the ancient rampart Wansdyke. Avebury, a celebrated British temple, supposed to have been raised in honour of Teutates, their chief Celtic deity, and Tan-hill and Silbury, two lofty eminences appropriated to the performance of their pagan rites, are situated within a short distance: on Tan-hill a fair is held on Aug. 6th. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, with Highway annexed, valued in the king's books at £15. 15.; net income, £406; patron, Bishop of Salisbury. Under an inclosure act, in 1775, land and a money payment were assigned to the impropiator in lieu of tithes on certain lands in the parish: there are about 230 acres of glebe, with a residence. The church is a venerable and interesting edifice, with a massive square tower, adorned with battlements and pinnacles: between the aisle and chancel is a handsome rood-loft, beautifully carved: the chancel contains several monuments, and in the churchyard are numerous epitaphs written by the vicar, the Rev. Mr. Bowles, the poet, who, in 1827, published a description of the parish. There is a Moravian establishment at Tytherton. At the hamlet of Studley was a Roman station, supposed by Mr. Bowles to have been an outpost to the more important station of Verlucio, the site of which was ascertained, by Sir Richard Colt Hoare, to be near Wanshouse, about four miles distant: numerous coins, chiefly of Constantine, and British earthenware, have been dug up. Maud Heath, in 1478, gave land and houses in trust for keeping in repair an ancient paved footway between Bremhill and Chippenham, the produce of which being greater than the outlay, a considerable fund has accumulated: on the summit of Wick Hill, and on an eminence near Chippenham, being the two extremities of the road, are upright stones, commemorative of the bequest; and midway, on the banks of the Avon, is an interesting monument, with a sun-dial, on the sides of which are monitory inscriptions in Latin. Near the church are the ivy-mantled remains of a portion of the tenements belonging to the grange of the abbot of Malmesbury.

BREMILHAM, or COWICH, a parish, in the union and hundred of MALMESBURY, Malmesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of WILTS, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Malmesbury; containing 47 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Hon. and Rev. R. Bowles: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £106.

BRENCHLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of TONBRIDGE, hundred of BRENCHLEY and HORSEMONDEN, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Lamberhurst; containing 2472 inhabitants. It abounds with iron-ore, and there are some mineral springs, similar in their properties to those of Tonbridge. A cattle fair is held annually at the hamlet of Matfield Green. The South-Eastern railway passes through the parish. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 18. 9.; net income, £749; patron and proprietor, G. Courthorpe, Esq. The church is an ancient cruciform structure, built chiefly of sandstone, with a lofty tower. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists.

BRENDON (ST. BRENDON), a parish, in the union of BARNSTAPLE, hundred of SHERWILL, Braunton and N. divisions of DEVON, $15\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Ilfracombe; containing 271 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 4., and in the patronage of John Knight, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £167, and there are 50 acres of glebe.

BRENKLEY, a township, in the parish of DINNINGTON, union and W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 56 inhabitants. It lies above three miles north-east from Ponteland, and nearly a mile west from the great post road; and is one of six townships formed by an act of parliament into the parish of Dinnington, and of which one has been taken from the parish of Newburn, and five have been taken from that of Ponteland, the latter now consisting of ten, instead of, as formerly, fifteen townships. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges, amounting to £150. 6. 5., of which £141. 2. 1. are payable to Merton College, Oxford, and £9. 4. 4. to the vicar of Ponteland.

BRENT, EAST (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of BRENT with WRINGTON, E. division of SOMERSET, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Axbridge; containing, with the hamlets of Edingworth and Rooksbridge, 849 inhabitants. This place appears to have been the scene of various military transactions at an early period; and on the summit of a lofty conical hill, termed Brent Knoll, are vestiges of a large double intrenchment, within which, and at the base of the hill, numerous Roman relics have been found. The West Saxons are also supposed to have occupied this position, in their contests with the Mercians; and it is related that Alfred defended himself here against the Danes. A plot of ground to the south retains the name Battleborough, probably from some battle having been fought upon it. The parish is situated on the road from Bridgwater to Bristol, and near the Bristol and Exeter railway, and comprises by computation 3000 acres. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £30. 11. 3.; patron and proprietor, Bishop of Bath and Wells, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £90, and the vicarial for £690; the glebe comprises about 70 acres. The church is a very ancient structure, with a tower and spire, together 130 feet high; at the east end of the north aisle is a handsome painted window. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school is supported by subscription. Cornua ammonis and other fossils have been found. Here was a cell to the abbey of Glastonbury.

BRENT-ILLEIGH, ELEIGH, OR ELY (ST. MARY), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union of COSFORD, hundred of BABERGH, W. division of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Lavenham; containing 289 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 1597 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of Dr. Browne: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £480, and the glebe consists of 9 acres. At the end of the chancel of the church, an apartment was built by Dr. Colman, Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, in which he placed a parochial library; and Edward Colman, Esq., endowed an almshouse, for six widowers and six widows. A school is supported by subscription.

BRENT, SOUTH (ST. PATRICK), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union of TOTNES, hundred of STANBOROUGH, Stanborough and Coleridge, and S. divisions of DEVON, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Ashburton; containing 1237 inhabitants. It is beautifully situated on the river Avon, which pursues its course for nearly six miles within the limits of the parish; the number of acres is about 10,000, of which upwards of 6000 are inclosed, and in a high state of cultivation, and the remainder chiefly common lands. The higher grounds are remarkably picturesque, affording fine prospects over Torbay and Plymouth Sound. The manor anciently belonged to the abbot of Buckfastleigh, who possessed the power of inflicting punishment for capital crimes. Tin-works, now discontinued, were formerly carried on: here is a small establishment for spinning and carding wool; and slate is quarried to a considerable extent. Fairs for cattle are held on the last Tuesday in April and September. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the great tithes, and valued in the king's books at £29. 14. $4\frac{1}{2}$.; patron, Rev. N. Cole: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £965, and the glebe comprises about 30 acres, with a house. The church is an ancient structure. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. A school has a small endowment; and there are various bequests for charitable purposes, amounting to about £100 per annum.

BRENT, SOUTH (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of BRENT with WRINGTON, E. division of SOMERSET, 6 miles (S. W. by S.) from Axbridge; containing 1074 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the Bristol and Exeter road, comprises by measurement 3533 acres, including 84 acres of roads; the soil is very rich, and the surface flat, with the exception of a high hill called Brent Knoll, where was anciently a Roman encampment. There is a canal from Highbridge, distant about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles hence, to Glastonbury; and the Bristol and Exeter railroad intersects the parish. Fairs for sheep and horned-cattle are held on the second Monday in July, and second Monday in October. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £25. 17. $8\frac{1}{2}$.; patron and proprietor, Archdeacon of Wells. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £780, of which the vicar receives £689, and the appropriator £91; the glebe consists of about half an acre, on which is the vicarage-house. In the church is a monument to the memory of Captain John Somerset, a zealous royalist in the time of the civil war. There is a parochial school; also a place of worship for Bryanites. A few fossils have been found.

BRENTFORD, a market-town, and the head of a union, comprising Old Brentford, in the parish of EALING, Kensington division of the hundred of OSSULSTON, and New Brentford, in the parish of HANWELL, hundred of ELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, of which it is the county town, 7 miles (W. by S.) from Hyde-park Corner, on the great western road; New Brentford containing 2174 inhabitants, and Old Brentford, 5058. This place, formerly called Brainforde, takes its name from an ancient ford on the small river Brent. In 1016 Edmund Ironside, having compelled the Danes to raise the siege of London, pursued them to this place, where they were routed with great slaughter. A chapter of the Order of the Garter was held here in 1445; and, in the 25th of Henry VI., an hospital, for a master and several brethren, of the Nine Orders of Angels, was founded in a chapel beyond the bridge, at the western end of the town, once known as West Brentford: the revenue appears to have been £40, and the site was granted to Edward, Duke of Somerset, in the 1st of Edward VI. In 1558, six Protestants were burnt here at the stake, on account of their religious tenets. In the great civil war this place was the scene of a battle, in which the royalists, though victorious, were obliged to retire from the field, by the sudden arrival of a strong reinforcement to the enemy from London. For his services in this battle, which occurred on the 12th of November, 1642, Patrick Ruthen, Earl of Forth, in Scotland, was created an English peer, by the title of Earl of Brentford, which title was subsequently conferred, by William III., upon Mareschal Schomberg, who accompanied him to England at the Revolution. Several skirmishes also took place in 1647, between the royal guards stationed here and the parliamentary troops quartered at Hounslow.

The town consists of one street, more than a mile in length, paved, and lighted with gas, under an act of parliament obtained in 1825, and amended in 1842. The river Thames runs parallel with the high street, and over it, at the eastern extremity of the town, is a handsome stone bridge leading to Kew: the Brent, uniting the Grand Junction Canal with the Thames, crosses it on the west, and over this is a neat stone bridge, erected by the county in 1825, replacing one of great antiquity, at one time supported by a toll levied upon Jewish passengers exclusively. There are a large malt-distillery, an extensive brewery, and a soap-manufactory; but the chief trade of the town is derived from its situation on the great western road (now much diminished, however, by the construction of the Great Western railway), and from the union of the Grand Junction canal with the Thames. The market is on Tuesday; and fairs are held on May 17th, 18th, and 19th, for cattle, and Sept. 12th, 13th, and 14th, for toys and pedlery. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty-session for the division every alternate week; and a court of requests for the recovery of debts under 40s., the jurisdiction of which extends over the hundred of Elthorne and Spelthorne, is held here during the summer half year, and during the winter at Uxbridge. The parliamentary elections for the county take place at New Brentford, for which the town is a polling-place. The LIVING of New Brentford is a perpetual curacy; net income, £283; patron, Rector of Hanwell. The chapel, dedicated to St. Lawrence, with the exception of the tower, was rebuilt of brick in 1762: annexed to it is the residence of the minister. The chapel of Old Brentford, dedicated to St. George, was rebuilt in 1770, by subscription, and is a chapel of ease to the vicarage of Ealing: the living was augmented in 1842 with £48 per annum by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans. A charity school for boys, established by subscription, in 1703, was endowed by Lady Capel, in 1719, with the twelfth part of an estate, yielding at present £37. 10. per annum: the endowment, enlarged by subsequent benefactions, produces an annual income of £143. There is likewise a national school, partly supported by an endowment. Mrs. Mary Spencer, in 1658, gave a rent-charge of £6 for apprenticing children; for which purpose also, in 1692, Lord Ossulston bequeathed £100, producing £5. 14. per annum. The poor law union of Brentford comprises 10 parishes or places, and contains a population of 37,054. Several human skeletons have at various times been dug up in the neighbourhood.

BRENTINGBY, a chapelry, in the parish of WYFORDBY, union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 2½ miles (E. by S.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 54 inhabitants. The chapelry comprises about 600 acres; the soil is partly a cold clay, and partly of much richer quality; the pasturages are luxuriant. The Melton-Mowbray and Oakham canal passes through the district. The chapel is an ancient structure, dependent on the church of Wyfordby.

BRENT-TOR (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and hundred of TAVISTOCK, Tavistock and S. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (N.) from Tavistock; comprising 750 acres, and containing 169 inhabitants. This place partly derives its name from its situation on a lofty eminence or tor, which, differing materially in its strata from all other tors on Dartmoor Forest, is by geologists supposed to have been originally a volcanic eruption. The small river Lid runs through the parish, in which are also a fine sheet of water, called Stowford Lake, and some mines of manganese. The village is built on the acclivity of the eminence, and the church, occupying its summit, forms a conspicuous landmark to vessels entering Plymouth harbour. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £60; patron and impropiator, Duke of Bedford. National schools have been established.

BRENTWOOD, a district chapelry, in the parish of SOUTH WEALD, union of BILLERICAY, hundred of CHAFFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 11 miles (S. W.) from Chelmsford, and 18 (E. N. E.) from London, on the road to Norwich; containing 2362 inhabitants. The name, which is of Saxon origin, signifies a burnt wood; the woods which previously occupied the site having been burnt down. The hamlet comprises by computation 395 acres. The town is pleasantly situated on a commanding eminence, and consists principally of one street; the houses are in general ancient and irregularly built; the inhabitants are supplied with excellent water from wells. Races take place occasionally on a common near the town. There are cavalry barracks at Warley, about a mile and a half distant. Here is a large ale and porter brewery, and malting-establishment, established about 30 years since; the produce is chiefly for home consumption, and about 5000 quarters of malt are annually sent to London. The Eastern-Counties railway runs near the town. The market, lately revived, is on Saturday; the fairs are on July 18th and Oct. 15th, for horses and cattle. Courts leet and baron are held by the lord of the manor of South Weald. Petty-sessions for the division take place here every Thursday; and the assizes were formerly held here. Part of the old townhall has been converted into shops. The LIVING is a perpetual curacy; net income, £124, with a residence; patron, Christopher T. Tower, Esq. The chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, was originally founded early in the thirteenth century, by David, Abbot of St. Osyth, and is now used for a national school, a new church having been erected by a grant from the Incorporated Society, and by subscription; it is a plain edifice, with lancet windows, and a district has been assigned. There is a meeting-house for Independents, and the Roman Catholics have chapels at Pilgrim Hatch and Thorndon Hall. The free grammar school was founded and endowed, in 1537, by Sir Anthony Browne, Knt., and is open to all boys residing within three miles of Brentwood; the income arising from the endowment is £1452, which, according to the intention of the founder, is paid to the master, subject to an allowance of £10 per annum each to five alms-persons, and to the expense of keeping the school premises and almshouses in repair. An exhibition of £6 per annum to Caius College, Cambridge, was founded by Dr. Plume, with preference to Chelmsford, Brentwood, and Maldon. The Roman station Durositum is supposed to have been situated in the vicinity.

BRENZETT (St. EANSWICH), a parish, in the union of ROMNEY MARSH, partly in the hundred of ALOESBRIDGE, but chiefly in the liberty of ROMNEY MARSH, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Romney; containing 228 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1768*a.* 2r. of marshy land, subject to flood. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 18. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £73; patron and impropiator, Rev. W. Brockman, as lessee of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is an ancient edifice, with a tower surmounted by a spire. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BROCK, ST. (St. BREOKE), a parish, in the union of ST. COLUMB-MAJOR, hundred of PYDER, E. division of CORNWALL, 1 mile (W. S. W.) from Wadebridge; containing 1733 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 6875 acres, of which the soil is generally shelly, and the surface hilly, with some large coppice woods in the valleys. It is situated on the road between Launceston and Falmouth, and on the river Camel, by which it is bounded on the north and east, and over which is a handsome bridge of 16 arches. The river is navigable for two miles above Wadebridge; and a railway has been completed to Bodmin and Simonward, with branches to Ruthyn Bridge and Wynford Bridge. There are iron-mines at Pawton, which are worked, and an iron-foundry; copper has been found, but not of such quality as to pay the expense of raising it; slate is obtained for building purposes. Fairs are held on March 2nd, May 12th, June 22nd, and October 10th. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £41. 10. 10., and in the patronage of Sir W. Molesworth, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £966. 4. 11., and the glebe consists of about 83 acres, with a residence in good repair. In the church are some old monuments of the Tredenick and Vyal families, now extinct. There are a chapel of ease at Wadebridge; and places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, and Bryanites. A school is supported by subscription. Dr. Hall, who was Bishop of Exeter in the reign of Charles I., held the living here in commendam. On the summit of an eminence which commands an extensive view of the coast, are the remains of an ancient cromlech.

BRERETON with SMETHWICK (St. OSWALD), a parish, in the union of CONGLETON, hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 3 miles (N. E. by N.) from Sandbach; containing 666 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 4200 acres, and is situated on the road from London to Liverpool, and the Manchester and Grand Junction branch railway. The ancient residence of the Lords Brereton, from whom the place derived its name, is a fine old mansion in good preservation. Fairs for cattle are held in the second weeks in April and November. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 0. 5., and in the patronage of Mrs. Edward Royds; net income, £681: the glebe consists of about 20 acres. The church, a stately structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a roof of carved oak, was formerly a chapel of ease to the church at Astbury, but was made parochial, and endowed with the tithes of Brereton cum Smethwick, in the reign of Henry VIII.; it contains monuments of Lord Brereton and the Smethwick family. An additional church was consecrated on the 21st of Aug. 1837. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a school has an endowment of £4 per annum.

BRESSINGHAM (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of GUILTCROSS, hundred of DISS, E. division of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Diss; containing 647 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2364 acres, of which 1569 are arable, 634 pasture, and 76 woodland; and is situated on the road from Thetford to Diss, and bounded on the south by the river Waveney, which separates it from Suffolk. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15, and in the patronage of the Duke of Norfolk: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £604. 16., of which £1. 10. are payable to the rector of Fersfield; there are 37 acres of glebe. The church was rebuilt, with the exception of the chancel, in 1527, having been commenced some time previously by Sir Roger Pilkington, Knt., lord of the manor; it is in the decorated style, and consists of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, with an embattled tower. The Rev. John Barker, in 1728, left land for the education of children; and, at the inclosure of the parish, 55 acres were allotted to the poor for fuel; the church land lets for £10 per annum. Conduit Meadow, in the parish, is so called from a spacious conduit, now in a ruinous state, constructed by Sir Richard de Boyland, to supply some baths, and an extensive moat which encompassed his grounds.

BRETBY, county of DERBY.—See BRADBY.

BRETFORTON (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of EVESHAM, Upper division of the hundred of BLACKENHURST, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Evesham; containing 511 inhabitants. The parish, situated on the border of Gloucestershire, which bounds it on the east and south, is intersected by the road from Evesham to Campden, and comprises by computation upwards of 1700 acres; the soil is various, but the greater part a stiff clay, and the surface is flat. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 5.; net income, £82; patron and incumbent, Rev. John Timbrill; impropiators, the Landowners. Land and a money payment were assigned to the vicar, in lieu of all tithes, in 1765; the glebe consists of 90 acres.

BRETHERDALE, a township, in the parish of ORTON, EAST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 3 miles (S. W.) from Orton; containing 82 inhabitants. The manor formerly belonged to Byland Abbey, Yorkshire, but at the Dissolution was purchased by the family of Wharton, and is now the property of the Earl of Lonsdale. A rent-charge of £22. 9. 10. has been awarded as a commutation for the vicarial tithes.

BRETHERTON, a township, in the parish of CROSTON, union of CHORLEY, hundred of LEYLAND, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 10 miles (N. N. E.) from Ormskirk; containing 833 inhabitants. A district church, consecrated by the Bishop of Chester in July, 1840, contains 400 sittings, of which 224 are free, a specific grant having been made by the Church Commissioners; net income of the incumbent, £120. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £370, of which £325 are payable to the rector of Chorley, and £45 to the rector of Croston. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a free school was built, in 1654, at the expense of James Fletcher, who endowed it with £230, to which various donations have since been added.

BRETSFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of WOLSTON, union of RUGBY, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Coventry; containing 148 inhabitants. The name is a corruption of Bradforde, and is derived from the breadth of a ford here. In the 11th of Henry III., Nicholas de Verdon, lord of the manor, obtained a special charter for a weekly market on Tuesday; and his descendant, Theobald, had the power of life and death both at this place and Brandon, with other privileges. Here was anciently a chapel, dedicated to St. Edmund, supposed by Sir William Dugdale to have been founded by one of the Turviles.

BRETENHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of THETFORD, hundred of SHROPHAM, W. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Thetford; containing 62 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 2000 acres, a portion of which is heath. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 12. 6., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £200, and the glebe comprises 18 acres. The church is in the decorated style, and consists of a nave only, the chancel, with the parsonage-house, having been burnt down in 1693: the entrance on the south is through a Norman doorway. Several Roman coins of Vespasian and other emperors, and urns, have been dug up.

BRETENHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of COSFORD, W. division of SUFFOLK, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Bildeston; containing 367 inhabitants. This place is supposed by some to have been the site of the Roman station Combretonium, which others have endeavoured to fix at Brettenham, in Norfolk, where Roman coins have been found; but the distances in the Itineraries justify neither of these suppositions. That station was most probably Burgh, near Woodbridge, where there are evident remains of a Roman post. The parish comprises by computation 1300 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 3. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £377.

BRETTON, MONK (St. PAUL), a district chapelry, in the parish of ROYSTON, wapentake of STAINCROSS, W. riding of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E.) from Barnsley; containing 1719 inhabitants. The chapelry includes Upper and Lower Cudworth, and comprises about 3809 acres, of which 2129 are in Monk-Bretton township, and are tithe-free. The place is intersected by the Barnsley canal and the North-Midland railway: the population has rapidly increased within the last ten years, and many of them are employed in linen-weaving and bleaching. A district church, dedicated to St. Paul, containing 700 sittings, half free, was built at a cost of £1200, defrayed principally by subscription, and was consecrated 9th June, 1840; it is in the Anglo-Norman style, built of stone, supplied from quarries here, and on a site given by Sir George Wombwell, Bart., lord of the manor: the living is in the patronage of the Vicar of Royston, with a net income of £150. A priory of the Cluniac order was founded here in the reign of Henry II., the remains of which may still be seen: at the Dissolution, its revenues amounted to £323. 8. 2. An almshouse, comprising six tenements, is supposed to have been founded by Dame Mary Talbot, in 1654; Sir George Wombwell allows 50s. annually to each, and repairs the buildings. The interest of £400 was left to poor persons by the Broadhead family, of which Sir Theodore H. Brinckman is the present representative.

BRETTON, WEST, a chapelry, partly in the parish of SANDALL MAGNA, Lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, and partly in the parish of SILKSTONE, wapentake of STAINCROSS, union of WAKEFIELD, W. riding of YORK, 6 miles (S. S. W.) from Wakefield; containing 564 inhabitants. This place, which is on the Wakefield and Denby Dale road to Manchester, is the property and residence of Thomas Wentworth Beaumont, Esq., lord of the manor, and comprises by computation 1992 acres, tithe-free, of which 760 are within the limits of the demesne and park of Bretton Hall, the spacious and elegant seat of the proprietor. The present hall was erected by Sir William Wentworth, Bart., in 1730, when the original mansion of the family, with the adjacent chapel, was taken down; considerable additions were made by the late Colonel Beaumont and his lady, after designs of Sir Jeffrey Wyatville, and many improvements have been completed by the present proprietor, who rebuilt all the out-offices and stables, in 1842: the Hall is situated on an eminence in the park, commanding an extensive view of the tastefully embellished demesne, and is in the Doric style of architecture. Henry VIII. and suite slept three nights in the old mansion; and the panels and chairs (the latter of oak, curiously carved), and draperies of his bed-room, were removed to the new Hall. The park is studded with valuable timber, and abounds with sylvan and undulating scenery, enlivened by the windings of the river Dearne, which flows through a picturesque valley, and in the southern part of the grounds expands into two beautiful lakes; the upper lake is called Virginia Water, and is surrounded by bold rocky banks, with drives and walks enriched by grottos and Virginian plants. The village is pleasantly situated and well built. The chapel is a handsome edifice in the Grecian style, built in 1737, by Sir William Wentworth, and the interior is neatly fitted up; it is the private property of Mr. Beaumont, who pays the chaplain, but it is open to the public. A school is partly supported by an annual donation of £25 from Mr. Beaumont.

BREWARD (ST.), or SIMONWARD (St. BRUARD), a parish, in the union of CAMELFORD, hundred of TRIGG, E. division of CORNWALL, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Bodmin; containing 724 inhabitants. The surface is boldly undulated, and the lofty hills of Rough Tor, contracted into Rowtor, and Brown Willy, which is esteemed the highest land in the county, are both within its limits. From the latter, which is 1368 feet above the level of the sea, a most extensive view is obtained over the English and Bristol channels; and on the summit of the former are the remains of an ancient building, supposed to have been a chapel, and a Logan stone. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter: the church is an ancient structure, partly Norman, and partly in the later style of English architecture. A school is chiefly supported by subscription. There are some circles of stones in the vicinity.

BREWERS, ISLE.—See ISLE-BREWERS.

BREWHAM-LODGE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of NORTON-FERRIS, E. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Bruton; containing 8 inhabitants. This place consists of one estate, comprising nearly 800 acres, and acquired its extra-parochial privileges from having been one of King John's hunting-seats, in memory of whom a wood in the vicinity retains the name of King's Wood. Alfred's tower was erected by Henry Hoare, Esq., in commemoration of a victory obtained here by that prince over the Danes; it is a triangular brick building, 155 feet in height, surmounted at each angle by a turret, one of which is surrounded by a gallery; and over the entrance is an inscription, recording the good qualities and noble exploits of that renowned monarch. About half a mile towards the north-east is a small oval encampment, called Jack's Castle, which is thought to be of Danish construction; and human bones, spears' heads, and urns containing the ashes of burnt bones, have been dug up in the neighbourhood, which was the scene of various conflicts between the Saxons and the Danes.

BREWHAM, NORTH and SOUTH (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of BRUTON, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 905 inhabitants, of whom 392 are in North Brewham, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Bruton. This place takes its name from the river Brew, and is divided into two distinct parishes, having one church: North Brewham comprises 2023a. 2r. 10p., of which about 100 acres are woodland; and South Brewham, 2661a. 2r. 30p., of which 1845 acres are pasture, 379 arable, and 437 wood. The soil is mostly clay, stony in some places, and in some parts tolerably good mould, but the land in general is poor; the surface is much diversified with hill and dale, and thickly wooded. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £102; patron and impropiator, Sir H. R. Hoare, Bart.: the tithes of North Brewham have been commuted for a rent-charge of £169. 2. The church is a neat edifice, lately repaired at a great expense; and in the churchyard are the shaft of an old cross, and two fine yew-trees. A national school in South Brewham is supported by voluntary contributions. A chapel formerly stood at North Brewham, the remains of which have been converted into a barn.

BREWHOUSE-YARD, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of RADFORD, S. division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM; containing 110 inhabitants. It adjoins the town of Nottingham.

BREWOOD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of PENKRIDGE, E. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 7 miles (N. by W.) from Wolverhampton, and 10 (S. by W.) from Stafford; comprising by survey 11,900 acres, and containing, with the liberty of Coven and the township of Brewood, 3641 inhabitants, of whom 2991 are in the township. This is a place of great antiquity, and Stukeley, in his Itinerary, speaks of it as "a village on the Penk, which they say has been an old city; on plowing the fields they frequently find Roman coins and other antiquities; in that great old city King John kept his court." It is about a mile south of the Roman Watling-street, which forms the northern boundary of the parish for upwards of three miles; it consists of several ranges of houses, and is paved, and well supplied with water from springs. The market, formerly held on Friday, has been discontinued, and the market-house pulled down; but a fair for live stock is held on the 19th of September. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire, and the Birmingham and Liverpool canals pass through the parish; and the Four Ashes' station on the line of the Grand Junction railway is about two miles distant. Here is a small manufactory of stock locks. Brewood is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests held at Wolverhampton for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15; patron and appropriator, the Dean of Lichfield: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £670. The church is a spacious and handsome edifice, in the later English style, with a fine spire. A chapel of ease has been erected within the last few years at Coven, by Edward Monckton, Esq.; it is of pointed architecture, and has been fitted up for divine service by subscription. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. The free grammar school is supposed to have been founded by Dr. Knightley, whose endowment, increased by subsequent benefactors, now produces about £412 per annum, and will shortly be still more augmented by a sale of mines. Dr. Hurd, Bishop of Worcester, who, with other distinguished persons, was educated here, appropriated; in the year 1800, two houses for the benefit of the school, and in 1827 it received a bequest of £1000 four per cents., pursuant to the will of Richard Hurd, Esq.; the system of education is strictly classical, but there is an English free school in connexion with it, and national schools are supported by subscription. A bank for savings has been established. The workhouse for the Penkrige union is situated in this parish. A small Benedictine nunnery, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, is first noticed in the time of Richard I.; at the Dissolution, its clear revenue was rated at £11. 1. 6. Chillington Hall, a noble mansion in the parish, is approached by a fine avenue of trees, nearly two miles long, in a direct line, and has a lake of about 100 acres; there are two Roman Catholic chapels on the estate, one at Birch, and the other at Black-Ladies. In the neighbourhood are two mineral springs, now disused.

BRIAVELL'S (ST.), a parish, in the hundred of ST. BRIAVELL'S, union of CHEPSTOW, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 8 miles (W. by S.) from Blake-ney; containing, with the castle, common, Hucknalls, and other extra-parochial portions, 1287 inhabitants. This is a place of considerable antiquity, having given name to the hundred; and Milo, Earl of Hereford, built a castle here in the reign of Henry I., as a frontier fortress against the Welsh: the north-western front, including two circular towers, now used as a prison for the hundred, is all that remains. Edward II. granted the inhabitants a charter for a weekly market, which has long been disused; and Edward III. exempted the burgesses from the payment of toll throughout the kingdom: this exemption is not now claimed, but the inhabitants still enjoy the right of cutting wood in the forest of Dean, which they form into hoops and other articles, and send to Bristol. The parish comprises by computation 3312 acres, of which 1477 are meadow and pasture, 1307 arable, 508 woodland, and 20 waste. There are several coal-works in the vicinity; and until lately a court was held for regulating matters in dispute among the miners, but an act was passed in 1842 for abolishing this court, and for the more easy and speedy recovery of small debts within the hundred. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Lidney: the appropriate tithes, belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Hereford, have been commuted for a rent-charge of £215, the vicarial tithes for one of £229, and the improper for one of £8. The church is a small cruciform edifice, principally in the Norman and early English styles. There is a national school.

BRICETT, GREAT (ST. MARY AND ST. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3½ miles (E. N. E.) from Bildeston; containing 214 inhabitants, and comprising 912*a.* 3*r.* 21*p.* The living is a perpetual curacy; net income £100; patrons and improprators, Provost and Fellows of King's College, Cambridge. A priory for Augustine canons was founded about 1110, by Ralph Fitz-Brien, in honour of St. Leonard, the possessions of which, on the suppression of alien priories, were given by Henry VI. to the Provost and Fellows.

BRICETT, LITTLE, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, 4½ miles (S. S. W.) from Needham-Market; containing 25 inhabitants. It was formerly a separate parish, but is now a hamlet to Ofhton: the living, a discharged rectory, was consolidated with the vicarage of Ofhton, when the church fell into decay, about the year 1503.

BRICKENDON, a liberty, in the parish of ALL SAINTS, HERTFORD, union, hundred, and county of HERTFORD, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Hertford; containing 757 inhabitants.

BRICKHILL, BOW (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2 miles (E.) from Fenny-Stratford; containing 566 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the Roman Watling-street, and comprises by computation 1550 acres, of which the soil is various, being sandy on the hills, and heavy clay in other parts: a very hard species of iron-stone is quarried for building, and many females and children are employed in making lace and plating straw. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 0. 2½., and in the patronage of Queen's College, Cambridge; net income, £370. Land and annual money payments were assigned, under an inclosure act, in 1790, in lieu of tithes; the glebe consists of 250 acres. The church was enlarged a few years since. Mr. Charles Purrett, in 1633, left several bequests for charitable purposes. There is a national school, and the poor have 198 acres of heath land. The remains of the Roman station Magiovirtum are still visible, and coins are frequently turned up by the plough.

BRICKHILL, GREAT (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Fenny-Stratford; containing 721 inhabitants. The London and Birmingham railway passes within about a mile and a half of the church. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 2. 11.; net income, £425; patron, P. P. Duncombe, Esq.: land was assigned, in 1771, in lieu of tithes, and other tithes have been recently commuted for a rent-charge of £80. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; and a sum of £5 is annually contributed by Mrs. Duncombe for instructing a few children.

BRICKHILL, LITTLE (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2 miles (E. S. E.) from Fenny-Stratford; containing 563 inhabitants. This place, which is situated on the great road to Holyhead, was, at an early period, of considerable importance, and received the grant of a market by charter dated in 1228, which was held on Thursday: a fair was at the same time bestowed, to be held on the festival of St. Mary Magdalene, and, by subsequent charter, another, on May 12th; the latter is still held, and there is also one on the 18th of Oct., but both are insignificant. The assizes were formerly held here, and for the last time in 1638; the gallows stood upon a heath about a mile distant, and between the years 1561 and 1620 the names of forty-two executed criminal offenders appear among the burials in the parochial register. The parish comprises by computation 1254 acres; the quality of the soil is various, being a strong clay on the level ground, and on the hills a light sand. The manufacture of plat and lace affords employment to about 200 persons. Prior to the inclosure, in 1796, the living was a discharged vicarage, which it is still considered to be, or will be after the next presentation, although at present designated a perpetual curacy; it is in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, as impropiator of the rectory, which is valued in the king's books at £9; net income, £119. Under the inclosure act, land and annual money payments were assigned, in lieu of tithes; the glebe consists of 58 acres. The church is an ancient structure of English architecture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and an endowment of £5 per annum is applied in teaching poor boys. Fine specimens of sulphate of lime have been found.

BRICKLEHAMPTON, a chapelry, in the parish of ST. ANDREW, PERSHORE, union, and Upper division of the hundred, of PERSHORE, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Pershore; containing 173 inhabitants. On the north, the parish is bounded by the river Avon, and it is intersected by the road between Evesham and Pershore; it contains 888 acres. The living, which is valued in the king's books at £2. 14. 2., is annexed to the vicarage of St. Andrew, Pershore: the chapel is dedicated to St. Michael.

BRICKLETON, a tything, in the parish of HURSTBOURN-TARRANT, union of ANDOVER, hundred of PASTROW, Kingsclere and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 145 inhabitants.

BRIDEKIRK (St. BRIDGET), a parish, in the union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND; comprising the townships of Bridekirk, Great and Little Broughton, Dovenby, Papcastle, Ribton, and Tallentire; and containing 2112 inhabitants, of whom 121 are in the township of Bridekirk, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Cockermouth. This parish, which takes its name from its patron saint, contains some quarries of limestone and white freestone, and extends about five miles along the northern bank of the river Derwent, near which the land is fertile; but a wet soil, incumbent on clay or limestone, prevails on its northern side. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Mrs. Dykes; net income, £137; impropiators, Mrs. Dykes, Earl of Lonsdale, William Brown and J. S. Fisher, Esqrs., and Captain Senhouse. The church is an ancient edifice, principally in the Norman style, but modernised a few years since, by the erection of a new tower, and the enlargement of several windows: it contains a singular font, which, according to Camden, was brought from the Roman station at Papcastle, exhibiting, in rude relief, various designs symbolical of the serpent and the forbidden fruit, the expulsion of Adam and Eve from Paradise, the baptism of Christ, &c., likewise a Runic inscription. Sir Joseph Williamson, secretary of state in the reign of Charles II.; and Thomas Tickell, the poet and essayist, born in 1686, were natives of this place, each during the incumbency of his father.

BRIDE (ST.) WENTLLOOG, a parish, in the union and division of NEWPORT, Upper division of the hundred of WENTLLOOG, county of MONMOUTH, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Newport; containing 247 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 1300 acres, chiefly rich moorland, and generally level; the river Usk runs to the east, and the Bristol Channel to the south. The living is a vicarage, with Coedkernew united, valued in the king's books at £4. 18. $1\frac{1}{2}$.; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Llandaff. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £62. 4., payable to the Bishop of Llandaff, and £41. 19. to the incumbent; the glebe consists of one acre.

BRIDE'S (ST.) NETHERWENT, a parish, in the union of CHERSTOW, Christchurch division and hundred of CALDICOT, county of MONMOUTH, 8 miles (E. by N.) from Newport; containing 179 inhabitants, of whom 128 are in the township. This parish, with the hamlet of Landevenny, comprises by admeasurement about 1000 acres, chiefly arable and wood; the land of Landevenny is chiefly pasture. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 16. 3., and in the patronage of Thomas Perry, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £148, and the glebe consists of 52 acres. The church is an ancient structure.

BRIDEFORD (St. THOMAS à BECKET), a parish, in the union of ST. THOMAS, hundred of WONFORD, Crockernwell and S. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Moreton Hampstead; containing 560 inhabitants. The rectory-house of Brideford was occupied by a detachment of parliamentary forces, previously to their encounter with the royalists at Bovey-Heathfield, in the vicinity. The parish is bounded on the north and east by the river Teign, and intersected in the northern part by the main road from Exeter to Moreton; the number of acres is 4100, by computation. The soil is various, though generally fertile, and the subsoil is interspersed with mineral produce; some shafts have been sunk for lead and for manganese, with every reasonable prospect of success; and there are quarries of good granite, which is obtained and wrought for various purposes. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 15., and in the patronage of Sir Lawrence Vaughan Palk, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £375, and the glebe consists of 238 acres, with a house. The church, a handsome edifice, in the decorated and later English styles, was greatly enlarged and embellished in the reign of Henry VIII., and has an elegant rood-loft, with a fine screen, and a richly carved pulpit; the chancel is of much earlier date. In the granite rocks, to the north-west of the parish, are some singular caverns; and various celts and ancient coins have been found.

BRIDDLESFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of ARRETTON, liberty of EAST MEDINA, Isle of Wight and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Newport. Here was formerly a chapel.

BRIDESTOWE (St. BRIDGET), a parish, in the union of OAKHAMPTON, hundred of LIFTON, Lifton and S. divisions of DEVON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Oakhampton; containing 1128 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3662 acres, of which 2337 are meadow and pasture, 1049 commons and moors, and 296 woodland; the soil is on a clay bottom, and the surface hilly, and intersected with some fruitful valleys; the tract of common was originally part of Dartmoor. The village is pleasantly situated on the mail road to Falmouth, and the surrounding scenery is enlivened by several seats. Fairs for cattle take place on the first Wednesday in June, and July 29th. The living is a rectory, with Sourton annexed, valued in the king's books at £32. 17. 11.; net income, £424; patron, Bishop of Exeter: the glebe consists of 60 acres, with a corps land annexed, comprising several estates, part of which has been disposed of to redeem the land-tax. The church exhibits some Norman details, and is approached by a stately avenue of lime-trees; the tower was rebuilt, in 1830, at an expense of £590, and is a handsome embattled structure. On the recent destruction of a very old church, which had been converted into a poor-house, a perfect Roman arch was rescued from the ruins, and placed at the entrance of the churchyard. A school is partly supported by subscription. In ploughing a field at Millaton, in the parish, a sepulchral urn of stone, with a human skull, and some silver coins of king Richard II., were discovered.

BRIDGE (St. Peter), a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of BRIDGE and PETHAM, lathe of St. Augustine, E. division of KENT, 3 miles (S. E. by S.) from Canterbury; containing 817 inhabitants. It comprises about 1152 acres; the surface is varied, and the soil in some parts is chalk, alternated with a rich and fertile loam. The village is situated on the mail road to Dovor, at the base of two considerable hills, and from the salubrity of the air, has much increased within the last few years, and become the residence of many respectable families. The river Stour passes through the parish. The living is a vicarage, annexed to that of Patricbourne: the church is principally in the Norman style, with a spire. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is chiefly supported by the vicar. The poor law union of Bridge comprises 22 parishes or places, and contains a population of 10,981; the workhouse is a plain brick building.

BRIDGE-END, a hamlet, in the parish of HORN-LING, union of BOURNE, wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN; containing 46 inhabitants.

BRIDGEFORD, GREAT, a hamlet, in the parish of SEIGHFORD, S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, union, and N. division of the county, of STAFFORD; containing 83 inhabitants.

BRIDGEFORD, LITTLE, a hamlet, in the parish of SEIGHFORD, S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, union, and N. division of the county, of STAFFORD; containing 154 inhabitants.

BRIDGEND, a hamlet, in the parish of BEXLEY, union of DARTFORD, hundred of LESSNESS, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT; containing 138 inhabitants.

BRIDGEHAM (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of GUILTCROSS, hundred of SHROPHAM, W. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (W. by S.) from East Harling; containing 328 inhabitants. It comprises 2702a. 28p., of which 1248 acres are arable, 426 meadow, 846 heath and furze, 75 sheep-walk, and 35 plantation. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 1. 0½., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £371, and the glebe comprises a little more than 15 acres. The church is chiefly in the decorated style, and consists of a nave and chancel, separated by a carved screen; the font is large and curiously sculptured. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school in connexion with the National Society was erected in 1840.

BRIDGEMERE, a township, in the parish of WYBUNBURY, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 7 miles (S. E.) from Nantwich; containing 219 inhabitants.

BRIDGENORTH, a borough and market-town, having separate jurisdiction, and the head of a union, locally in the hundred of STOTTESDEN, S. division of SALOP, 20½ miles (S. E.) from Shrewsbury, and 140 (N. W.) from London; containing 5973 inhabitants, but including the liberty of Romsley, in the parish of Alveley, part of the parish of Quatt-

Arms.

Malvern, and the parishes of Oldbury, Tasley, and Abbots-Astley, 7539. This place, anciently called Brugia, Brug, and (including Little Brug) Bruges, derives its name from a bridge over the river Severn, built by the Saxons, and which, after many sanguinary conflicts with the Danes, they finally destroyed, to prevent the future incursions of these marauders. Upon the erection of a new bridge, about a mile and a half to the north of the former, it obtained the appellation of Brug North, whence its present name is deduced. Bridgenorth is supposed to have been founded by Ethelfeda, daughter of Alfred the Great: it was afterwards enlarged by Robert de Belesme, Earl of Shrewsbury, who erected, or probably rebuilt, the castle, and fortified the town with walls and six strong gates, some portions of which are still remaining. On the earl's rebellion against his sovereign, Henry I., in 1102, the town and castle were besieged, and, after an obstinate defence, were surrendered to the victorious monarch, who gave them to Hugh de Mortimer, which grant was confirmed by Stephen; but it appears to have been little more than nominal, since that king appointed "Præpositi," or provosts, to collect the revenue for the crown. Mortimer having risen in rebellion against Henry II., that monarch laid siege to the castle, and nearly demolished it, and in this state it lay until the reign of John; he afterwards confirmed to the inhabitants all the privileges and franchises which they had enjoyed under Henry I. In 1216, King John passed a day in the town, on his march to Worcester, where he was soon afterwards interred; and in 1263, the place was taken by Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., Bridgenorth, being a royal garrison, was, in 1646, attacked by the parliamentarians, who gained an entrance through the churchyard, and, the royalists retiring into the castle, set fire to the town, which was nearly consumed. The parliamentarians having made the Church of St. Leonard their magazine, the royalists planted cannon on the round tower of the castle, and setting fire to the church, the flames spread to an adjoining college, and entirely destroyed it. The castle was now closely invested, but being strongly fortified both by nature and art, it sustained a siege of three weeks without receiving any material injury. The besiegers, despairing of success, had begun to undermine the rock on which it was built, when the garrison, having exhausted all their ammunition, capitulated on honourable terms, and retired to Worcester.

The town is most romantically situated on the banks of the river Severn, which divides it into two parts, called Upper and Lower. The Upper Town is built on the summit and steep acclivities of a rock, rising abruptly to the height of 180 feet from the western bank of the river, and presents an appearance singularly picturesque. Crowning the summit of the rock, at the southern extremity, are the small ruins of the square tower of the castle, declining considerably from the perpendicular line, and the handsome modern church of St. Mary Magdalene; and at the northern extremity is the venerable church of St. Leonard, with its lofty square embattled tower, crowned with pinnacles. Upon the castle-hill walk, and forming a conspicuous object, is the reservoir, a capacious flat square tank, supported on lofty pillars of brick, and assuming at a distance the appearance of a handsome portico. On the side of the rock rising from the river are several successive tiers of detached houses, intermixed with caverns and rude dwellings, and interspersed with gardens, shrubberies, and lofty trees. The walk round the castle-hill is defended by a palisade, and commands a most extensive view of the surrounding country, which abounds with picturesque scenery, being richly diversified by cultivated fields, well-watered meadows, wood-crowned eminences, and barren rocks. Several streets, containing well-built houses, lead from St. Mary's church into the High-street, parallel with which are others of a similar character. Over the river is a handsome stone bridge of six arches, leading into the Lower Town, the streets in which contain some modern and several ancient houses; among the latter is Cann Hall, a very antique structure in the Elizabethan style, wherein Prince Rupert resided, in 1642, when he addressed a letter to the jury empanelled for the choice of town officers, entreating them "to select such men for their bailiffs as were well affected to his Majesty's service." The town is partially paved, and the inhabitants are supplied with soft water from the river, and with spring water from Oldbury, at the western extremity of the town. The public library in St. Leonard's churchyard, a handsome octagonal brick building lighted by a dome, was founded by the Rev. Hugh Stackhouse, to whose memory a marble tablet has been erected over the fireplace: it was extended, by subscription, from a theological to a general library, and contained more than 4000 volumes; but is now chiefly restricted to theological works; and a new general library has been recently erected on the castle-hill. The theatre, a neat and commodious edifice of stone, was erected in 1824, on part of the site of the ancient moat of the castle, accidentally discovered. Races are held in July, on a race-course adjoining to the town.

The TRADE principally arises from the navigation of the river, which affords every facility for the conveyance of goods; but it has declined in consequence of the more certain transit by canals: some vessels are built; and a great quantity of malt of very superior quality, and of grain, is sent to various parts of the country. The iron-trade has greatly declined; but there is a foundry where a good deal of casting is done, and nails are made to a small extent: two large carpet-manufactories have been lately established, and there is a considerable manufactory for tobacco-pipes. The market, held on Saturday, is abundantly supplied with wheat, barley, and beans, to the growth of which the land in the neighbourhood is particularly favourable. The fairs are on the third Tuesday in Feb.; third Tuesday in March, for horned-cattle and sheep; May 1st, a pleasure and statute fair; third Tuesday in June, for wool and cattle; first Tuesday in Aug., for lamb's-wool and cattle; third Tuesday in Sept., for cattle, sheep, and cheese; Oct. 29th, a large fair for salt butter, cheese, hops, and nuts; and on the first Tuesday after the Shrewsbury December fair, which is a great fair for cattle and general merchandise.

Seal now disused.

Present Seal.

The town is a BOROUGH by prescription: the first charter respecting which there is any certainty was granted by King John, in the 16th of his reign, and subsequent charters were bestowed by Henry III. and VI. By the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76, the corporation now consists of a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors; the mayor is a justice of the peace, and there are thirteen other magistrates, appointed by a separate commission. A court of record, for the recovery of debts to any amount, is held before the recorder; and petty-sessions are held by the mayor and borough justices, once a fortnight. The municipal limits of the borough comprehend the parishes of St. Mary, St. Leonard, part of Quatford, and the liberty of Quat-Jarvis. The borough received the elective franchise in the 23rd of Edward I., and from that time has continued to return two members to parliament: the right of election was formerly vested in all the burgesses, whether resident or not, but is now, by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, confined to the resident burgesses within seven miles, and extended to the £10 householders. The mayor is returning officer. The borough was formerly co-extensive with the parishes of St. Mary and St. Leonard, comprising 1081 acres; but for parliamentary purposes now embraces 7358 acres. The town-hall, erected about the year 1646, is a spacious building of timber frame-work and plaster, supported on pillars and arches of brick, forming a covered area for the use of the market: above, is a large room, wherein the public business of the corporation is transacted, besides a smaller apartment, in which meetings of the council are held.

Bridgenorth comprises the parishes of St. Mary Magdalene and St. Leonard, containing, respectively, 2773 and 2997 inhabitants; and gives name to a royal peculiar, of which Thomas Whitmore, Esq., is lay dean. The living of St. Mary Magdalene's is a perpetual curacy; patron and impropriator, Mr. Whitmore, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £90. The church, formerly the chapel belonging to the castle, and exempted by King John from all ecclesiastical jurisdiction, was made parochial in the 4th of Edward III., and rebuilt of freestone, in 1792: it is a handsome edifice, in the Grecian style, with a lofty tower, surmounted by a cupola. The living of St. Leonard's is also a perpetual curacy; patron and impropiator, Mr. Whitmore, whose tithes have been commuted for £100. The church, once collegiate, was erected, in 1448, on the site of a structure raised in the reign of Richard I.: it was originally a magnificent edifice, comprising seven different chapels, the arches leading into which from the present nave, and now walled up, are still discernible. It suffered greatly while in the possession of the parliamentarians, during the civil war, and now consists only of a nave, one aisle, and a chancel. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans. The free grammar school was established in 1503, and has three exhibitions to Christ-Church College, Oxford, founded by Mr. Careswell, in 1689; the property, which is chiefly in land near the town, in 1820 produced an annual income of nearly £1500, subject to certain deductions. The Blue-coat charity-school, kept in an old castellated brick building, over one of the ancient gates, was instituted in 1720, and is supported partly by a small endowment arising from benefactions vested in the funds. There is also a national school, maintained by subscription. The hospital in St. Leonard's churchyard, for ten aged widows, was founded in 1687, by the Rev. Francis Palmer, rector of Sandby, in Bedfordshire; and the almshouses in Church-lane, endowed with estates producing £158 per annum, under the direction of the trustees of charities within the borough, are for twelve widows or single daughters of burgesses. The poor law union of Bridgenorth comprises 29 parishes or places, and contains a population of 16,118.

At the southern extremity of the High-street is part of an arch which formed the entrance to the castle, also some portions of the walls, which inclosed an area of fourteen acres; and at the northern extremity of the town, on the western bank of the river, are the remains of a convent of Grey friars, which have been converted into a malt-house: the great hall, or refectory, is still nearly in its pristine state, and the panelled oak ceiling, the stone fireplace, and many of the windows, though the lights are stopped with plaster, are still in entire preservation. About a quarter of a mile south of the Lower Town was an ancient hospital for lazars, converted, in the reign of Edward IV., into a priory, and now a private mansion. In making the shrubberies to the north of the house, in 1823, thirty-seven bodies were discovered lying in rows, within eighteen inches from the surface, having evidently been buried in winding sheets and without coffins: they were in good preservation, the teeth still retaining their enamel: some slight vestiges of the church may be traced in the walls of the out-buildings. There are also remains of several fortifications in the neighbourhood, it having been the scene of frequent battles between the Saxons and the Danes. About a mile south of the town, on the eastern bank of the river, is a large mount, with a trench on all sides except the west, on which it is defended by a rocky precipice overhanging the Severn, where Robert de Montgomery had a strongly-fortified palace. About half a mile eastward lay the ancient forest of Morfe, which, in Leland's time, was a "hilly ground, well wooded; a forest, or chace, having deer," and for which a forester and steward were appointed from the time of Edward I. to that of Elizabeth. The brother of King Athelstan is stated to have passed the life of a hermit here, and a cave in a rock, still called the Hermitage, is supposed to have been his solitary abode. On a portion of this tract are five tumuli in quincunx, under some of which the remains of human skeletons have been discovered. The sylvan features of the forest have long since disappeared, and the whole, comprising between 5000 and 6000 acres, was inclosed in 1815. Dr. Thomas Percy, Bishop of Dromore, in Ireland, and compiler of "Reliques of Ancient English Poetry," was born at Bridgenorth in 1728.

BRIDGE-RULE, a parish, in the union of HOLSWORTHY, partly in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON; Holsworthy and N. divisions of DEVON, and partly in the hundred of STRATTON, E. division of CORNWALL, 4 miles (W.) from Holsworthy; containing 497 inhabitants, of whom 276 are in the western or Cornwall portion, and 221 in the eastern or Devonshire portion. The parish, which comprises by computation 3600 acres, and is situated on the Tamar, derives its name from a bridge over that river, and from Ruald, or Reginald, lord of the manor soon after the Conquest. That part in Cornwall is intersected by the Bude canal, cut chiefly for the conveyance of sand to Launceston, the road from which place to Stratton also passes through it. The soil is various, about one-half being good arable and pasture land, and the remainder moor and marsh: the substratum is chiefly clay, with a deep mould above, where the soil is good; the surface, in general, is hilly. Stone is quarried for road-making and building purposes. A fair is held on the 21st of June. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £14; net income, £150; patron and incumbent, Rev. T. H. Kingdon; impropiators of the remainder of the great tithes, the Landowners. The land appertaining to the vicarage consists of about 160 acres, and an excellent glebe-house has just been finished. The church, which stands in Devonshire, has a tower cased with granite. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, a national school, and a house, called the Church-house, for the poor.

BRIDGE-SOLLERS (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of WOOLY, hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Hereford; containing 65 inhabitants. The parish comprises 725*a*. 9*p*., of which 360 acres are pasture, 355 arable, and 10 woodland. It is intersected by the river Wye, and partly bounded on the west by a portion of Offa's Dyke, which here abuts upon the left bank of that stream; and it is crossed from east to west by the road from Hereford to Kington. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £8. 10.: the whole tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £178. 4., of which £45 belong to Sir J. G. Cotterell, Bart., the patron, £23 to the Dean and Chapter of Hereford, and £110. 4. to the incumbent, who has also a glebe of an acre.

BRIDGETOWN, a township, in the parish of BERRY-POMEROY, union of TOTNES, hundred of HAYTOR, S. division of DEVON; containing 644 inhabitants.

BRIDGFORD, EAST (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BINGHAM, N. division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Bingham; containing 1110 inhabitants. Here was the ancient Margidunum of the Romans, numerous relics of whom have been discovered in the vicinity, particularly gold, silver, and brass coins of various emperors. Stukeley describes the place as lying within a mile of the ancient station, Ad Pontem, and adds, that "the Romans had a bridge across the Trent, with great buildings, cellars, and a quay for vessels to unload at;" and, near a place, called the Old-Wark Spring, were found, according to the same authority, "Roman foundations of walls, and floors of houses, composed of stones set edgeways into clay, and liquid mortar run upon them." The manor was given, after the Conquest, to Roger de Busli, who assigned the tithes of the Hall in Brugford to the priory of Blyth; and the estate was subsequently held, in succession, by the families of Carpenter, Biset, Caltoft, Brabazon, Basingburn, Deyncourt, and Botelar, the last of whom, in the 8th of Edward IV., gave their moiety to William, Bishop of Winchester, who bestowed it on Magdalene College, which he had founded at Oxford: the other moiety afterwards passed from Lord Sheffield to the Hackers, Chaworths, Scroopes, &c. The parish comprises by computation 1777 acres, and is bounded on the north by the Trent, and on the south by the Fosse road, leading from Newark to the Nottingham and Grantham road: the soil is loamy, intermixed with some good tillage and pasture land, and the surface hilly towards the north. The river affords facilities for the conveyance of coal, grain, and other articles; and the manufacture of cotton stockings and lace is carried on to a moderate extent. In the 35th of Edward III., a market was granted to be held on Tuesdays, and two fairs yearly; but no record exists of their having been held. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 8. 6½; net income, £752; patrons, President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. Under an inclosure act, in 1798, 284 acres of land were assigned in lieu of tithes; and there are 40 acres of glebe, and an excellent residence. The church was rebuilt about sixty years since, but considerably reduced from its former dimensions: it had previously much glass, embellished with the arms of lords of the manor: it has a square tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and two national schools have been built, chiefly at the expense of the rector, aided by the National Society and Magdalene College. At a place called Castle Hill, on the Fosse road, a Roman fibula, in good preservation, was found in 1828. There is an abundance of a fine species of gypsum.

BRIDGFORD, WEST (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of BASFORD, partly in the S. division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, but chiefly in the N. division of the wapentake of RUSHCLIFFE, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 2 miles (S. S. E.) from Nottingham; containing, with the hamlet of Gampston, 332 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the north by the river Trent, and intersected by the Grantham canal, comprises 1078a. 1r. 15p.; the soil is gravelly, with the exception of the rich meadow and grazing land on the banks of the Trent, and towards the hills, where it is strong and clayey; the surface rises gradually from the northern extremity of the parish to Edwalton, which bounds it on the south. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 14. 2., and in the patronage of John Musters, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £437. 10., and the glebe comprises nearly 34 acres, with a good house. The church is an ancient edifice, affording accommodation to 300 persons. At each of the hamlets of Basingfield and Gampston is a place, called Chapel Yard, the supposed site of an ancient chapel. The Rev. William Thompson, late rector, endowed a school with £20 per annum.

BRIDGHAMPTON, a tything, in the parish of YEOVILTON, union of YEOVIL, hundred of SOMERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 2½ miles (E. N. E.) from Ilchester; containing 87 inhabitants.

BRIDGWATER (St. MARY), a port, borough, market-town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction, and the head of a union, locally in the hundred of NORTH PETHERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 35 miles (S. W.) from Bristol, and 137 (W. by S.) from London; containing 10,449 inhabitants. This place derived its name from Walter de Douay, one of William's followers, on whom it was bestowed at the time of the Conquest, and was thence called "Burgh Walter" and "Brugge Walter," by which names, both signifying Walter's burgh, or borough, it is designated in various ancient records. William de Briwere, to whom it was granted in the reign of Henry II., built a castle in the following reign, combining the strength of a fortress with the splendour of a baronial residence, and obtained from King John the grant of a market and a fair. He founded the hospital of St. John, for a master, brethren, and thirteen poor persons of the order of St. Augustine, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £120. 19. 1¼.; and he also constructed the haven, and began to erect a stone bridge of three arches over the river Parret, which was completed by Sir Thomas Trivet, in the reign of Edward I. His son William founded a monastery for Grey friars, about 1230, and dedicated it to St. Francis. The barons, during their revolt against Henry III., took possession of the town in 1260. In the civil war of the 17th century, the inhabitants embraced the royal cause, and the castle being strongly fortified, the people of the surrounding district deposited therein their money, plate, &c.: the parliamentarians under Fairfax invested the town, and laid close siege to the castle, which was resolutely defended; but the town having been fired on both sides of the bridge, the garrison capitulated on terms of personal indemnity, and surrendered the fortress, with all the treasure in it, and 1000 prisoners, into the hands of the enemy. The castle, which had sustained considerable damage during the siege, was demolished in 1645, and the sally-port and some detached portions of the walls are all that now remain. In the reign of James II. the inhabitants favoured the pretensions of the Duke of Monmouth, who, on his arrival from Taunton, was received with great ceremony by the corporation, and proclaimed king. He remained for some time in the town, and having, from the tower of the church, reconnoitred the royal army encamped on Sedgemoor, he rashly resolved to hazard the battle that terminated so fatally to his ambition. His adherents in the town suffered greatly for their attachment to his cause, under the legal severity of Jeffreys, and the military executions of Kirke.

The town is pleasantly situated in a well-wooded and nearly level part of the county, the view being bounded on the north-east by the Mendip hills, and on the west by the Quantock hills: the river Parret divides it into two parts, connected by a handsome iron bridge of one arch. The western part is particularly clean. The streets are spacious and well paved, and the town is lighted with gas, under an act obtained in 1834; the houses, chiefly of brick, are uniform and well-built; and there is an ample supply of excellent water from springs. In the eastern part, termed Eastover, very great improvement has been effected. The foreign trade consists in the importation of wine, hemp, tallow, and timber; but the trade of the port is principally coastwise. Coal is brought free of duty from Monmouthshire and Wales, and is conveyed into the interior of the country by a canal to Taunton, Tiverton, Ilminster, and Chard, and by the river to Langport and Ilchester: in 1837, an act was obtained to enable the company of proprietors to continue the line of the canal below the town. That portion of the Bristol and Exeter railway, extending from Bristol to Bridgwater, was opened June 14th, 1841. The quay, which has been recently improved, is accessible to ships of 200 tons' burthen, and furnished with every appendage requisite for the convenience of commerce. Within a few years the trade of the port has been very much increased, and is still increasing. The principal source of employment is the making of bricks for general use, and scouring-bricks; the latter composed of a mixture of clay and sand deposited by the river: they are usually called Bath or Flanders' brick, and this is the only place in the kingdom where they are made. The market-days are Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday; Thursday's market is for cheese, corn and cattle, and is much frequented. The market-house, lately erected, is a handsome building, surmounted with a dome and lantern, and having a semi-circular portico of the Ionic order. The fairs are on the first Monday in Lent, July 24th, October 2nd (which continues for three days), and December 27th.

The first charter of INCORPORATION was bestowed in the reign of John, and others were subsequently granted by Edward II. and III., Henry IV., VII., and VIII., Mary, Elizabeth, James I., and Charles I. and II. Under the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., c. 76, the corporation now consists of a mayor, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors; the number of magistrates is 13. The borough first sent representatives to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time it has continued to return two members. The right of election was formerly vested in the inhabitants resident within the borough (which comprised 158 acres), paying scot and lot; but it has been extended, by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, to the £10 householders of an enlarged district, containing 742 acres, which, both for parliamentary and municipal purposes, forms the present borough: the mayor is the returning officer. The corporation hold quarterly courts of session for the trial of all offenders, except those accused of capital crimes; and a court of record for the recovery of debts to any amount. The summer assizes, alternately with Wells, and the summer-sessions for the county, are held here. The judges' mansion is a handsome modern edifice, containing apartments for the judges, the borough court-rooms, and a room for the grand jury. The borough prison contains distinct departments for debtors and criminals, the latter of whom are only confined here previously to trial, or to their committal to the county gaol. The LIVING is a vicarage, with the rectory of Chilton Trinity united, valued in the king's books at £11. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £342: the impropriation belongs to the corporation. The parish church is an ancient and handsome structure, with a square embattled tower and a lofty spire: it has a rich porch in the decorated style of English architecture, and the altar is embellished with a fine painting of the Descent from the Cross, found on board a captured French privateer, and presented by the Hon. A. Poulett. An additional church, containing 1093 sittings, of which 575 are free, in consideration of a grant of £500 from the Incorporated Society, was completed, at a cost of £3496, and consecrated in August 1837: the living is a perpetual curacy, and was augmented, in 1842, with £81 per annum by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. A third church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected in 1840, at an expense of £4000, and was consecrated on the 16th of June, in that year: it is a handsome structure in the later English style, and contains 1100 sittings: a good altar-piece was presented by Mr. Baker, an artist. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyans, Unitarians, and others. The free grammar school was founded in 1561, and endowed by Queen Elizabeth with £6. 13. 4. per annum, charged on the tithes, to which two donations of £100 each were added: it is under the control of the corporation, who appoint the master, and under the inspection of the bishop of the diocese. A school, now conducted on Dr. Bell's system, was established by Dr. John Morgan, in 1723, and endowed with 97 acres of land; the management is exercised by charity trustees appointed by the lord chancellor, under the Municipal Act. A school was also instituted in 1781, by Mr. Edward Fackerell, who endowed it with the dividends on £3000 in the three per cent. consols., and rents, producing together an annual income of £174, for educating the children of his relatives. There are likewise a national, and a Lancasterian, school. Alms-houses, originally endowed by Major Ingram, of Westminster, with £18 per annum, are now appropriated to the poor, and the endowment is distributed among poor widows. The infirmary, a commodious building, was established in 1813, and is supported by subscription. The union of Bridgwater comprises 40 parishes or places, and contains a population of 31,778. Admiral Blake was born here in 1599, and received the rudiments of his education in the grammar school.

BRIDLINGTON, or BURLINGTON (St. Mary), a parish, and the head of a union, in the wapentake of DICKERING, E. riding of YORK; comprising the townships of Bridlington, Buckton, Hilderthorpe with Wils-thorpe, and Sewerby with Marton, the hamlet of Easton, and the chapelries of Grindall and Speeton; and containing 6070 inhabitants, of whom 5162 are in the seaport and market-town of Bridlington with Quay, 3310 being in the town portion, and 1852 forming the Quay portion; 38 miles (E. N. E.) from York, and 201 (N.) from London. This place is supposed to be of great antiquity, and to have had a Roman station in its immediate vicinity, as well as to have been afterwards occupied by the Saxons. The manor was given by William the Conqueror to Earl Morcar, and subsequently, upon his attainder in 1072, to Gilbert de Gaunt, and is described in the Domesday survey as having a church and four burgesses. Walter, the son of Gilbert, greatly improved the town, and founded a magnificent priory for Augustine canons, dedicated to the Virgin Mary. Its commanding situation at the east end of the town gave it a fine prospect of the sea, but at the same time exposed it to the attacks of the enemy's ships, which frequently entered the harbour; it was, therefore, in 1388, by permission of Richard II., defended with fortifications, the only remains of which are an arched gateway, with a room over it, occasionally used as the town-hall, and some cells underneath, serving for a temporary prison. This priory flourished till the dissolution of monastic institutions, when William Wode, the last prior, was executed for high treason, in 1537, upon the charge of being concerned in a rebellion of the same nature as that denominated the "Pilgrimage of Grace." In 1643, the Queen of Charles I. bringing a supply of arms and ammunition from Holland, purchased with the crown jewels, narrowly escaped the squadron under Batten, the parliamentary admiral, who, after the Queen's debarkation, bombarded the town. In 1779, a desperate naval fight took place off the coast by moonlight, between the noted pirate, Paul Jones, and two British ships of war: the latter, after a sanguinary contest of two hours, were compelled to yield, being overpowered by a greatly superior force.

The town is pleasantly situated on a gentle acclivity, in the recess of a beautiful bay, about a mile from the sea, and consists principally of one long street, intersected by some smaller ones, irregularly formed and narrow; the houses are in general ancient and of good appearance, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. About a mile to the south-east is Bridlington Quay, a small, handsome, and well-built town. The town and quay are lighted with gas, from works erected midway between both in 1833, at the cost of £4000. This part of the town is much frequented for sea-bathing, and contains hot and cold baths fitted up for the accommodation of visitors. About a quarter of a mile from the quay is a chalybeate spring, in much repute for its medicinal properties; and, in the harbour, an ebbing and flowing spring was discovered in 1811, that furnishes an abundant supply of fresh water. The quay, which has been rebuilt, affords an agreeable promenade; and the two piers forming the harbour, stretching out a considerable distance into the sea, command extensive prospects, especially the northern pier, from which are fine views of Flamborough Head and Bridlington Bay. The harbour affords a retreat to numerous coasting vessels during contrary winds; and the bay, protected from the north-west winds by the coast, and from the north winds by the noble promontory of Flamborough Head, offers safe anchorage for ships in gales of wind. In 1837, an act was obtained for improving the piers and harbour, and for rendering it more commodious and safe as a harbour of refuge. The port is a member of the port of Hull. There is a small manufactory for hats: the trade in corn, malt, and ale, formerly flourishing, declined after the opening of the Driffeld canal to Hull, but subsequently the trade in corn improved, and in 1826 an exchange was built in the market-place, which is well attended: there are several windmills for corn, and a steam-mill for grinding bones for manure. The market is on Saturday; and fairs for cattle, linen, and woollen-cloth, &c., are held on the Monday before Whitsuntide and October the twenty-first.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy; net income, £138; patrons, Trustees of the late Rev. C. Simeon: the impropriation belongs to Mrs. Harland. Under an inclosure act, in 1768, land and a money payment were assigned to the impropiator in lieu of all tithes, with certain exceptions for the township of Bridlington. The church is a part of the ancient edifice belonging to the priory, formerly a magnificent structure of unrivalled beauty, and abounding with details of the most exquisite richness, but now lamentably mutilated; the central tower has been removed, the two towers at the western end have been made level with the nave, and the chancel and transepts destroyed: 210 additional seats have been added by a gallery and sittings underneath, at the cost of £300, of which sum the Incorporated Society gave £150. A handsome district church, erected at Bridlington Quay, on a site given by John Rickaby, Esq., was commenced in July 1840, and opened for divine service on May 23rd following, having been completed at a cost of £2300, raised partly by subscription, and partly by grants from the Incorporated Society, and Her Majesty's Commissioners for Building Churches: it contains 611 sittings, of which 320 are free; and the living is a curacy, in the patronage of the Incumbent of Bridlington. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and Independents. The free grammar school for twenty boys was founded by William Hustler, in 1637, and endowed with a rent-charge of £40. A considerable donation in land at Birdsall was given by William Bower, in 1670, for teaching twelve girls knitting: the mistress is allowed one-third of the endowment of £40 per annum. National schools for 250 children, and two infants' schools, are supported by subscription, and the poor have several considerable bequests. The union of Bridlington comprises 32 parishes or places, and contains a population of 13,059. Numerous fossil remains have been found; and in the vicinity the head of an enormous elk was discovered, the extremities of the horns being more than eleven feet apart. Sir George Ripley, a celebrated alchemist of the fifteenth century, author of a treatise on the philosopher's stone, and, in the earlier part of his life, a canon of Bridlington; William de Newburgh, an eminent historian in the reign of John; John de Bridlington, prior of the monastery, and author of "Carmina Vaticinalia," who died in 1379; and Richard Boyle, Earl of Burlington, a great patron of the fine arts, whose title was derived from this place, and became extinct at his death in 1753; were natives of Bridlington. Burlington now gives the title of Earl to Lord George A. H. Cavendish, created in 1831.

BRIDPORT (St. Mary), a sea-port, borough, market-town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction, and the head of a union, in the Bridport division of Dorset, $14\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W.) from Dorchester, and 134 (W. S. W.) from London, on the high road to Exeter; containing 4787 inhabitants. This was a town of some importance in the time of Edward the Confessor, and is mentioned in Domesday book as having a mint and an ecclesiastical establishment. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I. it was garrisoned by the parliament; but, not being a place of much strength, was alternately in the possession of each party. In 1685 it was surprised by some troops in the interest of the Duke of Monmouth, under Lord Grey, which were defeated by the king's forces, and twelve of the principal insurgents were afterwards executed. The town is situated in a fertile vale surrounded by hills, having on the west the river Bride, or Brit, from which it takes its name, and on the east the Asher, over which are several bridges: these rivers unite a little below the town, and fall into the sea at the harbour, about a mile and a half to the south of it. It is chiefly formed by three spacious streets, containing many handsome modern houses, and is partially paved, amply supplied with water, and well lighted with gas. A mechanics' institution, containing a reading-room, and lecture and class-rooms, has been built at the expense of H. Warburton, Esq., one of the late representatives of the borough. The TRADE of the port consists principally in the importation of hemp, flax, and timber, from Russia and the Baltic, and timber from America and Norway: there is also a considerable coasting trade, by which the adjacent towns are supplied with coal from the north of England, with culm from Wales, and with other articles of general consumption. Many coasting vessels, particularly smacks, for the trading companies of Scotland, are built at this port, and are considered remarkable for strength, beauty, and fast sailing. The harbour is situated at the bottom of the bay, which is formed by Portland Point, on the east, and the headlands near Torbay on the west, about one mile to the south of the town: the present communication is by an excellent road, and it has been in contemplation to cut a ship canal to the town; but, in consequence of the great expense, this design is for the present abandoned. An act for restoring and rebuilding it was obtained in the 8th of George I., the preamble to which recites that, by reason of a great sickness that had swept away the greater part of the wealthy inhabitants, and other accidents, the haven was choked with sand, and the piers had fallen into ruins: the work was begun in 1742, and, by the expenditure of large sums, great improvement was made. Another act was obtained in 1823, since which more than £20,000, raised on the security of the rates and duties, has been expended, so that the harbour is now perfectly safe and commodious. This is a bonding port for wines, spirits, hemp, iron in bars, timber, tallow, hides, and other articles: the amount of import duties is somewhat more than £6200 per annum. The principal articles of manufacture are nets, lines, small twine, shoe-thread, girth-webbing, cordage, and sail-cloth, for the use of the home and colonial fisheries, particularly for those of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, in which 10,000 persons are generally employed in the town and neighbourhood. In the reign of Henry VIII., the cordage for the whole of the English navy was ordered to be made at Bridport, or within five miles of it exclusively. The markets are on Wednesday and Saturday; and fairs are held on April 6th and Oct. 11th, for horses, horned-cattle, and cheese; and there is a smaller fair on Holy-Thursdays.

Old Corporation Seal.

The GOVERNMENT, until recently, was regulated by charter of incorporation, originally granted by Henry III., confirmed by Richard II., Henry VII., Edward VI., and Elizabeth, and renewed and extended by James I. and Charles II.; but by the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., c. 76, the corporation now consists of a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors; and the borough has been divided into the north and south wards, the municipal and parliamentary boundaries being the same: the number of magistrates is eight. The elective franchise was conferred in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time the borough has regularly returned two members to parliament. The right of election was formerly vested in the inhabitants of the borough (which comprised 92 acres), paying scot and lot, in number about 250; but the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, has extended it to the £10 householders of an enlarged district, containing by computation 388 acres. The mayor is returning officer. The town-hall is a handsome building of brick and Portland stone, containing, in the upper story, a large room for judicial and other purposes, a council chamber, town-clerk's offices, &c.: it was erected, in 1786, on the site of the ancient chapel of St. Andrew, in the centre of the town, by an act of parliament. There is also a lock-up house for the confinement of prisoners before committal. The LIVING is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 12. 3½.; net income, £166; patron, Earl of Ilchester. The church, which appears to have been erected in the reign of Henry VII., about 1485, is a handsome and spacious cruciform structure, chiefly in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, seventy-two feet high, rising from the centre, and crowned with pinnacles: it contains many interesting monuments; among which is an altar-tomb of William, son of Sir Eustace Dabridgecourt, of Hainault, related to Queen Philippa. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians. The free school was founded and endowed, in 1708, by Daniel Taylor, one of the Society of Friends. There are almshouses and other charities, under the management of trustees, appointed in 1837, by the court of chancery. A handsome stone building for the poor law union of Bridport, and a register and other offices, have been lately erected; the union comprises nineteen parishes and places, and contains a population of 16,695. Turtle stone and cornua ammonis are found in the neighbouring quarries, and copperas stones on the beach, about four miles west of the harbour. There were formerly several religious houses here, among which, were the priory of St. John, and the chapels of St. Leonard, St. Michael, and St. Andrew, of which there are not any remains. Bridport confers the titles of Baron and Viscount on the family of Hood.

BRIDSTOW (St. BRIDGET), a parish, in the union of Ross, Lower division of the hundred of WORMELOW, county of HEREFORD, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (W. N. W.) from Ross; containing 625 inhabitants. Wilton Castle, the ruins of which constitute an interesting object on the western bank of the Wye, in the neighbourhood, was anciently the baronial residence of the noble family of Grey, who assumed their title from this place: it was burnt by order of the royalist governor of Hereford, during the parliamentary war, and the walls are now overspread with ivy. The parish is bounded on the east by the river Wye, which is here crossed by a bridge leading to Ross; and it consists of 2196 acres, exclusively of 2 acres, extra-parochial, on which stand the ruins of the castle. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 3. $11\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Hereford. The tithes payable to the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol have been commuted for a rent-charge of £118. 6. 8.; those to the Bishop of Hereford, for one of £236. 16. 4.; and the vicarial for one of £230. 12.; the glebe consists of 52 acres. This place gives the title of Earl to the family of Egerton.

BRIERDEAN, or BURRADON, a township, in the parish of EARSDON, union of TYNEMOUTH, E. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 97 inhabitants. The place comprises an area of 515 acres, and contains quarries of excellent freestone; and an extensive colliery was opened some years ago by Lord Ravensworth and partners: the whole township belongs to the Ogle family, of Causey Park, near Morpeth. Here are the ruins of an ancient castle, of great interest to antiquaries, and very similar in appearance to Loch Leven Castle in Scotland, where Queen Mary was confined.

BRIERLEY, a township, in the parish and union of LEOMINSTER, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD; containing 89 inhabitants.

BRIERLEY, a township, in the parish of FELKIRK, wapentake of STAINCROSS, W. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Barnsley; containing 491 inhabitants. This township, which includes the hamlet of Grimethorpe, is situated on the road from Barnsley to Pontefract, and comprises about 2490 acres: a coal-pit is in operation. Grimethorpe Hall, an ancient mansion, had formerly a small Roman Catholic chapel, and extensive pleasure-grounds. The tithes of this place, with South Hiendly and Shafton, have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £831. 7. 11., of which £716. 19. 9. are payable to the Archbishop of York, and £114. 8. 2. to the vicar of the parish; and there is a glebe of $1\frac{1}{4}$ acre. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a parochial school has been built by subscription at South Hiendly. On the lofty hill of Ringstead is a venerable oak, measuring thirteen yards in circumference, the hollow of which is sufficient to admit of six men sitting round a table.

BRIERLY-HILL, a chapelry, in the parish of KING'S-SWINFORD, union of STOURBRIDGE, N. division of the hundred of SEISDON, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Stourbridge. The vicinity abounds with collieries and iron-works on a large scale; and steam-boilers, and various other heavy articles in iron, are made here. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Dr. Penfold, the impropiator, with a net income of £150: the chapel, now a district church, was erected in 1767. A national school for 500 children has been erected.

BRIERS, county of YORK.—See OWRAM, SOUTH.

BRIERSCLIFFE, with EXTWISTLE, a township, in the parish of WHALLEY, union of BURNLEY, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3 miles (N. E.) from Burnley; containing 1498 inhabitants. A district church, dedicated to St. James, has been erected, of which the living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £150.

BRIERTON, a township, in the parish of STRANTON, union of STOCKTON-UPON-TEES, N. E. division of STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Stockton; containing 27 inhabitants. The manor belonged from the earliest date of the records to the family of Graystock; it afterwards passed to the Dacres; and Lord William Howard, who married Elizabeth, younger sister and coheirress of George, Lord Dacre, seems to have had the Durham estates on partition with his brother, the Earl of Arundel, husband of Anne, the elder sister. The place was subsequently the property of the Blacketts.

BRIERY-COTTAGES, and GRETA-MILLS, an extra-parochial district, connected with the chapelry of St. JOHN CASTLERIGG, parish of CROSTHWAITE, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND; containing 100 inhabitants.

BRIERYHURST, or BREREHURST, a hamlet, in the parish of WOLSTANTON, union of WOLSTANTON and BURSLEM, N. division of the hundred of PREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Newcastle; containing 1518 inhabitants. This place comprises an area of 922 acres, and includes the eastern portion of Merocop, a rugged and lofty hill, dividing the counties of Stafford and Chester: the district is rich in mineral produce, and the hamlet contains mines of coal and iron-stone, which are extensively worked at Keds-grove and the immediate vicinity, and in the adjoining hamlet of Ranscliff. Several blast furnaces for smelting iron-ore have been erected by Thomas Kinnersly, Esq. A very handsome church has been built and endowed by Mr. Kinnersly, capable of accommodating 400 persons; it has a tower, in which are a peal of six bells, and a clock; and nearly adjoining are a handsome parsonage and a school-house, erected by the same gentleman: they are all situated in a secluded spot, embosomed in woods, and have a picturesque appearance. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BRIGG.—See GLANDFORD-BRIGG.

BRIGHAM (St. BRIDGET), a parish, comprising the borough and market-town of COCKERMOUTH, and the townships of Blindbothel, Brigham, Buttermere, Eaglesfield, Embleton, Gray-Southan, Mosser, Setmurthery, and Whinfell, in the union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND; and containing 7397 inhabitants, of whom 490 are in the township of Brigham, 2 miles (W.) from Cocker mouth. This parish is situated among the lakes Bassenthwaite, Buttermere, Crummock, and Loweswater, which, with the rivers Derwent and Maron, form its boundaries; and it is intersected by the Cocker, which falls into the Derwent at Cocker mouth. The surface is hilly, but, since the inclosure of the waste lands, the high grounds have been chiefly brought into cultivation: there are quarries of limestone, freestone, and blue slate, and a mine of coal has been opened. The village, which contains some respectable dwelling-houses, is built upon an eminence on the south bank of the Derwent, commanding a richly diversified prospect. The place is within the honour of Cocker mouth, and the copyhold tenants attend at the court of dimissions held there at Christmas, and at the courts leet of the Earl of Egremont as lord paramount, which are held at Easter and Michaelmas. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £20. 16. 0½.; net income, £190; patron and impropiator, Earl of Lonsdale, to whom, in 1813, land was assigned, in lieu of all tithes for the township of Brigham. The church, situated at the distance of half a mile from the village, has a handsome window of five lights in the decorated style, at the east end of the south aisle, a curious circular window of the same date, and a monumental arch richly canopied. A chapel of ease was erected by the Rev. Dr. Thomas, in 1840; and a school is endowed with a small portion of land allotted at the inclosure.

BRIGHAM, a township, in the parish of FOSTON-UPON-WOLDS, union of DRIFFIELD, wapentake of DICKERING, E. riding of YORK, 5½ miles (S. E.) from Great Driffield; containing 147 inhabitants. It is situated on the navigable river Hull, near Frodingham Bridge, and comprises by computation 1470 acres. Land and money payments were assigned in lieu of tithes, in 1766. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BRIGHOUSE, an ecclesiastical district, in the township of HIPPERHOLME-CUM-BRIGHOUSE, parish and union of HALIFAX, Upper division of the wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Halifax; containing 3200 inhabitants. This flourishing and rapidly increasing place, which has grown into some importance within a comparatively recent period, is beautifully situated on the road from Bradford to Huddersfield, and in the fertile valley of the Calder; the village, which is spacious and well built, contains many handsome houses, and the royal hotel and posting-house affords superior accommodation. In the immediate vicinity are pleasing villas and detached ranges of building, forming a considerable appendage to the village, and adding much to the appearance of the surrounding scenery. The manufacture of worsted and cotton goods is carried on, and several large worsted and cotton mills are in full operation; the manufacture of cards, used in the woollen, flax, and cotton trades, is also carried on to a great extent, and there are some flour-mills, and tanneries. In the neighbourhood are the valuable quarries called Cromwell Bottom, from which large quantities of building and flag stone are sent to various parts of the kingdom, by the Calder and Hebble navigation. The river Calder forms the southern boundary of the township, and at the village is a first-class station on the line of the Leeds and Manchester railway, with a spacious depôt for merchandise. A fair for cattle and pigs is held on the day after the festival of St. Martin, and a court baron annually by Sir George Armytage and others, as mesne lords of the manor, under the Duke of Leeds, who is superior lord. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, was erected, at an expense of £3200, principally a grant from Her Majesty's Commissioners, and was consecrated in 1830; it is a good edifice, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, crowned by pinnacles, and contains 1150 sittings, of which 500 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy, at present in the patronage of the Vicar of Halifax, with an income of £150, and a handsome parsonage-house, erected at a cost of £1600. Attached to the church is a large national school, an exceedingly appropriate structure, built at an expense of £800.

BRIGHTHAMPTON, a hamlet, in the parish of STANDLAKE, union of WITNEY, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, 4¾ miles (S. E. by S.) from Witney; containing 120 inhabitants.

BRIGHTHELMSTONE, or BRIGHTON (St. Nicholas), a sea-port, borough, market-town, and parish, in the hundred of WHALESBONE, rape of LEWES, E. division of SUSSEX, 30 miles (E.) from Chichester, and 54 (S.) from London; containing 46,661 inhabitants. This place, in the Saxon Bright-helmstun, in Domesday book Bristlemeston, and now, by contraction, generally Brighton, is supposed to have taken its name from the Saxon bishop, Brighthelme, who resided in the vicinity. It was anciently a fortified town of considerable importance, and by some antiquaries is thought to have been the place where Cæsar landed on his invasion of Britain; an opinion probably suggested by the quantity of Roman coins found in the town, the vast number of human bones, of extraordinary size, which have been discovered for nearly a mile along the coast westward, and the traces of lines and intrenchments in the immediate vicinity, bearing strong marks of Roman construction. From a fortified town, it was, by successive encroachments of the sea, reduced to a comparatively inconsiderable village; and soon after the Conquest was inhabited principally by fishermen. It was frequently assaulted by the French, by whom, in the reign of Henry VIII., it was plundered and burnt; and as a protection against their future attacks, fortifications were erected, which were subsequently repaired and enlarged by Queen Elizabeth, who built a wall, with four lofty gates of freestone, for its better defence. After the fatal battle of Worcester, Charles II. arrived at this place on the 13th October, 1656, and on the following morning embarked for France, in a small vessel belonging to the port, which landed him safely at Feschamp, in Normandy, and which, after the Restoration, was taken into the royal navy as a fifth-rate, and named the "Royal Escape." In the years 1665 and 1669, an irruption of the sea destroyed a considerable part of the town, and inundated a large tract of land adjoining; and in 1703, 1705, and 1706, the fortifications were undermined, and many houses destroyed by tremendous storms and inundations, that threatened its annihilation. In the reign of George II., Brighton began to rise into consideration as a bathing-place, from the writings of Dr. Russell, a resident physician, who recommended the sea-water here, as containing a greater proportion of salt than that of other places, and therefore more efficacious in the cure of scrofulous and glandular complaints: its progress was accelerated by the discovery of a chalybeate spring, in 1760, the water of which being successfully administered as a tonic, in cases of infirm or debilitated constitutions, made it the resort of invalids from all parts of the country; and it ultimately obtained the very high rank which it now enjoys as a fashionable watering-place, and its grandeur and importance, under the auspices of George IV., who, in 1784, when prince of Wales, commenced the erection of a magnificent palace here, now the occasional residence of Queen Victoria.

Town Seal.

The town is pleasantly situated on an eminence, rising gently from a level called the Steyne, supposed to have been the line of the ancient Stayne-street, or Roman road from Arundel to Dorking, and adjoining a bay of the English Channel, formed by the promontories of Beachy Head and Worthing Point; it extends nearly three miles from east to west, and is sheltered by a range of hills on the north and north-east, and by the South Downs. Its form, including the more recent additions, is quadrangular, and the streets, which are spacious, and intersect each other at right angles, are well paved, and lighted with gas: an act was obtained in 1834, for more plentifully supplying the town with water, and in 1839 acts were procured for the better lighting of the town, and for the establishment of a general cemetery. The houses in the older part are irregularly built, but the more modern part consists of handsome ranges of uniform buildings, many of which are strikingly elegant, and are situated principally on the cliffs, commanding extensive views of the sea. The Pavilion, begun in 1784, and completed in 1827, by George IV., is in the oriental style of architecture, on the model of the Kremlin at Moscow. Toward the sea, the view of which is excluded by the buildings called Castle-square, it has a handsome stone front, 200 feet in length, with a circular building in the centre, surrounded by an arcade of elliptical form, with intercolumniations carried up to the parapet, and crowned with a splendid oriental dome, terminating in a slender and richly-embellished finial, and encircled with four minarets of nearly equal elevation; the central range is connected, by corridors of circular buildings, crowned with domes of similar character, but of smaller dimensions, with two quadrangular and boldly-projecting wings, round which are carried arcades similar to that of the centre, with lofty pagoda roofs, and minarets rising from the angles. The interior contains a splendid vestibule and grand hall, a Chinese gallery of costly magnificence, a music-room, banqueting-room, rotunda, and numerous stately apartments, all decorated in the most sumptuous style of oriental splendour. Connected with it, on the west, is the royal chapel, consecrated in 1822; and behind the Pavilion are the royal stables, a circular structure, appropriately designed in the Arabian style, and surmounted by a dome of glass: on the east side of the quadrangle in which they are situated, is a racquet-court, and on the west a riding-house. Hot and cold sea-water, vapour, and shower baths have been constructed in the town, with every regard to the convenience of the invalid: those at the New Steyne hotel are supplied with water raised from the sea, to the height of 600 feet, by an engine, and conveyed through a tunnel excavated in the rock. The chalybeate spring, about half a mile west of the old church, is inclosed within a neat building, and the water which deposits an ochreous sediment, has been found very beneficial as a restorative, and is in high repute; the German spa, also, affords every variety of mineral water, artificially prepared. There are several public libraries: assemblies are held at the Ship hotel, in which are spacious rooms superbly fitted up; and a magnificent royal concert and ball-room, in Cannon-place, lately erected, is said to be one of the best adapted to its purpose in the kingdom. The theatre, erected in 1807, is externally an unadorned building, with a plain portico, but is elegantly fitted up within. The races, which continue for three days, are held on the down, in the first week in August. The royal gardens, to the north of the town, including a spacious cricket-ground, are appropriated to various amusements, and the South Downs afford pleasant and extensive rides. The Old Steyne is adorned with a bronze statue of George IV., by Chantrey, erected in 1828, at an expense of £3000, raised by subscription; and comprises the North and South Parades, and several other agreeable walks.

The splendid suspension chain pier, constructed in 1821, at an expense of £30,000, under the superintendence of Capt. Sir S. Brown, R.N., forms a favourite promenade, 1130 feet in length: during a violent storm, on the 15th of October, 1833, it sustained considerable injury, but was effectually repaired by subscription, under the direction of Capt. Brown. The Esplanade, 1200 feet long and 40 feet wide, connects the pier with the Steyne. Among the more recent improvements is the construction of a sea wall, on the beach in front of the town, extending from Middle-street to Kempton, a distance of one mile and a half; it forms one compact and solid mass, presenting a formidable barrier to further encroachments of the sea; a beautiful carriage drive has been formed, and the total expense of the undertaking exceeded £100,000. There are barracks for infantry in the town, and for cavalry at the distance of a mile, on the road to Lewes. The artillery barracks on the western cliff, where there is a battery of heavy ordnance for the defence of the beach, are now used as dwelling-houses. Steam-vessels sail from this place to Dieppe; but few vessels discharge their cargoes on the beach, the great quantity of articles for the supply of the town being landed at Shoreham harbour, and thence conveyed hither by land carriage or railway. The principal branch of TRADE is that of the fishery, in which about 100 boats are employed: the mackerel season commences in April, and the herring season in October; and soles, turbot, skate, and other flat fish, are also taken in great quantities, and sent to the London market. The making of nets and tackle for the fishermen, the materials of which are brought from Bridport, affords employment to a portion of the inhabitants. The London and Brighton railway was constructed by a company, incorporated by act of parliament passed in July 1837, by which they were empowered to raise a joint-stock capital of £1,800,000, and by loan £600,000. The line, which was opened Sept. 21, 1841, diverges from the London and Croydon railway, about $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles from London, and reaches its termination at Church-street, Brighton, whence there is a branch of $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles to Shoreham, opened in May, 1840: the Brighton station is an elegant structure in the Grecian style, surrounded by a colonnade, above which is a handsome balustrade. The market was established, by act of parliament, in 1773: the principal market-day is Thursday, but there are daily markets for the supply of the inhabitants. The fairs are on Holy-Thursday and Sept. 4th. A new and commodious market-house was built on the site of the old workhouse, in 1829. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold meetings every Monday and Thursday; a constable, eight headboroughs, and other officers are chosen annually at the court leet for the hundred, and the direction of police and parochial affairs is entrusted, under an act of parliament, to a corporate body of 112 commissioners, elected by the inhabitants, who appoint a town-clerk, surveyor, collectors of tolls and duties, police officers, &c. An act was passed, in 1840, for establishing a court of requests for the recovery of debts under £15. By the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the town was constituted a borough, consisting of the parishes of Brighton and Hove, with the privilege of sending two members to parliament; the returning officer is annually appointed by the sheriff of the county. A new town-hall has been erected on the site of the old market-house, near the centre of the town, at an expense of £30,000; it is a very large edifice, ornamented with three stately porticoes, and contains offices for the magistrates, commissioners, directors of the poor, &c., the lower part being used as a market-place.

The LIVING is a vicarage, with the rectory of West Blatchington consolidated, valued in the king's books at £20. 2. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £1041; patron, Bishop of Chichester; impropiator, T. R. Kemp, Esq. The parish church is a spacious ancient structure, partly in the decorated, and partly in the later, English style, with a square embattled tower, which, from its situation on the summit of a hill, 150 feet above the level of the sea, serves as a landmark to mariners; it contains a fine screen of richly carved oak, and an antique font, said to have been brought from Normandy in the reign of William the Conqueror, which is embellished with sculptured representations of the Last Supper, and of the miracles of our Saviour. St. Peter's, a chapel of ease to St. Nicholas, is an elegant structure at the north end of the town, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles, erected in 1827, at an expense of £18,000, raised partly by a grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners, and containing 1840 sittings, of which 940 are free: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £350; patron, the Vicar. The Chapel Royal, in Princes-place, is a neat plain edifice, containing 900 sittings, of which 200 are free: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £180; patron, the Vicar. The church of St. James contains 1000 sittings, of which 300 are free: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £181; patron, N. Kemp, Esq. The church of St. Mary is a handsome structure, in the Grecian style, with a portico of the Doric order, and contains 1100 sittings, of which 240 are free: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £56; patron and incumbent, the Rev. H. V. Elliot. The church of St.

George, in Kemp Town, is a well-built edifice in the Grecian style, containing 1450 sittings, of which 390 are free: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £150; patrons, L. Peel, Esq., and the Rev. J. S. M. Anderson, the incumbent. The church of the Holy Trinity contains 900 sittings, of which 200 are free: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £150 per annum; patrons, the family of Anderson. The church of St. Margaret is in the Grecian style, and contains 1000 sittings, of which 200 are free: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of F. Reade, Esq., with a net income of £150. The church of All Souls contains 1100 sittings, of which 860 are free: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Proprietors. Christ-Church, in the Montpelier-road, contains 1076 sittings, of which 624 are free: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Proprietors. The church of St. John the Evangelist, on Carlton Hill, contains 1225 sittings, of which 625 are free: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Proprietors. The church of St. Andrew, in Waterloo-street, but in the parish of Hove, contains 500 sittings, of which 80 are free: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Proprietors. An additional church, of which the first stone was laid in July, 1838, has been completed by subscription, aided by a specific grant from the Church Commissioners; it is of the Grecian Doric order, and contains 1211 sittings, of which 707 are free. A free church was erected in the eastern portion of the town, towards which his late Majesty, William IV., contributed £100, and her Majesty, Queen Adelaide, £50. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, Independents, the Society of Friends, the Connexion of the Countess of Huntingdon, Huntingdonians, Methodists, and Scottish Seceders; also Bethel chapel, belonging to the Mariners' Friend Society, a Roman Catholic chapel, and a synagogue.

There are numerous free SCHOOLS, the principal of which are, the school in Gardener-street, for girls, founded and endowed, in 1811, by Swan Downer, Esq., with £7100, subsequently invested in the purchase of £10,106. 15. 3. three per cent. consols, producing a yearly income of £303; the Blue-coat school, in Ship-street, for boys, to which William Grimmit, Esq., in 1749, bequeathed property, afterwards invested in Old South Sea Annuities, amounting at present to £2330. 11. 6., producing a dividend of £69. 18. 4.; the school near Russel-street, for the children of fishermen; and the Orphan Asylum, for girls, on the western road. The St. Mary's Hall institution, for the education of the daughters of the poor clergy, was established in 1838. There are also several schools on the national system, connected with the Established Church, in which more than 1300 children receive daily instruction, and also infant and Sunday schools; appropriate buildings have been completed at an expense of nearly £7000. The county hospital and general sea-bathing infirmary, with a detached house of recovery, for persons labouring under contagious fever, a very neat edifice of pale brick, with ornaments of stone, occupies an elevated site near Kemp Town, which, with a donation of £1000, was given by T. R. Kemp, Esq., and the late Earl of Egremont contributed £2000 towards its erection, and £4000 towards its endowment. At the western extremity of the main building, a wing, called "Victoria," was added in 1839, towards the erection of which Lawrence Peel, Esq., contributed £500; the balance of a fund raised for the celebration of the Queen's first visit to Brighton, amounting to £400, was also appropriated, and £1600 raised by subscription. Six almshouses for poor widows are endowed with £96 per annum, under the wills of Philadelphia and Dorothy Percy, daughters of the late Duke of Northumberland; 20 poor men and 24 women are annually clothed from the interest of £5000, left by Swan Downer, Esq.; and there are a lying-in institution, Dorcas and other societies for the benefit of the poor; for whose advantage, also, Colonel Ollney recently bequeathed £500, the interest to be distributed in coal and blankets at Christmas. On White Hawke Hill, near the race-course, on which a signal-house has been erected, are the remains of an encampment, having a narrow entrance on the north, where it is defended by a double intrenchment; and on Hollingsbury Hill, a second station for signals, about two miles north of the town, are vestiges of a large circular encampment, in which are several tumuli. In 1750, an urn, containing 1000 silver denarii, of the emperors from Antoninus Pius to Philip, was found near the town; and in the immediate vicinity are numerous remains of altars and other Druidical monuments.

BRIGHTLING (ST. THOMAS à BECKET), a parish, in the union of BATTLE, partly in the hundred of HENHURST, but chiefly in that of NETHERFIELD rape of HASTINGS, E. division of SUSSEX, 4 miles (N. W.) from Battle; containing 692 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 4000 acres, of which 1020 are arable, 850 meadow and pasture, 350 common, 120 hop-grounds, and 1630 wood. It is beautifully situated, and the surface is diversified with gentle undulations, rising in some parts to a considerable eminence, of which the lands in the highest parts of Rose Hill have an elevation of more than 600 feet above the level of the sea. Limestone and sandstone are found in abundance, and great quantities of the latter are quarried for building; iron-stone was formerly wrought, and furnaces were built for the smelting of iron-ore. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11; patron and incumbent, the Rev. J. B. Hayley, whose tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £642. The church is a handsome edifice, chiefly in the later English style, with a low embattled tower, and contains several neat monuments, among which is one to the late John Fuller, Esq., whose bust is finely sculptured by Chantrey. Mary Herbert, in 1728, gave £200, which were laid out in lands now producing £10 per annum, paid to a schoolmistress; and A. E. Fuller, Esq., has recently given a house and two acres of land for a school, for boys and girls. The Rev. William Hayley, who collected ample materials for a history of Sussex, and whose manuscripts are in the British Museum, was rector of the parish, and was interred here. At Rose Hill is a chalybeate spring.

BRIGHTLINGSEA (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of LEXDEN and WINSTREE, hundred of TENDRING, N. division of ESSEX, 9 miles (S. E.) from Colchester; containing 2005 inhabitants. It constitutes a peninsula, formed by the estuary of the river Colne on the west, and that of a smaller river on the east. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17. 0. 5.; patron, Bishop of London; impropiator, M. D. Magens, Esq.: the great tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £240, and the vicarial for one of £150. The church is situated about a mile and a half from the village. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a national school, with a small endowment.

BRIGHTON.—See BRIGHTHELMSTONE.

BRIGHTON, NEW, in the township of LISCARD, parish of WALLAZEY, Lower division of the hundred of WIRRAL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 12 miles (N. E.) from Great Neston. This place, which is situated on the river Mersey, nearly opposite to Liverpool, and bounded on the north by the Irish Sea, has, from its local advantages, attracted the attention of the public; and a plan of a new town, adapted to the purposes of a bathing-place, has been approved, and numerous houses have been erected. It has a communication with Liverpool by means of steam-packets.

BRIGHTSIDE-BIERLOW, a township, in the parish and union of SHEFFIELD, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (N. E.) from Sheffield; containing 10,089 inhabitants. This populous and very extensive township, parts of which form suburbs to the borough of Sheffield, partakes in the manufactures of the surrounding district. Several large steel-works, foundries, and iron-forges have been established, and the manufacture of table-knives and cutlery of various kinds, and of scythes and agricultural implements, is carried on to a great extent; there are also quarries of excellent building-stone. The village of Brightside is situated on the river Don, and in the immediate vicinity are several pleasing villas, and some richly varied scenery. Here is a station on the line of the Sheffield and Rotherham railway; and a new road to Barnsley has been constructed, leading through the romantic dell of Burngreave to Pitsmoor, and avoiding the precipitous hill of Pye Bank. The national school at Pitsmoor has been licensed for the performance of divine service. Mrs. Elizabeth Fell, in 1793, bequeathed £550 for a Sunday school and the relief of the poor, but a dispute arising among the trustees, the funds have been exhausted. The interest of £40, and £3. 10., arising from land purchased with a bequest of £50, by John Mirfield, in 1785, are now the only available charities; and for these, twelve children are instructed in the school at Grimesthorpe, built in 1802, on land given by the Duke of Norfolk, who is lord of the manor.

BRIGHT-WALTHAM.—See WALTHAM, BRIGHT.

BRIGHTWELL (ST. AGATHA), a parish, in the union and parliamentary borough of WALLINGFORD, hundred of MORETON, county of BERKS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Wallingford; containing 611 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1958a. 1r. 15p., and is bounded on the north by the river Thames, and on the south by the Tadsey; the soil is a rich loam, partly mixed with gravel; the surface is high on the northern boundary, but in other parts level. Here was anciently a castle, which, in 1153, was given up by Stephen to Henry II., then Duke of Normandy, after the treaty of peace concluded between him and Matilda at Wallingford, and probably soon afterwards demolished, for its site is not even known, though conjectured to have been within the moat where the manor farm-house now stands. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £44. 17. 11., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £855, and there are 51 acres of glebe. The church contains a monument to the memory of Thomas Godwyn, D.D., author of a treatise on the Jewish and Roman antiquities, and who died rector in 1642. There is a meeting-house for dissenters.

BRIGHTWELL (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of WOODBRIDGE, hundred of CARLFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 5½ miles (E. by S.) from Ipswich; containing 81 inhabitants, and comprising about 800 acres. The Hall, a fine old building, belonging to the Barnardiston family, was pulled down about 1730. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Foxhall annexed; net income, £54; patron, Sir R. Harland, Bart.

BRIGHTWELL-BALDWIN (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of HENLEY, hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Tetsworth; containing, with the tything of Cadwell, 312 inhabitants. This parish, which takes its name from its crystal springs, comprises 1569a. 4p., of which about 356 acres are pasture, and 40 woodland. The old mansion of the Stone family was burnt down in 1786, and the present building was erected in 1790. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 16.; net income, £494; patron, W. F. L. Stone, Esq. Under an inclosure act, in 1802, land and cornrents were assigned in lieu of tithes. The church is a picturesque edifice, in the decorated English style, with a tower, the front of which is elaborately enriched with canopied niches; in the chancel are some fine brasses, and on the floor some ancient tiles with figures. To the north of the church is the sepulchral chapel of the families of Carleton, Stone, and Lowe, whose mansions are in the parish. At Bushy-Leas, between this place and Chalgrove, a curious glass vessel, surrounded by twelve Roman sepulchral urns, was dug up. Herbert Westphaling, afterwards Bishop of Hereford, and Dr. William Paul, Bishop of Oxford, held the living.

BRIGMERSTON, a hamlet, in the parish of MILSTON, union and hundred of AMESBURY, Everley and Pewsey, and S. divisions of WILTS; containing 33 inhabitants.

BRIGNALL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of TEESDALE, wapentake of GILLING-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 1 mile (S. W. by W.) from Greta-Bridge; containing 190 inhabitants. The parish for many years formed one of the numerous manors which were possessed by the Scrope family in this neighbourhood, and some remains of an old hall adjoining the village were removed in the present century. From the Scopes the property came into the hands of Lord Barrymore, and from him descended to the Edens, of Windleston, in the county of Durham; in 1817 it was purchased by the late John Bacon Sawrey Morritt, Esq., of Rokeby Park, from Sir R. J. Eden, Bart., for £66,000, and has since become an appendage to the beautiful demesne of Rokeby. The parish is bounded on the south and east by the picturesque river Greta, and comprises by computation 2000 acres, of which about three-fourth parts are pasture, one-fourth arable, and 100 acres woodland; the surface is undulated, the soil generally a loamy clay, and the scenery bordering on the river varied and beautiful. Under the liberal management and taste of the late owner, the land and whole aspect of the neighbourhood have been greatly improved by planting and draining; walks have been formed, and rides opened of several miles extent on the banks of the Greta. There are some quarries of fine grey slate. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £8. 2. 6.; it is in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £271, and there are about 63 acres of glebe. The church, which is in the early English style, with a square tower and campanile turret, was rebuilt, in 1834, in a more central situation, the former edifice having stood in a remote angle of the parish: the cost, £575; was defrayed by the late Mr. Morritt, who also built a school. The remains of a large Roman camp, which commanded the ford on the river, are visible at Greta-Bridge; it was surrounded by a triple fosse, and relics of antiquity and Roman coins have frequently been dug up in its precincts. Much of the scenery and field of action in the poem of Rokeby, with Guy Denzil's Cave, are within the parish.

BRIGSLEY (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Great Grimsby; containing 125 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement upwards of 800 acres, half arable, and half meadow. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 4. 4., and in the patronage of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell; net income, £55.

BRIGSTOCK (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of THRAPSTON, hundred of CORBY, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 22 miles (N. E.) from Northampton; containing 1262 inhabitants. It embraces a tract of 6013a. 3r. 21p., a large portion of which is occupied by parks and plantations; the village is of some extent, and situated about the middle of the parish. The place formerly belonged to the Dukes of Montague, whose ancient manor-house is still remaining. James I. granted a weekly market on Thursday, and fairs to be held on the festivals of St. Mark the Evangelist, St. Bartholomew the Apostle, and St. Martin: the market has long since fallen into disuse, but the fairs are still held. By a custom that prevails in the manor, if any man die seized of copyhold lands or tenements which descended to him in fee, his youngest son inherits; but if they were purchased by him, they fall to the eldest son. The living is a vicarage, with Stanion annexed, valued in the king's books at £11. 17. 3½.; net income, £236; patron, Duke of Cleveland. The church has some Norman remains, amidst various alterations of later date; the tower is of very rude workmanship, and plastered. A charity school was founded by the Rev. Nicholas Latham, who endowed it with £17 per annum. The town estate, in 1805, was divided into 54 plots, let to poor parishioners for gardens at a small rental.

BRILL (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of THAME, hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, 7 miles (N. W. by N.) from Thame; containing 1449 inhabitants. Here was a palace belonging to the kings of Mercia, which was a favourite residence of Edward the Confessor, who frequently came hither during the hunting season, to enjoy the pleasures of the chase in Bernwood Forest. After the Conquest, Henry II., attended by his chancellor, Thomas à Becket, kept his court here, in 1160 and 1162; and Henry III., in 1224; and King John also appears to have resorted to it, as there are some remains of a building called after him. In 1642, a garrison stationed here for the king was attacked by a detachment of the parliamentary forces under the patriotic Hampden, but the latter were repulsed with considerable loss. The PARISH comprises 3100 acres of fertile land, of which 2395 are meadow and pasture, 310 arable, and 240 wood. Lace-making is carried on to a considerable extent; and there is a small manufactory for earthenware. Brill and Ashendon Hills abound with interesting geological features, and numerous specimens of fossil remains; and the former also with excellent yellow ochre, of which considerable quantities have been conveyed to distant parts. There are likewise some stone-quarries, used for roads, and for burning into lime; building-stone is occasionally found, and there is an excellent quarry of iron sandstone. From its elevated situation, the place commands a most extensive and richly varied prospect, comprehending a panoramic view of nine counties; and the purity and salubrity of the air, and its contiguity to the Dorton spa, have made it the frequent resort of invalids, for whose accommodation several well-built lodging-houses and shops have been erected in the village, which is one mile distant from the pump-room at Dorton. A fair, granted to Sir John Molins, in 1346, has been revived within the last few years, and is held on the Wednesday next after Old Michaelmas-day.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, with that of Boar-stall annexed; net income, £101; patron and improprator, Sir T. D. Aubrey, Bart. The church is a small edifice of considerable antiquity, partly in the Norman style, with a low tower and spire, and was enlarged, in 1835, by subscription; the entrance is through a rude porch in the south wall, over which is the date 1654, probably the period when the church was repaired after the parliamentary war. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Independents. A national school was established in 1815, and united with a school originally founded by Samuel Turner, Esq.; it is endowed with £60 per annum, arising from £2000 three per cent. consols, bequeathed by Sir John Aubrey, in 1825. Pym's charity-school for boys was founded by John Pym, in 1637; the income is £26. Five almshouses for widows were given, in 1591, by Alice Carter, who endowed them. John Harte, in 1664, bequeathed a rent-charge of £5, for apprenticing boys; and one of £8 was left by Edward Lewis, Esq., in 1674, for the poor. On the disafforestation of Bernwood Forest, under a commission appointed in the 21st of James I., an allotment was set apart for the benefit of the poor, and consists of a farm-house and buildings, with 181 acres of land, let at a clear rent of £120. On the north side of Muswell Hill, partly in this parish and partly in that of Piddington, stood the hermitage of St. Werburgh, a cell to the priory of Chetwood, of which the outline of the building may be traced; two other ancient buildings still exist, which belonged to the families of Harte and Carter, and were erected in the early part of the reign of Elizabeth. On the summit of Muswell Hill are vestiges of an encampment of considerable extent, around the mound of which are rows of sycamore-trees. In quarrying a few years since, several successive trenches were discovered filled up, among which were found several Roman spear-heads.

BRILLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of KINGTON, hundred of HUNTINGDON, county of HEREFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Hay; containing 587 inhabitants. Situated on the border of Wales, which bounds it on the north and west, and partly encircled on the south by the river Wye, this parish exhibits much rural and interesting scenery, and consists of 3771 acres, the surface being in a great degree diversified by bold hills and deep dales, remarkably well wooded, and watered by numerous streams. The road from Kington to Hay crosses the parish from north to south. The living is united to the vicarage of Kington, and the Bishop of Hereford is appropriator.

BRIMFIELD, a parish, in the union of TENBURY, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Ludlow; containing 591 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the borders of Shropshire, comprises by measurement about 1820 acres, of which nearly 700 are arable, and the rest pasture, with the exception of about 50 acres of hop-ground; the surface is moderately undulated, with a large portion of woodland, and the soil above the average fertility. The roads from Ludlow to Tenbury and to Leominster branch off at the village, which is of some extent, and the parish is intersected by the Leominster canal, and bounded by the river Teame. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £98; patron, Bishop of Hereford, whose tithes have been commuted for £155; and those of the incumbent for £125: two acres of glebe appertain to the bishop. The nave and chancel of the church were rebuilt, in a plain style, in 1834, but the tower is of some antiquity.

BRIMHAM, a hamlet, in the chapelry of HARTWITH, parish of KIRKBY-MALZEARD, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 6 miles (W.) from Ripley. Brimham Craggs, an assemblage of rocks covering about forty acres, are thought, from their singular position, to have been thrown together by some extraordinary convulsion of the earth; the spot is also supposed to have been chosen for the performance of the sacred rites of the Druids, from the appearance of altars, rock idols, rocking-stones, and other rude symbols.

BRIMINGTON, a chapelry, in the parish and union of CHESTERFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, 2 miles (N. E.) from Chesterfield; containing 780 inhabitants. In 1603, Brimington was severely afflicted with the plague. The family of Brimington was extinct in the time of Edward III. The parish comprises 1252*a.* 25*p.*, and is situated on the road from Chesterfield to Worksop, on the Chesterfield canal, and near the North-Midland railway: stone is quarried for building purposes. An act was passed, in 1841, for inclosing the waste lands. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £102; patron, Vicar of Chesterfield; appropriator, Dean of Lincoln: there are 9 acres of glebe, with a house. The chapel was rebuilt by subscription, in 1808. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans; and a national school is supported by subscription.

BRIMPSFIELD (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of RAPSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from Cirencester; containing 417 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2612 acres, of which nearly equal portions are arable and pasture, with 250 acres of wood; the soil varies considerably, but is generally a light loam. A part of the land lies high, being on the Cotswold Hills, but it is interspersed with some fertile and well-wooded valleys, possessing much beauty: the river Stroudwater has its source within the parish. Good building-stone is found. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Cranham consolidated, valued in the king's books at £9. 12. 1., and in the patronage of William Goodrich, Esq.: the tithes of Brimpsfield have been commuted for £303, and of Cranham, for £162; the glebe contains 32 acres. The church is a small ancient structure, containing about 200 sittings, of which 150 are unappropriated. A parochial school is supported by subscription. The Roman Ermin-street passes along the northern side of the parish. An alien priory of Benedictine monks, subordinate to the abbey of St. Stephen, at Fountenay, in Normandy, anciently existed; and here was also a castle, destroyed by Edward II., on his march from Cirencester to Worcester.

BRIMPTON (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of NEWBURY, hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, 6 miles (E. by S.) from Newbury; containing 412 inhabitants. It comprises 1689*a. 2r.*, of which about 80 acres are common and roads. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7, and in the alternate patronage of Mrs. Cove and the Rev. Miles L. Halton: the tithes have been commuted for £320, and the glebe comprises 15 acres. A national school is supported by subscription. At the period of the Norman survey there were two churches in the parish, and the remains of an ancient ecclesiastical edifice are visible at a farm-house, about half a mile from the present church. The Knights Hospitallers appear to have had an establishment here, in the time of Henry III.

BRIMPTON (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of YEOVIL, hundred of STONE, W. division of SOMERSET, 2½ miles (W. S. W.) from Yeovil; containing, with the hamlets of Alvington and Houndstone, 123 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 7., and in the patronage of John Williams, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £130, and there are about 30 acres of glebe.

BRIMSCOMB-PORT, an ecclesiastical parish, formed out of the parish of MINCHIN-HAMPTON, union of STROUD, hundred of BISLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (S. S. E.) from Stroud; comprising the hamlets of Chalford, Hyde, Burley, Brimscomb, and Cowcombe. This place has obtained its name from the basin of the Thames and Severn canal, which is within the hamlet, a large sheet of water, on the margin of which are the spacious wharfs and warehouses of the canal company. In the village, which is chiefly inhabited by persons employed in the clothing trade, are two extensive mills for the manufacture of superfine broadcloths and kerseymeres, affording employment to 500 persons. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BRIMSLADE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and S. divisions of WILTS; containing, with South Savernake, 187 inhabitants.

BRIMSTAGE, a township, in the parish of BROMBORROW, union, and Lower division of the hundred, of WIRRAL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 3¼ miles (N. by E.) from Great Neston; containing 161 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £103.

BRIND, with NEWSHOLME, or NEWSHAM, a township, in the parish of WRESSEL, union of HOWDEN, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 2¼ miles (N. by W.) from Howden; containing 231 inhabitants. The Hull and Selby railway passes by the place.

BRINDLE (St. James), a parish, in the union of CHORLEY, hundred of LEYLAND, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 4¾ miles (N. by E.) from Chorley; containing 1401 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 8. 4., and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire: the tithes have been commuted for £497. 15., and there are more than 9 acres of glebe. There is a place of worship for Roman Catholics. The workhouse, about a mile from the village, has, since the erection of the county asylum at Lancaster, been open for the poor of any township the inhabitants of which choose to contribute towards its support. The free school, supposed to have been founded by Peter Burscough, has funds consisting of about £335, lent on interest, producing £16. 16. per annum.

BRINDLEY, a township, in the parish of ACTON, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 4¼ miles (W. N. W.) from Nantwich; containing 184 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £66. 5., and the vicarial for £26. 11. 7.

BRINDLEYS, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of HOWDEN, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 3½ miles (N. by W.) from Howden; containing 8 inhabitants. It comprises about 173 acres of farm land, the property of Viscount Galway.

BRINGHURST (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of UPPINGHAM, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER; containing, with the township of Drayton and the chapelry of Great Easton, 840 inhabitants, of whom 92 are in the township of Bringhurst, 2¼ miles (W. by N.) from Rockingham. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 15.; net income, £241; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Peterborough. Land and a money payment were assigned, in 1804, in lieu of tithes for the townships of Bringhurst and Drayton. There is a chapel of ease at Great Easton.

BRINGTON (All Saints), a parish, in the union of THRAPSTON, hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, 5¼ miles (N. by W.) from Kimbolton; containing 129 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated within half a mile of the road from Huntingdon to Northampton, comprises by measurement 1014 acres. The living is a rectory, with Bythorn and Old Weston united, valued in the king's books at £34. 3. 6½.; net income, £492; patrons, Master and Fellows of Clare Hall, Cambridge. Land and a money payment were assigned, in lieu of tithes, in 1804.

BRINGTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BRIXWORTH, hundred of NEWBOTTLE-GROVE, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 7 miles (N. W. by W.) from Northampton; containing, with the hamlets of Little Brington and Newbottle, 795 inhabitants. This place was the occasional resort of Charles I., who, during his detention at Holdenby, about two miles distant, came frequently to Althorp House, in the parish. It formerly included part of the hamlet of Clasthorpe, but from the neglect of walking the boundaries, that portion, containing about 300 acres, was claimed by the parish of Flore, in which the remainder was situated. Brington comprises by computation 3800 acres, and is near the London and Birmingham canal and railway, and bounded on the north-east by the road between Northampton and Coventry. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £40, and in the gift of Earl Spencer: on the inclosure, about a century since, 380 acres of land, now valued at about £500 per annum, were allotted in lieu of tithes, and some further tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £62. 10.; there are about $9\frac{1}{2}$ acres of glebe. The church is an ancient structure, partly in the early and later English styles; the chapel contains some fine monuments to the memory of deceased members of the Spencer family, among which is that of Henry Spencer, first Earl of Sunderland, who was killed at the battle of Newbury, in 1644. There is a place of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. A school is maintained by Earl Spencer; and a Sunday school is supported by an allowance of £12 per annum from the charity estates, which were settled in the reign of Henry VI., and produce £225 per annum. There are a chalybeate and a petrifying spring. Henry Chichester, Archbishop of Canterbury, and founder of All Souls' College, Oxford, and of the colleges of Ferrars and Irthlingborough, both in this county, was for ten years rector of the parish. Althorp, which was formerly more populous, now contains only the noble mansion of Earl Spencer, to whom it gives the inferior title of Viscount.

BRININGHAM (St. MAURICE), a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of HOLT, W. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (S. W.) from Holt; containing 243 inhabitants. It comprises 1201*a. 2r. 31p.*, of which 970 acres are arable, 130 pasture and meadow, and 60 woodland; the surface is a good deal undulated, and on a high eminence is Belle Vue, a lofty tower, octangular at the base and circular at the top, from which is an extensive view of the surrounding country and the ocean. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Rev. S. Brereton, who is incumbent and impropiator, and whose tithes have been commuted for £353. The church, chiefly in the decorated style, consists of a nave and chancel, with a square tower on the south, and was thoroughly repaired in 1840.

BRINKBURN, HIGH WARD, a township, in the parochial chapelry of LONG FRAMLINGTON, union of ROTHBURY, E. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Morpeth; containing 96 inhabitants, and comprising 1894 acres. Brinkburn, including also the Low Ward, was anciently extra-parochial: it stretches about three miles along the north side of the river Coquet, and is crossed by the high road from Weedon Bridge: the soil is a strong clay. Here are extensive strata of limestone, and a mine of coal. A priory for Augustine canons was founded in the time of Henry I., by Osbertus Colatarius, in honour of St. Peter: the establishment, at the time of the Dissolution, consisted of ten religious, and the revenue was rated at £77. It was beautifully situated within a curvature of the Coquet, which flows close to the walls, and now forms an interesting ruin, exhibiting specimens of Norman architecture. On the hill above the priory are traces of a Roman town, in connexion with a military way; and the foundations of the piers of a Roman bridge are discernible when the water is low.

BRINKBURN, LOW WARD, a township, in the parochial chapelry of LONG FRAMLINGTON, union of ROTHBURY, E. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing 57 inhabitants, and comprising 579 acres.

BRINKBURN, SOUTH SIDE, a township, in the parish of FELTON, union of ROTHBURY, W. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9 miles (N. N. W.) from Morpeth; containing 55 inhabitants.

BRINKHILL (St. PHILIP), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, hundred of HILL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Spilsby; containing 168 inhabitants. It comprises about 1000 acres, of which the soil is a red marl, and the surface hilly. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £137; patron, R. Cracroft, Esq.: land was assigned in lieu of tithes, in 1773. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. In a stratum of blue clay in the village are found veins of barren marcasite.

BRINKLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of NEWMARKET, hundred of RADFIELD, county of CAMBRIDGE, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Newmarket; containing 366 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8.; net income, £241; patrons, Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge: land and a money payment were assigned, in 1811, in lieu of tithes. The parish is entitled to the fifth part of an estate at Oakington, producing in the whole £100 per annum, given by Mrs. Elizabeth March, in 1729; it is paid to a master for the instruction of children.

BRINKLOW (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Coventry; containing 793 inhabitants. This place derives its name from a large tumulus, on which stood the keep or watch-tower of a very ancient castle of uncertain erection, of which there are no remains. In the reign of John, Nicholas de Stuteville, lord of the manor, received the grant of a market to be held on Monday, and a fair on the festival of St. Margaret. The parish comprises 1393*a. 3r. 22p.*, of which about 150 acres are wood, and of the remainder, one-third is arable, and two-thirds pasture. The Oxford canal passes through the parish, and in its course here is twice intersected by the Roman fosse-way, on the line of which are some traces of an encampment. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £228. The church is built in the style which prevailed in the reign of Henry VII. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The interest on £100, given by the Rev. W. Fairfax, in 1761, is applied to instruction; and a national school is partly supported by an endowment of £20 per annum.

BRINKWORTH (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and hundred of MALMESBURY, Malmesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of WILTS, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Wotton-Basset; containing, with the tything of Grittenham, 1694 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the Great Western railway, and comprises 5450 acres, of which 4759 are pasture, 472 arable, and 219 woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £23. 9. 2., and in the gift of Pembroke College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £735, and the glebe comprises 150 acres. There is a school with an endowment of about £5 per annum.

BRINNINGTON, a township, in the parish and union of STOCKPORT, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 2 miles (N. E. by N.) from Stockport; containing 5331 inhabitants, most of whom are employed in the cotton manufacture. The tithes have been commuted for £30.

BRINSLEY, or BRUNSLEY, a hamlet, in the parish of GREASLY, union of BASFORD, S. division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM; containing 1139 inhabitants.

BRINSOP (St. GEORGE), a parish, in the union of WEOBLY, hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, 5½ miles (N. W.) from Hereford; containing 116 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1334 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Hereford: the great tithes have been commuted at £170, and the small at £104; the glebe comprises 190 acres, and a vicarage-house has recently been built. The church is partly of Norman architecture; it has a window of painted glass of great antiquity. A parochial school is supported by subscription.

BRINSWORTH, a township, in the parish and union of ROTHERHAM, S. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 2¼ miles (S. S. W.) from Rotherham; containing 241 inhabitants. This place includes the hamlet of Ickles, and comprises by computation 1050 acres. During the late war, the common, now inclosed, was the scene of frequent military evolutions of the Sheffield volunteers.

BRINTON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the hundred of HOLT, W. division of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (W. S. W.) from Holt; containing 193 inhabitants. It comprises 712a. 3r. 24p., of which 474 acres are arable, 124 pasture and meadow, and 17 woodland; the village is picturesquely situated. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Thornage, and rated in the king's books at £8. 11. 4.: the tithes have been commuted for £170, and there are 20 acres of glebe. The church is in the later style, and consists of a nave and north aisle, with a square tower.

BRISCOE, or BIRKSCEUGH, a township, in that part of the parish of ST. CUTHBERT, CARLISLE, which is in CUMBERLAND ward, union of CARLISLE, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 3½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Carlisle; containing 303 inhabitants. There are two establishments for printing calico on the banks of the river Petterill, in the township. The first wheat that grew in the county was produced here, about the year 1700.

BRISLEY (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of MITFORD and LAUNDITCH, hundred of LAUNDITCH, W. division of NORFOLK, 6 miles (N. W.) from East Dereham; containing 388 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1201a. 2r. 18p., of which 785 acres are arable, 188 meadow and pasture, and 197 common, roads, and gardens. Brisley Green is a fine piece of uninclosed ground of 150 acres, the favourite resort of cricket-players. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Gately annexed, valued in the king's books at £8. 7. 8½.; net income, £486; patrons, Master and Fellows of Christ-Church College, Cambridge. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a lofty square embattled tower: in the chancel are three sedilia of stone and a piscina. Richard Taverner, who published, in 1539, a new translation of the Bible, for which he was committed to the Tower by Henry VIII., was a native of the place.

BRISLINGTON (St. LUKE), a parish, in the union and hundred of KEYNSHAM, E. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Bristol; containing 1338 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road between Bath and Bristol, and contains 2090 acres; it is bounded on the north-east by the river Avon, and intersected by the Great Western railway. Coal was formerly wrought; iron is found, and stone quarried for building. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £159; patron, E. W. L. Popham, Esq.; impropricator, Col. Gore Langton. The church was enlarged in 1818 by 265 additional sittings: in the churchyard is a handsome cross. There is a place of worship for Independents; and parochial schools are supported by subscription. Brislington House, an asylum for lunatics, was erected by Edward Long Fox, M.D., who first introduced the classification of patients in such establishments, and was celebrated for the cure of mental diseases; the buildings comprise a spacious central edifice, with detached wings, extending in front 495 feet, and the estate is well planted, and comprises about 200 acres. A chapel, dedicated to St. Anne, was founded by one of the Lords de la Warre, in the northern part of the manor, but there are not any vestiges of it. A variety of Roman coins was found in an adjoining field, in 1829. Langton, who married the widow of Sir Thomas Cobb, of Langton Court, and was the intimate friend of Addison, is said to have written many of the papers of the Spectator in a summer-house belonging to the mansion. The Rev. W. D. Conybeare, author of some well-known works on geology, was, for some years, curate and lecturer of the parish.

BRISTOL, a city and county of itself, and a considerable port, situated near the mouth of the Bristol Channel, and between the counties of GLOUCESTER and SOMERSET, into both of which the town extends, 34 miles (S. W. by S.) from Gloucester, 12 (N. W.) from Bath, and 118 (W.) from London; containing, in the old city, 64,266 inhabitants, exclusively of those in Clifton, Bedminster, and the out-parish of St. Philip and St. James, which form the suburbs, and which, if included, would increase the number to 140,158. This place, called by the Britons Caer Brito, and supposed to have been the Abona, or Trajectus, of Antonine, notwithstanding the various conjectures of antiquaries, probably derives its name from the Saxon Brito stow. In 1063, Harold set sail from this port for the subjugation of Wales; and soon after the Conquest, his sons, attempting to overthrow the government of William, made an assault upon Bristol, but were defeated by the inhabitants. At that time an extensive traffic in English slaves was carried on here, which was abolished by William, at the intercession of Archbishop Lanfranc. In 1089, Geoffrey, Bishop of Coutance, taking part in a confederacy against William Rufus, for the purpose of raising his elder brother, Robert, to the throne, assembled his forces here, and fortified the town with walls, portions of which still remain. In the struggle between Stephen and Matilda, the Earl of Gloucester, having taken possession of the city for the empress, rebuilt the castle, into which she retired on her escape from Arundel, at that time besieged by her opponent. Stephen, having been soon after made prisoner, was confined in this castle, and, by Matilda's order, loaded with chains, till he was released, after an imprisonment of nine years, by the capture of the earl, for whom he was exchanged. In 1142, Prince Henry, afterwards Henry II., being brought from Normandy on a visit to his mother, was placed at Bristol, under the protection of the Earl of Gloucester, where he remained for four years, and received part of his education. Edward I. kept the festival of Christmas here in 1285, where he held a council; and during the war between Edward II. and the barons, Henry de Willington and Harry de Mumford, who had been taken prisoners, were executed here, in 1322. Edward III., in 1353, removed the staple for wool from the several towns in Flanders to England, and, among other places, to this city, which, in consequence, rapidly grew into importance as a place of trade; and, in 1373, he erected it into a separate county, under the designation of the "City and County of the City of Bristol." In 1399, the Duke of Lancaster, afterwards Henry IV., besieged the city with a powerful army, and, on its surrender, sentenced the governor, Scroop, Earl of Wiltshire, Sir Henry Green, and Sir John Bushy, to be beheaded; and, in the same year, by an act of parliament, he exempted the place, by "land and water," from the jurisdiction of the Lord High Admiral. In 1471, the Duke of Somerset, Earl of Devonshire, and other nobles in the interest of the house of Lancaster, entering into a confederacy against Edward IV., assembled their forces here, and were greatly assisted by the inhabitants, who were attached to the Lancastrian cause, in their attempts to replace Henry VI. upon the throne. Henry VII. visited Bristol in 1485, on which occasion the citizens, to evince the greater respect, appeared in their best apparel; but the king, thinking their wives too richly dressed for their station, imposed a fine of twenty shillings upon every citizen who was worth £20. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I. the city was garrisoned by the parliamentarians, who appointed Nathaniel Fiennes governor. The king, sensible of the importance of the place, endeavoured to gain possession of it by means of his partisans within the town; but their proceedings having been discovered, Alderman Yeomans and Mr. Bouchier were hanged as traitors, by order of the governor. In 1643, Prince Rupert closely invested the city, which surrendered on the third day; and the king arriving soon after, remained for a short time, and attended divine service in the cathedral on the following Sunday. Bristol continued in the possession of the royalists for nearly two years; but, after sustaining a vigorous assault with incredible valour, the garrison capitulated to Fairfax, and Cromwell soon after ordered the castle and the fortifications to be demolished. The city was the scene of a serious riot, in the autumn of 1831, during the progress of the Reform Bill in parliament: it commenced by an attack upon the recorder, who was opposed to that measure, on his entrance into the city, prior to holding the quarter-sessions, on Saturday the 29th of October, and, owing to the want of energy on the part of the civil and military authorities, continued until the Monday following, during which period the gaols were broken open and burnt; the episcopal palace, mansion-house, and custom-house, were destroyed, and many private dwelling-houses, particularly in Queen-square, were set on fire.

The city is pleasantly situated in a valley, near the confluence of the rivers Avon and Frome; the old town, which forms the nucleus of the present, consists of four principal streets, diverging at right angles from the centre, and intersected by smaller streets. The houses in the interior of the town are mostly ancient, being built of timber and plaster, with the upper stories projecting; but in the outer parts are spacious streets and squares, containing good houses, uniformly built of stone and brick. The town is well paved, lighted with gas, and amply supplied with excellent water from springs, and from public conduits, originally laid down by the monks, in convenient situations. A handsome stone bridge of three wide arches over the Avon, which flows through the town, was completed in 1768, on the site of a former one, connecting the northern with the southern part; and over the river Frome is a swing bridge, to admit the passage of ships. The theatre, said to have been admired by Garrick for its just proportions and arrangement, was built by Mr. Powell, in 1766, and is opened during the winter season, and has been the nursery of some of the best performers on the London stage. The city library, in King-street, a handsome stone edifice beautifully ornamented with sculpture and literary emblems, contains a large collection of books and numerous manuscripts. The Philosophical Institution in Park-street, a neat building with a Grecian portico, contains reading-rooms, a theatre in which lectures are delivered, a laboratory, a philosophical apparatus, an extensive museum, and a room for the exhibition of paintings. The Statistical Society was established in Nov. 1836, soon after the meeting of the British Association. The Exchange, in Corn-street, erected about the year 1760, by the corporation, at an expense of more than £50,000, is a spacious and elegant structure, 110 feet in length, with a rustic basement, in the centre of which are handsome columns of the Corinthian order, forming the principal entrance, and supporting a pediment, in the tympanum of which are the king's arms: the edifice is principally used as a corn-market. The Commercial-Rooms, erected in 1811, to which the entrance from the street is by a portico of four pillars of the Ionic order, contain apartments for the despatch of business, and a reading-room; the principal hall is 60 feet in length, 40 feet wide, and 25 feet high. The Post-office is a neat building of freestone, to the west of the Exchange. A handsome structure, called the Victoria Rooms, intended for public assemblies, was lately erected from the designs of Mr. Charles Dyer; it is situated near the top of Park-street, and is built entirely of Bath stone; the south front, which is the principal, has a noble octo-style Corinthian portico, recessed within the building as well as advanced forward; the grand hall is a noble apartment, 117 feet by 55, and 48 in height.

Bristol is represented by Malmsbury as having been, so early as the reign of Henry II., a "wealthy city, full of ships from Ireland, Norway, and every part of Europe, which brought to it great commerce." It carries on an extensive TRADE with the West Indies, North and South America, and the countries bordering on the Baltic and Mediterranean seas: the principal articles of importation are sugar, rum, coffee, tobacco, wine, corn, timber, tar, turpentine, &c.; those exported consist chiefly of the produce of the manufactories within the town and neighbourhood. It has also a great coasting trade, and considerable intercourse with Ireland. Of late, a new and important feature in the commerce of the place has been introduced, by the establishment of steam communication with North America: the large steam-ship, the "Great Western," which sailed from the port on the 2nd June, 1838, was the first steamer which crossed the Atlantic by the power of steam only. A few years since, a considerable reduction was made by the corporation in the local dues; and the port was materially enlarged and improved, in 1803, by changing the course of the Avon, and damming up its former channel, to form an extensive floating dock, communicating, by means of reservoirs, with the river and the quay, to which vessels have access at any time, and from which they may sail directly into the channel. Over this new course of the Avon two handsome iron bridges have been erected, and the entire work was completed, in 1809, at an expense of more than £600,000. An act has been lately obtained for building a bridge from the parish of St. Philip and St. Jacob, over the floating harbour, to the parish of Temple. The quay, extending for more than a mile along the sides of the Avon and Frome, is accessible to ships of any burthen, and conveniently adapted for the despatch of business. In 1837, an act for removing and preventing encroachments, and for better regulating the shipping, quays, and markets, and for other purposes, was procured. Immediately behind the quay is a spacious square, part of which was burned in the riots during the agitation of the Reform Bill; and in the centre is an equestrian statue of William III. in the Roman costume. On the banks of the Avon, a little below the town, are several dock-yards, where ship-building is carried on to a considerable extent. The principal articles of manufacture are brass, copper, zinc, patent shot, lead, leather, floor-cloth, china, glass, glass-bottles, and glass ware of every kind (for which there are numerous furnaces), and the celebrated stone ware: the brass and copper works here are the most extensive in England, and the zinc is thought to be superior to that made at any other place. There are several sugar refineries, breweries, distilleries, and iron-foundries, for the supply of all which abundance of coal is brought into the town from collieries in the neighbourhood. The construction of a railroad from Coal Pit Heath, in the county of Gloucester, to Bristol, has considerably reduced the price of coal. One of the termini of the Great Western railway, from London to Bristol, which was opened June 30th, 1841, is situated at Temple Mead; the station-house and offices are raised on arches of rough stone, and some of the heaviest works on the line of this vast undertaking occur in the neighbourhood of the city. The Bristol and Exeter railway commences by a junction with this line at Temple Mead. An extensive fire, which took place in April, 1841, at the terminus, destroyed property belonging to the Bristol and Exeter company to the amount of several thousands of pounds. The market-days are Tuesday and Friday, for corn, hay, and straw; Wednesday and Saturday, for general provisions, fish, cheese, and hides; and Thursday, for corn, cattle, and hides. There are several excellent market-houses, well supplied. The principal market-place forms a spacious quadrangle; one side is occupied by the back of the exchange, forming a rustic arcade, over which is a pediment ornamented with the city arms, and surmounted by a handsome turret. Fairs, each continuing eight days, on the first two of which there is a considerable show of cattle, are held on March 1st and September 1st. A spacious market-place for cattle has recently been erected by the corporation, and trustees of the church lands of St. Thomas', at an expense of £20,000; it occupies an area 400 feet square.

The earliest charter of INCORPORATION is supposed to be that of Henry II.; many others were subsequently granted, the principal of which were by Henry III., Edward III., Henry VII., Elizabeth, Charles II., and Queen Anne. By the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76, the corporation now consists of a mayor, sixteen aldermen, and forty-eight councillors, and the city is divided into ten wards; a sheriff, recorder, and other officers required by the act, are also appointed, and the total number of magistrates is twenty-five. The elective franchise has been exercised since the 23rd of Edward I., and the city returns two members to parliament. The right of election was formerly vested in the freeholders and freemen at large, in number about five thousand; but, by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the non-resident freemen, except within seven miles of the city, have been disfranchised, and the privilege has been extended to the £10 householders of an enlarged district; the ancient boundary comprised about 784 acres, but the present embraces, by estimation, 4674. The sheriff is returning officer. A court of general sessions of the peace is held quarterly before the recorder, who is sole judge; prisoners charged with offences not cognizable at the sessions are removed for trial at the assizes for the county of Gloucester. A court of assize and nisi prius is held annually at the close of the summer assizes for the western circuit, at which the senior judge on that circuit presides. A court called the Tolzey court (from having been anciently held at the place where the king's tolls, or dues, were collected), is held by prescription every Monday under the sheriff, in his character of bailiff of the hundred, aided by a steward, who must be a barrister of three years' standing; its jurisdiction extends over the whole of the county of the city, and on the river down to the Flat and Steep-Holmes, below Kingsroad, twenty miles from the city; and it takes cognizance of all actions for debt, and other civil actions, to an unlimited amount, arising within the city; it also holds pleas of ejectment, and issues processes of attachment on the goods of foreigners sued for debt. A branch of this, similar in all its proceedings and jurisdiction, is the court of pie-poudre, held for fourteen days in the open air, in the Old market, commencing on the 30th of September; and during this period the proceedings in the Tolzey court are suspended. A court of conscience is held under commissioners every Monday, pursuant to an act passed in the first of William and Mary, for the recovery of debts under 40s.; and an act for granting more effectual powers for its regulation was obtained in 1837. A court of requests, under an act of the 56th of George III., also, is held every Tuesday, for the recovery of debts above 40s., and under any amount for which an arrest on mesne process may issue by law. The guildhall, lately pulled down to make way for a new edifice, was a very ancient building, decorated with the arms of Edward VI., those of George IV., and a statue of Charles II., and contained, in the north wing, a small chapel, dedicated to St. George, founded in the reign of Richard II., by William Spicer, mayor. The council-house, for the transaction of civic affairs, is an elegant edifice of freestone, of the Ionic order, with a handsome portico and balustrade, and ornamented with a figure of Justice over the pediment. Merchants' Hall, Coopers' Hall, and others, formerly belonging to trading companies, and many of their good buildings, are now appropriated to private uses. The common gaol comprises ten wards, with day-rooms and airing-yards, for the classification of prisoners. The house of correction was destroyed by fire, by the rioters, in 1831, except a few of the cells, which have been repaired. Lawford's Gate prison, without the city, is appropriated to that part of the suburbs lying in the county of Gloucester.

Bristol was separated from the diocese of Salisbury and raised into a see in 1542, the jurisdiction of which extended over the county of the city, part of the county of Dorset, and a few parishes in the shire of Gloucester. By the act of the 6th and 7th of William IV., cap. 77, the sees of Gloucester and Bristol have been united, and the diocese now extends over the late diocese of Gloucester; the city and deanery of Bristol; the deaneries of Cricklade and Malmesbury, in Wilts, and previously in the diocese of Salisbury; and the parish of Bedminster, formerly in that of Bath and Wells: that part of Dorset which was in the diocese of Bristol has been transferred to Salisbury. The bishop is elected alternately by the Dean and Chapter of Bristol, and the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. The establishment consists of a bishop, dean, six prebendaries, five minor canons, a deacon, sub-deacon, and other officers: the six prebendaries possess the patronage of the five minor canons, and of thirty-three benefices, with a net revenue of £3600. The Cathedral, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was formerly the collegiate church of a priory of Black canons, founded by Robert Fitzharding, in 1148, and raised into an abbey in the reign of Henry II., the revenue being at the Dissolution £767. 15. 3. It is a venerable and highly-finished cruciform structure, with a lofty square embattled tower rising from the centre, strengthened with buttresses and crowned with pinnacles; it contains portions in the early, decorated, and later English styles, in all of them exhibiting specimens of the purest design and most elaborate execution. The nave was destroyed during the parliamentary war: the roofs of the choir and transepts, all of equal height and finely groined, are supported on clustered columns, richly moulded; and the remaining parts, from the striking beauty of their details, afford evidence of the grandeur of the interior when entire. At the entrance into the choir is an empanelled screen, ornamented with carvings of the minor prophets; and in several small chapels of exquisite beauty are many interesting monuments, among which may be noticed those of Robert Fitzharding and of several of the abbots and bishops; of Mrs. Draper, the eulogized Eliza of Sterne; Lady Hesketh, celebrated by Cowper; and the wife of the Rev. William Mason, with a beautiful epitaph written by that poet. The chapter-house, a spacious edifice, highly enriched, in the latest style of Norman architecture, and part of the cloisters in the later English style, are still remaining; the entrance gateway, in the lower part, Norman, and in the upper part, later English, is in a state of excellent preservation.

The city comprised, within its ancient limits, the parishes of All Saints, St. Augustine, Christ-Church, St. Ewin or Owen, St. John the Baptist, St. Leonard, St. Mary-le-Port, St. Mary's Redcliffe, St. Michael, St. Nicholas, St. Peter, St. Stephen, St. Thomas, and St. Werburgh, besides Temple parish, or Holy Cross, part of the parishes of St. James, St. Paul, St. Philip and St. Jacob, and the extra-parochial ward of Castle Precincts, which has no church, and is exempted from all ecclesiastical assessments. By the Municipal Act the parish of Clifton, part of Westbury-upon-Trym, and those portions of the parish of St. Philip and St. Jacob, and of the united parishes of St. James and St. Paul, which were in the county of Gloucester, with part of the parish of Bedminster, in Somerset, have been comprehended within the county of the city of Bristol. The living of All Saints is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 3. 4.; net income, £160; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The church, to which a tower was added in 1716, is a very ancient structure; the interior is a fine specimen of the early English style, and contains a magnificent monument, by Rysbrack, to the memory of Edward Colston, Esq., an eminent philanthropist, and a great benefactor to the city. The living of St. Augustine's is a discharged vicarage, valued at £6; net income, £320; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter. The church, which was built about the year 1480, combines various portions in the early, with several in the later, English style. An additional church, of the Grecian-Doric order, with a cupola, was erected in 1823, at an expense of £8107, under the act of the 58th of George III., pursuant to the 16th section of which the ancient parish has been divided into two parts. The living of Christ-Church parish is a discharged rectory, with that of St. Ewin's united, valued in the king's books at £11. 10. ; net income, £390. The church is a handsome modern edifice, in the Grecian style, with a lofty tower of two stages, decorated with light columns and pilasters, and surmounted by an octangular turret and spire. The living of St. John the Baptist's is a discharged rectory, with which that of St. Lawrence was consolidated in 1578, valued at £7. 4. 7. ; net income, £150. The church is a handsome edifice, chiefly in the later English style, in which a gallery was erected in 1833 with 120 sittings. The living of St. Leonard's is a discharged vicarage, with that of St. Nicholas' united, valued at £12 ; net income of St. Leonard's, £253, and of St. Nicholas', £243 ; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter. The living of the parish of St. Mary-le-Port is a discharged rectory, valued at £7 ; net income, £150 ; patron, Duke of Buckingham. The church is a very ancient structure, of early English architecture, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles.

The living of St. Mary's Redcliffe is a perpetual curacy, with that of St. Thomas' united, and, with Abbot's-Leigh, annexed to the vicarage of Bedminster, valued at £12. 6. 3. ; net income, £366. The church was founded, in 1376, by Simon de Burton, mayor, and, after the damage it sustained from a violent storm, in 1445, that blew down two-thirds of the spire, was extensively repaired by William Cannynge. It is a spacious and magnificent cruciform structure, with a lofty and finely-proportioned tower at the west end, surmounted by the remaining part of the spire, which has not been rebuilt. The interior exhibits a continued series of the richest specimens, in every variety, from the early to the later style of English architecture ; the proportions are grand, and the details exquisitely finished, but the beautiful east window has been blocked up with paintings from the pencil of Hogarth, and the organ, which has been removed to the west end of the nave, is supported by a heavy mass of modern masonry, by no means harmonizing with the character of the building. The north porch, which is entirely in the decorated style, is exceedingly beautiful ; and the Lady chapel, now used as a schoolroom, is a fine specimen of the later style. In the church are two monuments to the memory of Mr. Cannynge, one bearing his effigy in magisterial robes, surmounted by a canopy ; the other representing him as Dean of Westbury, he having been promoted to that dignity on entering into holy orders towards the close of his life. This exquisitely beautiful structure, being built of soft porous stone, has been greatly impaired by time, and is about to be restored in all the richness of its original details, which have mouldered into ruin. The remains of Sir William Penn, father of William Penn, founder of Pennsylvania, are deposited here. The living of St. Michael's is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6 ; net income, £372. The church is a neat structure, in the ancient English style, with a very old tower. The living of St. Nicholas' is a discharged vicarage, united to that of St. Leonard's, and valued at £21. 1. 1. ; appropriators, the Dean and Chapter. The church is a plain modern edifice, of ancient English architecture ; the interior forms a spacious area undivided by pillars ; in the crypt is a handsome monument to the memory of Alderman John Whitson, who represented the city in four parliaments. The living of St. Peter's is a discharged rectory, valued at £6. 7. 6. ; net income, £239. The church is a venerable structure, and though so frequently repaired as to leave little of the original building, still retains much of its character and interest : Richard Savage, whose talents and sufferings have excited so much admiration and sympathy, was interred in it. The living of St. Stephen's is a discharged rectory, valued at £16, and in the patronage of the Crown ; net income, £292. The church, founded in 1470, by John Shipward, Esq., mayor, is a very handsome structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a lofty and beautiful tower, crowned with light pierced battlements and turrets, and a porch, the details of which are exquisitely rich.

The living of Temple parish is a discharged vicarage, valued at £3. 4. 2. ; net income, £387. The church, founded by the Knights Templars, in 1145, is a spacious edifice, partaking of the late Norman and early English styles, with a fine tower, declining considerably from the perpendicular, disunited from the body of the church by the vibration caused by ringing the bells. The living of St. Thomas' is a perpetual curacy, united to that of St. Mary's Redcliffe, and annexed to the vicarage of Bedminster : the church, founded in the twelfth century, was rebuilt in 1793, and is a handsome structure, in the later English style. The living of St. Werburgh's is a discharged rectory, valued at £10, and in the patronage of the Crown ; net income, £70. The church, founded in 1190, and, with the exception of the tower, which was added to it in 1385, rebuilt in 1761, is in the later style of English architecture ; it is highly ornamented within, and contains a monument to the memory of Robert Thorne, founder of the grammar school. In this church, the Litany was first celebrated in English, in 1543. The living of St. James' is a perpetual curacy ; net income, £551. The church, anciently collegiate, was made parochial in 1347, when the tower was added ; the interior contains some fine portions in the Norman style, particularly a curious circular window. Robert, Earl of Gloucester, founder of the priory of St. James, to which the church belonged, and Eleonora, niece of King John, who is said to have been forty years confined in Bristol Castle, are supposed to lie interred in the church. The living of St. Paul's is a perpetual curacy ; net income, £513. The living of the parish of St. Philip and St. Jacob is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15 ; net income, £440 ; impropiator, R. C. Blathwayte, Esq. The church, founded in the twelfth century, is a spacious and handsome structure, in the early English style, with a lofty square embattled tower : 700 additional sittings have been lately provided. The Royal Commissioners have made a conditional grant for the erection of two churches in this parish, of one of which, on Barton-hill, the first stone was laid 24th May, 1842. St. Mark's, commonly called the mayor's chapel, in College-green, formerly collegiate, is a small edifice, containing elegant specimens of the early, decorated, and later styles of English architecture, with a beautiful tower ; the altar-piece, a few years since restored, contains some handsome niches in the later style, and fine tabernacle work ; and to the east of the tower is a small chapel, now used for a vestry-room, with a ceiling of fan tracery of exquisite workmanship. There are several episcopal chapels, the principal of which are, Foster's, in Steep-street, and Colston's, on St. Michael's Hill. Trinity chapel, a neat building, in the later English style, was erected at an expense of £8800, of which £6000 were granted by the Commissioners for building New Churches: the living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £140, in the patronage of the Vicar of the parish of St. Philip and St. Jacob. St. George's church, in Great George-street, is a handsome structure, in the Grecian style, with a portico of the Doric order: the living is a vicarage, not in charge; net income, £285; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, the Connexion of the Countess of Huntingdon, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Moravians, Scotch Seceders, Swedenborgians, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics, besides two synagogues. An act for establishing a general cemetery was obtained in 1837.

The free grammar school was founded in 1352, by Robert Thorne, who bequeathed £1000, which sum, together with houses and land belonging to the dissolved hospital of St. Bartholomew, was appropriated to its erection and endowment, and various benefactions having since been made, it now possesses 590 acres of land and some houses; it has several exhibitions, and two small fellowships at St. John's College, Oxford. The grammar school in College-green is attached to the cathedral, and endowed with £40 per annum, for the instruction of the choristers by one of the minor canons. The free grammar and writing school, in the parish of Redcliffe, was established by letters-patent granted in the 13th of Elizabeth, and endowed by Alderman Whitson and others, with annuities amounting to £21. Queen Elizabeth's hospital, founded, in 1586, by John Carr, an opulent citizen, whose endowment of it, increased by subsequent benefactions, produces about £2400 per annum, is under the management of charity trustees. The free school, in St. Augustine's parish, called Colston's Hospital, was instituted, in 1708, by Mr. Edward Colston, who endowed it for 100 boys: in this school Chatterton was maintained for seven years, and within that period is thought to have composed several of his poems. The free school in Temple parish was also endowed with £80 per annum by Mr. Colston. The Merchants' Hall school, in St. Stephen's parish, was established, in 1738, by Dame Susannah Holworthy, and endowed by her and other benefactors; the Merchants' Society, in part of whose hall the school is held, pay a master £80 per annum. The school in Pile-street, for boys of the parishes of Redcliffe and St. Thomas, is supported partly by an endowment of £20 per annum, by Mr. Colston; the income is about £170. The Red Maids' school was founded, in 1627, and endowed, by Alderman Whitson, for girls: a building, in the ancient collegiate style, has been lately erected for it on a more eligible site, from the designs of Mr. C. Dyer. There are also, a school in Temple parish, endowed with a permanent fund for girls; the Diocesan school, containing 240 boys and 120 girls, and partly supported by the proceeds of a legacy of £200; the Clergy Daughters' school, established in 1833; and Ellbridge's school for girls, supported by endowment; and national and other schools have been opened in various parts of the city.

Trinity hospital, or almshouses, for ten aged men and thirty-six poor women, is of very ancient date; the endowment, increased by benefactions, produces £790 per annum, and the premises consist of two separate ranges of buildings, on opposite sides of Old Market-street, to one of which is attached a neat chapel. Foster's almshouses, in Steep-street, were founded and endowed in 1492, by John Foster, merchant, for fourteen aged persons, whose revenue is at present about £330; they are built of stone, and have a small chapel annexed. Temple hospital was founded and endowed, in 1643, by the Rev. Dr. White; its revenue amounts to upwards of £600, and the number of the inmates has been increased to 24; the premises consist of two parallel ranges of buildings, connected at one end by a wall, the area forming a garden. Two almshouses of stone, one in Temple-street, containing twelve tenements, and the other in the old market-place, containing sixteen, were founded, in 1679, by Alderman Stevens; the endowment consisting of 354 acres of land, produces £750 per annum. The Merchants' almshouses, in King-street, were founded by John Welch and other mariners, in the 4th of Elizabeth; they are endowed with £1000, from the bequest of Richard Jones, Esq., of Stowey, and comprise 31 tenements, occupied by nineteen seamen and twelve women. Colston's almshouses, on St. Michael's Hill, were founded and endowed, in 1696, by Mr. Edward Colston, for twelve aged men and twelve aged women; the income is about £300. Mrs. Sarah Ridley founded an almshouse in 1716, which she endowed with £2200, for five bachelors and five maids; the endowment was augmented by Mr. John Jocham, with £1000, and, with subsequent benefactions, produces at present £155 per annum. The almshouses in Milk-street were founded by Mrs. Elizabeth Blanchard, in 1722, who endowed them for five aged persons; the income is £95 per annum. The revenue arising from the various charitable endowments amounts to nearly £17,000 per annum. The Infirmary, the great medical and surgical school for the western counties, is conducted on a plan of truly beneficent liberality, and embraces every possible case of calamity or disease; it was opened for the reception of patients in 1786, and is nobly supported by donations and voluntary subscriptions; the building, to which a new wing was added a few years since, at an expense of £10,000, is spacious and well arranged, and in an open and healthy situation. A new hospital and dispensary has been instituted in the populous parish of Bedminster, on the Somersetshire side of the city. The asylum for the indigent blind of both sexes, from all parts of the kingdom, who are instructed in basket-making, and other trades, is a valuable institution; and a dispensary, hospital for diseases of the eye, asylum for female orphans, refuge society, penitentiary, and numerous other charitable and benevolent institutions, are extensively patronized and supported.

Of the ancient fortifications, the tower gateway, a plain arch at the end of John-street, and St. John's gate, under the tower of St. John's church, decorated with statues and much ornamented, are all that now exist. There are partial remains of some of the numerous Religious Houses which once flourished in the city and its immediate vicinity, comprised in the buildings of the schools and charitable institutions that have been established by the corporation and other individuals, into whose possession they were transferred at the Dissolution. Of these the principal were, a priory of Benedictine monks, to the north-east of the city, founded by Robert, Earl of Gloucester, in the latter part of the reign of Henry I., or the beginning of that of Stephen; a nunnery, to the north of the city, established in the time of Henry II., by Eva, widow of Robert Fitzharding, of which she was prioress, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £21. 11. 3.; St. John's hospital, on the road to Bath, instituted in the reign of King John, the revenue of which was £51. 10. 4.; St. Catherine's hospital, founded in the reign of Henry III., by Robert de Berkeley, and the revenue of which was £21. 15. 8.; St. Lawrence's hospital for lepers, established in the time of Henry III.; an hospital dedicated to the Blessed Virgin and St. Mark, instituted in 1229, by Maurice de Gaunt, and the revenue of which was £140; a house of Black friars, by the same founder, who also erected a college of calendaries; a house of Grey friars, established in 1234; a house of White friars, instituted in 1267 by Edward I., when Prince of Wales; an establishment for Augustine friars, founded, in the reign of Henry II., by Simon and William Montacute; and Trinity hospital, near Lawford-gate, established by John Barstable, in the time of Henry V. In excavating for the Great Western railway, about the beginning of June, 1839, a remarkably fine tusk of the mammoth was discovered, lying on a bed of new red sandstone, about seven feet below the surface, between the Bristol cotton-works and St. Philip's bridge; and some very fine specimens of iron and lead ores were also found near the same spot.

The city is distinguished as the birthplace of many Eminent Characters, among whom may be noticed Sebastian Cabot, who first discovered the continent of North America, in 1498; Hugh Elliot, who discovered Newfoundland, in 1527; William Grocyn, Greek professor at Oxford in the beginning of the sixteenth century; Tobias Matthew, Archbishop of York; the Rev. Mr. Catcott, author of a treatise on the Deluge; Sir William Draper, who distinguished himself by his epistolary replies to the strictures of Junius; Admiral Sir William Penn; the Rev. John Lewis, author of the Life of Wyckliffe, History of the Translations of the Bible, &c.; the poet Chatterton; Mrs. Mary Robinson, from the sweetness of her poetry called the British Sappho; Edward Colston, merchant, who died in 1721, and Richard Reynolds, one of the Society of Friends, and a proprietor of the iron-works at Colebrook-dale, both distinguished for their munificent charities; Thomas Edward Bowditch, the African traveller; and Sir Thomas Lawrence, Bird, and several other artists of eminence. Bristol gives the titles of Earl and Marquess to the family of Hervey.

BRISTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of HOLT, W. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Holt; containing 963 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2824*a. 1r. 5p.*, of which about 2181 acres are arable, 242 meadow, pasture, and woodland, and 400 waste and common; the village, which is considerable, is situated near the springhead of the river Bure. A swine and sheep market is held every Tuesday, a cattle fair on the 26th of May, and a wake on the day after Old Michaelmas-day. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 9. 9½., and in the gift of the Rev. Robert Bond: the impropriation belongs to Winton charity; the glebe contains 39½ acres. The church, which is in the decorated and later English styles, and consists of a nave and chancel, formerly had a north aisle, the arches, though now filled up, being still visible; the tower, which fell down in 1724, has not been rebuilt. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists. Thomasine Scamler, in 1667, bequeathed £110, partly for apprenticing children.

BRITFORD, or BURFORD (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of ALDERBURY, hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 1½ mile (S. E. by S.) from Salisbury; containing, with the hamlets of East Harnham and Longford, 878 inhabitants. A stream in the parish was cut for a canal in the reign of Charles II., to form a line of communication with Christchurch, in the county of Southampton; but, owing to the shifting of the sand, it was never completed. The manufacture of horse-hair is carried on to a limited extent; and a large fair for sheep is held on Aug. 12th. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13; net income, £281; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Salisbury. The great tithes have been commuted for £700, and the glebe comprises 39 acres; the vicarial have been commuted for £350, and the glebe comprises 1 acre. The church, a spacious cruciform structure, with a central tower, contains a tomb, considered by some to be that of the Duke of Buckingham, who was beheaded by Richard III. A school is partly supported by subscription.

BRITTENTON, a hamlet, in the parish of STANDLAKE, union of WITNEY, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD; containing 162 inhabitants.

BRITWELL, a liberty, in the parish and hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Eton; containing 94 inhabitants.

BRITWELL-PRIOR, a chapelry, in the parish of NEWINGTON, union of HENLEY, hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD, 6¼ miles (S. S. W.) from Tetsworth; containing 52 inhabitants. The mansion-house was formerly a nunnery, and subsequently belonged to the Weld family.

BRITWELL-SALOME (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of HENLEY, hundred of LEWKNOR, county of OXFORD, 5½ miles (S. by W.) from Tetsworth; containing 233 inhabitants. It comprises 726*a. 3r. 26p.*, exclusively of ground occupied by a beech wood on the west side of Britwell Hill. An act for inclosing lands was passed in 1842. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 19. 2.; net income, including glebe, £200; patron, Earl of Carrington. Three small schools are partly supported by charity. The lower Ikeneld-street passes under the hill.

BRIXHAM (VIRGIN MARY), a sea-port, market-town, and parish, in the union of TORNES, hundred of HAYTOR, Paignton and S. divisions of DEVON, 27¾ miles (S.) from Exeter, and 198 (W. S. W.) from London; containing 5684 inhabitants. This town, at which William, Prince of Orange, landed on the 5th of Nov. 1688, is pleasantly situated near the southern extremity of Torbay, on the west side, and is irregularly built, though containing many good houses, several of which are on the cliffs above the harbour: a handsome column of granite has been erected on the spot where the prince landed. The inhabitants are amply supplied with water; the air is salubrious, the environs pleasant, and its vicinity to Torquay renders it desirable as a place of residence. During the late war, it was of some importance as a garrison town, the barracks, at Bury Head being sufficiently spacious to accommodate several regiments; they are inclosed in two regular fortresses, which, with the ditches and drawbridges, remain in complete repair, but the barracks have been dismantled. The port, which is a member of that of Dartmouth, carries on a considerable coasting-trade, in which 120 vessels, of from 60 to 150 tons' burthen, are employed: they are also engaged in the foreign fruit trade during the season. The harbour, consisting of two basins, communicating with each other, is safe and commodious; the outer basin was formed by the erection of a second pier, which was begun in 1803, and completed in 1809, by subscription, under an act authorizing the lords of the manor to raise £6000 on security of the tolls. On the liquidation of the debt now due, it is in contemplation to erect another pier, on the eastern side of the harbour, towards Bury Head, in furtherance of which object, an act for improving the pier, harbour, and market, and for the formation of a break-water, was obtained in 1837: vessels will then be enabled to ride in perfect safety during easterly winds, and Brixham will be a safe harbour for both homeward and outward bound ships. During spring-tides the water rises to the height of 24 feet at the pier-head. There are 105 vessels, of from 20 to 45 tons' burthen, and 64 smaller boats, engaged in the fishing trade, which is carried on to a considerable extent: the fish caught are chiefly turbot and soles, for the supply of the London, Bath, and Exeter markets. The trade of the town has derived some increase from being the rendezvous of ships of war, which here lay in their supply of water. There are some extensive quarries of marble in the vicinity. The market-days are Tuesday and Saturday; the fair is on Whit-Tuesday and two following days.

The parish is divided into Higher and Lower Brixham, and comprises 5213*a. 3r. 12p.* The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Churston-Ferrers annexed, valued in the king's books at £52. 15., and in the patronage of the Crown; impropiator, Miss Knollis; net income, £494, with a house. The church, situated in Higher Brixham, is an ancient structure, containing some interesting monuments, among which is the cenotaph of the late Judge Buller; it was enlarged in 1825. The chapel at Lower Brixham was erected, about the year 1822, by the vicar, aided by a large subscription, and by a grant of £1200 from the Parliamentary Commissioners, and was made a district church by act of the 58th of George III.; it is a neat building, in the English style, and contains 300 free sittings. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Crown; net income, £141. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. A national school has been incorporated with an older establishment, endowed in 1634, and also in 1692, with rents of estates by Messrs. Kellond and Kelly. At Higher Brixham is Lay Well, the water of which ebbs and flows about nine times in an hour; the variation is about an inch and a quarter. Bury Head is said to have been the site of a Roman fortress: several ancient coins, in excellent preservation, were found in the vicinity in 1830.

BRIXTON, a parish, in the union of PLYMPTON ST. MARY, hundred of PLYMPTON, Ermington and Plympton, and S. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (E.) from Plymouth; containing 823 inhabitants. This parish comprises 2838*a. 33p.*, and the road from Plymouth to Exeter, through Totnes, and that from Plymouth to Dartmouth, through Modbury and Kingsbridge, pass through the village. Quarries of slate and marble are wrought, the latter of which is used for building, for the making of lime, and for mending the roads; coal and culm are imported, and agricultural produce, and slate, are exported by means of the river Yealm, which forms the southern boundary of the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £124; patrons, Dean and Canons of Windsor; impropiator, T. Splatt, Esq., whose tithes have been commuted for £642. The church is a remarkably neat structure, in the later English style, and is supposed to have been built about the close of the fifteenth century, with the exception of the chancel, which is part of a former chapel. Two schools are supported partly by charity. A distribution is made annually to the poor, of blankets, clothing, and money, from the income of lands; and a considerable sum from this source has, for many years past, been applied to the repairs of the church. Lewis Fortescue, a baron of the exchequer in the reign of Henry VIII., was born at Spriddleston; and Elizæus Heale, of the Inner Temple, in the reign of Elizabeth, who was called "Pious uses Heale," from his bequeathing £1500 per annum for charitable purposes, was born at Wollaton; both which places are in Brixton parish.

BRIXTON, or BRIGHSTONE (St. MARY), a parish, in the liberty of WEST MEDINA, Isle of Wight incorporation and division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 7 miles (S. W. by W.) from Newport; containing 710 inhabitants. The village is pleasantly situated, commanding an extensive view of the British Channel; and in the neighbourhood are several of those chasms which form so distinguishing a feature in this part of the coast. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £30. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester: the tithes have been commuted for £670. The church is of very primitive character, with a massive tower, surmounted by a low spire of lead; the interior is neatly fitted up. The rectory-house is a pleasant residence, and the glebe comprises 5 acres. The Rev. Noel Digby, rector, conveyed, in 1814, an estate in trust for the establishment of a school for twenty children; and the Venerable Archdeacon Wilberforce and others pay for attaching to it a national school of about 130 children. The celebrated Bishop Ken was rector of the parish.

BRIXTON, an ecclesiastical district, in the parish and union of LAMBETH, E. division of the hundred of BRIXTON and of the county of SURREY, 4½ miles (S. S. W.) from London; containing 10,175 inhabitants. This is one of the most agreeable suburbs connected with the metropolis, and is divided into two parts, North Brixton and Brixton Hill; it consists principally of a line of road leading from Kennington to Streatham, upwards of two miles in length, on each side of which are ranges of neat and well-built houses, with others in detached situations surrounded by small shrubberies; and within its limits is Tulse Hill, a gradual ascent from the church, declining a little towards the east, and returning near its greatest acclivity into the main road at Brixton Hill. On both sides are elegant villas and handsome cottages, the country residences of respectable families, commanding a fine view of the metropolis, and rich prospects over the adjacent country. Works on a very extensive scale have been formed for supplying the neighbourhood with water. Brixton is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests for the borough of Southwark, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5. On Brixton Hill stands the house of correction for the county, containing ten wards and ten day-rooms for the classification of prisoners; the tread-mill, completed in 1821, was the first established.

A church, dedicated to St. Matthew, and consecrated in June, 1824, has been erected, pursuant to an act of parliament for dividing the extensive and populous parish of Lambeth into five districts, Brixton being one, each of which, on the decease of the present incumbent of Lambeth, will be a distinct parish. It is in the Grecian style, with a handsome portico supported by four fluted columns of the Doric order at the west, and contains 1926 sittings, of which 1022 are free; the expense of its erection amounted to £15,192, which was defrayed by Her Majesty's Commissioners; the tower was struck down by lightning, April 24th, 1842. The living is a district incumbency; net income, £650; patron, Rector of Lambeth. At Denmark Hill, in the district, is also a chapel, dedicated to St. Matthew. There are three places of worship for Independents, and one each for Wesleyans and Unitarians. Near the church is a national school, erected in 1826, at an expense of £1200, and enlarged in 1829; and an infants' school was established in 1825. The St. Ann's Society, for the maintenance, clothing, and education of children, whose parents have been previously in more prosperous circumstances, was originally founded in 1709, and for nearly a century had only a day school in London for clothing and instructing thirty children of each sex from all parts of the kingdom. The first asylum which the society established, was at Lavenham, in Suffolk, in 1794, where twenty boys were admitted; this was subsequently removed to Peckham, in Surrey, and, in 1830, to the present building at Brixton Hill, erected for 150 children, at an expense of £8000, of which £2500 were paid for the site. It is a handsome edifice of brick, having a basement of stone, with a central piazza, from which rises a portico of four Ionic columns, supporting a triangular pediment, with a frieze and cornice continued round the building, which is also decorated at the angles with antæ of corresponding character; it occupies, with the grounds attached, more than two acres of freehold land, and in 1838 the buildings were enlarged so as to admit 200 boys and 100 girls. In Acre Lane is Trinity Asylum, for aged females, founded and endowed by Thomas Bayley, Esq., in 1824; the building comprises sixteen neat tenements. Mrs. Mary Bayley, his widow, has invested the sum of £2000 towards founding, in connexion with the above, an asylum for the education and maintenance of the orphans of gospel ministers and others. The Reform almshouses, erected from a fund raised by subscription, in commemoration of the passing of the Reform Act, were intended to form three sides of a quadrangle: one range only, however, has been erected, containing 31 houses, occupied by 60 tenants, behind each of which is an allotment of garden-ground.

BRIXTON-DEVERILL (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WARMINSTER, hundred of HEYTESBURY, Warminster and S. divisions of WILTS, 4½ miles (S.)

from Warminster; containing 197 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 2450 acres, which, with the exception of 50 of woodland, are chiefly arable; and the river Willy runs through the district, the surface of which is hilly, and the soil clayey. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 1. 0½.; and in the patronage of the Bishop of Salisbury; the tithes have been commuted for £370, and there are 70½ acres of glebe. Alfred the Great is said to have slept here on the night before the battle of Westbury. Dr. Huntingford, late Bishop of Hereford, was for some time curate of the parish.

BRIXWORTH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of ORLINGBURY, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 6 miles (N.) from Northampton; containing 1202 inhabitants. Bounded on the west by a branch of the river Nene, and intersected by the road from Northampton to Harborough, the parish presents a moderately undulated surface, and consists of 2972 acres, of rather an inferior soil. The village, lying on the left of the road, is of some extent. A considerable portion of the female population are employed in making lace; and there are some stone-quarries and clay-pits. A chartered fair is held on June 5th, but has dwindled into a sale only for earthenware and gingerbread. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14. 15. 10.; net income, £300; patron, Chancellor in the Cathedral of Salisbury, as Prebendary of Brixworth. Land and a certain annual money payment were assigned in lieu of tithes, under an inclosure act, in 1780. The church is a remarkable edifice, of large dimensions, and of very remote antiquity, being partly Anglo-Roman, and partly Norman, with minor alterations and insertions in the various styles of English architecture. The walls are mostly built with rough red stone rag, in pieces not much larger than common bricks; and all the arches are turned, and most of them covered, with courses of Roman bricks, or tiles. The nave and lower part of the square tower are of Anglo-Roman architecture of the third century, exhibiting, since the removal of the plaster and whitewash, the Roman bricks, or tiles, in admirable preservation. The upper part of the tower, and the lofty steeple, of which the summit is about 140 feet from the ground, have been recently rebuilt; and attached to the western side of the square tower is a round Norman tower, containing a winding flight of stone steps, leading to the upper story of the former. On inspecting the opening of a grave in the chancel, on the 4th of Feb. 1841, the Rev. Mr. Watkins, the vicar, discovered a portion of the original basilica, which having been subsequently traced, the whole circuit of the original wall was found, together with an ancient floor of hardened cement, four feet below the floor of the present chancel, and on which most probably a Roman prætor sat and delivered his decisions. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A free school is endowed with 22 acres of good land, the bequest of Thomas Roe, of Scaldwell, in 1665; and there are also schools supported by the dissenters. Divers plots of land have been assigned by unknown benefactors for charitable purposes, consisting of six acres for repairing the church, and thirteen for the benefit of the poor. The union of Brixworth comprises 33 parishes or places, under the superintendence of thirty-eight guardians, and contains a population of 14,330. There is an unopened tumulus; and it is thought that a monastery, or nunnery, anciently existed here. Ammonites, belemnites, and terebratulæ are occasionally discovered.

BROAD-BLUNSDON.—See BLUNSDON, BROAD.—And other places having a similar distinguishing prefix will be found under the proper name.

BROADBRIDGE, a tything, in the parish of BOSHAM, union of WEST-BOURNE, hundred of BOSHAM, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX; containing 9 inhabitants.

BROADCAR, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of SHROPHAM, union of WAYLAND, W. division of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from East Harling. This place, which appears to have been anciently a distinct parish, was united to Shropham previously to the reign of Edward III., and the church, dedicated to St. Andrew, has long been desecrated.

BROAD-CHALK (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WILTON, hundred of CHALK, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Wilton; containing, with the tythings of Knighton and Stoke-Farthing, 775 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarages of Alvediston and Bower-Chalk united, valued in the king's books at £27. 14.; net income, £336; patrons, Provost and Fellows of King's College, Cambridge, the impropiators of the two vicarages. A portion of land was assigned in commutation of a modus on certain estates in this parish and in that of Chilmark, by a private act, obtained in 1814. A school for girls is aided by contributions. There are several vestiges of antiquity, the principal of which are, an encampment, including nearly six acres, and a barrow, called Gawen's barrow.

BROADFIELD, a parish, in the union of BUNTINGFORD, hundred of ODSEY, county of HERTFORD, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Buntingford; containing 6 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Cottered, and valued in the king's books at £10: the church is in ruins.

BROADFIELD, a tything, in the parish of WRINGTON, union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of BRENT with WRINGTON, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 575 inhabitants.

BROADGATE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 5 miles (N. W.) from Leicester; containing 7 inhabitants. Here are the ruins of a fine old mansion, once the property of the noble family of Grey, of Groby, of which was the accomplished and unfortunate Lady Jane Grey, who was born here in 1537.

BROADGREEN, a hamlet, in the parish of BROADWAS, union of MARTLEY, Lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER; containing 113 inhabitants.

BROADHEATH, a hamlet, in the parish of HALLOW, union of MARTLEY, Lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER; containing 482 inhabitants.

BROADHEMBURY (ST. ANDREW), a parish (formerly a market-town), in the union of HONITON, hundred of HAYRIDGE, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (N. W.) from Honiton; containing 851 inhabitants. The parish, according to a recent survey, comprises 4704 acres, of which 2513 are arable, 1101 meadow and pasture, 243 woodland and plantations, 139 orchard ground, and the remainder common and waste: there are some quarries of whetstone. The manor formerly belonged to the abbot of Dunkeswell, who obtained for it the grant of a market and fair; the former has long been discontinued, but the latter is still held, for cattle, on the 11th of December. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 17.; net income, £227; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church is an ancient structure, with a handsome tower, and contains 450 sittings. There is a place of worship for dissenters. In 1725, the Rev. John Burrough gave £40, the interest on which, with £10 a year paid out of the great tithes of Awliscombe, is appropriated to instruction; and schools are partly supported by charity. In the village of Carswell was a small monastery, subordinate to the priory of Montacute; and Hembury Fort comprises the remains of an encampment. The Rev. A. Montague Toplady, the celebrated defender of Calvinistic principles, was vicar of the parish.

BROADHOLME, a hamlet, in the parish of THORNEY, union, and N. division of the wapentake, of NEWARK, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 1 mile (E. by N.) from Tuxford; containing 90 inhabitants. A small Præmonstratensian nunnery was founded here, in the latter part of the reign of Stephen, by Agnes de Camville, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, the revenue of which, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was estimated at £16. 15. 2.

BROADMAYNE (ST. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of DORCHESTER, hundred of GEORGE, but locally in that of CULLIFORD-TREE, Dorchester division of DORSET, 4 miles (S. E. by S.) from Dorchester; containing 490 inhabitants. This place is situated on the road from Dorchester to Wareham, and comprises by admeasurement 1500 acres, chiefly arable land; the soil is chalky, and the produce consists principally of wheat, barley, oats, and turnips. Bricks, of excellent quality, are made to a considerable extent. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of West Knighton, and valued in the king's books at £15. 4. 2.: land and a money payment were assigned in 1805, in lieu of tithes, and there is a good glebe-house. The church is in the Norman style. Parochial schools are supported partly by the rector. Many tumuli of great antiquity may be seen in the neighbourhood.

BROADOAK (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of LISKEARD, hundred of WEST, E. division of CORNWALL, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Liskeard; containing 303 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated, in 1742, with the rectory of Boconnoc (which see), and valued in the king's books at £8. 13. 4. The church contains a handsome font. A school is chiefly supported by the rector.

BROADSIDE, a grieveship, in the parish of ALLENDALE, union of HEXHAM, S. division of TINDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing 123 inhabitants.

BROADSTAIRS, a small sea-port and hamlet, in the parish of ST. PETER, union of ISLE of THANET, hundred of RINGSLOW, or ISLE of THANET, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, 2 miles (N. E. by N.) from Ramsgate, 4 (S. E. by S.) from Margate, and 75

(E.) from London; containing 1459 persons. This place, anciently called Bradstow, exhibits many vestiges of its former importance; and, though subsequently reduced to an inconsiderable village, inhabited only by a few fishermen, it has lately risen into celebrity as a place of fashionable resort for sea-bathing, and is visited in the season by many respectable families, for whose accommodation several new buildings, and warm baths, with every requisite appendage, have been erected. There are two public libraries, an assembly-room, and an excellent hotel. Her present Majesty, when Princess Victoria, often resided here with the Duchess of Kent during the summer months, at Pierremont House. Leading down to the shore is a stone arch, or portal, with walls built of flint, in which were gates and a portcullis, with a drawbridge attached to it, erected to protect the inhabitants from the incursions of privateers: above the arch is the inscription, "York gate, built by George Culmer, A.D. 1540, repaired by Sir John Henniker, Bart., 1795." At a short distance from the gate stood a chapel, where was placed an image of the Virgin Mary, to whom it was dedicated, in passing which all vessels lowered their topsails, as a mark of reverence. The pier, which is accessible only to vessels of small burthen, was constructed in the reign of Henry VIII., for the safety of the craft employed in the fishing trade, which was once considerable; it is built of wood, and though an act of parliament was passed, in the 32nd of George III., for the improvement of the harbour and the pier, the trade had decreased so much that its provisions were only partially carried into effect. The principal source of employment at present is boat-building. A neat chapel of ease was erected by subscription, aided by a grant of £400 from the Society for Building Churches, and was consecrated April 15th, 1830; it contains 616 sittings, 318 of which are free, and was enlarged in 1837, when national schools were erected, in connexion with it. There are places of worship for Anabaptists and Wesleyans. Between Broadstairs and Kingsgate is the North Foreland, the most eastern point of England, and supposed to have been the Roman station Cantium, mentioned by Ptolemy, on which a lighthouse was erected, in 1683.

BROADSTONE, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of MUNSLOW, union of LUDLOW, S. division of SALOP; containing 210 inhabitants. Here is a chapel of ease to the rectory of Munslow.

BROADWARD, a township, in the parish and union of LEOMINSTER, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. by E.) from Leominster; containing 50 inhabitants.

BROADWAS (St. Mary Magdalene), a parish, in the union of MARTLEY, Lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, though locally in the Upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 6 miles (W.) from Worcester; containing, with the hamlet of Broadgreen, 326 inhabitants. It is washed by the river Teame on the south, and comprises about 1200 acres of a stiff clayey soil, the lower part of which is subject to flood: the road between Worcester and Bromyard crosses the parish from east to west. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 9. 2., and in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £275, and there is a rectory-house, with a glebe of 48 acres. Two small schools are partly supported by voluntary contributions. Sarah Roberts, in 1797, bequeathed money, since invested in the purchase of £166. 13. 4. three per cent. reduced annuities, the interest of which is distributed among the poor on New-Year's day.

BROADWATER (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of PRESTON (under Gilbert's act), hundred of BRIGHTFORD, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX; containing, with the town of Worthing, 5345 inhabitants. This place, which is supposed to have derived its name from a broad expanse of water which formerly flowed from the sea to the south-east extremity of the village, is situated on the roads from London to Worthing, and from Brighton to Portsmouth; and is bounded on the south by the British Channel. The number of acres is estimated at 2650, of which about 150 are detached; the soil is rich and fertile, especially along the sea-shore, consisting of a deep rich loam, bearing luxuriant crops of wheat; the climate is mild and genial, being defended from the north and north-east winds by the range of the South Down hills, and myrtles and evergreens of all kinds flourish in perfection. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £36; net income, £602; patron and incumbent, the Rev. Peter Wood. The church is a spacious and venerable cruciform structure, partly in the Norman and early English styles, with a low central tower and a turret at the south-west angle; the interior is 139 feet in length, and 90 feet in breadth across the transepts. The chancel is richly groined, and the arch leading into it from the nave is in the richest style of the later Norman; it is lighted by a handsome east window, and contains several canopied stalls finely sculptured, and in a recess, on the south side, a bench, surmounted by a Norman arch. In the chancel is a superb monument to the memory of Thomas, Lord de la Warre, who died in 1526; and on the east side of the south transept is a handsome monument to Thomas, Lord de la Warre, who died in 1554, and was buried in the church. The whole of the interior has been recently restored, at an expense of £1200. A national school is supported by subscription. In the parish is an eminence, called Cissbury Hill, containing 20 acres, surrounded by a vallum, and supposed to have been originally a British encampment, subsequently adopted by the Romans, and lastly by the Saxons, from one of whose kings, Cissa, it is supposed to derive its name.

BROADWAY (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of WEYMOUTH, hundred of CULLIFORD-TREE, Dorchester division of DORSET, 5 miles (S. S. W.) from Dorchester; containing 498 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the Weymouth and Dorchester road, and intersected by the river Wey, comprises by admeasurement 11,000 acres, about one-third of which is arable. There are some fine quarries, from which stone is obtained for lime and for building. At the hamlet of Nottingham is a mineral spring, which is used for medicinal purposes. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Bincombe, and valued in the king's books at £7. 15. 2½.: the glebe contains about 100 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The southern entrance of the church, which is a small ancient edifice, is distinguished by a beautiful Norman arch of very early date. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is supported by the rector and others.

BROADWAY (St. ALDELME), a parish, in the union of CHARD, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Ilminster; containing, with the tythings of Capland, Broadway, and Rapps, 570 inhabitants. The name of this place was given as descriptive of the situation of the few scattered huts which were constructed at an early period, along each side of a broad path leading through what was then the forest of Roche, or Neroche, so denominated from a Roman encampment called Roche, or Rachiche Castle, on the edge of Blackdown Hill. The parish comprises 2012*a. 3r. 32p.*, of which 1043 acres are arable, 850 meadow and pasture, 99 orchards and gardens, and 19 wood. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £167; patron and impropiator, Rev. Wm. Palmer, D.D. The church, which belonged, until the Reformation, to the abbey of Bisham, in Berks, is a fine cruciform structure, with an ancient tower at the west end, and windows in the later English style: in the churchyard is a beautiful cross on a pedestal, ornamented with figures of saints. A school is partly supported by subscription; and an almshouse is endowed with about £21 per annum, for the support of seven poor men.

BROADWAY (St. EADBURGH), a parish, in the union of EVEESHAM, Upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 6 miles (S. E.) from Evesham; containing 1687 inhabitants. The parish comprehends by admeasurement 4692 acres, of which two-thirds are pasture, and the rest arable; it forms the south-eastern extremity of the county, and is surrounded on all sides except the north by that of Gloucester, and intersected by the road from Worcester to London; it contains some quarries of good freestone. A post-office has been established. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 17., and in the patronage of certain Trustees; net income, £212: land, and an annual money payment, were assigned, in lieu of the tithes of the manor, in 1771. A new church was consecrated in 1840, erected on the site of the chapel of ease, which was an ancient and small building; it is in the early English style, with a handsome tower at the west end, and is capable of containing 1000 persons. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics. Thomas Hodges, in 1686, gave land for the instruction of 20 poor boys, which was exchanged for an allotment of 62 acres, under an inclosure act, now producing £74 per annum.

BROADWELL (St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of STOW-ON-THE-WOLD, Upper division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Stow; containing 345 inhabitants. It derives its name from a spring which rises within its limits. The living is a rectory, with that of Adlestrop annexed, valued in the king's books at £23. 11. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £643; patron, Lord Leigh. The tithes of Broadway were commuted for land and an annual payment in money, in 1792. A school is supported by subscription.

BROADWELL (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of WITNEY, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Burford; containing, with the hamlet of Filkins, and the chapelries of Holwell and Kelmscott, 1051 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Holwell and Kelmscott annexed, valued in the king's books at £8. 14. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £270; patron, E. F. Colston, Esq.; impropiators, the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Oxford; lessee, W. Hervey, Esq. The tithes were commuted, in 1775, for land and annual money payments. The church is a spacious cruciform structure, with a massive western tower surmounted by a spire; in the chancel are some mural monuments to the Colston family. Near the churchyard are the remains of a cross; and at Holwell is a very ancient chapel, with a Norman door on the north side. On the estate of Broadwell Grove may be traced the line of the Roman Akeman-street, which continues its course towards Akeman-cestre (Bath).

BROADWELL, a hamlet, in the parish of LEAMINGTON-HASTINGS, union of RUGBY, S. division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, S. division of the county of WARWICK; containing 220 inhabitants.

BROADWINSOR (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish and liberty, in the union of BEAMINSTER, Bridport division of DORSET, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Beaminster; containing, with Little Winsor, which is in Redhone hundred, 1661 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 6215 acres, of which 1222 are arable, 4579 meadow and pasture, and 292 woods and orchards. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15. 8. 9., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Salisbury: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £1282. 10., of which £530 are paid to the vicars choral, £2. 10. to the impropiator, and £750 to the vicar, who has a glebe-house, and 9 acres of land; the vicars choral have a glebe of 85 acres. A chapel of ease was erected at Bleekdown, in 1840, in the early English style, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity; it is a neat and substantial building, and will accommodate 300 persons. There is an endowment of about £13, arising from land given by Robert Smith, in 1725, for the instruction of children.

BROADWOOD-KELLY, a parish, in the union of OAKHAMPTON, hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, Black Torrington and Shebbear, and N. divisions of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Hatherleigh; containing 471 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 7. 6.; net income, £238; patron and incumbent, Rev. John Hole. A small school is partly supported by donations.

BROADWOOD-WIDGER.—See BRADWOOD-WIDGER.

BROBURY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WEOLBY, hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Hay; containing 71 inhabitants. Bounded on all sides, except on the north-east, by a bend of the river Wye, the parish comprises 487 acres, the soil being of the full average productiveness, and the surface moderately wooded. The river is here crossed by a bridge leading to Bredwardine. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4; net income, £180; patron and incumbent, Rev. N. D. H. Newton.

BROCKDEN, or BROGDEN, a township, in the parish of BARNOLDSDWICK, union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWECROSS, W. riding of YORK, $9\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Skipton; containing 219 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 1670 acres, including Admergill, which adjoins Lancashire, and is ecclesiastically connected with the chapelry of Colne, in the parish of Whalley, in that county.

BROCKDISH (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union of DEPWADE, hundred of EARSHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Harleston; containing 466 inhabitants. The road from Bury-St. Edmund's to Yarmouth passes through the parish, and the river Waveney separates it from the county of Suffolk. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10; patron and incumbent, the Rev. Mr. Butterworth: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £340, and there are 24 acres of glebe. The church, which is chiefly in the later English style, consists of nave, chancel, and south aisle, with an embattled tower; the nave is separated from the chancel by the remains of a carved screen. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BROCKENHURST, a chapelry, in the parish of BOLDRE, union of LYMINGTON, E. division of the hundred of NEW FOREST, Lymington and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Lymington; containing 928 inhabitants. The village is of Saxon origin, and is mentioned in Domesday book under the name Broceste, wherein it is stated to contain a church. It is beautifully situated on an eminence, on the road from Lyndhurst to Lymington, and commands a finely varied prospect over a considerable portion of the New Forest; the parish comprises by computation 2880 acres, the soil of which is in some places a strong clay loam, and the Boldre or Lymington river flows past the northern extremity of the village. The chapel, which is subordinate to Boldre, stands on an artificial mound, and has a very ancient spire; though somewhat disguised by subsequent alterations, it exhibits various portions of early Norman architecture, and contains a large and curious font; it was enlarged in 1834. A church, to which is attached a schoolhouse, was erected on Sway Common, in 1838. There is a place of worship for Baptists. Henry Thurston, in 1745, gave property, now producing £24 per annum, applied to the support of a national school for boys; a school for girls is supported by Lady Caroline Morant, and three infants' schools by subscription. Various tumuli are dispersed over Sway Common, on the south-west of the village; some of them lie within the area of an intrenchment, on the brow of a hill, a short distance south-east of Setley Wood; and two have a regular fosse and vallum. Watcombe House, in Brockenhurst Park, was for three years the residence of John Howard, the philanthropist.

BROCKFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of WETHERINGSETT, union and hundred of HARTISMERE, W. division of SUFFOLK, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (E. S. E.) from Mendlesham, on the road from London to Norwich; containing 277 inhabitants.

BROCKHALL (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union of DAVENTRY, hundred of NEWBOTTLE-GROVE, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 2 miles (N. by E.) from Weedon; containing 59 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 850 acres, consisting chiefly of pasture and plantations; it is intersected in its western portion by the Grand Junction canal, and the London and Birmingham railway, which has a station at Weedon, also runs through it. On that part of the Watling-street which passes by the gate of Mr. Thornton's premises, is found the uncommon plant, called the Eryngium Eriaphorum, or field eryngo. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13, and in the gift of Thomas Reeve Thornton, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £160. 6., and there is a good glebe-house, with upwards of 8 acres of glebe, exclusively of 30 acres in the adjoining parish of Floore. The church is a small ancient structure, adjoining Mr. Thornton's mansion, partly Norman, and partly in the early English style. Chalybeate springs are found in this and the neighbouring parishes, all of which derive their mineral qualities from the inferior oolite, the escarpment of which forms the hills of this district, ranging north-east and south-west.

BROCKHAMPTON, with KNOWLE, a tything, in the parish and hundred of BUCKLAND-NEWTON, union of CERNE, Cerne division of DORSET, 12 miles (N. by E.) from Dorchester; containing 188 inhabitants.

BROCKHAMPTON, a hamlet, in the parish of BISHOP'S-CLEEVE, union of WINCHCOMBE, hundred of CLEEVE, or BISHOP'S-CLEEVE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Cheltenham; containing, with Southam, 278 inhabitants. The Birmingham and Gloucester railway passes through the village, and crosses Cleeve Common. An infants' school is supported by Lord Ellenborough.

BROCKHAMPTON, a chapelry, in the parish and union of BROMYARD, hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Bromyard; containing 88 inhabitants, and comprising, with the township of Norton, 2879 acres, exclusively of 133 in the extra-parochial place of Lower Brockhampton. It is a rich and fertile district. A free chapel was built some years ago, the right of presentation to which belongs to John Barneby, Esq. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £188. 10., of which £125 are payable to the Dean and Chapter of Hereford, and £63. 10. to the vicar of the parish.

BROCKHAMPTON (Holy Trinity), a parish, in the union of ROSS, hundred of GREYTREE, county of HEREFORD, 6 miles (N.) from Ross; containing 132 inhabitants. The parish is beautifully situated on the left bank of the river Wye, and abounds with picturesque scenery. It comprises by admeasurement 785 acres, about 150 of which are pasture, and the rest arable, with the exception of about 60 acres of woodland, consisting chiefly of oak and elm; the soil is fertile, and is formed principally of the detritus of the old red sandstone; there are some quarries of good building-stone, and also stone for the roads. The village is pleasantly seated near the eastern bank of the river, which is here navigable for barges of 40 tons' burthen. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £74; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Hereford. The great tithes have been commuted for £125, and the vicarial for £63. 10. The church, a neat edifice in the later English style, has a tower and two bells, and a piscina for holy water at the entrance door; in the churchyard is an ancient cross. A parochial school is supported chiefly by Mrs. Powell, of Fawley Court. A little to the north of the village are the remains of a Roman encampment with a double trench.

BROCKHAMPTON, a tything, in the parish of NEWINGTON, union of WALLINGFORD, hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Wallingford; containing 113 inhabitants.

BROCKHAMPTON, a tything, in the parish, union, and liberty of HAVANT, Fareham and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 109 inhabitants.

BROCKHOLES, with GRIMSARGH, a chapelry, in the parish and union of PRESTON, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3 miles (E. by N.) from Preston; containing 331 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £50. 13. 3., and the vicarial for £6. 10.

BROCKLEBANK, with STONERAISE, a township, in the parish of WESTWARD, union of WIGTON, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Wigton; containing 617 inhabitants.

BROCKLESBY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, E. division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 10 miles (S. E.) from Brigg; containing, with Newsham, extra-parochial, and the hamlet of Limber Parva, 243 inhabitants. This place comprises by computation 2454 acres, of which 1614 are pasture, 380 arable, and 460 woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 10. 10.; net income, £287; patron, Lord Yarborough: the tithes were commuted in 1812, for land and corn-rents. A monastery of the Præmonstratensian order, in honour of St. Mary and St. Martial, was founded at Newsham, in the parish, by Peter de Gousla, in 1143, which, at the Dissolution, had a revenue of £114. 1. 4.

BROCKLEY (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of BEDMINSTER, forming, with the parish of Kingston-Seymour, a detached portion of the hundred of CHEWTON, E. division of SOMERSET, 9 miles (S. W.) from Bristol; containing 171 inhabitants. This parish, which is beautifully situated on the road from Bristol to Weston-super-Mare, comprises by computation 700 acres: there are some quarries of limestone of excellent quality. About a quarter of a mile to the south-east of the church, is a strikingly romantic glen, called Brockley Coombe, nearly a mile in length, inclosed on each side by steep banks of rugged rocks, rising to the height of nearly 300 feet, and thickly interspersed with lofty trees of luxuriant growth. The Bristol and Exeter railway skirts the parish, about a mile to the north of the church. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 18. 4.; net income, £128; patrons, the Trustees of the late Rev. Wadham Pigott. The church is an ancient structure, with a square embattled tower, and a south porch; the interior displays much elegance. A national school has been established. Lead-ore exists in the eastern part of the parish, and there are numerous basaltic columns, similar to those forming the Giant's Causeway in Ireland.

BROCKLEY (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union and hundred of THINGOE, W. division of SUFFOLK, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Bury-St. Edmund's; containing 380 inhabitants, and comprising by computation nearly 1500 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 4. 2.; net income, £330; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. D. Sprigge, whose rectory-house was consumed on the night of the 6th of April, 1841, by an accidental fire which destroyed property to the amount of £2000. The church is an ancient structure. Thomas Sparke, in 1721, bequeathed a rent-charge of £7 for the education of five children. One poor woman of the parish is eligible to the almshouse at Hawstead, and entitled to £5 per annum, under the will of Sir Robert Drury; and under John Sutton's charity, two men of Brockley receive £6 per annum.

BROCKMANTON, a township, in the parish of PUDDLESTONE, union of LEOMINSTER, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Leominster.

BROCKSFIELD, a township, in the parish of EMBLETON, union of ALNWICK, S. division of BAMBROUGH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Alnwick; containing 24 inhabitants. It comprises 312 acres, and is the property of John Carr, Esq.; the soil is of an inferior nature, but several young healthy plantations are scattered over the township.

BROCKTHROP (St. SWITHIN), a parish, in the union of WHEATENHURST, Middle division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S BARTON, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (S. E.) from Gloucester; containing 169 inhabitants. This place is situated on the road between Gloucester and Stroud, and near the head of a small stream which falls into the Severn. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £7. 17. 6., with a net income of £143: it is in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester, appropriators of the remainder of the great tithes. A school is supported by the lord of the manor.

BROCKTON, a township, in the parish of WORTHEN, hundred of CHIRBURY, S. division of SALOP, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Montgomery; containing 303 inhabitants.

BROCKTON, a township, in the parish of BASWICH, E. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, union, and S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Stafford; containing 238 inhabitants. A school is endowed with £6. 6. per annum.

BROCKWEAR COMMON, an extra parochial district, adjoining the parish of HEWELSFIELD, union of CHEPSTOW, hundred of ST. BRIAVELL'S, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Chepstow; containing 212 inhabitants.

BROCKWORTH (St. GEORGE), a parish, in the Upper division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S BARTON, union, and E. division of the county, of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Gloucester; containing 409 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the old road from Gloucester to Cirencester, comprises by measurement 1840 acres: stone for the roads is found. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 3. 4.; patron and improprator, J. Watts, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £151, and the glebe comprises 26 acres. The church is a very ancient structure, with a low central tower; in the chancel is a handsome marble monument to Sir Christopher Guise. A small school is supported by Sir B. W. Guise, Bart., and a national school by subscription. The parish is crossed by the Erminstreet.

BRODSWORTH (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of DONCASTER, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Doncaster; containing, with the township of Brodsworth and the hamlets of Pigburn and Scawsby, 467 inhabitants. It abounds with limestone of superior quality, which is extensively quarried. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 6. 10½; net income, £367; patron, Archbishop of York. An allotment of land was given in lieu of tithes, in 1815. A free school was founded, in 1696, by D'Arcy Wentworth, for ten children, for whose instruction the sum of £10 is annually paid out of the Brodsworth estate. This estate belonged to Peter Thellusson, Esq., and is now vested in trustees, according to the singular will of that gentleman, who directed that the greater part of his immense property should be allowed to accumulate, and, at a future fixed period, in default of a male heir, be applied towards discharging the national debt. Mrs. Thellusson assigned an annual income of £4. 4., for which six girls are instructed.

BROKENBOROUGH (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union and hundred of MALMESBURY, Malmesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of WILTS, 1¾ mile (N. W. by N.) from Malmesbury; containing 429 inhabitants. It comprises about 3000 acres, nearly the whole of which is the property of the Earl of Suffolk, who is lord of the manor: the river Avon runs through the parish, and is here, being near its source, a narrow stream. The living is annexed, with that of Charlton, to the vicarage of Westport-St. Mary. A school is endowed with £2 per annum by Mr. Hodges, for teaching three boys; and the rest are paid for by Lady Suffolk. In excavating the ground in the parish, near the mouth of the Kennet, for the Great Western railway, a sword, several human skulls, and some horse-shoes were found near the surface; probably the spot was the scene of a battle in the wars of Charles I.

BROKENHAUGH, EAST and WEST, a township, in the parochial chapelry of HAYDON, union of HEXHAM, N. W. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6 miles (W. by N.) from Hexham; containing 250 inhabitants. It is situated on the west of the South Tyne river, and is divided into farms.

BROMBLOW, or BROMLOW, a quarter, in the parish of WORTHEN, hundred of CHIRBURY, S. division of SALOP; containing 468 inhabitants.

BROMBORROW (St. BARNABAS), a parish, in the union of WIRRALL, partly in the Lower, but chiefly in the Upper, division of the hundred of WIRRALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 11 miles (N. N. W.) from Chester; containing, with the township of Brimstage, 573 inhabitants. This parish has, by the learned editor of the Saxon Chronicle, been enumerated among the places which, from the similarity of name, may claim to be the scene of the decisive action fought at Brunanburh, between the Saxons under Athelstan, and the Danes under Anlaf and Constantine, in which the latter were defeated, and pursued for two days with great slaughter. A monastery was founded at this place, then called Brimesburgh, by Ethelfleda, the celebrated Countess of Mercia, about 912, but was demolished previously to the Conquest, subsequently to which period the manor was given by Ranulph de Gernons, Earl of Chester, to the monks of the abbey of St. Werburgh, to whom Prince Edward, when Earl of Chester, granted a license to hold a market here on Monday, and a fair on the eve, festival, and morrow of St. Barnabas; but these have long been discontinued. The parish, bounded on the east by the river Mersey, comprises by computation 1500 acres, of which 630 are arable, 813 meadow, 69 wood, and the remainder waste; the scenery is rich and varied. The Chester and Birkenhead railway passes close to the place. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £51; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Chester; impropiator, J. Mainwaring, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £249. 2.; the glebe consists of 5a. 3r. 6p. The church, a small edifice, with a low wooden tower, contains some specimens of early Norman architecture.

BROMBY, a township, in the parish of FRODINGHAM, union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, E. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7½ miles (W. N. W.) from Glandford-Brigg; containing 160 inhabitants.

BROME or BROOME (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of LODDON and CLAVERING, hundred of LODDON, E. division of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (N. N. E.) from Bungay; containing 610 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the south by the navigable river Waveney, which separates it from the county of Suffolk. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Sir W. F. F. Middleton, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £286, and an annual payment is made of £6 to the incumbent of Ditchingham. There is a good glebe-house, with about 28 acres of land. The church is chiefly in the perpendicular style, and has an embattled tower; it consists of a nave and chancel, in which are considerable remains of stained glass. £50 per annum, from a town estate, are applied to parochial uses.

BROME (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of HARTISMERE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (S. S. W.) from Scole; containing 328 inhabitants. This place was for many years the residence of the noble family of Cornwallis; and Charles, the fifth baron, was created Viscount Brome and Earl Cornwallis on the 30th of June, 1753: his son and successor, Charles, having distinguished himself as a military commander in India, was advanced to a marquissate, as Marquess Cornwallis, August 15th, 1792. The fine old mansion, called Brome Hall, for so long a series of years the seat of the family, was pulled down by the late marquess, after whose death the estate was sold to Sir Edward Kerrison. The parish comprises 892a. 1r. 34p. The living, a discharged rectory, anciently divided into medieties, which were consolidated in 1448, is now united with that of Oakley, and is valued in the king's books at £10. 0. 2½; net income, £561; patron, Sir E. Kerrison: the tithes for the parish of Brome have been commuted for £224. The church is an ancient edifice, chiefly in the later English style, and contains many costly tombs of the Cornwallis family. There is a school on the national system.

BROME, or BROOM, SOUTH, a chapelry, in the parish of BISHOP'S-CANNINGS, union of DEVIZES, hundred of POTTERNE and CANNINGS, Devizes and N. divisions of WILTS, ¼ mile (S. E.) from Devizes; containing 2285 inhabitants. The chapelry almost encircles the town of Devizes, within the borough of which a small portion of it is included, and comprises 2578a. 38p., whereof 888 acres are arable, 679 pasture, 130 wood, 351 nursery gardens, and about 360 downs; the soil is fertile, and affords an abundant supply of fruit, vegetables, and other produce for the inhabitants of the neighbourhood. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £138; patron, the Vicar of Bishop's-Cannings. The chapel, dedicated to St. James, is a handsome edifice, in the later English style, and was, with the exception of the tower, nearly rebuilt, at the expense of the parishioners, in 1831. National schoolrooms have been also built by subscription.

BROMEOLME, a hamlet, in the parish, of BAC-TON, TUNSTEAD and HAPPING incorporation, hundred of TUNSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (E. by N.) from North Walsham. A priory for Cluniac monks, dedicated to St. Andrew, was founded in 1113, by William de Glanvill, and for some time subsisted as a cell to the monastery at Castle Acre. Henry III., accompanied by a retinue of the nobility, was here in the eighteenth year of his reign, five years previously to which he had granted the monks license to hold a market on Monday, and a fair on the festival of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross. The income of the monks was greatly augmented by numerous rich offerings, which were presented to a cross, stated to have been made out of the wood composing the cross on which our Saviour suffered, brought hither by an English priest, who officiated at the emperor's chapel at Constantinople: the revenue, at the Dissolution, amounted to £144. 19. 1.

BROMESWELL (St. EDMUND), a parish, in the union of WOODBIDGE, hundred of WILFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Woodbridge; containing 200 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1700 acres, of which the soil is various, but generally fertile. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 15. $7\frac{1}{2}$; net income, £150; patron, Marquess of Bristol. The church is a neat edifice.

BROMFIELD (St. KENTIGERN), a parish, in the union of BELPER, partly in CUMBERLAND ward, E. division, but chiefly in ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division, of CUMBERLAND; comprising the chapelry of Allonby, and the townships of Blencogo, Bromfield, Dundraw with Kelsick, Langrigg with Mealrigg, and West Newton; and containing 2312 inhabitants, of whom 364 are in the township of Bromfield with Crook-dake and Scales, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Wigton. It is situated on the shore of the Solway Firth. The living is a vicarage, endowed with part of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £22; net income, £270; patron, Bishop of Carlisle; impropriator of the remainder of the great tithes, Sir Henry Fletcher, Bart.: the tithes were commuted for land in 1817. A free school, in the churchyard, was founded by Richard Osmotherley, in 1612, and endowed with £10 a year, subsequently augmented by a donation of £100 from the family of Tomlinson; and in 1805, Mr. Tomlinson bequeathed £1400, one-fourth of which was assigned to this school. In a field belonging to the vicar the site of Mungo Castle is visible.

BROMFIELD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of LUDLOW, hundred of MUNSLow, S. division of SALOP; containing 655 inhabitants, of whom 531 are in the township of Bromfield, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Ludlow. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6; net income, £334; patron and impropriator, Hon. R. H. Clive. The church was rebuilt a few years since: the old edifice was part of a larger conventual church that belonged to a Benedictine priory, established as a cell to the abbey of St. Peter at Gloucester, about 1155, on the site of a college of prebendaries, or Secular canons of earlier foundation: its revenue, at the Dissolution, was £78. 19. 4. A school is endowed with £100 three per cent. consols.

BROMFLEET, a township, in the parish of SOUTH CAVE, union of HOWDEN, Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from South Cave; containing 206 inhabitants. The township is situated on the north side of the Humber, and comprises about 1220 acres, forming a level district of rich marshes, including part of Walling fen, inclosed in 1780. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The line of the Hull and Selby railway passes in the vicinity.

BROMHALL, a township, in the parish of WRENBURY, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Nantwich; containing 157 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £124, and the vicarial for £33. 11. 5., payable to the incumbent of Acton.

BROMHAM (St. OWEN), a parish in the union of BEDFORD, hundred of WILLEY, county of BEDFORD, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Bedford; containing 314 inhabitants. This place is situated on the banks of the Ouse, over which is a neat bridge of 25 arches, on the line of road from Bedford to Newport-Pagnell; and it is recorded that, in the years 1399 and 1648, the waters of the river had so far deserted their channel, that persons walked in its bed for nearly three miles in this part of its course. The parish comprises 1798 acres, the soil of which, in the northern part, is a heavy clay, and in the other parts a light sand, resting on a deep gravel; an excellent coarse building-stone is quarried, beneath which is a thin stratum of a softer stone, suitable for sculpture, and which hardens upon exposure to the air. The poor are employed in making pillow-lace. The living is a vicarage, with that of Oakley annexed, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £336; patrons, Provost and Fellows of Eton College: there is a good glebe-house, built in 1831, with 18 acres of glebe. The church is pleasantly situated in the centre of the Park, the village standing partly round it, in the form of a crescent; it contains some handsome monuments to the families of Trevor and Dyne, of which latter was Sir Lewis Dyne, commander, for Charles I., of the Newport-Pagnell district in the civil wars, and who, when about to be executed after the king's death, threw himself from a great height into the Thames, and escaped, by his skill in swimming. There is a day and Sunday school.

BROMHAM (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of DEVIZES, hundred of POTTERNE and CANNINGS, Devizes and N. divisions of WILTS, 4 miles (N. W.) from Devizes; containing 1558 inhabitants. This place, which is situated near the Roman road from Marlborough to Bath, appears to have been a villa of the Romans, for in 1763, a tessellated pavement, and other remains of Roman baths, were discovered here, which were, in 1840, more fully explored, and four others have been cleared from the earth, in which they had lain so many centuries imbedded, and found to be in excellent preservation. The lordship, previously to the Conquest, belonged to Harold, Earl of the West Saxons, and subsequently king of England. Spye Park, about two miles north of the village, in the reign of Charles II. was the property and occasional residence of the Earl of Rochester. The manufacture of fine broad-cloth, and of kerseymeres, is carried on to a moderate extent. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$; net income, £698; patron, Dr. Starkey. The church contains a mural tablet to the memory of Henry Season, Esq., M. D., the projector of a well-known almanack; and in an ancient chapel, at the east end, are several monuments to the family of Baynton, formerly lords of the manor. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. A national school is supported by subscription; and an almshouse for six persons was endowed, in 1614, by Sir Henry Baynton, with land now producing £20 per annum. Dr. George Webb, consecrated Bishop of Limerick in 1634, and the Rev. John Collinson, author of the "History and Antiquities of the county of Somerset," and who died in 1796, were natives of the parish.

BROMLEY (St. Peter and St. Paul), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of BROMLEY and BECKENHAM, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 10 miles (S. E.) from London, on the road to Tonbridge; containing 4325 inhabitants. This place, supposed to have derived its name from the quantity of broom with which the neighbourhood abounds, was, in the eighth century, given by Ethelbert, king of Kent, to the bishops of Rochester, in whose possession it has remained, with very little interruption, till the present time. The episcopal residence had become so ruinous in 1184, that Gilbert de Glanville was obliged to expend a considerable sum in repairing it. In this palace was found the plot of a conspiracy, of which Sprat, Bishop of Rochester, published an account in 1692. Dr. Thomas, on being appointed to the see, finding the building much decayed, pulled it down, and erected the present palace, which was completed in 1777, and is a plain edifice of brick, pleasantly situated on the brow of an eminence, about a quarter of a mile from the town. In the gardens was anciently an oratory, much resorted to on account of certain indulgences granted by Lucas, legate of Pope Sixtus IV., to all who should offer up their devotions there during Pentecost; and near it was a well of mineral water, similar in its properties to the waters at Tonbridge, but more strongly impregnated. This well, which was, in honour of the saint to whom the oratory was dedicated, called St. Blaze's well, was for a considerable time in great repute; but the oratory becoming dilapidated after the Reformation, the well was choked up and the efficacy of its waters forgotten, till, being re-opened in 1756, it regained its former celebrity, and is still much esteemed for its medicinal quality. The town is pleasantly situated on the north-east side of the river Ravensbourne, and consists principally of one street, extending for a considerable distance along the turnpike-road; the houses are in general neat and well-built, especially those in the market-place, in the centre of which is an ancient market-house, supported on wooden pillars; the streets are partially paved and lighted, and the inhabitants are supplied with water from springs. The market, granted to the bishop of Rochester in 1447, and held on Thursday, has nearly fallen into disuse: fairs are held on Feb. 14th and Aug. 5th, for live stock. The county magistrates hold a meeting for the division alternately here and at Farnborough, every second fortnight; and a court of requests, for the recovery of debts to the amount of £5, is held every alternate Thursday. The parish is beautifully situated in a well-wooded district, abounding with varied scenery and objects of deep interest; the soil is fertile; that portion of the land which is arable produces abundant crops, and there are rich meadows and pastures.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester, with a net income of £185: the bishop receives tithes to the amount of £1200 per annum, and has glebe land to the extent of 275 acres. The church is a spacious structure, with a square embattled tower, having a turret at one of the angles; it was partly rebuilt in 1792, and enlarged about the year 1830, when 437 additional sittings were provided. It contains an ancient Norman font, and various interesting monuments, among which are those of several of the bishops of Rochester; of Dr. Hawkesworth, author of the Adventurer, who was a native of the place; and of Elizabeth, wife of Dr. Johnson, who was buried here. A district church, dedicated to the Trinity, has recently been erected on the common, in the later English style; net income of the incumbent, £120. There are places of worship for Independents and Methodists. A national school is partly supported by subscription: fifteen boys and as many girls are clothed by means of the dividends on £1400 stock, purchased with donations, the chief of which were by the Rev. George Wilson, in 1718, and Launcelot Tolson, in 1726. Bromley College, at the north-eastern extremity of the town, was founded in 1666, by John Warner, bishop of Rochester, who endowed it with £450 per annum, for the residence and support of 20 widows of loyal and orthodox clergymen, to each of whom he assigned £20 per annum, and to a chaplain £50. This endowment has been augmented by many subsequent benefactions; in 1674, Sir Orlando Bridgeman and Sir Philip Warwick, the executors of the founder, gave £100 each; in 1767, the Rev. William Hetherington bequeathed £2000 Old South Sea annuities; in 1773, Lady Gower gave £500; in 1774, Dr. Zachary Pearce, bishop of Rochester, gave £5000 in the same stock; in 1782, William Pearce, the bishop's brother, bequeathed £12,000; in 1787, the Rev. Thomas Bagshaw gave £200 three per cents.; in 1788, Mrs. Helen Betenson left £10,000 in the three per cents.; in 1821, Mrs. Godwin, of Hoddesden, Herts, bequeathed £500; Miss Brooke, of Norwich, gave £250, and Mrs. Wolfe, of Blackheath, mother of General Wolfe, £500; in 1823, Walter King, bishop of Rochester, gave £3000 three per cents.; and in 1824, Mrs. Rose bequeathed £8000. There are at present 40 widows resident in the college, who have £38 per annum each, with occasional diocesan grants; two additional widows, who occupy the treasurer's wing, and receive £20 a year each; and three out-pensioners, each of whom has £30 a year from the gift of Bishop King; and the chaplain's salary has been advanced to £150. The college is a handsome appropriate pile of building, of red brick, faced with stone, surrounding two quadrangular areas, in which there is also a chapel; it is surrounded by about four acres of land, tastefully laid out, constituting a healthful and pleasing retreat. The poor law union of Bromley comprises 16 parishes or places, and contains a population of 16,079.

BROMLEY, a township, in the parish of ECCLESHALL, union of STONE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD; containing 33 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £83. 18., of which £83 are payable to the Dean and Chapter of Durham, and 18s. to the vicar of the parish.

BROMLEY, ABBOTS (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of UTTOXETER, S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 12½ miles (E.) from Stafford, and 130 (N. W. by N.) from London; containing, with the lordships of Bagots-Bromley and the liberty of Bromley-Hurst, 1508 inhabitants. This place is situated near the river Blythe, by which it is bounded on the south-west, and derives its distinguishing name from a Benedictine monastery founded at Blythebury, in the neighbourhood, in the latter part of the reign of Henry I., or in the beginning of that of Stephen, by Hugh Malveysin, and dedicated to St. Giles, which was suppressed at the instance of Cardinal Wolsey. The parish comprises 9392a. 17p., upwards of 900 acres of which belong to the manor of Bromley Park. The trade is principally in malt, which is carried on to some extent. The market has been discontinued for many years: the market-house is an ancient building covered with shingles. The fairs are on March 11th, May 22nd, and Sept. 4th, chiefly for cattle. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 1. 8.; net income, £187; patron and impropiator, Marquess of Anglesey. The church is an ancient structure, partly in the decorated, and partly in the later English style, with a Norman entrance; it has recently undergone considerable repairs, and been much modernised. There is a place of worship for Independents. The free school was founded in 1606, by Richard Clarke, who left £300 to purchase land for its endowment; the annual income is £137. 11. An hospital was founded in 1702, by Lambard Bagot, Esq., who bequeathed £800 for its erection and endowment, for six aged men, three of this parish, and one from each of the parishes of Yoxhall, Hanbury, and Tatenhill; the income was augmented by Charles Bagot, Esq., and a matron has been added, who, with each of the inmates, receives a stipend of £10 per annum.

BROMLEY, BAGOTS, a lordship, in the parish of ABBOT'S-BROMLEY, union of UTTOXETER, S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 1½ mile (N. W.) from Abbot's-Bromley. This place derives its distinguishing name from the noble family of Bagot, to which it has belonged since the Conquest; and Sir William Bagot, Bart., was advanced to the peerage, on the 17th of Oct., 1780, by the title of Baron Bagot, of Bagots-Bromley.

BROMLEY, GREAT (St. GEORGE), a parish, in the union and hundred of TENDRING, N. division of ESSEX, 4½ miles (S. S. W.) from Manningtree; containing 738 inhabitants. This parish, which includes an area of ten miles in circumference, belonged, at the time of the Norman survey, to Geoffrey de Magnaville. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 16. 0½.; net income, £698; patron and incumbent, Rev. W. Hall Graham. The church is a handsome and spacious structure, with a lofty tower of elegant design, and consists of a nave, aisles, and chancel, the roofs of which are lofty and beautifully enriched. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The parish participates in the benefit of two scholarships at St. John's College, Cambridge, to be filled up out of twenty candidates from the school at Dedham, of which number Bromley supplies four. There is also a national school.

BROMLEY-HURST, a liberty, in the parish of ABBOT'S-BROMLEY, union of UTTOXETER, S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 3½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Abbot's-Bromley.

BROMLEY, KING'S (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of LICHFIELD, N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 5 miles (N. by E.) from Lichfield; containing 718 inhabitants. This place was formerly the residence of the Earls of Mercia, and Godiva, Countess of Leicester, was buried here. The road from Lichfield to Ashbourne in Derbyshire, runs through the parish, and the river Trent passes the village, about a mile from which is a wharf communicating with the Grand Trunk Canal. The parish comprises 3463a. 3r. 16p., of which upwards of 1700 acres are arable, 1300 pasture and meadow, and nearly 200 in plantations. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Alrewas and Weeford in the Cathedral of Lichfield, to whom also the appropriation belongs; net income, £72. The great tithes have been commuted for £320, and the small for £105; the glebe consists of 10 acres. The church is in the early English style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school was founded, in 1699, by the Rev. Richard Crosse, who endowed it with property, now producing £110 per annum; and a school, containing 20 girls, is supported by Mrs. Lane. Almshouses for 7 widows were also founded, and partly endowed, by the Rev. Richard Crosse.

BROMLEY-ST. LEONARD'S (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of POPLAR, Tower division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, ½ a mile (S.) from Stratford-le-Bow, and 3½ miles (E.) from Cornhill, London; containing 6154 inhabitants. The name appears to have been derived from Brom, broom, and Ley, a field, indicating that a great quantity of broom anciently grew in the vicinity. The village is lighted with gas, and supplied with water by the works of the East London Water Company: there is a distillery on a large scale, near the western entrance into it. A communication with the Regent's canal has been formed by a cut from the river Lea, made by Sir Charles Duckett. Bromley is within the jurisdiction of a court of requests held at Osborne-street, Whitechapel, for the recovery of debts under 40s.: two headboroughs and a constable are annually appointed at the manorial court; and the parochial affairs are under the superintendence of a select vestry. The living is a donative; net income, £190; patron, John Walter, Esq.; impropiators, the Mann family. The church, a small plain structure, comprising only a nave and chancel, is surrounded by a high wall, and exhibits some remains of Norman architecture, containing also, in the southern wall of the chancel, some stone seats. It is part of a larger edifice, the conventual church of a Benedictine nunnery, founded soon after the Conquest, by William, bishop of London, and dedicated to St. Leonard: the society consisted of a prioress and nine nuns, whose revenue, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was rated at £121. 16. The Bow Wesleyan meeting-house stands in the parish. National and infants' schools are supported by subscription, and a Sunday school is endowed with £1400 three per cents., from the interest of which the minister is paid £20 per annum, to catechise the children once a month, and for an annual examination. Seventeen children of the parish are entitled to receive education at Sir John Jolles's school at Stratford: Sir John also founded eight almshouses for the poor of Stratford and Bromley, opposite to which are almshouses established for the benefit of decayed sail-makers, by John Edmonson; at the upper extremity, between the two rows of almshouses, is a neat chapel.

BROMLEY, LITTLE (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and hundred of TENDRING, N. division of ESSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Manningtree; containing 426 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1841 acres, of which 1500 are arable, 80 pasture, 38 woodland, and about 220 roads and waste. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of Wadham College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £560, and there is a good glebe-house, with 11 acres of land. The church is a plain edifice, with a stone tower. A parochial school is supported by subscription; and John Barton, in 1806, left £10 per annum, towards providing clothing for the poor.

BROMPTON, a hamlet, in the parishes of CHATHAM and GILLINGHAM, union of MEDWAY, hundred of CHATHAM and GILLINGHAM, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT; containing 3727 inhabitants. This place, chiefly inhabited by persons connected with the dockyard of Chatham, lies at the extremity of the parish, on the brow of a hill overlooking the dockyard, and within the fortifications called the Lines, which were constructed for the defence of the arsenal. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Roman Catholics, and a national school.

BROMPTON, a hamlet, in the parish of KENSINGTON, Kensington division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, 1 mile (S. W. by W.) from Hyde-Park Corner; containing 9515 inhabitants. This place, which has been considerably extended by the erection of numerous houses and ranges of buildings within the last few years, is lighted with gas, and supplied with water by the Chelsea Water-Works' Company: a large portion of the land in the vicinity is laid out in nursery-grounds for the supply of the metropolis. A chapel of ease was erected in 1769; and a district church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, for Old and New Brompton, and Little Chelsea, was built in 1828, chiefly by a grant of £5000 from the Parliamentary Commissioners, and is a handsome structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower at the west end. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £639; patron, Vicar of Kensington. There is a meeting-house for Independents; and a proprietary school was established in 1828.

BROMPTON, with RISTON, a township, in the parish of CHURCH-STOKE, hundred of CHIRBURY, county of SALOP, 6 miles (N. W. by W.) from Bishop's-Castle; containing 190 inhabitants.

BROMPTON, a chapelry, in the parish and union of NORTH ALLERTON, wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, N. riding of YORK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. N. E.) from North Allerton; containing 1535 inhabitants. In this chapelry is Standard Hill, where the memorable battle of the Standard was fought, on the 23rd Aug. 1138; being thus named from a large banner having been placed on a lofty pole, with a silver crucifix on the summit, which was fixed on a waggon and borne with the troops. The manufacture of linen is carried on. Rent-charges, as a commutation for the tithes, have been awarded, amounting to £590. 0. 7., of which £423. 3. are payable to the impropiators, and £166. 17. 7. to the vicar; and there is a glebe of 47 acres. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists; and two schools are endowed with £10 per annum each.

BROMPTON (All Saints), a parish, in the union of SCARBOROUGH, PICKERING lythe, N. riding of YORK; containing, with the townships of Brompton, Sawdon, and Troutsdale, and also the township of Snainton, part only of which is in the parish, 1534 inhabitants, of whom 609 are in the township of Brompton, 8 miles (S. W. by W.) from Scarborough. This is said to have been the residence of the kings of Northumberland; and, on an eminence called Castle Hill, are the foundations of an ancient castle, about half a mile from which is Gallows' Hill, the place of execution for criminals within the barony. The Cayley family, of whom Sir William Cayley was distinguished for his services to Kings Charles I. and II., have been located here for more than two centuries. The parish comprises by measurement 10,180 acres; about 6000 are arable; the pasture, meadow, and heath cover 4000 acres; and about 180 are wood: the soil varies in quality in different situations, and the scenery in many parts is picturesque and beautiful. Limestone, in which some fossils are found, is quarried for building, for agricultural purposes, and the repair of roads, and a kind of slate is also obtained, used for roofing houses: there is a factory for bricks, coarse pots, &c., which employs about fifteen persons. A fair is annually held for the sale of pigs, from which the name of Swine Brompton is sometimes given to the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12; net income, £103; patron, Sir George Cayley, Bart., to whom the impropriation belongs: the tithes were commuted, in 1768, for land and a money payment. The church, one of the most spacious and elegant in the county, is in the decorated style, with a square tower, surmounted with a graceful spire; and there is a chapel of ease at Snainton. There are three places of worship for Wesleyans, and one for Primitive Methodists; and a school is supported by the patron. Almshouses for two old women were built by Mrs. Margaret Pierson in 1833. Roman remains have been occasionally found in digging. John of Brompton, a monkish historian, who compiled a laborious work on the early annals of England, including the period between the years 558 and 1198, is supposed to have been born here: he lived twenty years in the Benedictine abbey of Whitby, during the abbacy of John of Skelton, which commenced in 1413.

BROMPTON-PATRICK (St. Patrick), a parish, in the union of LEYBURN, comprising the townships of Brompton-Patrick, Newton-le-Willows, and parts of Arrowthorne and Scotton, in the wapentake of HANG-EAST, and part of the chapelry of Hunton, in the wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK; and containing, with the whole of Arrowthorne, Hunton, and Scotton, 1130 inhabitants, of whom 181 are in the township of Brompton-Patrick, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Bedale. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £91; patron, bishop of Chester: C. H. Elsley, Esq., is impropriator of the lay rectory, which is valued in the king's books at £34. 13. 1½. The church is an ancient edifice in the decorated English style, and the chancel is particularly admired, but the tower is considered a deformity: tradition relates that the original one having been blown down in a storm, the present was erected, in 1572. There is an endowment of £21. 10. 6. per annum for the instruction of twelve children, arising from a bequest of land by Samuel Atkinson, in 1707, and another by Mr. Clarke, and also from the interest of a sum of money bequeathed by Gregory Elsley, Esq., in 1716.

BROMPTON-RALPH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WILLITON, hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, W. division of SOMERSET, 3½ miles (N.) from Wiveliscombe; containing 492 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 2700 acres, of which 1460 are arable, 760 pasture and meadow, 120 wood, and 256 common. An act for the inclosure of lands was passed in 1842. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 10. 5., and in the patronage of Gen. Blommant and Rev. T. Sweet Escott, the incumbent: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £400. The greater part of the church was rebuilt in 1738. A school is partly supported by the rector. Between Combe and Holcombe, in the parish, are vestiges of an encampment, supposed to have been constructed by the Romans.

BROMPTON-REGIS (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DULVERTON, hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, W. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (N. E.) from Dulverton; containing 875 inhabitants. This place anciently constituted an hundred, and in the reign of Henry II. a priory was founded here, and endowed by William de Say, for Black canons, and dedicated to St. Nicholas: it was an appendage of Glastonbury abbey, and continued till the Dissolution, when its revenue was £98. 14. 9½.: about two miles to the south of the church are some remains of this establishment, called Barlynch priory, and in the burial-ground have been discovered several stone coffins, containing skeletons. The parish is bounded on the south-west by the river Exe, which receives many mountain-streams, all stocked with trout; it comprises about 8000 acres, of which a considerable number are uninclosed moor land, abounding with black game; and in the woods are great numbers of the wild red deer, peculiar to this country, for the hunting of which a subscription pack of hounds was formerly kept. The surface is diversified with hills and valleys, richly wooded with coppices of oak, and hedge-rows of beech, and abounding in romantic scenery; and the vales are watered by the river Had Yeo, which winds through the parish: there are quarries of good building-stone. A weekly market and two annual fairs were granted to the lord of the manor, Sir Thomas de Bessilles, Knt.; the market has long since fallen into disuse, but the fairs are still held, in May and Oct., for cattle and sheep. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 5. 7½.; patrons, Master and Fellows of Emanuel College, Cambridge; impropiators, Trustees of various parishes. The rectorial tithes have been commuted for £176, and the vicarial for £421. 15.; and there is a good glebe-house, with about 30 acres of land; also an estate in another parish, belonging to the vicarage. The church has a curiously carved screen, separating the nave from the chancel. A school is supported by the Earl of Carnarvon. Three Roman tumuli are visible on an adjacent eminence; and at a mount, called Hadborough, near the western extremity of Haddon Hill, Roman coins have been found.

BROMPTON-UPON-SWALE, a township, in the parish of EASTBY, union of RICHMOND, wapentake of GILLING-EAST, N. riding of YORK, 1¼ mile (N. W.) from Catterick; containing 399 inhabitants. This place is situated on the north side of the river Swale, and on the road from Catterick to Richmond, and comprises by computation 1710 acres of land.

BROMSBERROW (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of NEWENT, hundred of BOTLOE, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (S. E.) from Ledbury; containing 283 inhabitants. This parish, which anciently formed part of Malvern chase, was, for many years, the property of the Yate family, from whom it was purchased by the late David Ricardo, Esq., and is now the property of his son, Osman Ricardo, Esq., lord of the manor; it comprises by computation 1630 acres, of which about 1000 are arable, 381 meadow and pasture, and 119 wood. The soil is rather of a sandy nature; the surface is strikingly varied, and the scenery, which is greatly enriched with wood, is highly picturesque. Keysend Hill, the last of the Malvern range, is within the parish, where stone is quarried for building, and for the roads. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 15.; patron, Earl Beauchamp: the tithes have been commuted for £350, and there is a good glebe-house, with a glebe of 55 acres. The church is an ancient edifice, with a low tower; adjoining the chancel is the mausoleum of the Yate family, built about a century since. A small school is supported by private charity.

BROMSGROVE (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a market-town and parish (formerly a borough), and the head of a union, in the Upper division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, Droitwich and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 13 miles (N. E. by N.) from Worcester, 13 (S. W.) from Birmingham, and 116 (N. W.) from London, on the road from Birmingham to Worcester; containing 9671 inhabitants. This place, anciently Bremesgrave, was a royal demesne at the time of the Conquest, and continued to be so till the reign of Henry III.: it returned members to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I. During the parliamentary war it was the headquarters of a party of royalists employed in the siege of Hawkesley House, about three miles distant, which, in 1645, was fortified and garrisoned by the parliament. The town is pleasantly situated on the western bank of the river Salwarp, and consists principally of one street, extending for a considerable distance along the turnpike-road; the houses are in general substantial and well-built, and the inhabitants amply supplied with water. The principal articles of manufacture are nails, and silk buttons; and some coarse linen tablecloths and sheeting are still made: potatoes, for the Bristol and other markets, are extensively cultivated in the neighbourhood. The Birmingham and Worcester canal passes within three miles to the east; and the Birmingham and Gloucester railway has one of its principal stations a mile and a half distant. The market is on Tuesday; the fairs are on June 24th and October 1st. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates: a bailiff and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor, held at Michaelmas; and a court is held every third week, for the recovery of debts under 40s. The town-hall is a neat and commodious building, in the centre of the town.

The parish comprises by measurement 11,500 acres: the soil is in some parts fertile, in others of inferior quality. To the north of the town is Bromsgrove Lickey, a range of lofty hills, commanding an extensive and diversified prospect of the surrounding country; a considerable part, comprising a tract of 2000 acres, has been inclosed, and produces good crops of clover, turnips, and potatoes. A spring, rising among these hills, divides into two streams, one of which, flowing northward, joins the river Rea, and, uniting with the Trent, falls into the North Sea; the other, running into the Stour, joins the Severn, and empties itself into the Irish Sea. The LIVING is a vicarage, with King's-Norton annexed, valued in the king's books at £41. 8. 1½; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Worcester, whose tithes have been commuted for £1200, and whose glebe consists of 75a. 3r. 22p.; the vicarial have been commuted for £1100, and the glebe consists of 1a. 2r., to which is attached a good house. The church is a very ancient structure, combining portions in the Norman style, and the decorated and later English styles, of which last the tower and spire are fine specimens; the interior contains many interesting monuments. A district church was built at Catshill in 1837, at a cost of £2000; net income, £70; patron, the Vicar. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans; and a Roman Catholic chapel at Grafton. The free grammar school was instituted, with an endowment of £7 per annum, by charter of Edward VI., confirmed by Queen Mary; and the original endowment was augmented with £50 per annum, by Sir Thomas Cookes, Bart., of Bentley, who, in 1714, founded six scholarships, of £50 per annum each, in Worcester College, Oxford, for this school and four others in the county; and six fellowships, of £150 per annum each in the same college, to which, as vacancies occur, those who hold the scholarships succeed. A Sunday school for 800 children is supported by voluntary contributions, and the profits, varying from £20 to £50 per annum, of a machine for weighing corn, hay, &c., established in 1794. Thomas Hawkes, in 1809, left £1000 four per cent. bank annuities for the benefit of the poor, and there are several other endowments. The union of Bromsgrove comprises 13 parishes or places, of which 9 are in the county of Worcester, 2 in that of Salop, and 1 in each of the counties of Stafford and Warwick; and contains a population of 22,427. At Dadford, two miles from the town, are the remains of a small priory of Præmonstratensian canons, founded by Henry I. in 1190, now part of a farm-house. At Shepley are some traces of the Roman Ikeneld-street; and near Gannow is a petrifying spring.

BROMWICH, CASTLE, a chapelry, in the parish and union of ASTON, Birmingham division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 5½ miles (E.) from Birmingham; containing 779 inhabitants. The place comprises 2702 acres, of which about two-thirds are arable land, of good quality, with a pretty fair proportion of wood and plantations; the surface is undulated, and the scenery highly picturesque. The northern boundary of the chapelry is formed by the river Tame, by which a flour-mill, beautifully situated, is propelled: the Birmingham and Derby railway has a station here. Castle Bromwich Hall, the property of the Earl of Bradford, is an ancient and interesting mansion. The hamlet is seated on a gentle acclivity, and contains several well-built houses. The living is a donative, in the patronage of the Earl, with a net income of £315 per annum. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Margaret, is a neat brick structure, with a square tower, and has a handsome interior; it was erected, in 1729, by Sir John Bridgman, Bart., ancestor of the Earl of Bradford, and the circumstance is recorded on a tablet in the chapel. There is a boys' school, endowed with land in the hamlet, producing about £35 per annum, in the hands of trustees, with a house and garden for the master; it is further aided by subscription; and there is also a girls' school. In the Castle field is a mound, artificially constructed, and supposed to be of Roman origin.

BROMWICH, LITTLE, a hamlet, in the parish and union of ASTON, Birmingham division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 3 miles (N. E.) from Birmingham; containing 262 inhabitants. The hamlet is bounded by the river Tame on the north, and by the river Cole on the south, and is intersected by the road between Birmingham and Coleshill, and the London and Birmingham railway: the surface is flat and well-wooded, and the soil is a sandy loam. Ward-End Hall, an old farm-house near the church of Ward-End (which see), with about 100 acres of land, comprising the 30 acres mentioned in Dugdale's Warwickshire as the Park, is the property of Thos. Hutton, Esq., and is occupied by a member of his family. The manor-house at Allum Rock is the property of W. Webb Essington, Esq., and the residence of Isaac Marshall, Esq.; and Ward-End House is the property and residence of George Marshall, Esq.

BROMWICH, WEST (ALL SAINTS), a parish, and the head of a union, in the S. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD; adjoining the town of Wednesbury, and containing 26,121 inhabitants. This place, which is in the centre of an extensive manufacturing and mining district, has, within a few years, risen with amazing rapidity from a state of comparative insignificance to a degree of importance, for the variety and extent of its manufactures and trade, which is almost unparalleled. The rich mines of iron-stone and coal beneath the soil, in almost every direction, affording the utmost facility of establishing works upon a large scale, attracted the notice of the enterprising and ingenious; and, from little more than a barren heath, a populous and flourishing village has risen, extending for more than three miles along the high road from Birmingham to Wolverhampton. Among the various branches of manufacture, all of which are conducted on the most extensive scale, are gun and pistol barrels and locks, swords, bayonets, fenders, fire-irons, locks, bolts, hinges, nails, saddlers' ironmongery, coach-furniture; iron culinary utensils, chains, traces, spades and other implements of husbandry, steel toys, gas-tubes and fittings, palisades, and ornamental iron-work: among the larger works are blast furnaces for the smelting of iron-ore, foundries, forges, rolling and slitting mills, in which, and also in the various collieries, many steam-engines are employed. Very extensive gas-works have been established by a company of proprietors, from which part of Birmingham, seven miles distant, is lighted, and from which the different towns of Wednesbury, Dudley, Bilston, Darlaston, Tipton, and Great Bridge, are also supplied with gas. There is a large glass-manufactory employing several hundred workmen. The trade of the place, and the transport of the produce of its mines and the heavier articles of manufacture, are greatly facilitated by the numerous branches of canals which intersect the parish; and the Grand Junction railway also passes through it. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty-session every Saturday.

The parish comprises by measurement 5155 acres; the soil is gravel, alternated with red sand, and in some parts clay, alternated with loam; and the subsoil abounds with coal and iron-stone. The surface is hilly, and the surrounding scenery richly wooded and pleasingly diversified: Sandwell, the seat of the Earl of Dartmouth, is a handsome mansion, situated in an extensive park, embellished with stately timber; and there are several other good residences in the neighbourhood. The LIVING is a perpetual curacy; net income, £566; patron and impropiator, Lord Dartmouth. The parochial church is an ancient structure, which, notwithstanding numerous alterations and additions, still retains a portion of the original character. Christ Church, of which the first stone was laid by the Earl of Dartmouth, was completed in 1828, at an expense of £18,446, part of which was defrayed by grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners; it is a handsome edifice of stone, in the later English style, with a lofty square embattled tower. An ecclesiastical district has been assigned, and the living is a perpetual curacy in the patronage of the Earl and Trustees; net income, £330. Holy Trinity district church, an elegant building, containing about 1000 sittings, was erected in 1841, at a cost of £3400, and the incumbency, which is in the gift of five trustees, has been endowed with £1000, by Thomas Wood and Edwin Bullock, Esqrs. Lord Dartmouth has given a piece of land near Hill Top, and £1200, for the erection of another church, with £300 as a fund for keeping it in repair; and a subscription, has been entered into to carry the desirable object into effect. There are places of worship for Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, Baptists, and Independents; also a Roman Catholic chapel, and national and other schools. The union of West Bromwich comprises six parishes or places, and contains a population of 52,596. A priory of Benedictine monks was founded at the close of the reign of Henry II., or the beginning of that of Richard I., by William, son of Guy de Opheni, at Sandwell, which was dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene; it flourished till the Dissolution, when its revenue, amounting to £38. 8. 7., was granted to Cardinal Wolsey for the endowment of his intended colleges, and the site is now occupied by the splendid mansion of the Earl of Dartmouth. A tessellated pavement was discovered in 1741. William Parsons, the gigantic porter of James I., was a native of the parish.

BROMYARD (St. PETER), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, 14 miles (N. E.) from Hereford, and 126 (N. W. by W.) from London; containing 2927 inhabitants. The town is pleasantly situated on the road from Worcester to Hereford, near the river Frome, in a rich and fertile district, abounding with orchards and hop plantations; and consists of several well-paved streets. Races are held annually on the Downs, an extensive common adjoining the town, and are generally well attended. The market, chiefly for live stock, butter, cheese, and poultry, is on Monday; and fairs are held on the last Monday in Jan., the Thursday before the 25th of March, May 3rd, the Thursday before St. James's-day, and the Thursday before the 29th of October. Petty-sessions for the district are held on Monday, at Dumbleton Hall, an ancient mansion, purchased by subscription, and appropriated as a town-hall, containing a spacious courtroom for the sessions. Courts leet and baron are also held twice in the year under the Bishop of Hereford, who is lord of the manor. The parish, including the chapelry of Brockhampton, and the townships of Winslow, Norton, and Linton, comprises 7921 acres, of which 202 are in the town of Bromyard; the land is in a high state of cultivation, producing hops of excellent quality, of which there are nearly 700 acres under cultivation. The surface is varied with hills, and the lower grounds are watered by a brook that flows through the parish into the river Frome. The LIVING consists of a sinecure rectory and a vicarage; the rectory, of which the net income is £612, is divided into three portions, and in the gift of the Bishop of Hereford; and the vicarage, of which the net income is £600, is in the patronage of the Portionists. The church is an ancient and spacious structure, in the Norman style, and contains a curious font. Brockhampton chapel, in the township of Norton, recently built by the Barneby family, is a handsome edifice in the later English style. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Primitive Methodists. The free grammar school was founded by Queen Elizabeth, and endowed with £16. 14. 11½. per annum, subsequently augmented with £20 per annum, by John Perrin, Esq., alderman and goldsmith of London, in 1656: Mr. Perrin also endowed a weekly divinity lecture by six beneficed clergymen, to be elected by the churchwardens and 12 of the principal inhabitants of this, his native parish, with several other benefactions, for which the Goldsmiths' Company are trustees, and who, in 1835, entirely rebuilt the grammar school. A national school, in which are 100 girls, is supported by endowment. An almshouse was founded in the reign of Charles II., by Phineas Jackson, forty years vicar of the parish, who also founded various others, in which seven aged widows are comfortably provided for. The poor law union of Bromyard comprises 33 parishes or places, of which 30 are in the county of Hereford, and 3 in that of Worcester; and contains a population of 11,494.

BRON-Y-GARTH, a township, in the parish of ST. MARTIN, hundred of OSWESTRY, N. division of SALOP, 5 miles (N.) from Oswestry; containing 324 inhabitants.

BROOK (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of EAST ASHFORD, partly in the hundred of WYE, but chiefly in that of CHART and LONGBRIDGE, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 4½ miles (E. by N.) from Ashford; containing 158 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 582 acres, of which about half is arable, and the remainder pasture, with about 55 acres of wood, part of which consists of oak; the soil is wet and heavy. The line of the South-Eastern railway runs within $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 7. 3., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury: the tithes have been commuted for a gross rent-charge of £145, and the glebe comprises 10 acres. The church is in the Grecian style.

BROOK, or GASPER, a tything, in the parish of STOURTON, union of MERE, hundred of NORTON-FERRIS, E. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (N. E.) from Wincanton; containing 288 inhabitants. A school, commenced in 1829, is supported by subscription.

BROOK (St. MARY), a parish, in the liberty of WEST MEDINA, ISLE OF WIGHT incorporation, and division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (S. E.) from Yarmouth; containing 150 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south by the sea, and comprises 712 acres, of which 490 are arable, and 222 pasture: the village is seated in a sheltered valley formed by two lofty hills. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £1. 18. 9.; net income, £250; patron and incumbent, the Rev. Collingwood Fenwick. The church, a small edifice, partly overspread with ivy, is situated on rising ground, and consists of a nave and chancel, with a low tower. A parochial school is supported by subscription. On Brook Down are several tumuli, each of which is encompassed with a fosse. Vestiges of a Roman encampment, and the remains of an amphitheatre, are discernible in the parish, and several human skeletons and daggers have been found.

BROOKE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of LODDON and CLAVERING, hundred of CLAVERING, E. division of NORFOLK, 7 miles (S. E. by E.) from Norwich; containing 756 inhabitants. It is situated between the rivers Yare and Waveney. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of the Crown; impropiator, Rev. John Holmes. The tithes have been commuted for £552. 8., of which £390 are paid to the impropiator, £240 to the vicar, £3. 14. to the rector of Kirkstead, and £4. 14. 6. to the rector of Howe; there is a good glebe-house. The church, a very ancient structure, with a circular tower, the upper part of which is octagonal, is supposed to have been erected about the year 1000; it consists of nave, chancel, and north aisle, and has the remains of a carved screen, and a font elaborately sculptured with emblems of the seven Roman sacraments. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and a national and infants' school, for the children of Brooke and Kirkstead, was erected in 1838. A town estate, which lets for £100 per annum, is applied chiefly in paying the rates of the poor cottagers; and the proceeds of a church estate, amounting to about £80 per annum, are appropriated to the repairs of the church, and the general purposes of the parish. The late Sir Astley Paston Cooper, Bart., the eminent surgeon, was born here in 1768.

BROOKE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union and soke of OAKHAM, county of RUTLAND, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from Oakham; containing 113 inhabitants. A small priory for Canons Regular of the order of St. Augustine was founded here by Hugh Ferrars, in the time of Richard I., as a cell to the monastery of Kenilworth, in Warwickshire, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin: the revenue, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was valued at £43. 13. 4.: only an archway and a porter's lodge now remain, of which the latter has been converted into a dovecote. The parish comprises by computation 1300 acres; the soil is of a mixed red loam, alternated with a cold tenacious clay; the surface is hilly, and the lower grounds are watered by the river Gwash, which flows near the village. The living is annexed, with that of Langham, to the vicarage of Oakham.

BROOK-END, a hamlet, in the parish of NORTHILL, union of BIGGLESWADE, hundred of WIXAMTREE, county of BEDFORD, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Biggleswade; containing, with Thorcote and Hatch, 214 inhabitants.

BROOK-END, a hamlet, in the parish of SHENLEY, union of WINSLOW, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM; containing 264 inhabitants.

BROOK-STREET, a hamlet, in the parish of SOUTH WEALD, union of BILLERICAY, hundred of CHAFFORD, S. division of ESSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Brentwood. A free chapel, and an hospital for a master and various poor lepers, were established some time previously to the 20th of Edward I., and dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

BROOKESBY (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 20 inhabitants. This place, which now comprises only one farm-house, anciently belonged to the family of Villiers, of whom George Villiers, the favourite of James I., was created Duke of Buckingham by that monarch; the manor subsequently descended to the Wyndhams, the present proprietors. The parish, which is on the river Wreak, comprises by measurement 830 acres, whereof a small portion is arable, and the remainder pasture and meadow. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 12. 6., and in the patronage of the Countess of Listowel; net income, £250. The church is a handsome structure, in the later English style, and in the chancel is an elegant monument of white marble to Sir William and Lady Villiers. George Villiers, the first Duke of Buckingham of that name, was born in 1592, at the family mansion.

BROOKHAMPTON, a township, in the parish of HOLDGATE, union of LUDLOW, hundred of MUNSLow, S. division of SALOP; containing 84 inhabitants.

BROOKHAMPTON, a township, in the parish of OMBERSLEY, union of DROITWICH, Lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER.

BROOKLAND (St. AUGUSTINE), a parish, in the union of ROMNEY-MARSH, hundred of ALOESBRIDGE, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, 5 miles (W. by N.) from New Romney; containing 462 inhabitants. It comprises 1768 acres by computation. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17. 12. 8½.; net income, £93; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. The church is principally in the early style of English architecture, with a detached tower of wood said to be the produce of the marsh.

BROOM, a hamlet, in the parish of SOUTHILL, union of BIGGLESWADE, hundred of WIXAMTREE, county of BEDFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Biggleswade; containing 365 inhabitants.

BROOM, a township, in the parish of ST. OSWALD, union of DURHAM, Middle division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Durham; containing 108 inhabitants. This is a small village of scattered tenements, in the vicinity of which stands Broom Hall, on nearly the highest ground between the Browney and Deerness. The tithes have been commuted for £106. 9. 6., of which £106 are payable to the vicar of the parish, and 9s. 6d. to the Dean and Chapter of Durham.

BROOM (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of KIDDERMINSTER, S. division of the hundred of SEISDON and of the county of STAFFORD, though locally in the county of WORCESTER, 4 miles (S.) from Stourbridge; containing 129 inhabitants. This parish, which is beautifully situated on the western side of the Clent Hills, comprises 716a. 3r. 6p. The ancient mansion of Harborough was the residence of William Penn, Esq., one of whose daughters was the mother of the poet Shenstone, who spent many of his juvenile hours at this place. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 3. 4., and in the gift of Sir E. D. Scott, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £224, including the tithe of the glebe, which comprises $53\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church is a brick edifice, erected in 1780. A small school is supported by subscription.

BROOM, a hamlet, in the parish of BIDFORD, union of ALCESTER, Stratford division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK; containing 391 inhabitants.

BROOM, SOUTH, county of WILTS.—See BROME.

BROOME, county of SUFFOLK.—See BROME.

BROOMEY LODGE, forming, with Linford, Picked Post, and Shobley, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of FORDINGBRIDGE, Ringwood and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 106 inhabitants.

BROOMFIELD (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHELMSFORD, S. division of ESSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Chelmsford; containing 820 inhabitants. This place is supposed to have derived its name from the profusion of broom growing in the immediate vicinity. The parish, which is on the road to Braintree, comprises by computation 2000 acres of fertile land, of which about four-fifths are arable, and the remainder, with the exception of a few acres of wood, meadow and pasture. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 13. 4.; net income, £161; patron, Bishop of London; proprietor, H. Finch, Esq. The church, a very ancient edifice, with a circular tower, has many interesting details in the Norman style: the vicarage-house is a handsome residence. A national school has been established; and the proceeds of a large tract, left for charitable uses, are applied to the relief of the poor. The learned Patrick Young died at the vicarage-house, in 1652; he was keeper of the King's library, and superintended the printing of the "Septuagint" from the Alexandrian MSS. The Rev. Thomas Cox, who translated from the French Dupin's "Life of Christ," and also his "Ecclesiastical History," and compiled part of a "History of England," and of the "Magna Britannia," was vicar of the parish.

BROOMFIELD (ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of HOLLINGBOURNE, hundred of EYHORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 6 miles (E. S. E.)

from Maidstone; containing 146 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to that of Leeds. On the southern side of the parish extends a tract of woodland, called King's Wood, and within its limits is a rabbit-warren.

BROOMFIELD (ST. MARY AND ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of ANDERSFIELD, W. division of SOMERSET, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.) from Taunton; containing 497 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £78; patron and proprietor, Col. Hamilton, whose tithes have been commuted for £375: the glebe comprises nearly 30 acres. In the churchyard is a stone cross, somewhat mutilated. There is a school on the national plan.

BROOMHAUGH, a township, in the parish of BYWELL-ST. ANDREW, union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Hexham; containing 100 inhabitants. This place is situated about three miles south-east of Corbridge, on the road from Newcastle to Hexham, and is bounded on the north by the river Tyne: the scenery is picturesque. There is a small land-sale colliery, and good building-stone is obtained. The village is inhabited by labourers in husbandry; and the Newcastle and Carlisle railway enters it through a tunnel 135 yards in length. A national school has been established, in which church service is performed. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

BROOMHILL, in the union of RYE, partly in the hundred of GOLDSBUR, liberty of WINCHELSEA, rape of HASTINGS, county of SUSSEX, but chiefly in the hundred of LANGPORT, liberty of ROMNEY-MARSH, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Rye; containing 123 inhabitants. This place, which was anciently a parish, is a member of the port, and forms part of the town, of New Romney. The church, which stood within the limits of Kent, was destroyed, with the village, in the reign of Edward I., by an inundation of the sea.

BROOMHOPE, with BUTELAND, a township, in the parochial chapelry of BIRTLEY, union of BELLINGHAM, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Bellingham; containing 145 inhabitants.

BROOMLEY, a township, in the parish of BYWELL-ST. PETER, union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Hexham; containing 314 inhabitants. This place is situated on the Hexham road, to the south of the river Tyne, about one mile south-by-west from Bywell, and is the property of T. W. Beaumont, Esq. Old Ridley lies a short distance to the south-east, and a little further in the same direction is New Ridley, a small village surrounded by several farms.

BROOM-PARK, a township, in the parish of EDLINGHAM, union of ALNWICK, N. division of COQUETDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Alnwick; containing 63 inhabitants. The park is finely situated between the Aln river and the Lemington burn: it contains a noble mansion, the seat of the Burrell family, the pleasure-grounds around which are well laid out; and the neighbouring country affords a variety of pleasing views. Many tumuli, supposed to be places of sepulture of the ancient Britons, are found here, and in the vicinity.

BROOMRIDGE, a hamlet, in the parish of FORD, union of GLENDALE, W. division of GLENDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Wooler. Camden considers this to have been the place, called Brunanburh, where King Athelstan defeated Constantine, King of Scotland, Anlaf the Dane, and Eugenius, a petty prince of Cumberland. About half a mile to the south is Haltwell Sweire, the scene of an encounter, in 1558, between the English under Sir Henry Percy, and the Scots under Earl Bothwell, in which the former sustained a defeat.

BROOMSTHORPE, a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of GALLOW, W. division of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Rougham; containing 10 inhabitants. The parish comprises 430 acres, forming one farm, belonging to Lord Henry Cholmondeley. The church was destroyed before the reign of Elizabeth, and the benefice abolished. Here was formerly a guild of St. John, to whom it is supposed the church was dedicated.

BROSELEY (ST. LEONARD), a market-town and parish, in the union of MADELEY, and franchise of WENLOCK, S. division of SALOP, 2 miles (S.) from Iron-bridge, 14 (S. E.) from Shrewsbury, and 144 (N. W.) from London, on the road from Worcester to Shrewsbury; containing 4829 inhabitants. This place, in ancient records called Burwardesley, has derived its importance from the numerous mines of coal and iron-stone abounding in the neighbourhood, which made it the resort of miners; and, in proportion as the works proceeded, it increased in population and magnitude. The town is irregularly built, but is pleasantly situated on an eminence rising abruptly from the western bank of the river Severn, to which its eastern extremity extends, and from which its western extremity is nearly two miles distant. It consists principally of one long street, from which a few smaller streets branch towards the different collieries and other works; the houses, in general of brick and of mean appearance, are occasionally intermixed with some of more respectable character; and in detached situations are several handsome and spacious edifices. The trade consists partly in mining operations; but, from the exhausted state of the mines, this branch of trade, as well as that in coal, has declined. There are numerous coal-pits, iron-foundries, and furnaces; and fine earthenware, tobacco-pipes, bricks, and tiles, are made to a great extent. The fire-bricks for building furnaces are in great repute, and, by means of the Severn, are sent to various parts of the kingdom. A considerable portion of the population are employed in the china manufacture at Coal-port, in the adjoining parish of Madeley. The market is on Wednesday: the fairs are on the last Tuesday in April and Oct. 28th, and are chiefly for pleasure, though a considerable number of pigs are sold. The town is within the jurisdiction of the borough of Wenlock: courts leet for the manor are held at the town-hall in April and October, at the latter of which four constables are appointed; and a court of requests, for the recovery of debts under 40s., is held under an act passed in the 22nd of George III., generally every alternate Wednesday. The town-hall is a handsome brick building, in the centre of the town, supported on pillars and arches, the basement forming a spacious market-place: on the first story is a room wherein the petty-sessions and public meetings are held (used also as an assembly-room), and two smaller apartments; there is a small prison attached to it, for the confinement of debtors, and for criminals previous to their committal by the borough magistrates.

The parish comprises 1912a. 2r. 14p.; the soil is fertile, and, independently of its rich mineral produce, there is a quarry of sandstone, from which the materials for the erection of Worcester cathedral were taken, but it is not of desirable quality, and is at present but little used. The Severn is navigable to Gloucester, and the Shropshire canal affords facility of conveyance to Dawley, Ketley, Wolverhampton, and Birmingham. The LIVING is a rectory, with that of Linley united, valued in the king's books at £7. 18. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Lord Forester: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £450, and the glebe comprises 11 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church, with the exception of the ancient tower, which is of stone, has been rebuilt of brick; but something of its original character is preserved in the interior, in the octangular pillars and pointed arches that support the roof. A chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, was built in 1759, by Mr. Francis Turner Blythe, in a part of the parish called Jackfield, at a considerable distance from the church; it is a neat brick building, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Francis Blythe Harris, Esq. There are places of worship for Baptists, Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Independents; and national schools are supported by subscription. In 1750, John Barret, Esq., a native of the place, bequeathed £110 for charitable uses, which sum, augmented with a legacy of £100 by Mr. Richard Edwards, and several smaller sums, amounting in the whole to £380, was invested in the purchase of land, upon which the town-hall and other houses have been erected: the rents are distributed among the poor.

BROTHERTOFT, a chapelry, in the parish and wapentake of KIRTON, union of BOSTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Boston; containing 122 inhabitants.

BROTHERTON (ST. EDWARD THE CONFESSOR), a parish, in the Lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK; containing 1744 inhabitants, of whom 1613 are in the township of Brotherton, 1 mile (N. N. W.) from Ferrybridge. The village of Brotherton, anciently called Brojerton, is memorable as the birthplace of Prince Thomas (Thomas de Brotherton), son of Edward I., and of whom Margaret, second wife of the monarch, was suddenly delivered in June 1300, after taking the amusement of hunting in the neighbourhood. The young prince was created Earl of Norfolk, and Earl Marshal of England, and from him, in the female line, descended the Mowbrays, Dukes of Norfolk. The parish is bounded on the south and west by the river Aire, and comprises by computation rather more than 2000 acres, of which 607 are in the township of Brotherton, 850 in that of Byrome with Pool, and 750 in the township of Sutton. The soil is generally fertile, and the surface is pleasingly undulated, in some parts rising to considerable elevations; the substratum is chiefly limestone of very superior quality, which is quarried for the supply of the neighbouring district, and there are many kilns for burning it into lime. Extensive works were established, in 1840, by James Kelsall and Company, for the manufacture of glass-bottles of every description. Facility of conveyance, for lime and other produce, is afforded by the river Aire, which is navigable here, and by the York and North-Midland railway, which passes through the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.; net income, £192; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of York. The church, erected in 1300, is partly in the early, and partly in the decorated, English style, with a square embattled tower, crowned by pinnacles; the chancel is divided from the nave by an enriched Norman arch, and the south porch is also of Norman style; in the chancel is a monument to the Rev. Stephen Owen, vicar, who was deprived of the benefice by the usurper, Cromwell, and also one to the Rev. Charles Daubuz, a French refugee, and author of a Commentary on the Revelations, who was vicar of the parish, and died in 1717. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. A national school was built by subscription in 1840, and endowed with £400, the proceeds of a bazaar, to which £15 per annum are added by Sir John Ramsden: there is also a bequest of Mr. Wilson, producing £5 per annum, in aid of the endowment.

BROTTON, a parochial chapelry, in the union of GUISBOROUGH, E. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of the county of YORK; containing 468 inhabitants, of which number 319 are in the township, 6 miles (N. E. by E.) from Guisborough. This place is styled in the Domesday survey Broctune, and after the time of that record was granted to Robert de Brus, lord of Skelton, from whose family it descended to the Thwengs and Lumleys, with the last of whom it remained until the reign of Henry VIII., when, by the attainder of John, Lord Lumley, the estate came to the crown, since which event the lands have been sold out in parcels. The chapelry, which includes the townships of Brotton, Skinninggrove, and Kilton, is situated on the shore of the North Sea, and on the road between Guisborough and Whitby, and comprises by measurement 3742 acres, of which a great portion is arable land; the surface is mountainous on the sea-coast, and in other parts generally diversified with hills; the soil is a hard clay, and occasionally of a good quality, and the scenery in many places interspersed with wood and plantations, and embracing very extensive views. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Skelton. The church, erected in 1777, at the expense of the parishioners, is a neat, plain edifice, standing on the summit of an elevated ridge, which is washed by the sea. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Fossils, agates, snake-stones, and other petrifications have been found.

BROTHERWICK, a township, in the parish of WARKWORTH, union of ALNWICK, E. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 2 miles (W.) from Warkworth; containing 10 inhabitants. It is situated on the west side of the river Coquet, which is navigable to within a quarter of a mile of Warkworth. The tithes have been commuted for £29. 10. 6., of which £24. 12. 6. are payable to the Bishop of Carlisle, and £4. 18. to the vicar of the parish.

BROUGH, with SHATTON, a hamlet, in the parish of HOPE, union of CHAPEL-EN-LE-FRITH, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Tideswell; containing 80 inhabitants. A place, called the Castle, near the junction of two small streams, the Noe and the Bradwell Water, was evidently the site of a Roman station, probably Crococolana; and numerous Roman relics have been discovered, also coins (among which is a gold one of Ves-pasian), and rude busts, one being of Apollo.

BROUGH, or BURG, UNDER STAINMOOR (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in EAST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND; comprising the townships of Brough, Brough-Sowerby, and Hilbeck, and the chapelry of Stainmoor; and containing 1694 inhabitants, of whom 899 are in the market-town of Brough, 8 miles (S. E. by E.) from Appleby, and 262 (N. N. W.) from London, on the high road to Glasgow. This town occupies the site of the ancient Vertera, or Veteris, where, towards the decline of the Roman empire in Britain, a prefect, with a band of directores, was stationed. It was partly built with the ruins of that fort, from which circumstance it probably derived its appellation, and is distinguished from other places of the same name by its vicinity to an extensive ridge of rocky mountains that separates this county from Yorkshire. It flourished as a place of considerable importance prior to the Conquest, soon after which a conspiracy was formed here, by the northern English, against the government of William. At what time the Castle was erected is not precisely known; but in 1174 it was nearly demolished by William, King of Scotland, who laid waste the town: it was subsequently restored, and, in 1521, was nearly destroyed by a fire that broke out after the celebration of a Christmas festival by Lord Clifford; it remained in a ruinous state till 1660, when it was repaired by Lady Ann Clifford, Countess Dowager of Pembroke. The fortress was situated upon an eminence, abruptly steep towards the north and west; and on the south and east, where the acclivity is more gentle, it was defended by a ditch and a strong rampart: the remains consist of some massive towers, of which the keep, a large square tower with turrets at the angles, called Cæsar's Tower, was almost perfect in 1792, when the lower part of one of the angles fell down, leaving the upper part adhering by the cement only to the main building. Great part of it has within the last few years been removed, and the remainder is in a state of progressive dilapidation. The town, divided into Market-Brough and Church-Brough, is pleasantly situated, and crossed by the Swindale Beck, which flows into the river Eden: it consists principally of one long street; the houses are rather commodious than handsome; the inhabitants are well supplied with water. Several of the female inhabitants are employed in knitting white yarn stockings. The market, granted in 1331, by Edward III., to Robert, Lord Clifford, is on Thursday, but is of little note; corn is admitted toll-free. Fairs are held on the Thursday before Whit-Sunday and September 30th, the latter of which, called Brough Hill fair, is held on a common, two miles from the town, and is celebrated for the sale of linen and woollen cloth, wearing apparel, articles of hardware, and live stock; cattle fairs are also held in the town, on the second Thursday in March and April.

The PARISH comprises by computation 20,000 acres, of which about one-half is inclosed and cultivated, and the remainder waste; the soil of the higher parts of the inclosed land, with the exception of a few portions of extremely fine quality, is sterile, and that of the lower portions rich and fertile, and equally adapted either for arable or pasture. The surface is varied with hills, and the lower grounds are watered by two small rivulets, of which one divides this parish from that of Kirkby-Stephen; and the other flows through the town into the river Eden. Coal is abundant; several mines are in operation for the supply of the neighbouring district, and there are quarries of freestone, limestone, and slate. The parish was formerly a chapelry in Kirkby-Stephen: the living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 8. 9.; net income, £492; patrons, Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford, to whom the rectory and advowson were given, at the request of Robert Eggesfield, founder of that college, and for several years rector of Brough. The church is a large handsome structure of great antiquity, to which a square embattled tower was added in 1513; the windows are ornamented with richly stained glass, which, from an inscription on one of them, appears to be of the time of Henry VIII.; the pulpit is formed of one entire stone, and within the church are several interesting monuments. There is a chapel in Stainmoor, in the parish. The Independents, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans have places of worship. The free school is endowed with £6. 18. 11., a portion of the revenue of a dissolved chantry and hospital, founded, in 1506, by John Brunskill, the former for two chaplains, one of whom was to instruct the children of the parish in grammar; the present building was erected by Lord Thanet. A national school, established in 1828, is partly supported by the vicar. Many Roman coins and other antiquities have been found at various times near the castle, and, within the last thirty years, an earthen vessel full of silver quinarii, many of which are in good preservation. On Stainmoor, in that part of the parish which verges upon Yorkshire, William the Norman, and Malcolm, the Scottish king, erected a cross, called Reycross, as a boundary between the two kingdoms; the site is now marked by two stones. Cuthbert Buckle, lord mayor of London in 1593, was born here.

BROUGH, a township, in the parish of CATTERICK, union of RICHMOND, wapentake of HANG-EAST, N. riding of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W.) from Catterick; containing 88 inhabitants. It comprises about 1050 acres of fertile land, the property of Sir W. Lawson, Bart., lord of the manor, who resides at Brough Hall, a handsome mansion, much improved by Sir John Lawson, in the seventeenth century. An elegant Roman Catholic chapel was commenced in 1834, and finished in 1837, at a cost of £12,000, defrayed by Sir W. Lawson; it is a splendid structure, in the early English style, with an east window of beautifully stained glass, executed by Wille-

BROUGH, with DRINGHOE and UPTON, a township, in the parish of SKIPSEA, union of BRIDLINGTON, N. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, 9 miles (S. by W.) from Bridlington; containing 190 inhabitants, of whom 90 are in Brough. The hamlet derives its name from a castle erected here by Drogo de Bevere, who came over with the Conqueror, and was lord of the seignory of Holderness: the only remains now existing of this fortress, are the outworks, and the high artificial mound on which stood the keep; the outer rampart of the outworks is at least half a mile in circumference; and the outer bank of the keep, which commands a very extensive prospect, is 500 yards round. A market and two fairs were granted to the inhabitants of the place by Edward III., the former to be held weekly, and the latter annually.

BROUGH-FERRY, with ELLOUGHTON, a township, in the parish of ELLOUGHTON, union of BEVERLEY, Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from South Cave; containing 170 inhabitants. The ancient village of Brough is supposed to be the Petuasia of Ptolemy, being situated on the great Roman road, called Ermin-street, which ran from Lincoln to York, and here crossed the Humber by Brough Ferry. This passage is still much used for transit to and from Winterringham and Ferriby Sluice, on the Lincolnshire side of the river. The Hull and Selby railway passes near the village over an embankment and viaduct seventeen feet high, and has one of its stations here.

BROUGH-SOWERBY, a township, in the parish of BROUGH, EAST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S.) from Brough; containing 142 inhabitants.

BROUGHALL, a township, in the parish of WHITCHURCH, Whitchurch division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (E.) from Whitchurch; containing 203 inhabitants.

BROUGHAM (ST. NINIAN), a parish, in WEST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. E.) from Penrith; containing 249 inhabitants. This was the Roman station Brovoniacum, which appears to have comprised an area 140 paces in length, and 120 in breadth: the vallum and some vestiges of the outworks are visible; and coins, votive altars, and other relics have been found on the southern side of the station, where, as it is said, a city anciently stood, named by the Saxons Burg-ham, the Castle Town. A castle was built soon after the Conquest, principally, as appears from an inscription over the inner gateway, by the first Roger, Lord Clifford, which was demolished by the Scots, in 1412; and having been rebuilt, was honoured by the presence of James I., who was entertained by its noble owner, Francis, Earl of Cumberland, in Aug. 1617. It sustained much damage during the parliamentary war, but was restored by the celebrated Countess of Pembroke, in 1651: the venerable and extensive ruins are pleasingly situated on a woody eminence, at the confluence of two streams, and near them is a handsome pillar, embellished with heraldic bearings; and surmounted by a small obelisk, erected in 1656, by the countess, as a memorial of her last parting with her mother, the Countess Dowager of Cumberland, on the spot, April 2nd, 1616. The parish, which is bounded on every side, except the south, by the rivers Eden, Eamont, and Lowther, which unite here, comprises by computation 5000 acres; the soil, with the exception of about 1000 acres of red gravelly loam, which is very productive, is in general light, sandy, and sterile. Brougham Hall, the property and residence of Lord Brougham and Vaux, late lord high chancellor, is a plain, lofty, and ancient structure, with an embasured parapet, erected at different periods, and occupying an elevated site, which, from a similarity in the richness and diversity of the prospect it commands, has acquired for it the characteristic title of the "Windsor of the North." The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 10. 7½.;

net income, £290; patron, Earl of Thanet: the tithes have been commuted for £91. 5. The church stands pleasantly within a curve on the southern bank of the Eamont. There is also a chapel of ease, supposed to be dedicated to St. Wilfrid, in the western part of the parish, which, together with the church, was rebuilt in 1659, by the Countess of Pembroke.

BROUGHTON, a hamlet, in the parish of BIERTON, union and hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2 miles (E. by N.) from Aylesbury.

BROUGHTON (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Newport-Pagnell; containing 168 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 9. 7.; net income, £116; patron, James Praed, Esq., lord of the manor, and proprietor of the parish: the glebe comprises 14 acres. There are two endowments, by Thos. and Fras. Duncombe, Esqrs., for repairing the church, and for teaching six children to read; the residue to be distributed to the poor.

BROUGHTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of ST. IVES, hundred of HURTINGSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, 6 miles (N. E. by N.) from Huntingdon; containing 363 inhabitants. This place was the barony, by virtue of which the abbot of Ramsey Abbey sat in parliament, and had, in consequence, four knights' fees annexed to it. The parish is situated about a mile from the road from Huntingdon to Ramsey, and comprises by computation 2300 acres; about 250 acres are pasture, and the rest arable, resting upon a strong clayey soil. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 13. 9.; net income, £283; patron and incumbent, Rev. George Johnston: the tithes have been commuted for land, comprising 370 acres. The church is an elegant structure, in the decorated English style, containing later additions; it was formerly an appendage of the abbey of Ramsey, of which there are some slight vestiges remaining, consisting of ancient slabs, with brasses, &c.

BROUGHTON, a chapelry, in the parish and union of PRESTON, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Preston; containing 695 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £106; patrons, Trustees of Hulme's estate; impropiators, the families of Rothwell, Leed, Melling, and Shuttleworth. The tithes have been commuted for £157. 10., and the vicarial for £12. 12. A free school, for the instruction of children within the chapelry and the townships of Barton and Houghton, has an endowment of £128 per annum, arising from land and tenements; and there are also some minor charities.

BROUGHTON, a township, in the parish of MANCHESTER, union and hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2 miles (N. N. W.) from Manchester; containing 3794 inhabitants. A church was consecrated in 1839.

BROUGHTON, or BARROW TOWN (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, E. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. W.) from Glandford-Brigg; containing, with the township of Castlethorpe, 913 inhabitants. This place derives its name from a large barrow or tumulus near the western extremity of the village. It is situated on the Roman road from Lincoln to the Humber, at Winteringham, and was a Roman station, which, in the time of the emperors Honorius and Arcadius, was occupied by the prefect of the Dalmatian horse, auxiliary to the 6th Legion, and which Horsley supposes to have been the station called Prætorium. Numerous relics of the Romans have, at various times, been found. The manor for several ages belonged to the family of Radford, till, in 1455, Sir Henry Radford, engaging in the rebellion of the Earl of Rutland and others, against Henry VI., it became forfeited upon his attainder of high treason, and subsequently came into the possession of the Andersons, of which family, Sir Edmund Anderson, chief justice in the reign of Elizabeth, presided at the trial of Mary, Queen of Scots, in Fotheringay Castle. The parish is situated on the river Ancholme, which falls into the Humber at Brigg; it is bounded on the south-east by the road to Barton, and comprises by measurement 6900 acres, of which 1200 are wood, and 600 common land. A fair is held at Midsummer.

The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21; net income, £824; patron, Ellys Anderson Stephens, Esq.: the glebe comprises 80 acres. The church, which was extensively repaired in 1826, is an ancient edifice, with a tower surmounted at one angle by a circular turret; under a flat pointed arch, on the north side of the chancel, is an altar-tomb, bearing the recumbent effigies in alabaster of Sir Henry Radford and his lady, with the inscription defaced; on the floor, by the side of the tomb, is a slab with a brass, on which are the figures of a man in armour and a lady, both holding hearts in their hands; on the north side also of the chancel is the sepulchral chapel of the Andersons, containing numerous memorials, one of which has an alabaster figure, in a reclining posture, of the above-named Sir Edmund, who was born in the parish. A parochial school is supported by subscription. The abbey of Gokewell, a Cistercian nunnery, founded by William de Alta Ripa, prior to 1185, formerly stood in the north-west part of the parish; at the Dissolution, it had a prioress and six nuns, and a revenue, according to Dugdale, of £16. 12. 10., and to Speed, of £19. 18. 6.; it was granted in the 13th of Henry VIII. to Sir William Tyrwhit; the only remains are a doorway in a farmhouse which has been erected on the site.

BROUGHTON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of KETTERING, hundred of ORLINGBURY, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Kettering; containing 593 inhabitants. This parish, which is on the road from Kettering to Northampton, comprises 1675a. 1r. 20p.; there are some quarries of stone applicable to rough building. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Duke of Buccleuch: the tithes were commuted, at the inclosure of the parish, for 320 acres of land, valued at about £440 per annum. The church is a handsome structure, in the later English style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Fifteen children are educated in the free school at Pytchley, under the Aylworth charity. On the inclosure, 61 acres, now producing £95 per annum, were allotted in exchange for land bequeathed by Edward Hunt, in 1674, for poor widows and other aged persons, of Broughton, Kettering, and Rothwell.

BROUGHTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BANBURY, hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from Banbury; containing, with the hamlet of North Newington, 629 inhabitants. The parish is pleasantly situated on the road from Banbury to Shipton. Broughton House, about the year 1544, appears to have been formed into a castle by the family of Fiennes, from whom it descended to Sir William Fennys, or Fiennes, Baron Saye and Sele, who was very active in fomenting hostilities against Charles I. The Castle, which was a place of considerable strength, opposed a formidable resistance to the royalist party during the parliamentary war, but was finally taken. The castellated buildings on the north side, with some of the turrets and handsome oriel windows, have a venerable and interesting appearance; they are surrounded by a deep moat, 80 feet broad, over which is a bridge forming the only entrance, through a square embattled gateway tower. The interior contains several magnificent apartments, adorned with paintings, and displaying some beautiful specimens of ancient architecture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 16. 0½.; net income, £539; patron and incumbent, Rev. Charles F. Wyatt. The church, situated near the bridge leading to the castle, is an ancient structure of the thirteenth century, partly in the decorated and partly in the later style of English architecture, and contains some splendid monuments.

BROUGHTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of WEM, liberties of the borough of SHREWSBURY, N. division of SALOP, 3½ miles (S. by W.) from Wem; containing 188 inhabitants. It comprises about 800 acres, of which 500 are arable, and the rest pasture: road-stone is quarried. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £67; patron and impropiator, Lord Hill: the glebe comprises about 30 acres.

BROUGHTON, a hamlet, in the parish of STOKE, union of TAUNTON, hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 26 inhabitants.

BROUGHTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of STOCKBRIDGE, hundred of THORNGATE, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Stockbridge; containing, with the chapelry of Pittleworth, and tything of French-Moor, 1009 inhabitants. This place is by Camden identified with the Roman station Brige, which Salmon refers to a hill near the village, and of which Mr. Gale, in 1719, discovered some vestiges in an adjoining wood on the road to Salisbury. The parish comprises by measurement 4200 acres; the soil of the greater part is chalky, and of the remainder a kind of reddish marl, resting on chalk; the higher grounds command rich and extensive prospects; and the lower lands are watered by a small rivulet, which has its source at Over Wallop, about four miles distant, and flows through the parish. A fair for pedlery and toys is held on the first Monday in July; and a court leet annually by the lord of the manor. The living is a rectory, with the chapelry of Bossington annexed, valued in the king's books at £37. 10., and in the gift of Charles Baring Wall, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £770, and the glebe comprises 34 acres: the tithes of Bossington have been commuted for £140. A church was erected at Bossington, in 1840, at the cost of Mr. Elwes. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. Thomas Dowse, in 1601, conveyed an estate, producing, with subsequent benefactions, £68. 17., for the support of a school.

BROUGHTON, a chapelry, in the parish of ECCLESHALL, union of STONE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 5¼ miles (N. W. by W.) from Eccleshall; containing 17 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £129; patron, Sir J. D. Broughton, Bart.

BROUGHTON, a township, in the parish of APPLETON-LE-STREET, union of MALTON, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK, 2 miles (N. W.) from New Malton; containing 111 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Malton to Appleton-le-Street, and comprises by computation 800 acres of land. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BROUGHTON-ASTLEY (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of LUTTERWORTH, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 5½ miles (N. by W.) from Lutterworth; containing, with the townships of Broughton-Astley, Primethorp, and Sutton-in-the-Elms, 728 inhabitants, of whom 306 are in the first-named township. An intermediate station on the line of the Midland-Counties' railway is situated here. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 10. 5.; net income, £674; patron, Robert Thomas Adnutt, Esq. A small school was endowed, in 1806, by Zaccheus Duckett, who left £100.

BROUGHTON, BRANT (St. Helen), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (E.) from Newark; containing 650 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the river Brant, to the west of which, at a short distance, and in the same direction, runs the river Witham; and the road from Newark to Sleaford traverses it on the south. It comprises by admeasurement 2877 acres, of which about 1040 are arable, and the rest pasture and meadow: stone is quarried for the repair of roads. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £35. 13. 4., and in the gift of Sir R. Sutton, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £691. 1., and there is a good glebe-house, with a glebe of about 5 acres. The church, which has a handsome spire, rises to an elevation of 50 yards. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and the Society of Friends. Mr. Pickering, in 1604, gave £50, the produce of which is applied to the instruction of children. Bishop Warburton was rector of the parish, and is supposed, during his residence here of 20 years, to have written his Legation of Moses, and other works.

BROUGHTON, CHURCH (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, 8½ miles (E.) from Uttoxeter; containing, with the hamlet of Sapperton, 652 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 2224 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £228; patron, John Broadhurst, Esq.: the tithes of the manor were commuted for land and a money payment in 1773. In the chancel of the church are three stone stalls. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists. A school was founded about 1745, by subscription, to which the Duke of Devonshire was the principal contributor; and the sum raised was invested in land, the rental of which is about £30 per annum.

BROUGHTON, EAST, a chapelry, in the parish of CARTMEL, union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2 miles (N. by E.) from Cartmel; containing 458 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £67; patron, Earl of Burlington. The chapel, which was consecrated in 1745, is dedicated to St. Peter. A national school for girls was commenced in the year 1830.

BROUGHTON-GIFFORD (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and hundred of BRADFORD, Westbury and N. divisions, and Trowbridge and Bradford subdivisions of WILTS, 2 miles (W.) from Melksham; containing 741 inhabitants. The parish, situated on the road from Melksham to Bradford, and bounded on the south-east by the Lower Avon, comprises by admeasurement 1600 acres; the soil is good, and great quantities of gravel are dug. The population is partly employed in the weaving of cloth, by the manufacturers of Trowbridge, Melksham, and Staverton, in which about 300 persons, and many of their children, are engaged. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 3. 11½., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £450, and the glebe comprises nearly 33 acres. The church is a spacious and ancient structure, with a massive square embattled tower. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. Mrs. Betty Paradise, in 1782, gave £900 in the 3 per cents., producing £27 per annum, of which £20 are paid to the master of a school, and £7 distributed among the poor; and Mrs. Sarah Purbeck, of Southampton, bequeathed stock, producing £5, for the poor at Christmas.

BROUGHTON, GREAT, a township, in the parish of BRIDEKIRK, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 4½ miles (W.) from Cockermonth; containing 562 inhabitants. The village lies on the southern slope of an eminence rising from the river Derwent. The tithes were commuted for land in 1819. Mr. Joseph Ashley built an almshouse for four women, and a schoolroom, which he endowed, by will dated July 18th, 1735, the former with £8, and the latter with £20. 10., per annum.

BROUGHTON, GREAT and LITTLE, a township, in the parish of KIRKBY-IN-CLEVELAND, union of STOKESLEY, W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, 2 miles (S. E.) from Stokesley; containing 511 inhabitants. Great Broughton, in Domesday book called Broctune, was at the time when that survey was taken waste, and held under the Earl of Morton: in the reign of Edward I., it was held by Nicholas de Meinell, under the Mauleys, of Mulgrave; and in the time of Elizabeth, the Eures were owners of the manor, and some of the lands were then in the possession of Michael Tempest, who was attainted for treason. The village of Great Broughton is regularly built, upon a spacious common, or green, and the houses, which run in a direction nearly north and south, are neat, and in good repair. A portion of the population is engaged in the linen manufacture. There is a meeting-house for Wesleyans. On the top of a mountain, near this place, is a rude monument, consisting of a large collection of stones, some of an immense size, called the Wain stones, which, it has been conjectured, were raised over the remains of a Danish warrior.

BROUGHTON-HACKET (St. Leonard), a parish, in the union and Upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 5½ miles (E.) from Worcester; containing 154 inhabitants. This parish, which is nearly encircled by the river Bow, so called from the direction of its course, comprises 365 acres by computation; the soil is rich, and the surface has a gentle declivity from the village, which is situated on an elevated ridge. The road from Alcester to Worcester crosses the parish from east to west, and the Birmingham and Gloucester railway passes near its western border. There are some stone-pits, producing specimens in which marine shells are imbedded, susceptible of a polish that renders them in appearance not inferior to the Derbyshire marble; a valuable blueish limestone, which supplies the city of Worcester and places adjacent with lime for building and manure, abounds. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 1. 0½., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £73; the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1807.

BROUGHTON-IN-AIREDALE (All Saints), a parish, in the union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWXCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 3½ miles (W. by S.) from Skipton; containing 407 inhabitants. The Saxon name of this place, implying a fortified town, bears testimony to its antiquity; vestiges of works may still be traced, and various relics, either of British or Roman origin, have been frequently discovered. From its situation between the town of Skipton, which was garrisoned by the royalists, and that of Thornton, which was occupied by the parliamentarians, the place suffered much during the civil war. The parish is bounded on the west by the river Aire, and comprises by computation 3950 acres; there is a considerable portion of high land affording pasture. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 16. 0½.; net income, £190, with a good house; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Christ-Church, Oxford. The church is an ancient structure, with a square tower. A school was built at Elslack, a township in the parish, by George Lane Fox, Esq., who contributes liberally towards its support. There is a chalybeate spring.

BROUGHTON-IN-FURNESS, a market-town and chapelry, in the parish of KIRBY-IRELETH, union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 29 miles (N. W.) from Lancaster, and 270 (N. W. by N.) from London; containing 1250 inhabitants. The town is situated on the southern declivity of a gentle eminence, and is in the form of a square; the houses are built of stone, and roofed with blue slate. In the centre of it is a spacious square area, the ground for forming which was given by John Gilpin, Esq., and in which his widow erected a handsome lofty obelisk. Previously to the introduction of machinery, the spinning of woollen-yarn prevailed to a considerable extent in private houses: the making of brush-stocks and hoops at present furnishes employment to many of the inhabitants, particularly the latter, from the number and extent of the coppices on Furness Fells. There was formerly a very extensive tract of uncultivated land, called Broughton Common, nearly all of which is now inclosed. The surrounding country is very mountainous, abounding with mines of iron and copper ore, and with slate-quarries; a great quantity of slate is shipped at Dudden Sands, for conveyance coastwise. Iron, grain, malt, oak-bark, and hoops, are also sent from the same spot, in vessels averaging about 60 tons' burthen; and from a place about half a mile below Dudden Bridge, in vessels of 25 tons' burthen, for which the estuary is navigable at the flow of the tide. The market is on Wednesday: fairs are held on April 27th and Aug. 1st, for horned-cattle, and on the 6th of Oct. for horned-cattle and sheep; those in April and Oct. are likewise statute fairs for the hiring of servants, and all are much frequented by the clothiers from Yorkshire. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £108; patron, J. Sawrey, Esq.; appropriators, Dean and Chapter of York: the great tithes were commuted for land in 1828. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene: there is also another chapel at Seathwaite. Edward Taylor, by will dated in 1784, bequeathed £100, on condition that £60 should be raised by subscription, for the benefit of a grammar school.

BROUGHTON, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of BRIDEKIRK, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Cockermouth; containing 344 inhabitants. A meeting-house was built by the Society of Friends, in 1656, and one by the Baptists, in 1672. Here is a manufactory for tobacco-pipes and coarse earthenware. Abraham Fletcher, a self-taught mathematician of no inconsiderable eminence, author of the "Universal Measurer," was born here in 1714; he was the son of a tobacco-pipe maker, and in early life laboured at that occupation.

BROUGHTON, NETHER (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 412 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 2000 acres; the soil is a stiff, but fertile, clay, well adapted for pasture, to which the greater portion of the land is appropriated; the surface is generally flat, and in most parts surrounded by the hills which inclose the vale of Belvoir. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 5. $7\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £347; patrons, Hon. P. P. Bouverie and Sir H. Sawyer. The tithes of the parish, with certain exceptions, were commuted for land in 1764. The church is an ancient structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower. A school has been established on the national plan.

BROUGHTON-POGGS (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of WITNEY, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Lechlade; containing 151 inhabitants. It comprises 1092a. 2r., of which 733 acres are arable, and 317 pasture. The living is a discharged-rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 7. 11., and in the gift of the Rev. Samuel Goodenough: the tithes have been commuted for £266, and there is a good glebe-house, with 33a. 1r. 13p. of land. The church is a small ancient edifice of one aisle, divided into a nave and chancel; the latter, which is one of the neatest in the county, contains numerous memorials of the Goodenoughs, to whom the parish has belonged for more than three centuries.

BROUGHTON-SULNEY, a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, S. division of the wapentake of BINGHAM and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 7 miles (N. W.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 371 inhabitants. This parish, which is on the road from Nottingham to Melton, comprises by measurement 1900 acres. The surface is boldly undulated, and the scenery pleasingly diversified: the river Smite, which rises in Old Dalby, forms the eastern boundary of the parish, separating it from Nether Broughton, in the county of Leicestershire. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £388; patron, Sir J. Radcliffe: in the year 1762, the tithes were commuted for 243a. 22p. of land. The church is an ancient edifice, in good repair. The water of a spring, vulgarly called Woundheal, is noted for the cure of scorbutic eruptions.

BROWNSEA, an island, in the parish of STUDLAND, union of WAREHAM and PURBECK, hundred of ROWBARROW, Wareham division of DORSET; containing 70 inhabitants.

BROWNSHALL, or BROWNSELL-LANE, a hamlet, in the parish of BISHOP'S-CAUNDLE, union and hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of DORSET. It is of great antiquity, and was formerly of importance, having given name to the hundred of Brownsall.

BROWNSOVER, a chapelry, in the parish of CLIFTON, union of RUGBY, Rugby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 2 miles (N. by E.) from Rugby; containing 90 inhabitants. It is intersected by the road from Rugby to Harborough, and comprises by measurement 853 acres. The chapel is dedicated to St. Michael. The great tithes belong to Rugby grammar school, founded by Lawrence Sheriff, who was born here.

BROWSTON, a hamlet, in the parish of BELTON, hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, E. division of SUFFOLK; containing 64 inhabitants.

BROXA, a township, in the parish of HACKNESS, union of SCARBOROUGH, liberty of WHITBY-STRAND, N. riding of YORK, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Scarborough; containing 65 inhabitants.

BROXBOURN (St. AUGUSTINE), a parish, in the union of WARE, hundred and county of HERTFORD, 1 mile (S.) from Hoddesdon; containing, with the chapelry of Hoddesdon, part of which is in the parish of Great Amwell, 2386 inhabitants. In the time of William the Conqueror, the manor belonged to Adeling, wife of Hugh de Grentemaisnill; it afterwards came to the Knights Templars, and lastly to the prior and brethren of the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem, who occupied the more ancient part of the present mansion of Broxbournbury. James I., on his way from Scotland, was entertained at the manor-house, where he was met by many of the nobility and the officers of state. The parish is situated on the great north road, and bounded on the east by the river Lea, which separates it from the county of Essex; the New River also flows through it. The scenery is pleasingly diversified, and the views from many parts are extensive, embracing some mansions of great interest and beauty. The sweeps of woodland in different places are strikingly picturesque; and in Broxbournbury Park are some fine specimens of oak, elm, and Spanish chestnut. The parish comprises by measurement 4379 acres, of which 2582 are in the hamlet of Hoddesdon: the soil, which is fertile, lies upon a bed of rich gravel, of very fine quality. The Lea has a wharf about 200 yards from the church; an intermediate station on the line of the Northern and Eastern railway has been built here, of red brick and quadrangular form, in the Elizabethan style; and a little beyond it, in the valley of the Lea, the line is continued, for about two miles, on an embankment twelve feet high. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 6. 5½.; patron and appropriator, Bishop of London. The great tithes have been commuted for £197. 8., and the vicarial for £147. 8.; the appropriate glebe consists of 62½ acres, and there is a good glebe-house. The church is a large handsome edifice, in the later English style, with a square tower supporting an octagonal spire, and a north and south chapel, the former rich in detail. There are an ancient font and several very fine monuments, of which those to Lady Elizabeth Say, Sir John Say, and Sir Henry Cock, are the most remarkable. A chapel of ease was built in Hoddesdon about a century ago; and the Independents and Quakers have each a place of worship. Sir Richard Lucy, Knt., in 1667, bequeathed property, consisting of a house, and £20 per annum, for a school; and a school for girls is supported by Mrs. Bosanquet. By deed in 1727, the Hon. Letitia Monson gave £1000, since laid out in Bank annuities, for endowing an almshouse for six widows.

BROXHOLME (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, 6¾ miles (N. W.) from Lincoln; containing 145 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 10., and in the gift of Lord Monson: the tithes have been commuted for £250, and there is a good glebe-house, with 68a. 33p. of glebe.

BROXTED (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of DUNMOW, N. division of ESSEX, 3 miles (S. W.) from Thaxted; containing 737 inhabitants. This place, anciently called Chawreth, is supposed to have derived its present name from a brook or rivulet which has its source here, and flows into the river Chelmer at Tiltey. The parish comprises 3098a. 3r. 1p., of which 2195 acres are arable, 503 pasture, 138 woodland, and the remainder gardens and waste. The soil is richly fertile, and the surface rises in some parts into considerable elevations, commanding fine views of the surrounding country. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7; patron and impropiator, R. de Beauvoir, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £660, and the vicarial for £200; there is a good glebe-house. The church, pleasantly situated on the brow of a hill, is an ancient edifice with a wooden belfry turret. There is a national school.

BROXTON, a township, in the parish of MALPAS, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 5 miles (N.) from Malpas; containing 464 inhabitants. It has given name to a hundred, which, at the time of the Norman survey, was called Dudestan. The tithes have been commuted for £170.

BROXTOW, a chapelry, in the parish of BILBOROUGH, union of BASFORD, S. division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 3½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Nottingham. This place, which gave name to the hundred, in ancient records is called a parish, and appears to have been subsequently annexed to Bilborough, to which the chapel, now in ruins, was a chapel of ease.

BRUEN-STAPLEFORD, county of CHESTER.—See STAPLEFORD, BRUEN.

BRUERN, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of CHIPPING-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 3¾ miles (N. by E.) from Burford; containing 46 inhabitants. An abbey for Cistercian monks, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, was founded by Nicholas Basset, in 1147, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, amounted to £124. 10. 10.; the site was granted, in the reign of James I., to Sir Anthony Cope, whose family built a mansion here, which was accidentally destroyed by fire.

BRUISYARD (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union and hundred of PLOMESGATE, E. division of SUFFOLK, 4½ miles (N. W.) from Saxmundham; containing 296 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 1126 acres; the soil is a fertile clay, the surface is undulated, and the lower grounds are watered by a small river that flows through the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £62; patron and impropiator, Earl of Stradbroke, whose tithes have been commuted for £92. The church is an ancient structure, chiefly in the later English style, with a circular tower at the west end, and consists of a nave and chancel, with a chapel on the south side, in which is a slab, bearing the effigies, in brass, of Michael Hare and his lady. A collegiate chapel, in honour of the Annunciation, was founded at Campsey, for a warden and four Secular priests; by Maud, Countess of Ulster, in 1347, seven years after which the establishment was removed to Bruisyard: the site and possessions, in 1366, were surrendered to an abbess and nuns of the order of St. Clare, who continued here until the general suppression, when their revenue was estimated at £56. 2. 1. It was granted by Henry VIII. to Sir Nicholas Hare, and came by marriage to the family of Rous.

BRUMHILL, a hamlet, in the parish of WEETING, union of THETFORD, hundred of GRIMSHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, 1 mile (N. N. E.) from Brandon. A priory for Augustine canons, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Thomas the Martyr, was founded about the reign of John, by Sir Hugh de Plaiz; in the 7th. of Henry III. the prior received a grant for a fair to be held on the 7th of July, and in the following year, permission to hold a market also. It was suppressed by Pope Clement in May, 1528, and the possessions were granted by the king to Cardinal Wolsey, towards endowing his intended college at Ipswich; but this design having been frustrated by the cardinal's fall, they were given, in exchange for other lands, to Christ's College, Cambridge.

BRUMSTEAD (ST. PETER), a parish, in the TUNSTEAD and HAPPING incorporation, hundred of HAPPING, E. division of NORFOLK, 1 mile (N.) from Stalham; containing 116 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 788 acres, of which 652 are arable, 22 wood, and the remainder marsh; the soil of the arable land is fertile. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 5. 7½., and in the gift of the Earl of Abergavenny: the tithes have been commuted for £240, and there is a glebe of 23 acres, with a parsonage-house, erected in 1841. The church is chiefly in the decorated style, and has a lofty embattled tower. At the inclosure, in 1805, 12 acres were allotted to the poor.

BRUNDALL (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLOFIELD, E. division of NORFOLK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Norwich; containing 52 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south by the navigable river Yare, and comprises about 559 acres, the whole arable, excepting about 133 acres of common. The Norwich and Yarmouth railway passes through the parish. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with those of Witton and Little Plumstead, and valued in the king's books at £4. 10.: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £145, and the glebe comprises nearly 14 acres. The church is a plain structure, chiefly in the early English style. In the 38th of Henry III., William de St. Omer received a grant of a fair to be held here.

BRUNDISH (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union and hundred of HOXNE, E. division of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Framlingham; containing 525 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the vicarage of Tannington: the tithes have been commuted for £572, of which £467 are payable to the bishop of Rochester, and £105 to the incumbent, who has also $10\frac{1}{2}$ acres of glebe. The church is a handsome structure, chiefly in the later English style, with a square embattled tower: under an arched canopy in the north aisle is an altar-tomb, on which is an effigy, engraved in brass, of "Sir Esmonded de Burnedish," who died in 1349. A chantry was founded in the church, in the 7th of Richard II., by John de Pyeshall, for six chaplains, which, at the surrender, had a revenue of £13. 0. $7\frac{1}{2}$.

BRUNDON.—See BALLINGDON.

BRUNSLow, with EDGTON and HORDERLEY, a township, in the parish of EDGTON, union of CLUN, hundred of PURSLow, S. division of SALOP, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Bishop's-Castle; containing 214 inhabitants. This place is situated on the south-western declivity of an eminence, and in the neighbourhood is an ancient fortification, called the Burrow Camps.

BRUNSTOCK, a township, in the parish of CROSBY-UPON-EDEN, union of CARLISLE, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Carlisle; containing 75 inhabitants.

BRUNTINGTHORPE, or BRENTINGTHORPE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of LUTTERWORTH, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Lutterworth; containing 423 inhabitants. It comprises 1148a. 3r. 19p., of which about 300 acres are arable, and the rest pasture; the soil consists of sand, gravel, and clay. The population is partly employed in the stocking-manufacture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 7. 6.; net income, £380; patron, John Bridges, Esq. Under an inclosure act, in 1776, land and a money payment were assigned in lieu of tithes. The church is an ancient edifice of pebbles, and contains an altar-piece, painted by the late rector, the Rev. T. Freeman.

BRUNTON, EAST, a township, in the parish of GOSFORTH, union and W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 268 inhabitants. East and West Brunton, Fawdon, Dinnington, Wideopen, and Weetslade, formed the manor and estate of the Haslerigge family, and were sold in 1768, by order of the court of chancery, with the exception of the coal-mines of Fawdon and Brunton. The township lies on the west of the great post-road between Newcastle and Morpeth, and comprises by computation 936 acres of land. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £157. 6. 6., of which £74. 1. 3. are payable to the Bishop of Carlisle, an equal sum to the Dean and Chapter, and £9. 4. to the vicar of Newcastle.

BRUNTON, HIGH and LOW, a township, in the parish of EMBLETON, union of ALNWICK, S. division of BAMBROUGH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Alnwick; containing 59 inhabitants. They are situated about a mile north from Fallowden, near a stream which shortly falls into the North Sea; the number of acres is about 1000, of which above 300 are rich old pasture.

BRUNTON, WEST, a township, in the parish of GOSFORTH, union and W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 109 inhabitants. The township, which is situated on the west of the great post-road between Newcastle and Morpeth, comprises by computation 1140 acres. The estate formerly belonged to the Haslerigge family. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £206. 15. 6., of which £74. 3. 3. are payable to the Bishop of Carlisle, a similar sum to the Dean and Chapter, and £58. 9. to the vicar of Newcastle.

BRUSHFIELD, a township, in the parish and union of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Bakewell; containing 53 inhabitants.

BRUSHFORD, a parish, in the union of CREDITON, hundred of NORTH TAWTON, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, 3 miles (E.) from Winkleigh; containing 144 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the north bank of the river Taw, and near the road from Bideford to Exeter, comprises by computation 1300 acres. A few women are occasionally employed in weaving serges by hand-loom. Adjoining the church yard is a green of about 3 acres in extent, on which are marks of the foundations of houses, supposed to have been the ancient village, which, according to tradition, was destroyed by fire, and of which only one house is remaining. The living is a perpetual curacy; patron and impropiator, G. Luxton, Esq. The church, a small ancient edifice, in the early English style, is situated on a hill overlooking the river; the chancel is divided from the nave by a carved oak screen, and contains a good painting of Queen Anne. Abbotsham, a farm-house in the parish, is thought to have been the occasional residence of the abbot of Hartland, to which abbey this parish was annexed.

BRUSHFORD (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of DULVERTON, hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, W. division of SOMERSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by E.) from Dulverton; containing 340 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the river Exe, and on the road from Minehead to Exeter, comprises by computation 2067 acres: there are some good stone-quarries, and a very fine gravel for garden-walks is found in abundance. A fair for cattle and sheep is held on the 2nd of Aug., at Langridge farm, in the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 1. $5\frac{1}{2}$., and in the alternate patronage of the Earl of Carnarvon and the Sydenham family: the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £305, and the glebe comprises 40 acres. The church is a plain neat edifice. A parochial school is supported by subscription. The Rev. John Norris, a former rector, bequeathed a rent-charge of £7 for the instruction of children.

BRUTON (St. Mary), a market-town and parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of BRUTON, E. division of SOMERSET, 12 miles (S. E.) from Wells, and 110 (W. by S.) from London; comprising, with the chapelry of Wyke-Champfflower, the tything of Redlynch, and part of Discove, 2074 inhabitants, of whom 1885 are in the town. This place takes its name from the river Bri, or Bru, which rises in the adjoining forest of Selwood. Prior to the Conquest it was distinguished for an abbey founded by Algar, Earl of Cornwall, in 1005, for monks of the Benedictine order, upon the ruins of which William de Mohun, in the time of Stephen, erected a priory for Black canons, which was raised into an abbey, in the beginning of the reign of Henry VIII., by William Gilbert, the prior, by whom it was almost rebuilt: it was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and its revenue, at the Dissolution, was £480. 17. 2. The abbey, after its suppression, became the residence of the Lords Fitzharding and Berkeley, who sold the manor to the Hoare family, in 1777; the remains have been converted into a parsonage-house, and the other vestiges consist of the altars, the tomb of the last abbot, and an ancient well. The town is pleasantly situated at the base of a steep hill, and along the side of a romantic combe, watered by the Bru, over which is a stone bridge: it consists principally of one well-paved street; the houses are in general neatly built. The manufactures were once considerable, but are now confined chiefly to stockings and machinery; about 250 persons are employed in silk-throwing. The market is on Saturday; the fairs are on April 23rd, and Sept. 17th. The town-hall, a spacious building, of which the lower part was used for the market, and the upper contained a large court-room, in which the petty-sessions were formerly held, is now converted into tenements.

The parish, which is situated on the road from Bath to Weymouth, comprises by measurement 3713 acres: stone of good quality for building is quarried to a considerable extent. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £138; patron and impropriator, Sir H. R. Hoare, Bart., whose tithes have been commuted for £130. 8. 6. The glebe comprises 20 acres. The church is a spacious and handsome structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, crowned by pinnacles and elaborately decorated, and two porches, having over the entrance the arms of some of the abbots; the roof is of open timber frame-work, richly carved and of elegant design; the chancel is of modern erection, and in the Grecian style: the tomb of Prior Gilbert is preserved. There is a chapel of ease at Wyke-Champfflower, and another at Redlynch; and the Independents have a place of worship. The free grammar school was founded in the reign of Edward VI., by Richard Fitzjames, Bishop of London, Sir John Fitzjames, chief justice of England, and Dr. John Edmonds, by deed dated Sept. 24th, 1519, who endowed it with estates, producing, altogether, £280 per annum: it has four exhibitions, of £50 per annum each, to either of the universities. An hospital for fourteen aged men, the same number of women, and sixteen boys, who are also educated and apprenticed, was founded about 1618, by Hugh Saxey, Esq., auditor of the household to Queen Elizabeth and James I., who endowed it with estates worth £1381. 11. per annum. The buildings, which were completed about 1636, form a spacious quadrangle near the west end of the town, and are in the Elizabethan style: in one of the wings is a neat chapel, with a schoolroom below it; and over the entrance to the hall is the bust of the founder: the eastern side of the quadrangle was rebuilt some years since. Many marine shells and fossils have been dug up at Creech Hill, where was an encampment, and on which also a beacon was formerly erected: human skeletons and skulls have been found at Lawyat; and at Discove, the remains of a tessellated pavement were discovered in 1711. The benevolent founder of the hospital, the two Fitzjames's, the Earl of Falmouth, who was killed in a naval engagement, in 1665, and Dampier, the celebrated navigator, were born here.

BRYAN-MAUND, a township, in the parish of BODENHAM, union of LEOMINSTER, hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD; containing 153 inhabitants.

BRYANSTON (St. Martin), a parish, in the union of BLANDFORD, hundred of PIMPERNE, Blandford division of DORSET, 1½ mile (N. W. by W.) from Blandford-Forum; containing 144 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Stour, which forms its northern boundary, and comprises 1691 acres; the soil is generally chalky, but fertile; the surface is varied, and the lower grounds are subject to occasional inundation from the river, on the banks of which are some tracts of fine meadow land. The living is a rectory, united to that of Durweston, and valued in the king's books at £8. 11. 5½.: the tithes have been commuted for £177.

BRYANTS-PIDDLE, a tything, in the parish of AFF-PIDDLE, union of WAREHAM, hundred of HUNDRED'S-BARROW, Wareham division of DORSET, 9¼ miles (E. by N.) from Dorchester; containing 64 inhabitants. Two schools are partly supported by the vicar and the landed proprietor.

BRYNGWYN (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of ABERGAVENNY, division and hundred of RAGLAN, county of MONMOUTH, 1½ mile (N. W.) from Raglan; containing 306 inhabitants. The parish, situated near the left bank of the river Usk, and intersected by the old and new roads from Monmouth to Abergavenny, contains by estimation about 1250 acres, of which, 513 are arable, 688 pasture and meadow, 10 woodland, and the remainder roads, waste, &c.; the surface is boldly undulated, and from some elevated portions, especially from a place called Camp Hill, very beautiful views are obtained: the soil consists of different combinations of clay and gravel. Petty-sessions for the division of Raglan are held on the third Monday in each month, at Cross Buchan, in the parish. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 8. 9., and in the gift of the Earl of Abergavenny: the tithes have been commuted for £164, and the glebe consists of about 39 acres, with a good parsonage-house, enlarged and considerably improved by the rector, the Rev. W. Crawley. A. Jones, Esq., is impropriator of the tithes of five farms which have been commuted for £66. The church is an ancient structure.

BRYNING, with KELLAMERGH, a township, in the parish of KIRKHAM, union of the FYLDE, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Kirkham; containing 152 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £201. 6. 4., of which £164 are payable to the Dean and Chapter of Christ-Church, Oxford, £35. 19. 8. to the vicar, and £1. 6. 8. to the clerk, of the parish.

BUBBENHALL, or BOBENHALL (St. GILES), a parish, in the Kenilworth division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, union and S. division of the county of WARWICK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Coventry; containing 262 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1114 acres, of which 78 are woodland, and the rest chiefly arable; it is partly bounded by the river Avon on the north. The living is a perpetual curacy; present net income, £70; patron and appropriator, Prebendary of Bubbenhall in the Cathedral of Lichfield. Eight poor children are taught to read from the interest of £100 given by Mrs. Hannah Murcott, in 1775.

BUBNELL, a township, in the parish and union of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Stoney-Middleton; containing 128 inhabitants. The great tithes have been commuted for £176, of which £169 are payable to the improPRIATORS, and £7 to the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield. There is a small endowment for the instruction of children.

BUBWITH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of HOWDEN, in the Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK; consisting of the seven townships of Brighton with Gunby, Bubwith, Foggathorpe, Gribthorpe, Harlthorpe, Spaldington, and Willitoft; and containing 1370 inhabitants, of whom 524 are in the township of Bubwith, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Howden. The parish is bounded for about a mile on the west by the navigable river Derwent, and is intersected by the road between Selby and Market-Weighton; in the township are about 1300 acres of well-cultivated land, entirely of level surface. The village is situated close to the river, over which is a stone bridge of ten arches, built in 1793, at a cost of £2000. A corn market, established a few years ago, is held every Wednesday. The living is a discharged vicarage, in mediety; the first valued in the king's books at £7. 2. 6., and the second at £8. 0. 5.; net income, £102: it is in the alternate patronage of the Crown and the Dean and Chapter of York, the latter being appropriators. The church, partly in the Norman and partly in the early English style, is an ancient structure, with a square tower. There are places of worship for Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists. Nicholas de Bubwith, Bishop of Bath and Wells, who was one of the English prelates that were present at the council of Constance, in the year 1415, was a native of the parish.

BUCKBY, LONG (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of DAVENTRY, hundred of GUILSBOROUGH, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (N. E.) from Daventry; containing, with a part of the hamlet of Murcott, 2145 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 3470 acres; the soil is generally a rich loam, alternated with some portions of sand and gravel; the surface is pleasingly undulated, and the lower grounds are watered by several brooks which flow through the parish. The river Nene has its source within two miles; the Grand Junction canal passes through the parish; and the Crick station, on the line of the London and Birmingham railway, is about two miles and a half distant from the village. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Bishop; with a net income of £112; improPRIATORS, Sir J. Langham, Bart., and J. King, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land in 1765 and 1771. The church is a handsome structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, having a turret at one of the angles. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The Rev. Langton Freeman, in 1783, gave £400, at present yielding £20 per annum, for the endowment of a school, now conducted on the national system. There are some vestiges of an ancient monastic edifice.

BUCKDEN (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of St. NEOR'S, hundred of TOSELAND, county of HUNTINGDON, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Huntingdon; containing 1209 inhabitants. In the reign of Henry I., the manor was granted by the abbot of Ely to one of the bishops of Lincoln, whose successors always resided here, till this part of the diocese was transferred to the see of Ely: the episcopal palace is a venerable structure, still standing. The parish, situated on the great north road, and bounded on the east by the navigable river Ouse, comprises 3039 acres, the surface of which is in general flat. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £171; patron, Bishop of Lincoln. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1813; the glebe contains 76 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church has a tower, surmounted by an elegant spire, and contains the remains of Bishops Barlow, Sanderson, and Green, all of Lincoln. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Robert Rament, in 1661, bequeathed a rent-charge of £10 for instruction; and a school has been established by means of a bequest, in 1778, of £200 from Dr. Green. A school for girls is supported by subscription. William Burberry, in 1558, bequeathed property, producing £120 per annum, for distribution among the poor.

BUCKDEN, a township, in the parish of ARNCLIFFE, union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 20 miles (N.) from Skipton; containing 387 inhabitants. This township, which consists of the village, and several hamlets extending through a narrow valley to the sources of the river Wharfe, comprises by computation 15,790 acres, and includes the ancient forest of Langstroth, which was formerly the favourite hunting-ground of the Percy family, and was well stocked with roebuck and fallow-deer. It appears to have formed part of the royal demesnes, in the reign of Edward II., who granted to Edward de Percy the privilege of free warren in all his lands of Buckden, and for a long time it was the subject of much litigation between various parties who claimed that privilege. The deer were destroyed in the time of Charles II., and the land disafforested; the manor is now the property of the Hon. Mrs. Ramsden, and the lands are chiefly heath and moor, abounding with grouse, and affording pasture. A fair for cattle is held on the 12th of October, and also a court baron for the manor. At Hubberholme is the chapel dedicated to St. Michael, of very great antiquity, and chiefly in the Norman style, of which it contains some very interesting details. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £270. 3. 1., payable to University College, Oxford; and there is a glebe of 17 acres. The Wesleyans have a place of worship.

BUCKENHAM-FERRY (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLOFIELD, E. division of NORFOLK, 9 miles (E. S. E.) from Norwich; containing 60 inhabitants. It comprises 908a. 1r. 14p., of which 133 acres are wood and water, and the remainder arable and pasture in nearly equal portions; the village is pleasantly situated on the river Yare, over which is a ferry. The Norwich and Yarmouth railway passes through the parish. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Hassingham consolidated, valued in the king's books at £6, and in the gift of Sir W. B. Proctor, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £130, and the glebe comprises 37 acres, with a house. The church contains portions of the early, decorated, and perpendicular styles, and consists of a nave and chancel, with an ancient octagonal tower: in the year 1824, the Rev. T. Beauchamp put in the splendid eastern window of stained glass, containing representations of St. Nicholas, the Four Evangelists, and others. A school is supported by the rector. The Romans are supposed to have had a minor station here, relics of which have been discovered in the vicinity. There is a farm-house, built of part of the materials of the old manor-house, formerly the property of Sir W. Godsalve, to whom Queen Elizabeth, having crossed the ferry here, paid a visit: the parlours are boarded with wainscot, and the carved mantle-piece is ornamented with the arms of the Godsalve family.

BUCKENHAM, NEW (St. Martin), a town and parish, in the union of GUILTCROSS, hundred of SHROPHAM, W. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Attleburgh, and 96 (N. E. by N.) from London; containing 716 inhabitants. This place owes its origin to William D'Albini, Earl of Chichester, who, disliking the situation of a castle which had been built at Old Buckenham about the time of the Conquest, demolished that structure, and erected another here, in the reign of Henry II. This castle was pleasantly situated on an eminence to the east of the former, and consisted of a keep, two round towers, a grand entrance tower, and a barbican, inclosed with embattled walls surrounded by a fosse. Its owner, who had view of frankpledge, and the power of life and death, obtained from Henry II. many privileges for his new burgh, among which were those of holding a mercate court, the assize of bread and ale, and a market; and the lord of the manor claims the right of officiating as butler at the coronation of the kings of England. The town is pleasantly situated, the houses are neatly built, and there is an ample supply of water. The market on Saturday has fallen into disuse; the fairs for horses, cattle, &c., are on the last Saturday in May, and Nov. 22nd and 23rd, and a statute fair for hiring servants is held a fortnight before Old Michaelmas-day. A high bailiff is chosen annually at the "Portman" court, and a court baron and court leet are held by the proprietor of the manor. The parish comprises about 330 acres, 80 of which are uninclosed common, and the rest chiefly arable. The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, endowed, in 1816, with a parliamentary grant of £1000, and has a net income of £115: it is in the patronage of the Inhabitants, who pay a yearly modus of 3½d. in the pound on the rental in lieu of tithes. The church is an ancient and handsome structure, containing portions of several orders of architecture, and has a square tower with six bells; the north aisle was rebuilt in 1749, by the aid of several distinguished families; the chancel is separated from the north aisle by a richly carved screen, and contains some interesting monuments. There are places of worship for Methodists. A free school is endowed with £6. 6. a year, and a school for girls is partly supported by subscription. An almshouse for four aged persons was endowed by William Barber, with £28 per annum, in 1692.

BUCKENHAM, OLD (All Saints), a parish, in the union of GUILTCROSS, hundred of SHROPHAM, W. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Attleburgh; containing 1255 inhabitants. This was anciently a place of considerable importance, and is supposed to derive its name either from Boccen, a beech-tree, and Ham, a dwelling-place; or from an allusion to the bucks, or deer, that thronged the adjacent forests. It was given by the Conqueror to William D'Albini, whose son married the widow of Henry I., and became Earl of Chichester, and who founded a priory for Augustine canons, in honour of St. James the Apostle, about the middle of the twelfth century: at the Dissolution, the establishment consisted of a prior and eight canons, whose revenue was estimated at £131. 11. It was partly built with the ruins of an old castle in the vicinity, which was razed by the first William D'Albini, but entirely demolished by Sir Philip Knyvett, whose ancestors have resided in it. A little southward from the site of the castle, the ruins of which are still visible, stood a chapel, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, subsequently converted into a barn, to which purpose also the present parochial church was appropriated, soon after its desecration, on being granted away as part of the possessions of the priory. Here were three guilds, dedicated respectively to St. Margaret, St. Peter, and St. Thomas the Martyr. The parish comprises 4820a. 1r. 7a., of which 3703 acres are arable, 1059 pasture, 49 wood, and 18 water; the common was inclosed in 1790. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Inhabitants, with a net income of £102: the tithes have been commuted for £1527. 18. The church has a thatched roof, and an octagonal tower, with five bells. There are places of worship for Baptists, Sandemanians, and Primitive Methodists. A small fund is applied to the instruction of children.

BUCKENHAM, PARVA, or TOFTS (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of SWAFFHAM, hundred of GRIMSHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, 6 miles (N. E.) from Brandon; containing 77 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 650 acres, of which about one-fifth is wood and plantation, and the remainder arable and pasture land in equal portions. The estate belongs chiefly to the Hall, a large handsome mansion, in a spacious park, built in the reign of Charles II.: the coach-road from London to Watton passes through the park. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £3, and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Newman. The church has long been demolished, together with the village of Buckenham.

BUCKENHILL, a township, in the parish of WOOLHOPE, union of LEDBURY, hundred of GREYTREE, county of HEREFORD, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Ross; containing 137 inhabitants.

BUCKERELL, or BOKERELL (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of HONITON, hundred of HEMYOCK, Honiton and N. divisions of DEVON, 3 miles (W.) from Honiton; containing 360 inhabitants. This place was anciently the property of the Pomeroy's of Bury, and was given, in the reign of John, by Sir Henry Pomeroy to his second son Sir Geoffrey, from whom, by marriage of his descendant in the female line, it was conveyed to the Fulfords and Gwynnes, of Ford Abbey. A hamlet in the parish, now called Weston, but anciently Weringstone, was a manor belonging to Dunkeswell Abbey, and after the Dissolution, was granted by Henry VIII. to John Drake, merchant. The surface of the parish is intersected by a semi-circular ridge of hills, and near Godford Cross is a rill of water, which has its rise under Wulphere Church, so designated from the Saxon chieftain of that name, whose stronghold was Hembury Fort. Hembury Fort House, originally built by Admiral Graves, was once called Cockenhayes, and a Roman road leading to it is still known as Cockenhay-street; it is situated directly under the ancient fort, and forms an interesting feature in the landscape. Deer Park occupies the site of an old lodge and chace, and after the Conquest was held by Matthew de Buckingham, from whose crest, a buck, and the rill previously noticed, the parish is supposed to have derived its name. The village is pleasantly situated near the banks of the Otter; and a pleasure fair is held there on the first Monday in September. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 0. $2\frac{1}{2}$.; patron, the Dean and Chapter of Exeter; impropiator, J. Northcote, Esq. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £135. The church is an elegant structure, in the later English style, and contains a richly carved oak screen, separating the nave from the chancel, some monuments to the family of Admiral Graves, and the Gwynnes of Ford Abbey, and an elegant tablet to the memory of Elizabeth, late wife of the Rev. E. E. Coleridge, the present incumbent, by whom the church, to which an aisle was added in 1839, has been restored and beautified. A vicarage-house was also built by the vicar, in 1829. A national school has been established. There are some remains of a Roman camp, called St. Stephen Mount. Andrew Bockerell, mayor of London in 1231, and for seven successive years, was a native of the parish.

BUCKFASTLEIGH (Holy Trinity), a market-town and parish, in the union of TOTNES, hundred of STANBOROUGH, Stanborough and Coleridge, and S. divisions of DEVON, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Ashburton; containing 2576 inhabitants. This place, which was formerly of considerable importance, derived its origin and name from the establishment of a Cistercian abbey, founded about the year 1137, and the abbot of which had the power of inflicting capital punishment within his domains, which were very extensive, comprehending some estates at or near Kingsbridge. The parish is situated in a district remarkable for the salubrity of its air, and the variety of its picturesque and romantic scenery. The town, of which many of the modern houses are built with the materials of the ruined abbey, consists principally of one narrow street, in the upper part of which is the market-house, a mean building, obstructing the thoroughfare. Its present prosperity is derived from the woollen manufacture in the immediate neighbourhood, in which more than 500 persons are employed; and in the parish are strata of limestone, of which the larger blocks are wrought into mantel-pieces on the spot, and the smaller burnt into lime: copper-works have been also established. The market, though scarcely deserving the name, is still held on Friday; and fairs for live stock are held on the third Thursday in June and the second Thursday in September.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £19. 1. $0\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £155; patron and incumbent, Rev. Matthew Lowndes; impropiator, Earl of Macclesfield. The church, situated on an eminence, nearly half way between the town and the remains of the abbey, comprises a nave, chancel, and transepts, with chapels on the north and south sides, and has a tower of very ancient date, which has an embattled and projecting parapet, and is surmounted by a spire. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. About three-quarters of a mile from the town are the picturesque remains of the Cistercian abbey, which was surrendered to the crown, in 1538, when its revenues were estimated at £466. 11. 2.: they consist principally of an ancient gateway, supposed, from the great antiquity of its style, to have been the entrance to the original establishment founded by Duke Alfred, and part of the abbot's tower, of more modern erection, on the site of which Mr. Berry erected a mansion in the style of an ancient Norman castle, with two wings and four embattled towers. Within the limits of the parish are the remains of two encampments, supposed to be either of Saxon or Danish origin, the larger of which, called Hembury Fort, commands the banks of the river Dart, which bounds the parish on the east.

BUCKHOLT-FARM, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of STOCKBRIDGE, hundred of THORNGATE, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (S. W.) from Stockbridge; containing 11 inhabitants. The Roman road from Salisbury to Winchester crosses this farm. The tithes, belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Sarum, have been commuted for £160.

BUCKHORN-WESTON, a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of REDLANE, Shaston division of DORSET, 8 miles (W. by N.) from Shaftesbury; containing 460 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1700 acres: the soil is mostly clay, but fertile, and the meadows on the banks of the river Cale are luxuriantly rich. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 1. 3., and in the patronage of Lady Stapleton: the tithes have been commuted for £310, and the glebe comprises 63 acres. In the chancel of the church is an ancient statue, supposed to be that of the father-in-law of Gascoigne, lord chief justice in the reigns of Henry IV. and V.; the gallery of the church is said to have been painted by Sir James Thornhill, who resided in a neighbouring parish.

BUCKHOW-BANK, a township, in the parish of DALSTON, union of CARLISLE, ward, and E. division of the county, of CUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Carlisle; containing 636 inhabitants. The village lies on the eastern bank of the river Caldeu, and there are several cotton-mills within the township, in connexion with the manufacturers at Carlisle. The soil is very favourable to the growth of wheat.

Seal and Arms.

BUCKINGHAM (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, 17 miles (N. W.) from Aylesbury, and 57 (N. W. by W.) from London; comprising the borough and market-town of Buckingham (which has a separate jurisdiction), the chapelry of Gawcott, and the hamlets of Bourton, Bourtonhold, and Lenborough, and the precinct of Prebend-End; and containing 4054 inhabitants, of whom 1816 are in the township, or principal district, of Buckingham. This place is of great antiquity, and is supposed to have derived its name from the Saxon Bucca, a "stag" or "buck," ing, a "meadow," and ham, a "village," being surrounded with extensive forests well stocked with deer. In 915, Edward the Elder fortified both sides of the river, where the town is situated, with high ramparts of earth, to protect the inhabitants from the incursions of the Danes; the remains are still visible. In 941, the Danes perpetrated dreadful outrages in the neighbourhood, and, in 1010, took possession of the town as a place of safety. In the reign of Edward III., Buckingham sent three representatives to a council of trade held at Westminster, at which time it was a considerable staple for wool; but upon the removal of that mart to Calais, its prosperity declined, and it finally became one of those decayed towns for which relief was granted by parliament, in 1535. About this period the assizes, formerly held here, were removed to Aylesbury; but, in 1758, Lord Cobham obtained an act for holding the summer assizes at Buckingham. In 1644, Charles I. fixed his head-quarters at the place; and Sir William Waller, after the battle of Cropredy-Bridge, and Fairfax, after his defeat at Boarstall House, in this county, took up their stations here. In 1724, the town suffered severely from an accidental fire, which destroyed several entire streets, and many of the houses have not yet been rebuilt.

Buckingham is pleasantly situated on a peninsula formed by the river Ouse, which nearly encompasses the town, and is crossed by three stone bridges, of which two are of great antiquity: that on the London road is a neat modern structure of three arches, erected about the year 1805, by the late Marquess of Buckingham. It is divided into three districts, viz., the Borough, Bourton-Hold, and the Prebend-End, the first of which contains the principal streets; the houses in general are built of brick; the streets are paved but not flagged, and are lighted with gas. The trade chiefly consists in the sorting of wool, the tanning of leather, and the manufacture of lace; and, before the introduction of that manufacture into Nottingham, where it is made by machinery, lace-making afforded employment to a large portion of the female inhabitants. In the vicinity are several limestone quarries, and a quarry of marble of a darkish brown colour and exceedingly hard, but, as it can neither endure the weather nor retain a polish, it is not now worked. The river affords facility of conveyance; and there is a canal, which joins the Grand Junction at Cosgrove. The market is on Saturday, and there is also a very good market, exclusively for calves, every Monday. Fairs, chiefly for the sale of cattle, sheep, and horses, are held on Old New-Year's day, the last Monday in January, March 7th, the second Monday in April, May 6th, Whit-Thursdays, July 10th (a wool fair), September 4th, October 2nd, Saturday after Old Michaelmas-day (which is also a statute fair for the hiring of servants), November 5th, and December 13th. The town was first INCORPORATED by Queen Mary, in 1554, and another charter was granted by Charles II.; but it having been surrendered, the charter of Mary continued to be the governing one, until the passing of the Municipal Act, by which the government is vested in a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, assisted by a recorder, town-clerk, and other officers; the jurisdiction extends over the town and parish, and the total number of magistrates is nine. The borough has constantly returned two representatives to parliament since the 36th of Henry VIII.: the right of election, prior to the passing of the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, was vested exclusively in the bailiff and twelve principal burgesses, but, by that act, was extended to the £10 householders of an enlarged district of 18,265 acres. The mayor is returning officer. A court of quarter-sessions was granted in 1836. There is also a court wherein any action may be brought, provided the amount sought to be recovered does not exceed £20; the recorder is judge, assisted by a registrar. The town-hall is a spacious and convenient brick building, nearly in the centre of the town. The old borough gaol, a square stone edifice, was built by Lord Cobham, in 1758; a new one has just been erected, adapted to the system of classification.

The parish comprises by computation 4680 acres; the soil is a good loam, alternated with gravel; the surface is rather hilly, and the surrounding scenery pleasingly varied. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £22; net income, £230; patron, Duke of Buckingham; impropiators, the Landowners. The old church, having been for many years in a very dilapidated condition, fell down on March 26th, 1776, and the present edifice was erected in 1781, and is said to have cost £7000, in addition to the old materials; it does not occupy the site of the old church, but that of an ancient castle, supposed to have been built by one of the earls of Buckingham subsequently to the Conquest, the foundations of which are occasionally discovered. It is a handsome structure, with a square embattled tower, surmounted by a well-proportioned spire; the interior is handsomely fitted up in the Grecian style; the altar is ornamented with a good copy of Raphael's Transfiguration, over which is a beautifully painted window, presented by the late Duke of Buckingham, on his elevation to the dukedom, and said to have cost £1300; and at the west end is the finest-toned organ in the county. There is a chapel of ease in the hamlet of Gawcott, endowed by Mr. West about fifty-five years since, and which has been recently rebuilt. There are places of worship for Independents, the Society of Friends, and Wesleyans. The free grammar school was instituted by Edward VI., who endowed it with the revenue of a dissolved chantry in the town; the master is appointed by the corporation. The schoolroom was the chapel of a chantry, founded in 1268, by Matthew Stratton, Archdeacon of Buckingham, and dedicated to St. John the Baptist and Thomas à Becket: the original entrance, a Norman arched doorway, is still remaining; and there are in the chapel some remains of seats put up in the old church in the reign of Edward VI., very curiously carved. The Green-coat school, for boys, was founded and endowed with £15 per annum, in 1760, by Mr. Gabriel Newton, alderman of Leicester; and a national school was established in 1819; the school-house is a handsome stone building. An infants' school is supported by subscription; and a national school has been lately erected at Gawcott. There are almshouses, called Barton's Hospital, for six poor women; and a building called Christ's Hospital, containing rooms for the same number, is thought to have been founded by Queen Elizabeth, in 1597. The union of Buckingham comprises 29 parishes or places, of which 28 are in the county of Buckingham, and 1 in the county of Oxford; and contains a population of 14,239. Buckingham gives the titles of Duke and Marquess to the family of Temple, whose magnificent seat is at Stowe, about two miles to the west.

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE, an inland county, bounded on the south and south-west by Berkshire, on the west by the county of Oxford, on the north-west and north by that of Northampton, on the north-east by that of Bedford, on the east by those of Bedford and Hertford, and on the south-east by Middlesex. It extends from 51° 26' to 52° 19' (N. Lat.), and from 28' to 1° 8' (W. Lon.); and comprises an area of about 740 square miles, or 473,600 statute acres. The county contains 31,087 inhabited houses, 1159 uninhabited, and 206 are in the course of erection; and the population amounts to 155,983, of whom 76,482 are males, and 79,501 females. The territory composing the present county of Buckingham is thought by Camden to have been anciently inhabited by the Cassii, or Cattieuchani. Mr. Whitaker, the learned historian of Manchester, was of opinion, that only that part of the county bordering on Bedfordshire was originally occupied by the Cassii, and that they afterwards seized upon the territories of the Dobuni, who had previously obtained possession of the rest by conquest from the Ancalites. Under the Roman dominion it was included in the great division called Flavia Caesariensis; and on the complete establishment of the heptarchy, it became part of the powerful kingdom of Mercia. Buckinghamshire is at present in the diocese of Lincoln, but, by the act of the 6th and 7th of William IV., cap. 77, it will be transferred to the diocese of Oxford; it is in the province of Canterbury, and with the exception of a few parishes, constitutes an archdeaconry, in which are the deaneries of Buckingham, Burnham, Mursley, Newport, Wadsden, Wendover, and Wycombe; the number of parishes is 202. For civil purposes it is divided into the hundreds of Ashendon, Aylesbury, Buckingham, Burnham, Cottesloe, Desborough, Newport, and Stoke; and contains the borough and market towns of Aylesbury, Buckingham, Great Marlow, and High Wycombe; and the market-towns of Amersham, Beaconsfield, Chesham, Ivinghoe, Newport-Pagnell, Olney, Prince's-Risborough, Fenny-Stratford, Stony-Stratford, Wendover, and Winslow. Three knights are returned to parliament for the shire, two burgesses for each of the boroughs of Aylesbury, Buckingham, and High Wycombe, and one for that of Great Marlow. The county members are elected at Aylesbury; and Aylesbury, Beaconsfield, Buckingham, and Newport-Pagnell are polling-places. It is included in the Norfolk circuit; the summer assizes are held at Buckingham, and the Lent assizes and general quarter-sessions at Aylesbury, where is situated the common gaol and house of correction for the county.

The most striking natural feature in the SURFACE of the county is the range of heights called the Chiltern Hills, which stretches across it from the southern extremity of Bedfordshire to the southern part of Oxfordshire, being part of the great chain of chalk hills extending from Norfolk south-westward into Dorsetshire. On the western side of the county is a range of hills of calcareous stone, parallel with the Chiltern Hills, at the distance only of a few miles; and between these two lies the rich vale of Aylesbury, the natural fertility of which is almost unrivalled. The predominant soils are rich loam, strong clay, chalky mould, and loam upon gravel, all of which, however, admit of considerable variety, and are much intermingled. The county has long been famous for its produce of corn and cattle, "Buckinghamshire bread and beef" having been formerly a common expression. One-half of it consists of arable farms, containing not more than one-fifth of grass land, which occupy the whole of the Chiltern Hills and the county southward to the Thames, together with the sandy lands in the neighbourhood of the Brickhills, Soulbury, and Lindslade, and some parts of the Vale of Aylesbury. The greater part of the vale is devoted to grazing and the dairy; and most of this central part of the county, from the Chiltern Hills to the Watling-street, consists of dairy and grazing farms, the former preponderating. The number of cows kept on these extensive pastures is computed at about 27,000, of which upwards of 21,000 are always productive to the dairy: between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 lb. of butter are annually made in the county, of which by far the greater part is sent by contract to London; no cheese is made, except a few cream cheeses in summer for the markets of Buckingham, Aylesbury, and Wycombe. Hogs form an important part of the stock of the dairy farms. At Aylesbury and its vicinity, great numbers of ducks are bred and fattened, and many thousands are sent annually to London by the weekly carriers, some of them very early in the spring. The principal Rivers are the Thames, the Ouse, the Ouzel, the Thame, and the Colne: the first is the boundary and chief ornament of the southern part of the county, which it separates from Berkshire during a navigable course of about 28 miles, and, by affording a direct communication with the metropolis, is of great importance to this county. The Grand Junction canal, on entering from Northamptonshire, is carried by means of an aqueduct, about three-quarters of a mile long, across the stream and valley of the Ouse: in 1794, an act was obtained for making navigable cuts to communicate with this canal from Aylesbury, Buckingham, and Wendover; the Aylesbury branch joins the main canal near Marsworth; the Buckingham branch proceeds down the north side of the valley of the Ouse to the main line at Cosgrove, on the Northamptonshire border; and the Wendover navigation joins it at Bulborne, on the confines of Hertfordshire. The Great Western railway enters the county at Iver, in its progress from Middlesex, and quits it at Taplow, whence it enters the county of Berks. The London and Birmingham railway enters the county at Ivinghoe, and, after a course of 25 miles, quits it at Hanslope, and enters Northamptonshire. The Aylesbury railway proceeds from that town through a portion of the county of Herts, near Tring, and at Piggleshorpe joins the London and Birmingham line, of which it may be considered a branch, being leased to that company; the line is seven miles in length, and was completed at an expense of £66,000.

Buckinghamshire contained the Roman station Magiovirtum, the remains of which are visible on a small elevation in the "Auld Fields," about a quarter of a mile from Fenny-Stratford, where an abundance of coins and foundations of buildings have been dug up; and it was crossed by the roads Ikeneld-street, Watling-street, and Akeman-street, and by several vicinal ways, of which there are traces in different parts. Camden is of opinion that there was a Roman town at Burg-hill, now contracted into Brill, in the western part of the county; numerous relics of Roman occupation, such as coins, pavements, &c., have been found at High Wycombe and in its vicinity, and coins have also been found near Prince's-Risborough and Ellesborough. Above the village of Medmenham are the remains of a large camp, nearly square, formed by a single ditch and vallum, and inclosing an area of about seven acres; and in a wood near Burnham is an oblong intrenchment of the same kind, vulgarly called "Harlequin's Moat." Near Ellesborough are some strong earthworks on the side of the Chiltern Hills, at one corner of which is a high mount, styled the Castle Hill, or Kimble Castle, and commonly supposed to have been the site of the residence of the British king Cunobeline. On the top of the hill at West Wycombe are the remains of a circular encampment; and those of another are discernible near High Wycombe, at a place named Old, or All, Hollands. At Danesfield, on the banks of the Thames, is a nearly circular intrenchment, designated Danes' Ditch; at Cholsbury is a nearly circular camp, formed by a double ditch; and the manor-house of the adjacent village of Hawridge is built within an ancient circular intrenchment. There are also some large intrenchments at Hedgerby-Dean, and a remarkable ditch runs thence to East Burnham. Near the lower Ikeneld way, in the parish of Ellesborough, is a moated area of an irregular form, in most places about fifty paces in breadth. A considerable rampart of earth, under the common name of Grimesdike, runs nearly east and west through a part of this county, upon the Chiltern Hills, where it may be traced for some miles; and a great cross, called White Leaf Cross, of unknown antiquity, is cut on the side of the chalk hills near Risborough, which has been considered the memorial of some victory gained by the Anglo-Saxons over the Danes.

Prior to the Reformation there were twenty-one Religious Houses, including four alien priories, one preceptory of the Knights Hospitaliers, and a college of the society of Bonhommes at Ashridge, near the confines of Hertfordshire, the only house of that order in England, excepting that at Edington, in Wiltshire. There were, besides, ten hospitals, one of which, at Newport-

Pagnell, refounded by Queen Anne, consort of James I.; still exists; also the well-known royal college of Eton, founded by Henry VI. There are very considerable remains of Nutley Abbey, converted into a farm-house and offices; and some vestiges of those of Burnham, Medmenham, and Great Missenden, and of the college of Bonhommes: part of St. Margaret's nunnery, in the parish of Ivinghoe, is yet standing, and is occupied as a dwelling-house. There are no mural remains of any fortress, but some earthworks point out the sites of those which formerly stood at Castlethorpe, Lavendon, and Whitchurch, the first of which was called Hanslope Castle. The most remarkable ancient mansions are, Gayhurst, built in the reign of Elizabeth, and Liscombe House; and among the seats of the landed proprietors, those most distinguished for their architectural beauties are, the magnificent mansion of Stowe, Wycombe Abbey, Ashridge Park (partly in Bucks and partly in Herts), and the modern mansion at Tyrringham. Buckinghamshire gives the title of Earl to the family of Hobart-Hampden.

BUCKLAND (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Tring; containing 537 inhabitants. An act was passed in 1842 for inclosing lands in the parish. The living is annexed, with those of Quarrendon and Stoke-Mandeville, to the vicarage of Bierton. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BUCKLAND (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WINCHCOMB, Lower division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Chipping-Campden; containing, with the hamlet of Laverton, 377 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £29. 6. 8.; net income, £222; patron, Sir T. Phillips, Bart.: the tithes were commuted, in 1779, for land and a money payment. The church is a fine structure, in the later English style; some of the windows contain specimens of ancient stained glass. James Thynne, Esq., by deed in 1707, gave land, producing upwards of £100 per annum, for teaching poor children, and other charitable purposes.

BUCKLAND (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of BUNTINGFORD, hundred of EDWINSTREE, county of HERTFORD, 3 miles (N.) from Buntingford; containing 435 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 2000 acres, of which 500 are woodland, 50 pasture, and the remainder good arable land; the soil is fertile, and the surface varied. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of King's College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for £330, and the glebe comprises 38 acres. The church is an ancient structure, in the later English style. Two small schools are partly supported by the rector and curate.

BUCKLAND (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union and hundred of FAVERSHAM, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Faversham; containing 19 inhabitants. The living is a discharged sinecure rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.; net income, £167; patron, Sir John Tyssen Tyrrell, Bart. The church has long been in ruins.

BUCKLAND (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of CHARD, partly in the S. division of the hundred of PE-

THERTON, and partly in the hundred of MARTOCK, but chiefly in that of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Ilminster; containing 696 inhabitants. This parish was the scene of some sanguinary conflicts between the Saxons and the Danes, and various relics of warlike implements have been found in the neighbourhood. A fair for cattle and toys is held on the Wednesday and Thursday next after September 20th. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 19. 9½., and in the patronage of Lieut.-Gen. Popham: the tithes have been commuted for £350, and the glebe consists of 37½ acres. The churchyard contains a mutilated stone cross. A school is partly supported by voluntary contributions. On the edge of Blackdown Hill are the remains of a Roman fortification, called Neroche Castle; and on the summit of the same ridge, a little further on, by the side of the road leading to Chard, is a huge collection of flint stones, lying in heaps upwards of 60 yards in circumference, styled Robin Hood's Butts, and supposed to be the rude sepulchral memorials of warriors who fell in battle.

BUCKLAND (St. PETER), a parish, in the union and First division of the hundred of REIGATE, E. division of SURREY, 2¼ miles (W.) from Reigate; containing 364 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the road from Dorking to Reigate, and bounded on the south by the river Mole, comprises by computation 1800 acres; the soil is partly chalk, forming a portion of the great ridge extending through the counties of Kent, Surrey, and Hants, and partly a blue clay, alternated with sand; the surface is hilly, and the surrounding scenery pleasing. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 12. 11., and in the patronage of All Souls' College, Oxford; net income, £337. The church consists of a nave and chancel only; in some of the windows are the remains of stained glass.

BUCKLAND-BREWER (St. MARY AND St. BENEDICT), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of BIDEFORD, hundred of SHEBBEAR, Great Torrington, and N. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Bideford; containing 1103 inhabitants, of whom 312 are in the village. This place derives its distinguishing appellation from its ancient proprietor, Lord Brewer, whose seat, Orleigh Court, is still remaining: his lordship gave a portion of the manor to the abbot of Dun-keswell, who obtained the privilege of a weekly market and an annual fair. The parish, including the chap-eries of East Putford and Bulkworthy, comprises by computation 8000 acres: there are some quarries of stone, which is raised chiefly for the roads. Fairs are held on Tuesday in Whitsun-week, and on the 16th of November. The living is a discharged vicarage, with East Putford annexed, valued in the king's books at £25. 17. 3½., and in the patronage of the Crown: the great tithes of Buckland-Brewer, payable to the Ven. Archdeacon More, have been commuted for £240, and the vicarial for £235. 10.; the glebe comprises about 9 acres, with a house. The church, anciently in the Norman and early English styles, was rebuilt in 1790, and is a spacious edifice, in the Grecian style; some of the former details have been preserved, among which is an enriched Norman arched doorway. In the old church was a small college, dedicated to St. Michael, of which, at the Dissolution, the revenue was £8. 7. 6.

There is a chapel of ease at Bulkworthy; and there are places of worship for Arminians and Wesleyans. A parochial school is supported by voluntary contributions.

BUCKLAND cum CARSWELL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of FARRINGTON, hundred of GANFIELD, county of BERKS, 3¾ miles (E. N. E.) from Great Farrington; containing 946 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Oxford to Bath, and bounded on the north by the navigable river Isis, on the banks of which a wharf has been constructed. Some quarries of good building-stone are extensively wrought, and a pleasure-fair is held in August. Buckland House, the seat of Sir J. Throckmorton, Bart., was erected in 1757, and is pleasantly situated. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £18. 4. 7.; patron and appropriator, the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol: the great tithes have been commuted for £863. 10., and the vicarial for £275. 8., and the glebe comprises 30 acres. The church, a neat edifice, contains a monument to the Duke of Somerset, who was interred here. There is a place of worship for Baptists, and a Roman Catholic chapel is attached to Buckland House. There are some lands bequeathed for the repair of the church. Henry Southby, in 1793, left £200 and some land, to which Sarah Hayter, his executrix, added £200 more, for the instruction of girls, and the support of a Sunday school, for which a house was given by Sir J. Throckmorton, in 1793; the income is £40.

BUCKLAND-DENHAM (St. MARY), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of FROME, hundred of KILMERSDON, E. division of SOMERSET, 2½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Frome; containing 516 inhabitants. This was formerly a place of greater importance, having been distinguished for the manufacture of woollen-cloth. The parish comprises by computation 1400 acres; the soil is generally light and sandy, the surface hilly, and the lower lands are watered by a small branch of the river Frome. There are quarries of blue lias, which is raised for burning into lime. A market, to be held on Tuesday, and a fair on the eve, day, and morrow of St. Michael, were granted in the 24th of Henry III., to Geoffrey Dinant, lord of the manor; and the assizes were frequently held in a town-hall here. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells: the appropriate tithes, formerly belonging to the prebendary of Buckland-Denham in the Cathedral of Wells, but now to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, that prebend having been suppressed, have been commuted for £162. 10., and the vicarial for £147; there are 68 acres of appropriate glebe, and nearly 9 of vicarial. The church, anciently conventual, and belonging to an Augustine nunnery, founded in 1120, has some fine details of Norman and early English architecture; of the former, is a very fine arch. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A Roman pavement was discovered at Whitly in 1838.

BUCKLAND, EAST (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of SOUTH MOLTON, hundred of BRAUNTON, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (N. W. by N.) from South Molton; containing 167 inhabitants. It is the property of Earl Fortescue, and contains by computation 1384 acres. The living is a rectory, with that of Filleigh consolidated, valued in the king's books at £9. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the earl: the tithes have been commuted for £140, and the glebe comprises 28 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is chiefly supported by his lordship.

BUCKLAND-EGG, a parish, in the union of PLYMPTON-ST. MARY, hundred of ROBOROUGH, Midland-Roborough and S. divisions of DEVON, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Plymouth; containing 1296 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the river Plym, and comprises 3197*a. 2r. 17p.*, of which 1454 acres are usually in tillage, 832 in pasture, and 401 in wood. The soil is various; in some parts a rich pasture land, in others arable of very indifferent quality, and in a great proportion barren waste. The substratum abounds with slate of good quality, of which some extensive quarries are worked; and with dun-stone, which also is procured. Copper-ore has been found, and a mine opened with success. The Plymouth railway passes through the parish, and affords a facility for conveying the produce. A fair for live stock is held on the second Wednesday in June. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 4. 4½, and in the patronage of the Crown; impropiator, Mrs. S. A. Julian. The great tithes have been commuted for £200, and the vicarial for £506; the glebe consists of 32 acres. The church contains an ancient bell brought from Buckland Abbey. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is partly supported by an endowment of £5. 5. per annum.

BUCKLAND-FILLEIGH (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of TORRINGTON, hundred of SHEBBEAR, Black Torrington and Shebbear, and N. divisions of DEVON, 6½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Hatherleigh; containing 275 inhabitants. It comprises by computation about 1000 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 16. 0½, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter; net income, £218: the glebe comprises 59 acres. The church is a handsome structure, in the decorated and later English styles, with a square embattled tower, crowned by pinnacles, and contains some elegant marble monuments to the Fortescue family, for several centuries proprietors of the parish. A national school is supported by the curate.

BUCKLAND-IN-DOVOR (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of DOVOR, hundred of BEWSBOROUGH, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, 1¾ mile (N. W.) from Dovor; containing 1472 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1150 acres; the soil is partly clay and partly loam, much interspersed with flints; the surface is diversified with hills of comparative sterility, and with valleys producing abundant crops of grain. The lower grounds are intersected by the small river Dour, over which a neat bridge of brick has been built at the village. The manufacture of paper is carried on in two large mills; and a fair is held on the 4th of September. The living is a discharged perpetual curacy, endowed with the vicarial tithes, and with £12 per annum, payable out of the great tithes; net income, £139; patron, Archbishop of Canterbury. There are a place of worship for Wesleyans, and a parochial school in connexion with the Church. In 1141, an hospital for lepers was founded, and dedicated to St. Bartholomew, but there are no vestiges of it: on digging near its site, in 1765, a leaden vessel, filled with silver coins struck in the reigns of Edward II. and Edward III., was discovered.

BUCKLAND-IN-THE-MOOR, a parish, in the union of NEWTON-ABBOT, hundred of HAYTOR, Teignbridge and S. divisions of DEVON, 3 miles (N. W.) from Ashburton; containing 114 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1450 acres, of which 800 are in woods and plantations, 560 arable, and 85 pasture. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Ashburton: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £109. 10., and the glebe consists of 10 acres. The church contains a fine wooden screen. A school is supported by a private individual.

BUCKLAND-MONACHORUM (Holy Trinity), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of TAVISTOCK, hundred of ROBOROUGH, Midland-Roborough and S. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Tavistock; containing 1411 inhabitants. This place acquired the adjunct to its name from an abbey founded, in 1278, by Amicia, Countess Dowager of Devonshire, in honour of the Virgin Mary and St. Benedict, to which she removed a society of Cistercian monks from the Isle of Wight. In 1337, the abbot obtained permission to castellate his monastery; and during the parliamentary war it was garrisoned by Sir Richard Grenville. The revenue of the society, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was estimated at £241. 17. 9.: the estate came by purchase into the possession of the renowned Sir Francis Drake, and a modern mansion, beautifully situated on the banks of the Tavy, has been erected, called Buckland Abbey, now the property of Sir T. T. F. E. Drake, Bart.; but there are still some interesting remains of the abbey. The village, which contains some curious old houses, a mutilated stone cross, and a few ancient inscriptions, is mean in appearance, but picturesquely situated. The market has been discontinued; but a fair is still held on Trinity-Monday. The Plymouth railway crosses the parish on the east. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £19. 8. 9., and in the gift of the Rev. Amos Crymes: the great tithes, belonging to Sir T. T. F. E. Drake, have been commuted for £175. 8., and those of the incumbent for £291. 10., with a glebe of 52 acres. The church consists of a nave, two side aisles, and two small transepts, with a fine tower supporting four octagonal turrets, embattled, and surmounted by pinnacles; it contains, among several others, a finely executed monument, by Bacon, to the memory of Baron Heathfield, the brave defender of Gibraltar. Lady Modyford, in 1702, gave two messuages, out of the rental of which £7. 10. per annum are paid for instruction; and the interest of £100, given by Matthew Elford, in 1723, is applied in clothing boys.

BUCKLAND-NEWTON (Holy Rood), a parish, in the union of CERNE, hundred of BUCKLAND-NEWTON, Cerne division of the county of DORSET, 4 miles (N. E. by N.) from Cerne; comprising the tythings of Brockhampton, Buckland, Duntish, Knowle, Mintern-Parva, and Plush; and containing 914 inhabitants, of whom 310 are in the tything of Buckland. The parish is on the great road from Weymouth to Bath, and comprises by measurement 6018 acres, of which about 1241 are arable, 4085 meadow and pasture, 237 woodland, and 308 common; the substratum is chalk, in which are embedded some few flints; and a little sandstone is found on the western confines. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 19. 9½; patrons,

Dean and Chapter of Wells; impropiators, Representatives of Leonard Pount, Esq., who have commuted their tithes for £745: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £550; 104 acres of glebe belong to the impropiators, and 19½ to the vicar. The church is in the early and later English styles; the chancel has lancet windows; a gallery, containing 120 free sittings, was built in 1821. There is a chapel of ease at Plush, more ancient than the church. The Independents have a place of worship; and parochial schools are supported by subscription. There are some remains of a Roman camp.

BUCKLAND-RIPERS, a parish, in the union of WEYMOUTH, hundred of CULLIFORD-TREE, Dorchester division of DORSET, 3½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Melcombe-Regis; containing 118 inhabitants. It comprises 1205 acres by computation: the soil is a strong clay, producing good crops of grain; the surface is hilly, and the surrounding scenery pleasing. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 9. 2., and in the patronage of Q. H. Stroud, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £200, and the glebe comprises nine acres.

BUCKLAND-TOUTSAINTS, a chapelry, in the parish of LODDISWELL, union of KINGSBRIDGE, hundred of COLERIDGE, Stanborough and Coleridge, and S. divisions of DEVON, 2½ miles (N. E.) from Kingsbridge; containing 56 inhabitants.

BUCKLAND, WEST (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of SOUTH-MOLTON, hundred of BRAUNTON, South-Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, 6 miles (N. W.) from South-Molton; containing 275 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1600 acres: stone for the roads is quarried in several parts. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 13. 4., and in the gift of the Baroness Bassett: the tithes have been commuted for £190; there is a good glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 32 acres. The church has a carved wooden screen, highly enriched, separating the nave from the chancel. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is supported by subscription.

BUCKLAND, WEST (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WELLINGTON, W. division of the hundred of KINGSBURY, locally in that of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, W. division of SOMERSET, 2¾ miles (E.) from Wellington; containing 887 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Wellington: the church is partly in the Norman style, with later additions. There are a place of worship for Wesleyans, and two small schools.

BUCKLEBURY, anciently BURGHULBURY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BRADFIELD, partly in the hundred of READING, and partly in that of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, 7 miles (E. N. E.) from Newbury; containing, with the tythings of Bucklebury, Hawkridge, and Marlston, 1277 inhabitants, of whom 1065 are in Bucklebury tything. The parish comprises 6025a. Or. 7p., of which 3443 acres are arable, 1000 copse wood, 726 meadow, and 854 common land. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17; patron and impropiator, W. H. H. Hartley, Esq., lord of the manor: the great tithes have been commuted for £75. 10., and the vicarial for £340; the glebe consists of nearly 31 acres, to which there is attached a good glebe-house. The church contains a monument to the memory of Viscountess Bolingbroke, and others to the ancient family of Winchcombe; a good organ was presented by the late incumbent, the Rev. W. Hartley, by whom also a school was founded. Not far from the church stood the old manor-house, which, from decay, was taken down in 1833, when some very ancient arches of carved oak, with several pieces of coin and tessellated pavement, were discovered: there are still some remains of a subterraneous passage, through which Lord Bolingbroke is reported to have made his escape.

BUCKLESHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WOODBRIDGE, hundred of COLNEIS, E. division of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (E. S. E.) from Ipswich; containing 255 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 1864 acres; the soil is of a mixed quality, the greater portion light, and, till within the last few years, a considerable portion was uninclosed heath; the surface is boldly undulated, and the lower grounds are watered by a stream, which flows through the parish into the river Deben. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. W. Walford: the tithes have been commuted for about £500, leaving the net value of the living, with glebe, £460; the rectory-house is a commodious residence. The church is a neat ancient structure. A parochial school is supported by subscription. The crag pits in the parish contain a great quantity of shells, generally considered to be antediluvian remains; bones of fishes, in a state of petrification, have also been found.

BUCKLEY, or BULKELEY, a township, in the parish of MALPAS, union of NANTWICH, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 8 miles (W. by N.) from Nantwich; containing 190 inhabitants. Two schools are partly supported by private charity.

BUCKMINSTER (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 9¼ miles (E. N. E.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing, with the chapelry of Sewstern, 697 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 2900 acres: the soil in the eastern and northern parts is a good red loam, and in the southern and western portions a tenacious clay: the surface is very elevated, and the lands are watered by numerous springs which descend from the higher grounds. Buckminster Park, the seat of Lord Huntingtower, is a noble mansion of modern erection, situated in a park well stocked with deer, and embellished with timber. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 7. 3½.; net income, £161; patron, Lord Huntingtower: the glebe comprises 81 acres. The church has a massive tower and spire, with portions in various styles. There is a chapel of ease at Sewstern. A school is supported by subscription; and there are several bequests for the relief of the poor. A close, called the Grange, was the site of a religious house, subordinate to the monastery of Kirkby-Belw.

BUCKNALL (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of HORNCastle, S. division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6¾ miles (W. by S.) from Horncastle; containing 303 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Witham, and comprises by computation 2000 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 11. 10½., and in the patronage of Lord Monson: the tithes have been commuted for £330; and the glebe consists of 40 acres. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and a school, with an endowment of £10 per annum, paid by Christ's Hospital.

BUCKNALL, with BAGNALL (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of STOKES-UPON-TRENT, N. division of the hundred of FIREHILL, and of the county of STAFFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E.) from Hanley; containing, with the townships of Bagnall, Bucknall, Eaves, and Ubblerley, 1609 inhabitants, of whom 638 are in Bucknall township. Bucknall was formerly a chapelry in the parish of Stoke, but was separated from it by an act passed in 1807, and, with the chapelry of Bagnall, constituted a distinct rectory. The living is not in charge, with the perpetual curacy of Bagnall annexed; net income, £200; patron and incumbent, Rev. Edward Powys. The church is a small edifice, occupying an elevated situation, and was rebuilt in 1718. Bagnall chapel was rebuilt in 1834, at the cost of £520. William Shallcross, in 1719, gave a rent-charge of £5 for the instruction of children.

BUCKNELL (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of KNIGHTON, partly in the hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, but chiefly in the hundred of PURSLOW, S. division of SALOP, 12 miles (W.) from Ludlow; containing 532 inhabitants. The parish comprises by admeasurement 2818 acres, of which 1236 form the township of Buckton with Coxall, in Herefordshire: the surface is varied by hill and dale, and the river Teme partly bounds the parish on the south. The living is a vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.; patrons, Grocers' Company, London; appropriator of the remainder of the great tithes, Bishop of Hereford. The appropriate tithes have been commuted for £95, and the vicarial for £304; and there is a good glebe-house, with a glebe of nearly 58 acres. Two schools are supported by subscriptions.

BUCKNELL (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of BICESTER, hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Bicester; containing 287 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1789 acres, of which 1254 are arable, 500 pasture, and 35 woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of New College, Oxford. The church is an ancient structure, partly Norman, and partly in the early English style, with a central tower between the nave and chancel, which latter contains several memorials to former rectors; and in the nave are monuments to the Trotman family, lords of the manor; the south entrance has an enriched doorway, in the early English style. A school is principally supported by Mrs. Drake. At a short distance from the church, near the verge of a coppice, are the foundations of numerous houses that constituted the village of Sax-enton, the greater part of which was destroyed by the Danes, about the year 912.

BUCKTON, with COXALL, a township, in the parish of BUCKNELL, union of KNIGHTON, hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Knighton; containing 116 inhabitants.

BUCKTON, a township, in the parish of KYLOE, union of BERWICK-UPON-TWEED, in ISLANDSHIRE, county of DURHAM, though locally northward, and for parliamentary purposes connected with the N. division, of NORTHUMBERLAND; adjoining Berwick, and containing 183 inhabitants.

BUCKTON, a township, in the parish and union of BRIDLINGTON, wapentake of DICKERING, E. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Bridlington; containing 182 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Flamborough to Speeton, and comprises by computation 1840 acres, extending northward to the sea.

BUCKWORTH (All Saints), a parish, in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, union and county of HUNTINGDON, 7 miles (N. W. by W.) from Huntingdon; containing 160 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 5. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of R. E. D. Shafto, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £337. 13.; and there is a good glebe-house, with nearly 43 acres of land.

BUDBROOK (St. Michael), a parish, in the Snitterfield division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, union and S. division of the county of WARWICK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. N. W.) from Warwick; containing 508 inhabitants. This parish, which is near the road from Warwick to Birmingham, comprises by measurement 3150 acres; the surrounding scenery is richly varied, and there are some views, from the higher grounds, of the town and castle of Warwick. Grove Park, in the parish, was presented by Queen Elizabeth to her favourite, Dudley, Earl of Leicester. The Birmingham and Warwick and the Napton canals meet in the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of Mr. White: the tithes have been commuted for £427. 5. The church, a neat edifice, in good repair, has been recently beautified, and several of the windows embellished with stained glass. There is a Roman Catholic chapel at Hampton Hill, the seat of Lord Dormer. The parochial school is endowed with £22. 11. per annum, a portion of the rental of land bequeathed, in 1701, by Job Marston, Esq.

BUDBY, a township, in the parish of EDWINSTOW, union of SOUTHWELL, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Ollerton; containing 127 inhabitants, and comprising 1312 acres. A school for girls, established in 1791, is under the patronage of the Countess of Mansvers.

BUDDLE-HILL, a hamlet, in the parish of SELWORTHY, union of WILLITON, hundred of CARHAMPTON, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 28 inhabitants.

BUDE, a village and small sea-port, on the coast of the Bristol Channel, in the parish, union, and hundred of STRATTON, E. division of CORNWALL, 2 miles (N. W.) from Stratton; containing 189 inhabitants. This village has of late years become a place of resort for bathing, and the trade of the port has received a stimulus from the construction of the Bude Canal: the imports are coal and limestone from Wales, and grocery, &c., from Bristol; and timber, bark, and grain, are sent coastwise. The harbour is inaccessible to ships of large burthen, on account of the sands, those connected with it averaging not more than 50 tons each, though vessels of 120 tons' burthen have often entered. Lime is burnt in considerable quantities, and a great deal of sand conveyed inland for manuring the soil. A chapel has lately been erected, at the sole expense of Sir T. D. Acland, Bart., in whom the patronage is vested; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans. On Chapel rock, near the breakwater, formerly stood a chapel.

BUDEAUX, or BUDOCK, St., a parish, in the union of PLYMPTON-ST. MARY, hundred of ROBOROUGH, Roborough and S. divisions of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Plymouth; containing 790 inhabitants. This place, which is beautifully situated on an eminence rising from the river Tamar, from which it is distant about three-quarters of a mile, was, during the parliamentary war, the scene of a conflict between the royalists, under Sir Richard Grenville, and the forces of the garrison of Plymouth, then in the possession of the parliamentarians; the royalists, who had strongly fortified the church of St. Budock, as their chief station while besieging the garrison, were, by a sally of the besieged, under Colonel Martin, the governor, driven into it, and Major Stuckley, with several officers and about 100 men, made prisoners. The parish comprises by computation 2500 acres, of which 120 are in the county of Cornwall: there are some quarries of slate, and of stone, of inferior quality, fit only for the roads. The river Tamar is navigable for vessels of small burthen from Saltash-ferry, about a mile distant, to the Weir-head, at certain times of the tide. A fair is held on the 29th of May. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of St. Andrew's, Plymouth: the great tithes have been commuted for £350; the income of the curacy is about £113. The church, which was rebuilt on the present site, in 1563, is a neat structure, in the later English style. There are places of worship for Wesleyans; and a school has an endowment of about £86 per annum, arising from land purchased, in 1770, for £710, of which £300 South Sea stock, and £100 Bank stock, were bequeathed by Peter Madock Docton, in 1767.

BUDLE, a township, in the parish of BAMBROUGH, union of BELFORD, N. division of BAMBROUGH ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Belford; containing 102 inhabitants. Henry I. gave this place to Eustace, the son of John de Vesey; but in the reign of Charles I. a moiety belonged to Sir George Bowes, of Streatlam Castle; and in 1663 the whole was possessed by the Forsters of Newham. The township is on the eastern coast, and comprises 600 acres, of which 450 are arable, and 150 pasture, including about 20 acres of plantation: the views embrace a large extent of the sea-shore, and of Bambrough Castle, and Holy Island. Whinstone is quarried, and very extensive flour-mills, belonging to Messrs. H. and P. Nairn, are in operation. The village lies on the southern shore of a fine bay, and on the east side of the Warn rivulet, and the adjacent coast abounds with large cockles of a superior flavour. Vessels of ten feet draught come up to the harbour one mile from the mills. The tithes have been commuted for £24. 19., of which £24. 5. are payable to the impropriator, and 14s. to the perpetual curate of Bambrough.

BUDLEIGH, EAST (ALL SAINTS), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of ST. THOMAS, hundred of EAST BUDLEIGH, Woodbury and S. divisions of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Sidmouth; containing 2319 inhabitants. The antiquity of this place is evinced by its having given name to the hundred. It is pleasantly situated on the shore of the English Channel, to which it is open on the south, and is sheltered on other sides by hills of moderate elevation. From the excellent accommodations which have been provided for sea-bathing at Budleigh-Salterton, within the parish, where hot and cold baths have been constructed, and preparations made for the reception of visitors, that hamlet is rising into repute as a watering-place. The market, which was anciently held on Sunday, and afterwards on Monday, has been discontinued; but a pleasure fair is still held, on Easter-Tuesday. The parish comprises by computation 2443 acres, of which about 330 are waste; the surface is hilly, and the lower lands are watered by the river Otter. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Withycombe-Rowleigh annexed, valued in the king's books at £30; net income, £318; patron, Lord Rolle; impropriators, the Landowners. In addition to the parochial church, there is a chapel of ease, which was erected in 1813, in the later English style, at the expense of Lord Rolle. The Wesleyans have a place of worship. At Poer Hayes is an ancient mansion, celebrated as the birthplace of Sir Walter Raleigh; and there are some remains of an old chapel, dedicated to St. James.

BUDOCK (St. BUDOCKE), a parish, in the union of FALMOUTH, E. division of the hundred of KERRIER, W. division of CORNWALL, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. by S.) from Falmouth; containing, with part of Falmouth and Penryn, 1979 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the east by Falmouth bay and the English Channel, and crossed in one part by the road from Falmouth to Penryn, was distinguished for a collegiate church, erected on Glaseny Moor, in 1720, in honour of the Blessed Virgin and St. Thomas of Canterbury, by Walter Bronescombe, Bishop of Exeter. It continued till the Dissolution, at which time its revenue amounted to £205. 10. 6.; and the buildings are said to have occupied a site of three acres in extent, to have been inclosed with an embattled wall, and to have had a subterraneous communication with the church of Gluvias. Within the parish are Pendennis Castle, and Dunstanville and Green Bank Terraces, forming the principal part of the Barton of Penwarris, and adjoining the town of Falmouth. The parish comprises 3899 acres, the surface of which is diversified with hill and dale, and generally well cultivated; and the views from the higher parts, both by sea and land, are extensive and commanding. Granite is largely quarried, for exportation to London, at a place called the Budock Rocks, and near Swan Pool, a lake of about a quarter of a mile in circumference, and separated from the sea by a bar of sand: there is also a copper-mine. The living is a vicarage, united to that of St. Gluvias: the tithes have been commuted for £800. The church is pleasantly situated on a hill, and contains portions in the later English style, and some interesting monuments to the family of Killebrew, of whom Sir John Killebrew was Governor of Pendennis Castle in the reign of Henry VIII. A chapel of ease, called Penwarris Chapel, was built in 1828, at a cost of about £1800, on Dunstanville-terrace; it contains 594 sittings, 307 of which are free. There are two places of worship for Wesleyans. Francis Robyns, in 1768, bequeathed an endowment of £6. 16. per annum for the instruction of the children of the poor.

BUDVILLE, LANGFORD.—See LANGFORD-BUDVILLE.

BUDWORTH, GREAT (ST. MARY AND ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of RUNCORN; comprising the townships of Anderton, Antrobus, Appleton, Aston, Barnton, Bartington, Great Budworth, Cogshall, Comberbach, Crowley, Dutton, Little Leigh, Marbury, Marston, Peover-Inferior, Pickmere, Plumbley, Seven-Oaks, Stretton, Tabley-Inferior, Whitley Inferior and Superior, and Wincham, in the hundred of BUCKLOW; the chapelry of Hartford, and the townships of Castle-Northwich and Winnington, in the hundred of EDDISBURY; and the townships of Allostock, Birches, Hulse, Lack-Dennis, Lostock-Gralam, Northwich, and Nether Peover, and the parochial chapelry of Witton, in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county of CHESTER; the whole containing 17,103 inhabitants, of whom 677 are in the township of Great Budworth, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Northwich. The parish comprises 26,676 acres. The village is pleasantly situated on a gentle acclivity, near two sheets of water, called Budworth-mere and Picmere; and in the vicinity are several handsome seats, of which Tabley House, that of Lord de Tabley, is replete with natural and artificial embellishments. The inhabitants are employed to a considerable extent in the manufacture of salt, which prevails throughout the entire neighbourhood. The river Weaver and the Duke of Bridgewater's canal pass through the parish. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 10.; net income, £171; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. The church consists of a nave, chancel, side aisles, and two transepts, with a fine tower; in the chancel are some ancient wooden stalls. It sustained considerable damage from the parliamentarian troops, in 1647. A district church, in the later English style, with a tower, towards which the Parliamentary Commissioners granted £1800, was erected at Stretton, in 1827; and there are chapels at Whitley and Little Leigh. In the north-eastern angle of the churchyard is a schoolroom, supposed to have been built by the Rev. John Dean, about 1600, and endowed with the interest of £200, given by Mr. Pickering and Mrs. Glover.

BUDWORTH, LITTLE (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of NORTHWICH, First division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 3½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Tarporley; containing 599 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £85; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Chester. The tithes have been commuted for £163. 14., and the glebe consists of 5½ acres. The church belonged, previously to the Dissolution, to St. Mary's nunnery, Chester, and was called a free chapel within the parish of Over, the church of which was also appropriated to the same convent: the nave and chancel were rebuilt with stone, in 1798, pursuant to the will of Mr. Ralph Kirkham, a native of the parish, who gave £1000 for that purpose. A school, erected in 1706, near the park wall at Oulton, is supported by Sir Philip and Lady Grey Egerton. Lady Isabella Dod, by will dated in 1720, bequeathed £2500 for the erection and endowment of almshouses for the support of twelve poor persons of Little Budworth, and eight of a town in Buckinghamshire. Horse-races were formerly held on a four-mile course in the parish.

BUERTON, a township, in the parish of ALDFORD, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER; containing 81 inhabitants. It lies a little to the east of the river Dee.

BUERTON, a township, in the parish of AUDLEM, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 2 miles (E.) from Audlem; containing 512 inhabitants.

BUGBROOKE (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the hundred of NEWBOTTLE-GROVE, union, and S. division of the county, of NORTHAMPTON, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Northampton; containing 953 inhabitants. The London and Birmingham railway, and the Grand Junction canal pass through the parish, which is bounded on the west by the Roman Watling-street, and comprises by admeasurement 2188 acres, nearly equally divided between arable and pasture. The railway occupies 49 acres, and the rateable annual value of such property, in the parish, is returned at £1800. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £34; net income, £741; patron and incumbent, Rev. T. H. Harrison, D.D. The church exhibits various styles of English architecture, and contains a fine wooden screen, and an octagonal font highly enriched. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists.

BUGLAWTON, a township, in the parish of ASTBURY, union of CONGLETON, hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 1 mile (N. E. by E.) from Congleton; containing 1864 inhabitants. A church, dedicated to St. John, has recently been erected, by subscription, aided by a grant from Her Majesty's Commissioners: the living is a perpetual curacy, augmented in 1842 with £87 by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The tithes have been commuted for £240. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A mineral spring, the water of which contains sulphur, a small quantity of Epsom salts, and calcareous earth, has proved serviceable in scorbutic diseases.

BUGLEY, a hamlet, in the parish and liberty of GILLINGHAM, union of SHAFTESBURY, Shaston (West) division of DORSET, 5½ miles (W. N. W.) from Shaftesbury. Here was formerly a chapel.

BUGTHORPE (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of POCKLINGTON, wapentake of BUCKROSE, E. riding of YORK, 7 miles (N. N. W.) from Pocklington; containing 296 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1990 acres; the soil is a strong clay, and the surface level, with rising ground to the north, east, and south. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £20; net income, £111; patron and appropriator, Prebendary of Bugthorpe, in the Cathedral of York. Land was given, under an inclosure act, in 1777, to the Prebendary, in lieu of the tithes of the township of Bugthorpe. The church is an ancient structure, with a square tower. A boys' and girls' parochial school is supported by subscription, aided by £40 per annum from Sir Francis Wood, Bart.

BUILDWAS (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of MADELEY, Wellington division of the hundred of SOUTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Iron-Bridge; containing 273 inhabitants. This place is celebrated for the stately and venerable remains of its ancient Cistercian abbey, founded in honour of St. Mary and St. Chad, by Roger, Bishop of Chester, in 1135; the establishment continued to flourish till the Dissolution, when its revenue was returned at £129. 6. 10. The ruins are romantically situated on the south bank of the river Severn, which here flows through a deep and secluded vale, and consist principally of the roofless nave, transept, and lower portions of the central tower of this once beautiful structure. The parish comprises by measurement 2034 acres of rich arable and pasture land; the substratum is chiefly limestone, which is quarried to a great extent, for agricultural and building purposes, and also for the works in the adjoining district of Coalbrook Dale. The Severn affords every facility of conveyance, and near the abbey, a handsome cast-iron bridge was constructed over it, by Telford, in 1796, on the site of a former stone bridge, which had been destroyed by a flood in the preceding year; it consists of one single arch, 130 feet in span, and 24 feet in height above the surface of the river, and the road over it leads through a romantic dingle to the town of Much Wenlock; communication is also maintained by the road from the adjoining town of Iron-bridge to Shrewsbury. The living is a donative, in the gift of Walter Moseley, Esq., proprietor of the parish: the church, rebuilt in 1720, is a neat edifice. On the 27th of May, 1773, a remarkable land-slip occurred here, when more than 18 acres were, by a sudden disruption, carried forward with such impetuous velocity as to stop the current of the Severn, and take possession of its ancient bed.

BULBRIDGE (St. Peter), a parish, in the hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, union of WILTON, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (S.) from Wilton; containing 58 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united to that of Wilton, and valued in the king's books at £11. 2. 1.: the church has been demolished.

BULBY, a chapelry, in the parish of IRNHAM, union of BOURNE, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Corby; containing, with the hamlet of Hawthorp, 201 inhabitants.

BULCAMP, a hamlet, in the parish of BLYTHBURGH, union and hundred of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Halesworth; containing 109 inhabitants. The battle in which Anna, King of the East Angles, was defeated and slain by Penda, King of Mercia, is supposed to have commenced at Bulcamp, and to have given name to the place. The poorhouse for the Blything union is here, built, about 1765, for the Blything Hundred Incorporation.

BULCOTE, a chapelry, in the parish of BURTON-JOICE, union of SOUTHWELL, S. division of the wapentake of THURGARTON and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 6 miles (N. E. by E.) from Nottingham; containing 154 inhabitants. The tithes were commuted for land in 1768.

BULFORD (St. John), a parish, in the union and hundred of AMESBURY, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 2 miles (N. E. by N.) from Amesbury; containing 367 inhabitants. This place, called in the Domesday survey, Bollinstone, and in other ancient documents, Bolteford, was formerly the property of the abess of the nunnery of Amesbury. The parish is situated to the eastward of the river Avon, which is here crossed by a handsome iron bridge; and a branch of the road connects the village with Amesbury: the number of acres is estimated at 3638. The Avon affords excellent trout fishing; and the downs fine coursing. There is a mill for the manufacture of the coarser kinds of paper. The living is a donative, with a net income of £75, and in the patronage of Anthony Southby, Esq., M.D., who is impropiator: the tithes have been commuted for £97. The church is a plain edifice of stone and flints. A school is supported by a small endowment. Near the village are two upright stones, similar to those of Stonehenge, of which one is in the middle of the Avon, and the other on the open downs to the south-east; and about a mile higher up the valley is a third of similar description. There are also numerous barrows.

BULK, a township, in the parish of LANCASTER, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2 miles (N. E. by N.) from Lancaster; containing 113 inhabitants.

BULKINGTON (St. James), a parish, in the union of NUNEATON, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Nuneaton; containing, with the hamlets of Marston-Jabbett, Ryton, Weston, and Wolverhill, and parts of those of Barnacle and Bramcott, 1631 inhabitants. The parish is traversed on the north by the road from Nuneaton to Lutterworth, and on the south by that from Coventry to Hinckley; and the Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal crosses its north-western angle, the Coventry canal forming a junction with it a little to the west of the parish, and the Oxford canal uniting with the latter on the south. Bulkington comprises by computation about 4315 acres: the soil is chiefly clay, alternated with sand, and is generally productive; the surface is flat, and the river Aroker, which has its source in the vicinity, flows through part of the parish, which abounds with excellent freestone. Most of the inhabitants are employed in the ribbon-manufacture, which has been recently introduced. A pleasure fair is held, beginning on St. James'-day, and continuing for a week; and there is a statute fair, for the hiring of servants, on the first Wednesday after the 19th of September. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 10. 7., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £253, partly arising from land. The great tithes belong to the Oakham and Uppingham grammar schools; the small tithes have recently been commuted for £26: there is a glebe-house, with a glebe of 120 acres. The church was enlarged, about 20 years since, by the addition of 350 sittings, of which 300 are free: it contains a marble font, and the table in the chancel is covered with a sculptured slab, resting on a shaft of Numidian marble brought from Rome, and presented by the late Mr. Hayward, the eminent sculptor, who lies buried in the north aisle. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Independents; and a national school is supported.

BULKINGTON, a tything, in the parish of KEEVIL, union of WESTBURY and WHORWELSDOWN, hundred of MELKSHAM, Whorwelsdown and N. divisions of WILTS, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Melksham; containing 268 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £246, of which £145 are payable to the Dean and Chapter of Winchester, and £101 to the vicar of the parish. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BULKWORTHY, a chapelry, in the parish of BUCKLAND-BREWER, union of BIDEFORD, hundred of SHEBBEAR, Great Torrington and N. divisions of DEVON, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Great Torrington; containing 196 inhabitants.

BULLER'S GREEN, a township, in the parish, parliamentary borough, and union of MORPETH, W. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing 169 inhabitants. It comprises about 100 acres of land, tithe-free, adjoining the north and north-west boundaries of the town of Morpeth, and consists principally of one row of houses, in a curved line. The abbot of Newminster anciently had possessions in the place, and there was probably, some three centuries since, a bowling-green here, on "Bowles Green," a name now corrupted into Buller's Green.

BULLEY (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WESTBURY, hundred of the duchy of LANCASTER, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Newent; containing 229 inhabitants. This parish is of great antiquity, and the manor is noticed in the Domesday survey, under the name of Buttelege: it comprises about 500 acres, of which the greater portion is good arable land, and the remainder indifferent pasture. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Churcham. The church is a small structure, in the Norman style, with a low spire, and consists only of a nave, at the east end of which is a beautiful Norman arch, that led into the chancel, now destroyed; there is also a similar arch at the south entrance.

BULLINGHAM, a parish, in the hundred of WEBTREE, union and county of HEREFORD, 2 miles (S.) from Hereford; containing 412 inhabitants, of whom 129 are in Upper, and 283 in Lower, Bullingham. This parish comprises 1679 acres by measurement, of which 705 are in Upper, and 974 in Lower, Bullingham; it is bounded on the north by the river Wye, and is intersected by the road from Hereford to Ross. It constitutes the prebend of Over Bullinghope, in the Cathedral of Hereford, valued in the king's books at £17. 18. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £109; patron, the Prebendary; appropriators, Dean and Chapter. The church was enlarged some years since.

BULLINGTON, a chapelry, in the parish of GOLTHO, W. division of the wapentake of WRAGGÖE, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W.) from Wragby; containing 52 inhabitants. This place is situated on the road from Lincoln to Louth, and comprises by computation 780 acres; it formerly belonged to the knightly family of the Methams, which is now extinct. Here are inconsiderable remains of a religious house, founded by Simon Fitz-William, or De Kyme, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, as a priory and convent for both sexes, under the rule of St. Gilbert of Sempringham: the revenue, at the time of the Dissolution, was £187. 7. 9.

BULLINGTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of ANDOVER, hundred of WHERWELL, Andover and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Whitchurch; containing 187 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 1600 acres; the soil is of a mixed quality, but generally fertile; the surface is varied, rising in some parts into hills of moderate elevation; and the lower grounds are watered by a branch of the river Test, which flows through the parish. The living is annexed, with that of Tufton, to the vicarage of Wherwell: the tithes of Bullington have been commuted for £361. 13., of which £272. 6. are payable to the prebendary of Wherwell, who has a glebe of 15 acres, and £89. 7. to the incumbent. At a place called Titbury Hill, is an intrenched area of about ten acres, in which square stones, Roman coins, and the remains of some wells have been discovered.

BULLOCK'S HALL, a township, in the parish of WARKWORTH, union of MORPETH, E. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Morpeth; containing 19 inhabitants. It formed part of the ancient chapelry of Chivington, and the chapel for the district was situated near its limits. The township is the property of Ralph Fenwick, Esq. The tithes have been commuted for £28. 12., of which £24 are payable to the Bishop of Carlisle, and £4. 12. to the vicar of the parish.

BULMER (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from Sudbury; containing 775 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 2759 acres; the soil is generally productive, and in some parts exuberantly fertile, producing abundant crops of grain; and several acres are planted with hops, which thrive well. The surface is elevated, and the higher grounds command extensive and finely varied prospects. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Belchamp-Walter consolidated, endowed with a portion of the great tithes, and valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £445; patron, Samuel Milbank Raymond, Esq.; impropiator, excepting where the land is tithe-free, Charles Hammersley, Esq. The church is a plain edifice of stone, with a square tower, and contains an ancient font of considerable beauty. Here was formerly a chantry endowed with lands, which, on its suppression, were annexed to the manor of Butlers. A school is supported by Lady Laura Meyrick, of Auberies.

BULMER (St. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of MALTON, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK, 3 miles (N. W.) from Whitwell; containing 983 inhabitants, of whom 324 are in the township of Bulmer. The parish, which gives name to the wapentake, is bounded on the east by the river Derwent, and comprises the townships of Bulmer and Welburn, the latter in the eastern part: in the township of Bulmer are 1622 acres, of which 929 are arable, 511 meadow and pasture, and 177 woodland: the soil is generally a fine bright loam; the surface is diversified with hills, commanding extensive views, and the scenery is picturesque. Limestone is quarried for building and agricultural purposes. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of the Earl Fitzwilliam, with a net income of £395; incumbent, Rev. W. Preston: the tithes were commuted for land, under an inclosure act, in 1777; the glebe consists of 210 acres. The church is an ancient edifice with a square tower at the west end, and contains a monument of a Knight Templar. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a handsome and spacious school, built by the Earl of Carlisle, is principally supported by his Lordship, Viscount Morpeth, the Duchess of Sutherland, and the rector.

BULPHAN (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of ORSETT, hundred of BARSTABLE, S. division of ESSEX, 10 miles (E. S. E.) from Romford; containing 254 inhabitants. This parish, which anciently belonged to the nunnery of Barking, is bounded on the west by the brook of Dunton, and comprises 1667*a.* 15*p.*, including 222 acres of common. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £23, and in the patronage of the Trustees of the late Rev. J. S. Hand: the tithes have been commuted for £405. 12., and the glebe comprises 15 acres. The church is a small edifice, with a belfry of wood, surmounted by a small spire; on the south side of the chancel are some remains of an ancient chapel.

BULVERHYTHE (St. Mary), an ancient parish, and a member of the town and port of HASTINGS, union and rape of HASTINGS, hundred of BEXHILL, and E. division of SUSSEX, 1½ mile (E.) from Bexhill; containing 37 inhabitants. This place, formerly a haven called Bollifridé, is said to derive its name from William the Conqueror, who is supposed to have landed here, having granted to an ancestor of the Pelham family as much land as he could cover with a bull's hide, which was made extensive by the expedient of cutting it into slips. It is bounded on the south by the English Channel, which has considerably encroached on the land, and is intersected by the road from Dovor to Brighton, by way of Hastings; along the coast are several martello towers, and there are some remains of an ancient church or chapel.

BULWELL (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BASFORD, N. division of the wapentake of BRROXTOW and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 3¾ miles (N. W. by N.) from Nottingham; containing 1577 inhabitants. This place derives its name from an ancient and copious spring called "Bull-well," to which the cattle from the adjoining forest of Sherwood, previously to its inclosure, were accustomed to resort. The parish, which includes the ancient soc of Hemshill, is situated on the river Leen, and comprises by measurement 1631 acres of arable and meadow land, in nearly equal portions, and lying on opposite banks of the river: the substratum is chiefly limestone, which produces lime of excellent quality, and coal is found in several parts, but not wrought. The population is partly employed in the manufacture of lace and the weaving of stockings. The village is pleasantly situated near the river, and contains many substantial and well-built houses, chiefly of stone: there are three corn-mills, and one for the spinning of cotton, all propelled by water, and several extensive bleaching-grounds and printing-establishments, connected with the cotton manufacture, in which about 300 persons are employed. Courts leet and baron are held by the lord of the manor, who has the power to prove wills and grant administrations, and to hold a court of copyhold for the manor, in which the custom of Borough English prevails. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. Alfred Padley: the tithes have been commuted for £273. 10., and the glebe comprises 60 acres. The church is a small neat edifice, situated to the east of the village, on the highest ground in the parish, and was enlarged about the year 1775. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; and a free school is endowed with four acres of land, producing £20 per annum.

BULWICK (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of OUNDL, hundred of CORBY, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 8 miles (N. E.) from Wansford; containing, with Bulwick-Short-Leys, extra-parochial, 487 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the road from Stamford to Kettering, is watered by the Willow brook, and comprises by computation 2000 acres, of which about 200 are wood: the soil, near the village, is of sandy quality, and in other parts a fertile clay; and limestone and iron-ore are found, the latter of which appears to have been formerly wrought, as vestiges of ancient mines may still be traced. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 7. 1.; net income, £366; patron, Thomas Tryon, Esq. The greater portion of the tithes was commuted, some time since, for 300 acres of land: there is a good glebe-house. The church is partly in the decorated and partly in the later English style, with a finely-proportioned tower and spire; it contains three stone stalls and some screen-work, and has lately been repaired. Charles Tryon, Esq., in 1705, bequeathed £200, which, in 1805, were invested in the purchase of £400 three per cent. consols., with a portion of the interest of which, together with the rental of some lands, a school is supported; and a school-house has been built recently by Thomas Tryon, Esq. Near Balwich Hall is a chalybeate spring.

BUMPSTEAD-HELION (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of RISBRIDGE, hundred of FRESHWELL, N. division of ESSEX, 3¾ miles (S. W. by S.) from Haverhill; containing 906 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 3120 acres, of which 2390 are arable, and the remainder, with the exception of a small portion of pasture, chiefly woodland. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of Trinity College, Cambridge; impropiators, Trustees of the late Richard Salwey, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £711. 9. 9., and the vicarial for £274. 3. 10., and the glebe consists of 3½ acres. The church is an ancient edifice of stone, with a tower of brick, of modern date, and has been enlarged within the last few years. Schools are supported by subscription. There was formerly a guild here, dedicated to St. Peter.

BUMPSTEAD, STEEPLE, OR BUMPSTEAD-AT-THE-TOWER (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of RISBRIDGE, hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 2¾ miles (S.) from Haverhill; containing 1212 inhabitants. This extensive parish takes the adjunct by which it is distinguished from Bumpstead-Helion, from its having been conspicuous, at an early period, for the tower or steeple of its church. A small river, called the Stour, passes through the parish, which is also intersected by the road from Clare to London. A pleasure-fair is held on Whit-Wednesday, and another for the sale of earthenware in August. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15. 2. 1.; net income, £229; patron, Lord Chancellor; appropriator, Minor Canon of St. Paul's. The church is an ancient structure: the door of the chancel appears to have been formerly enriched with precious stones, and ornamented with the figures of four basilisks. Here is a place of worship for Independents; and there are an endowed school, and several others supported by different individuals. Sir Thomas Bendish, a distinguished adherent to Charles I., to whom he sent a large sum of money in his troubles, and afterwards ambassador to the Ottoman Porte, was born at Bower Hall; and Augustine Lindell, Bishop of Hereford, was also a native of the parish.

BUNBURY (St. Boniface), a parish, in the union of NANTWICH, partly in the Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, but chiefly in the First division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, S. division of the county of CHESTER; comprising the chapelry of Burwardsley, and the townships of Alraham, Beeston, Bunbury, Calveley, Haughton, Peckforton, Ridley, Spurstow, Tilston-Fearnall, Tiverton, and Wardle; and containing 4678 inhabitants, of whom 926 are in the township of Bunbury, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Tarporley. This place, which is of great antiquity, was granted at the Conquest to Fitz-Hugh, Baron of Malpas, from whom it descended through various possessors, till, on the decease of the late Sir William Bunbury, the manor became vested in the representatives of the Earl of Dysart. Courts leet and baron are held annually, and a manorial court occasionally, for the recovery of debts under 40s. The Chester canal passes through the parish, and is crossed close to Bunbury lock by the Chester and Crewe railway: the parish contains by computation 17,000 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £117; patrons, the Haberdashers' Company, London; impropiator, S. Aldersey, Esq. The church is a handsome building of red freestone, in the later English style: at the termination of each of the aisles is an ancient and elegant chapel, called Eggerton and Spurstow chapels, the former built in 1523. Within the church are several fine monuments; among which are, a rich altar-tomb to the memory of Sir Hugh Calveley, the celebrated "Cheshire hero," who eminently distinguished himself during the invasions of France by Edward III.; and one to Admiral Sir George Beeston, who aided in the destruction of the Spanish Armada, in 1588. The church was fired by a detachment from the royal garrison at Cholmondeley House, on the 20th of June, 1643, and sustained considerable injury. The above Sir Hugh, about 1386, founded and endowed in the church a college for a master and six Secular chaplains; and at the Dissolution, the establishment consisted of a dean, five vicars, and two choristers, whose clear revenue was valued at £48. 2. 8.: the buildings stood in a field about 200 yards north-west of the church. In 1575, Thomas Aldersey, citizen of London, purchased the rectory and advowson from Queen Elizabeth, and afterwards leased the tithes for £130 per annum, of which he directed that £20 should be given to a schoolmaster, £10 to an usher, 100 marks to a minister (each to have a house and a certain portion of land in addition), £20 to a curate, and £10 to the poor. A chapel was built, in 1735, in the township of Burwardsley, and a church at Tilston-Fearnall, in 1836. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The school was rebuilt in 1812, at the expense of Samuel Aldersey, Esq.; and a school, now conducted on the national plan, was endowed by Mr. Thomas Gardener, in 1750. Bunbury Heath, by some considered to be the place described in a poem entitled the "Ancient English Wake of Jerningham," is the scene of festivity on the Sunday preceding the festival of St. Boniface, in every year.

BUNCTON, a chapelry, in the parish of ASHINGTON, hundred of WEST GRINSTEAD, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Steyning; containing 72 inhabitants.

BUNDLEY, or BONDLEIGH (St. James), a parish, in the union of OAKHAMPTON, hundred of NORTH TAWTON, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, 2 miles (N. N. W.) from North Tawton; containing 342 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Taw, and comprises by computation 1500 acres. A small number of persons are employed in weaving and glove-making: stone is quarried for the roads. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 17. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Wyndham family; net income, £232. The church has some remains of Norman architecture, and an ancient font. There is a place of worship for Bible Christians.

BUNGAY, a market-town, in the union and hundred of WANGFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 40 miles (N. N. E.) from Ipswich, 40 (N. E. by E.) from Bury-St. Edmund's, and 109 (N. E. by N.) from London, on the road to Yarmouth; containing 4109 inhabitants. This place is said to have derived its name from the term le-bon-eye, signifying "the good island," in consequence of its being nearly surrounded by the river Waveney, which was once a broad stream. Soon after the Norman Conquest, a castle was built, which from its situation and the strength of its fortifications, was deemed impregnable by its possessor, Hugh Bigot, Earl of Norfolk, in the reign of Stephen; but that monarch, in the 6th year of his reign, in the year 1140, came with his army and took it. In 1154 also, the 1st year of Henry II., it was yielded by the same earl, but restored in 1163, and in the following year he again took up arms against the king, and fortified himself in the castle, which he was compelled to deliver up, and permit to be demolished: on its site a mansion was erected, which, in the 22nd year of Edward I., 1293, Roger Bigot embattled, by royal permission. The form of the castle, of which the remains belong to the Duke of Norfolk, appears to have been octangular: portions of the west and south-west angles are still standing, as are also three sides of the main keep, situated nearly at the back of the two portal towers: their walls are from 7 to 11 feet thick, and from 15 to 17 feet high; in the midst is a well of strongly-impregnated mineral water, long since disused. Near Saint Mary's church are the ruins of a Benedictine nunnery, founded about the year 1160, in the reign of Henry II., by Roger de Glanville and the Countess de Gundreda, his lady, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was estimated at £62. 2. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$., at which time there was a prioress and 11 nuns. In March, 1688, a fire broke out, and the flames spread with such rapidity, that the whole town, with the exception of one small street, was reduced to ashes, and property, to the amount of nearly £30,000, together with most of the ancient records of the castle, as is supposed, were destroyed: one house, with curiously carved windows, is still standing, which escaped the conflagration, situated near the nunnery, to which it is supposed to have been attached, as the hospital for travellers and strangers.

The TOWN is pleasantly situated on the river Waveney, which here forms the line of boundary between the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk, and over which are two neat bridges: the streets, diverging from the marketplace in the centre of the town towards the principal roads, are spacious, well paved, and lighted with gas: the houses are in general modern, having been rebuilt since the fire; and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from springs. The theatre, a neat edifice erected in 1827, is opened occasionally; and there is an assembly-room, also a book-club, established in 1770. On the northern side of the town is an extensive common, nearly surrounded by the Waveney, along the edge of which, on the Norfolk side, is a pleasant promenade, one mile and a half in length, leading to a cold bath, where a bath-house has been built, and requisite accommodation provided. The trade is principally in corn, malt, flour, and coal: there are several flour-mills, and malting-houses, on a large scale; also a paper-mill, a large silk-manufactory, and an extensive printing-office. The Waveney is navigable from Yarmouth, whence the town is supplied with coal, timber, and other articles of consumption. The market is on Thursday; and fairs are held on May 14th and September 25th. In the market-place is an octagonal cross, surmounted by a dome, on the top of which is a fine figure of Justice: so late as the year 1810, the ancient cross, called the Corn Cross, was standing. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold petty-sessions every Thursday; and a town-reeve is appointed annually, who, and the feoffees, are trustees of the estates and rent-charges devised for the benefit of the town: courts leet and baron for the three manors of Bungay Soke, Priory, and Burgh, are usually held twice a year.

Bungay comprises the parishes of St. Mary and the Holy Trinity; the former containing 2248, and the latter, 1861, inhabitants. The living of St. Mary's is a perpetual curacy; net income, £115, with a house; patron, Duke of Norfolk. The church is a handsome and spacious structure, with a fine tower, and was chiefly rebuilt between 1689 and 1701, with flint and freestone: the original steeple was struck by lightning on the 4th Aug., 1577, and much injured, at which time two men were killed in the belfry. The living of the parish of the Holy Trinity is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 0. 5., and endowed with the rectorial tithes; net income, £256; patron, Bishop of Ely: there is a good glebe-house, with 10 acres of land. The church is a small ancient edifice, with a fine round tower. There was formerly a church dedicated to St. Thomas, which was used since 1500, but it has been destroyed. There are places of worship for Wesleyans, Independents, and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school was instituted by the Rev. Thomas Popeson, in 1592, who also founded ten scholarships in Emanuel College, Cambridge, now reduced to four; and in 1728 it was endowed by Henry Williams with the vicarage of St. Andrew, Ilkeshall; also with 33 acres of land by Mr. Scales, of Earsham: the income of the master, who is appointed by the college, is from £180 to £200. Henry Webster, in 1712, bequeathed land for the instruction of children of the parish of St. Mary. A national school, with an infant school for 300 children, has been erected at an estimated expense of £367; and there is also a British and foreign school, for about 200 children, supported chiefly by subscription. Thomas Wingfield, in 1593, bequeathed property, since vested in land, producing about £25 per annum, for the relief of indigent persons, and for the apprenticing of children; and the town lands comprise 155 acres, and yield an income of from £300 to £400. A dispensary was established in 1828, and is liberally supported; there are also a lying-in institution, and two clothing societies, and almshouses in each parish for the residence of aged persons. The remains of a Roman encampment are still to be seen upon the common: numerous antiquities have been found on its eastern side, among which are several hundreds of very small brass Roman coins, called minimi; and a tournament spur, a leaden bulla of Celestine III., and a fine silver Saxon penny of Offa, king of Mercia, have been found during the present century near the castle.

BUNNY (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BUSFORD, N. division of the wapentake of RUSHCLIFFE, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Nottingham; containing 360 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from London to Nottingham, through Loughborough, and comprises by computation 2000 acres. Bunny Park, the seat of Lord Rancliffe, to the east of the village, is an ancient mansion of brick, ornamented with stone, with a massive gateway entrance. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Bradmore, valued in the king's books at £6. 14.; net income, £425; patrons, Lord Rancliffe and Rev. J. Boyer, of whom the former is impropiator. The tithes were partly commuted for land in 1797; the glebe contains about 227 acres, to which there is a good glebe-house. The church is a spacious and well-built edifice, partly in the decorated and partly in the later English style, with a tower surmounted by a crocketed spire, and contains several monuments to the family of Parkyns, who became proprietors of the united parishes, by purchase, in the reign of Elizabeth. A school, the building for which was erected in 1700, has an endowment in land, producing £60 per annum, the gift of Lady Parkyns, who also founded an almshouse for four widows, and endowed it with £16 per annum, augmented with £5 annually by her husband, Sir Thomas Parkyns; the same lady likewise assigned an annuity of £30 for apprenticing poor boys.

BUNTINGFORD, a chapelry (formerly a market-town), in the parishes of ASPEDEN, LAYSTON, THROCKING, and WYDDIAL, union of ROYSTON and BUNTINGFORD, hundred of EDWINSTREE, county of HERTFORD, 12 miles (N. N. E.) from Hertford; containing 581 inhabitants. This place takes its name from a ford on the river Rib, near which a blacksmith, named Bunt, or Bunting, had a forge. The town is pleasantly situated on a gentle ascent between two hills, and consists of one street, half a mile in length: the houses are in general well built, and of respectable appearance, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The trade is principally in leather and malt: the fairs, formerly on June 29th and November 30th, each for four days, are now irregularly held. The county magistrates hold petty-sessions here for the division, and a septennial court leet is held for the hundred. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Layston, and is endowed with a portion of the tithes. The chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, is a commodious brick building, erected by subscription, in 1626, through the exertions of the Rev. Alexander Strange, vicar of Layston, who lies interred in it: from its convenient situation, it is appropriated to the general use of the parishioners of Layston, the parish church, half a mile distant, being reserved to only for marriages. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends and Independents. The free grammar school was endowed in 1630, by Mrs. Eliz. Freeman, with lands producing £10. 10. per annum; which endowment was augmented with a moiety of the produce of land left by Seth Ward, Bishop of Salisbury, to Christ's College, Cambridge, the other being applied to the endowment in that college of four scholarships, of £12 per annum each, for boys on this foundation. A school for girls is supported by subscription. Eight almshouses, for four aged men and four women, were founded in 1668, and endowed with land by Bishop Ward; and the bishop also gave £600 to purchase land, the rental of which is applied to the apprenticing of children: he was a native of the town, and received the rudiments of his education in the grammar school.

BUNWELL (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and hundred of DEPWAD, E. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (N. E. by E.) from New Buckenham; containing 1001 inhabitants. It is intersected by the road from New Buckenham to Norwich: the manufacture of bombazines is carried on to a limited extent. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17, and in the patronage of the family of Buxton: the tithes have been commuted for £744. 8., and the glebe comprises 52 acres. The church is chiefly in the later English style, and consists of a nave and chancel, with an embattled tower. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists. The proceeds of a town estate, worth about £30 per annum, are applied to the repairing of the church, and the relief of the poor.

BURASTON, with WHETMORE, a chapelry, in the parish of BURFORD, union of TENBURY, hundred of OVERS, S. division of SALOP, 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. E.) from Tenbury; containing 223 inhabitants. The Kington canal passes on the southern side of the village.

BURBAGE, a chapelry, in the parish of ASTON-FLAMVILLE, union of HINCKLEY, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 1 mile (S. E.) from Hinckley; containing, with the hamlet of Sketchley, 1827 inhabitants. This place is situated on the London road to Hinckley and Market-Bosworth, and the Roman Watling-street passes it in a south-westerly direction; it comprises 3057 acres, of which 1200 are arable, 79 woodland, and the rest pasture, common, &c. The manufacture of stockings is carried on to a considerable extent, about 800 persons being employed in it. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Rector of Aston-Flamville: the tithes have been commuted for £623, and there is a glebe of about 11 acres. The chapel, dedicated to St. Catharine, is an ancient edifice. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Independents; and a national school is supported by the rector, aided by an annual collection. The late Mr. Canning resided for some time in the parish.

BURBAGE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of PEWSEY, hundred of KINWARDSTONE, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Pewsey; containing 1455 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 3. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £257; patron and appropriator, Prebendary of Hurstborne and Burbage, in the Cathedral of Salisbury. Schools are supported by subscription.

BURCOMBE, SOUTH, a parish, in the union of WILTON, hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Wilton; containing, with the tything of North Burcombe and part of the hamlet of Ditchampton, 402 inhabitants. The parish is on the road from Salisbury to Shaftesbury, and comprises by computation 1500 acres, of which the soil is partly chalk, and partly clay, alternated with sandy loam; the surface is hilly, and the lower grounds are watered by the river Nadder. The living is a perpetual curacy, with the chapel of St. John, in Wilton, and has a net income of £52; the Earl of Pembroke is impropiator, and the Master of St. John's hospital, Wilton, patron. The tithes have been commuted for £170, and the glebe consists of 15 poles of land. There is a parochial school. On the downs are several large barrows.

BURCOTT, a hamlet, in the parish of WING, union of LEIGHTON-BUZZARD, hundred of COTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM; containing 170 inhabitants.

BURCOTT, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of DORCHESTER, union of ABINGDON, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Abingdon; containing 183 inhabitants. The village is situated on the river Thames.

BURCOTT, a tything, in the parish of St. CUTHBERT, city and union of WELLS, hundred of WELLS-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 103 inhabitants.

BURDON, a township, in the parish of BISHOP-WEARMOUTH, union and N. division of EASINGTON ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 3 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Sunderland; containing 114 inhabitants. The ancient family of Burdon, of knightly dignity, derived their name from this place, and it also gave name to a local family, who, however, never passed the rank of yeomanry. The township lies on the south verge of the parish, near the road from Sunderland to Stockton, and comprises 1109a. 3r. 22p. The village is pleasantly situated on an eminence. The tithes have been commuted for £140. 17. 10., payable to the rector of Bishop-Wearmouth.

BURDON, GREAT, a township, in the parish of HAUGHTON-LE-SKERNE, union, and S. E. division of the ward, of DARLINGTON, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 2 miles (N. E. by E.) from Darlington; containing 117 inhabitants. It comprises 589 acres, of which 312 are arable, 264 grass land, and 14 roads and waste. The whole of the township is leased under the Dean and Chapter of Durham: the tithes were commuted in 1838 for £131. 6. The Stockton and Darlington railway passes on the south.

BURE, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, Ringwood and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Christchurch; containing 786 inhabitants.

BURES (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of BABERGH, W. division of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Sudbury; containing 1596 inhabitants. This parish, including a hamlet of the same name, containing 612 persons, and locally in the county of Essex, comprises by measurement 4127 acres, of which 2542 are in that part of the parish separated from Essex, by the navigable river Stour. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$.; patron and impropiator, O. Hanbury, Esq.: the great tithes have been commuted for £574, and the vicarial for £246, and a sum of £8 per annum is paid to the rector of Little Cornard. The inappropriate tithes for the hamlet of Bures have been commuted for £387, and the vicarial for £81; the vicar's glebe comprises 13 acres. There is a national school.

BURES, MOUNT (St. JOHN), a parish, in the union of LEXDEN and WINSTREE, Colchester division of the hundred of LEXDEN, N. division of ESSEX, 6 miles (S. S. E.) from Sudbury; containing 282 inhabitants. This place takes its distinguishing affix from an artificial mount near the church, one acre in extent at the base, and planted on its summit with stately oak-trees and other timber. The parish is pleasantly situated on the banks of the river Stour, and comprises by measurement 1420 acres, of which 1193 are arable, 130 pasture, and 13 woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Brett: the rector's tithes have been commuted for £445, and the glebe comprises 22 acres: there is also a rent-charge of £17, payable to an impropiator. The church is an ancient edifice, consisting of a nave and chancel, with a central tower between them, surmounted by a wooden spire. There was formerly a chantry, to which belonged a small chapel in the churchyard, now converted into two small tenements.

Corporation Seal.

BURFORD (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a market-town and parish, in the union of WITNEY, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, 18½ miles (W. N. W.) from Oxford, and 73 (W. N. W.) from London, on the road from Oxford to Cheltenham; containing, with the hamlet of Upton with Signett, 1862 inhabitants, of whom 1644 are in the town. This place is of considerable antiquity, and was by the Saxons called Beorford, of which its present name is a variation. In 685, an ecclesiastical synod was held here by the kings Ethelred and Berthwald, at which Aldhelm, Bishop of Sherborne, was ordered to write against the error of the British church respecting Easter. In 752, a battle was fought at Battle-edge, a little westward from the town, between Ethelbald, King of Mercia, and Cuthred, King of the West Saxons, who had revolted against his authority, in which Ethelbald was defeated, and the royal standard, bearing the device of a golden dragon, captured; and this event was commemorated by an annual festival, on Midsummer-eve, for several ages, when the inhabitants paraded the streets, bearing the figures of a dragon and a giant. Soon after the Conquest, the town was bestowed on Robert, Earl of Gloucester, natural son of Henry I. In 1649, an encounter took place here between Fairfax and the royalists, when the former was victorious. The town is pleasantly situated on the banks of the small river Windrush: the houses are indifferently built, but the inhabitants are well supplied with water. Races were formerly held, but they have been discontinued for many years. The making of saddles, and a considerable trade in malt and wool, that formerly flourished, have much declined; and this, added to the diversion of the line of road, which now avoids the town, has reduced it from a flourishing condition to a state of comparative poverty. The market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on the last Saturday in April, for cattle, sheep, and cheese; July 5th, for horses; and Sept. 25th, for horses, sheep, and cheese. A charter was granted by Henry II., conferring on the inhabitants "all customs enjoyed by the free burgesses of Oxford," of many of which they were deprived by Lord Chief Justice Tanfield, in the reign of Elizabeth. They are entitled to elect an alderman, a steward, two bailiffs, and twelve burgesses, at Easter; but of late years these officers have not been appointed: the town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold petty-sessions for the division, and a court leet and a court baron are also held.

The parish comprises 2606a. 2r. 14p., of which 2319 acres are arable, 227 pasture, and about 60 woodland. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, with Fulbrook annexed, valued in the king's books at £31. 13.; net income, £294; patron, Bishop of Oxford; appropriators, the bishop, and the provost of Eton College. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1794. The church is a spacious structure, chiefly Norman, but displaying beautiful specimens in every style of English architecture: the tower, which is surmounted by a beautiful spire, is Norman; and the interior of the belfry, still in its original state, is a fine specimen of the early period of that style. At the west entrance is a fine Norman arch; and the south porch, which is in the later English style, is exquisitely rich. In a chapel, on the north side of the chancel, is a monument to Sir Lawrence Tanfield, Knt., lord chief baron of the exchequer: in the Sylvester chapel, or aisle, is a stone coffin of unusual size and form, which was dug up on the estate of William Lenthall, Esq., and was found to contain a skull; and in the nave is an ancient font of cylindrical form, ornamented with a rude sculpture of the Crucifixion. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, and Wesleyans. The free school was founded, in 1571, by Simon Wisdom, alderman, who assigned property for its endowment, which, with subsequent benefactions, produces £84 per annum. An apartment over the schoolroom is used as the town-hall, where the assizes for the county were held in 1636. John Wilmot, the celebrated Earl of Rochester, and the late Earl of Liverpool, received the rudiments of their education in the school. The Great Almshouse was founded, in 1457, by the Earl and Countess of Warwick, for eight poor widows; and Wisdom's almshouse was founded, before 1628, for four widows. Four messuages were assigned for almshouses, in 1726, by the will of Dr. John Castle, for four aged widows, with a small endowment; and there are also various charitable endowments, the principal of which are, the church estate, which yields £56 per annum, and Pool's estate, producing £62 annually. Adjoining the town was a priory, dedicated to St. John, the revenue of which was valued at £13. 6. 6. at the Dissolution, after which it was granted to Edward Harman, Esq., who erected a mansion on its foundation: having reverted to the crown, it was disposed of in the reign of Elizabeth, to Sir John Fortesque, who sold it to Sir Lawrence Tanfield, by whom the priory and manor were left to his grandson, Lord Falkland, who was born here, and was killed in the battle of Newbury. The property was afterwards purchased by Mr. Speaker Lenthall, who enlarged the priory, and built a beautiful chapel adjoining it. Mr. Lenthall died here, in 1661, and was interred in the family vault. The eminent cosmographer, Dr. Peter Heylin, was born at Burford in 1600. The town gives the inferior title of Earl to the Duke of St. Albans.

BURFORD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of TENBURY, hundred of OVERS, S. division of SALOP, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. by S.) from Tenbury; containing, with the townships of Burford, Buraston, Greet, Nash, Stoke, Tilsop, Weston, Whatmore, and Whitton, 1031 inhabitants, of whom 297 are in the township of Burford. Licence for a weekly market and an annual fair was granted by Henry III. The Kington canal crosses the parish, on the northern side of the village. The living is a rectory, divided into three portions: the first is valued in the king's books at £9. 13. 4., and has a net income of £377; the second, to which the chapel of Whitton is annexed, is valued at £8, and has an income of £286; and the third, to which the chapels of Buraston and Nash are annexed, is valued at £8. 13. 4., with an income of £335: they are all in the patronage of the Hon. and Rev. G. R. Bowles. A school is supported by subscription, and a small infants' school by the rector.

BURGATE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of HARTISMERE, W. division of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Botesdale; containing 369 inhabitants, and comprising by admeasurement 1956 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely: the tithes have been commuted for £550, and the glebe, to which a good house is attached, comprises 74 acres. The church is a handsome structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and contains a finely sculptured font, and in the chancel a handsome monument to William de Burgate and his lady, whose effigies are engraved in brasses.

BURGATE, MIDDLE, NORTH, and SOUTH, three tythings, in the parish and union of FORDINGBRIDGE, Ringwood and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing, respectively, 657, 129, and 609 inhabitants.

BURGH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of AYLSHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (S. E. by E.) from Alysham; containing 314 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Bure, which is navigable from Alysham to Yarmouth, and on the banks of which is an extensive flour-mill: it comprises 788a. 1r. 37p., whereof 616 acres are arable, 135 pasture and meadow, and 19 woodland and plantations. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 17. 1., and in the patronage of Mr. Holley: the tithes have been commuted for £255. 19., and the glebe comprises 13 acres. The church contains portions of the early and decorated styles, and has a square embattled tower; the font, which is very handsome, is elaborately sculptured with representations of scriptural subjects. A school is supported. Numerous urns, coins, and other antiquities, have been found in the neighbourhood.

BURGH, a district, comprising the consolidated parishes of St. Margaret and St. Mary, in the EAST and WEST FLEGG incorporation, hundred of WEST FLEGG, E. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from Acle; containing 506 inhabitants. The village is situated on the old road from Norwich to Yarmouth, and the place is bounded on the south-west by the navigable river Bure. The parish of St. Margaret consists of 1606a. 2r. 6p., of which about 789 acres are arable, upwards of 100 water, 23 wood, and the rest pasture. Henry III. granted permission to hold a free market on Monday, and a fair on the eve and festival of St. Margaret, and six following days; both of which have long been discontinued. The living of St. Margaret's is a discharged rectory, with that of St. Mary's annexed, the former valued in the king's books at £8. 13. 4., and the latter at £4; patron, Rev. W. Lucas: the tithes have been commuted for £458. 3., and the glebe comprises $22\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church of St. Mary has long been in ruins. A school is supported by the rector; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Thomas Wymer, in 1505, bequeathed land for the poor, of which the rental is £22; and there are other lands for the same purpose, let for about £60 per annum.

BURGH (St. PETER), or WHEATACRE BURGH, a parish, in the union of LODDON and CLAVERING, hundred of CLAVERING, E. division of NORFOLK, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Beccles; containing 312 inhabitants. This parish is bounded on the north, south, and east by the river Waveney, which separates it from the county of Suffolk; and comprises by measurement 860 acres, whereof 583 are low marshy grazing land, about 15 wood, and the remainder arable. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 6. 8.; patron and incumbent, the Rev. W. Boycott: the tithes have been commuted for £370, and the glebe comprises $15\frac{1}{2}$ acres; a rent-charge of £3 is payable to the rector of Monk's Toft. The church is an ancient structure in the early English style, with a tower of brick. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Thirteen acres of land were allotted to the poor at the inclosure of the parish in 1811. In a field adjoining the churchyard are some remains of what is supposed to have been a religious house.

BURGH (St. BOTOLPH), a parish, in the union of WOODBRIDGE, hundred of CARLFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Woodbridge; containing 266 inhabitants. This place is by most antiquaries identified with the Combretonium of Antoninus, as the distances in the Itinerary correspond with it exactly, and not with Brettenham, as some have supposed. The parish comprises by measurement 1225 acres: the soil is partly of a mixed quality, and partly of a heavy clay; and the surface is level. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 3. 4., and in the patronage of Frederick Barne, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £348. 15. 6., and the glebe comprises 11 acres; there is also a sum of £5. 4. 6. paid to an impropiator. The church, a neat ancient structure, in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower, is built within a Roman encampment, of which part of the vallum still remains visible. A school is supported by the minister. There was anciently a commandery of the order of St. John of Jerusalem.

BURGH-APTON.—See BERGH-APTON.

BURGH, CASTLE (St. PETER), a parish, in the hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, E. division of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Great Yarmouth; containing 327 inhabitants. This place, anciently Cnob-

heresburg, is supposed to be the Roman Garianonum, (which some writers have placed at Caistor, on the opposite side of the river,) a station, founded by Publius Ostorius Scapula, and garrisoned, under the command of a Præpositus, by a troop of cavalry called the Stablesian horse. The ramparts form three sides of an area of upwards of five acres and a half; and various coins, urns, fibulae, domestic utensils, and military weapons, have been found in the adjoining fields. The walls of the station are among the most perfect remains of Roman architecture in the kingdom; two sides are very perfect, one end has partly fallen, and the side next the river appears not to have been fortified. Bede relates that in the reign of Sigebert, Furseus founded a monastery within the walls of the encampment, but the incursions of the Saxons, and consequent danger to monasteries, caused him, and his brother, to whom he had intrusted the institution, and the monks, to abandon it almost as soon as formed, and no trace of it remains. The parish comprises by measurement 1498 acres, of which 834 are arable, 649 pasture and marsh, and 15 roads; much of the meadow land is level, ascending gradually towards the south, and being escarped towards the west. The soil is very various, affording specimens of almost every quality; the scenery, though naked, has been rather improved by recent planting: there is a fine view over Norfolk, and more than sixty churches may be seen from one point. The navigable river Waveney flows on the western side, and, opposite the village, unites with the Yare, forming Breydon Water, which runs on the northern side, and is navigable. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £400. The church, an ancient structure, in the Norman style, has, with the exception of the tower, which is circular, been rebuilt in the later English style: in 1838 some curious frescos were discovered on the north wall of the interior, but too mutilated to render their preservation practicable, and the wall was again covered over, after the rector had procured copies of them, which are preserved in the parish chest. A national school, for which a house was built in 1836, is supported by subscription.

BURGH-IN-THE-MARSH (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, Marsh division of the wapentake of CANDLESHOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (E. by S.) from Spilsby; containing 1095 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Spilsby to Skegness, and comprises 4237*a. 2r. 12p.*, about 3000 of which are meadow and pasture, and the rest arable; the village is large, and fairs are held in it on the second Thursday in May, and the 26th Sept. The living is a discharged vicarage, to which that of Winthorpe was united in 1729, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8.; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Lincoln; net income, £126. The appropriate tithes have been commuted for £304; the appropriate glebe consists of 76 acres, and the vicarial glebe comprises 14½ in this parish, and 17¾ in the adjoining parishes of Croft and Winthorpe. The church is a commodious edifice, with a lofty tower at the west end, and has a handsome nave, with good clerestory windows. The united parishes before the Reformation belonged to the monastery of Bolington; and there was a second church called St. Mary's, of which there is no vestige remaining. The Baptists and Wesleyans have each a place of worship. There is an endowed school, founded by Mrs. Jane Palmer, in 1727, the funds of which, amounting to £65 per annum, arise from twenty-seven acres of land.

BURGH, LITTLE, a parish, in the EAST and WEST FLEGG incorporation, hundred of HOLT, W. division of NORFOLK, 4½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Holt; containing, with Melton-Constable, 75 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, consolidated with that of Melton-Constable, and valued in the king's books at £4: the church is in ruins.

BURGH, MATTISHALL, county of NORFOLK.—See MATTISHALL BURGH.

BURGH, SOUTH, or HINGHAM-BURGH (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of MITFORD and LAUNDITCH, hundred of MITFORD, W. division of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Hingham; containing 307 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1216*a. 1r. 13p.*, of which 785 acres are arable, and 214 meadow and pasture: the surface is pleasingly undulated, and the lower grounds are watered by a stream tributary to the river Yare. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 13. 6½., and in the patronage of T. T. Gurdon, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £304. 5., and the glebe comprises about 2½ acres. The church is an ancient structure in the early and decorated English styles, and the tower is now in ruins: on the south side of the chancel are two sedilia of stone and a double piscina; there are also several neat monuments to the Tavell family. A school is supported by the rector. At the inclosure, 12 acres of land were allotted to the poor, which is let out in portions of half an acre each, and the rents distributed in coal.

BURGH-UPON-BAINE (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, E. division of the wapentake of WRAGGIE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (W.) from Louth; containing, with the hamlet of Girsby, 155 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 10. 10.; net income, £133; patron and impropiator, George Lister, Esq.

BURGH-UPON-THE-SANDS (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of CARLISLE, CUMBERLAND ward, and E. division of the county of CUMBERLAND; comprising the townships of Boustead-Hill, Burgh, Longburgh, and Moorhouse; and containing 1003 inhabitants, of whom 512 are in the township of Burgh, 5½ miles (W. N. W.) from Carlisle. Close to the village, on the northern side, and on the site now called the Old Castle, stood the Roman station, Avelodunum, the sixteenth on the line of Severus' Wall, and the spot where Adrian's vallum terminated: the lines of the ramparts, which are still visible, include an area about 136 yards square, in which, and in the vicinity, urns, altars, and inscribed stones have been dug up. A castle, built soon after the Conquest, but of which there are no remains, is stated to have been seized in 1174, by William, King of Scotland; and several encounters between the English and the Scots occurred in the parish, of which the most sanguinary were those in 1216 and 1520. Edward I. died here, on the 7th of July, 1307, whilst on an expedition against Scotland: this event has been commemorated by the erection of an obelisk, in 1685, by Henry, Duke of Norfolk, which fell down on the 4th of March, 1795, and was rebuilt by the Earl of Lonsdale, in 1803. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 1. 10½., and in the patronage of the Crown;

net income, £91; impropiators of the corn tithes, the landowners. The church exhibits evident marks of having been constructed, like some others on the border, as a place of occasional retreat and defence. A school receives £5 per annum from property bequeathed by Thomas Pattinson, in 1785, and by Richard Hodgson previously; and such of the inhabitants as are not possessed of a real estate worth £12 per annum, are entitled to send children to the school at Wiggonby, in Aikton.

BURGH-WALLIS (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of DONCASTER, Upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, W. riding of YORK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Doncaster; containing, with the township of Burgh-Wallis, and part of that of Sutton, 245 inhabitants. The latter part of the name of this place was added, in consequence of the family of Wallis arriving and settling here, probably about the time of Henry III.: they were adherents of Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, and were on that account attainted, when their manors of Burgh-Wallis, Braken, and Newton-Wallis were granted by Edward II. to Henry, Lord Scrope, for his services; but the estates were afterwards restored, and Scrope received the manor of Whitgift in recompense. The parish is situated a mile to the east of the great north road, and comprises about 1400 acres of land, chiefly arable, but including a considerable portion of wood and pasture; the scenery is very picturesque. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 6. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$; net income, about £280; patron, M. A. Tasburgh, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and a corn-rent, under an inclosure act, in 1813; the glebe comprises between 80 and 90 acres. The church is a neat and very ancient structure, of a mixed style, from that of the 12th to that of the 16th century. There is a Roman Catholic chapel annexed to Burgh-Wallis House, but no longer in use.

BURGHAM, a tything, in the parish of WORPLESDON, union of GUILDFORD, First division of the hundred of WOKEING, W. division of SURREY; containing 314 inhabitants.

BURGHCLERE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union, and partly in the hundred, of KINGSCLERE, but chiefly in the hundred of EVINGAR, Kingsclere and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 9 miles (S.) from Newbury; containing, with Earlstone tything, 845 inhabitants. This parish abounds with limestone of superior quality, which is wrought to a considerable extent: the surface is diversified with hills, on the highest of which was formerly a beacon, and there are still some traces of a camp. A court of petty-session is held at Whitway, in the parish, on the second Friday in every month. The living is a rectory, with Newtown annexed, valued in the king's books at £30, and in the patronage of the Earl of Carnarvon: the tithes have been commuted for £1073; and the glebe comprises 118 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The old church is disused, and a new one has been erected in the centre of the parish, at an expense of £2700; it is a handsome cruciform structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and was consecrated on the 24th October, 1838. A national school was built in 1838. A school is wholly supported by Mrs. Villebois; and there are funds for clothing, and fuel for the poor, to which the Earl and Countess of Carnarvon, Lady Percy, and others, liberally contribute.

BURGHFIELD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BRADFIELD, hundred of THEALE, county of BERKS, 5 miles (S. W.) from Reading; containing 1115 inhabitants. It is bounded on the north by the navigable river Kennet, and comprises 3478a. 1r. 20p. Coal was supposed to form part of the substratum, and in an unsuccessful attempt some years since to explore it, a bed of cockle-shells, firmly concreted with sand, was discovered about 12 feet beneath the surface. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 19. 2; net income, £810; patron, Earl of Shrewsbury. The church, a very ancient structure, was rebuilt in 1843, at a cost of £2500, and is now a handsome edifice of cruciform design, in the Anglo-Norman style; the interior, which comprises 608 sittings, including 402 free, is embellished with a finely-painted window in the chancel, representing the Virgin Mary, and contains a pulpit and reading-desk of stone, each of appropriate character. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists; and a school is supported by subscription.

BURGHILL (St. MARY), a parish, in the hundred of GRIMSWORTH, union and county of HEREFORD, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Hereford; containing, with the township of Tillington, 863 inhabitants. The parish comprises by admeasurement 3674 acres, of which 1800 are arable and garden-ground, 1400 meadow and pasture, and nearly 400 woodland: the surface is undulated, and the soil consists of clay, loam, and gravel. It is intersected by the road from Hereford to Weobley and Pembridge. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 18. 2.; net income, £94; patron, B. Biddulph, Esq., to whom, with others, the impropriation belongs: the glebe consists of 27 acres, exclusive of augmentation lands. The church, which contains 350 sittings, was thoroughly restored about twenty years ago, at a cost of £2000: among the antiquities in the interior are a curious font of metal, a rood-loft, and the altar-tomb of Sir John Milbourne and his lady. There is a barrow adjoining the churchyard. A school is supported by an endowment of £9. 9., and by contributions.

BURGHSTED, county of ESSEX.—See BURSTEAD.

BURHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of MALLING, hundred of LARKFIELD, Upper South division of the lathe of AYLESFORD, and W. division of KENT, 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. N. W.) from Aylesford; containing 380 inhabitants. It is bounded on the west by the river Medway, and on the east by a range of chalk hills, near which are the Burham Downs, which intersect the parish; about 20 acres are planted with hops. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £191; patrons and impropiators, Edw. Kingsley, Esq., and others. The church is situated near the river. A spring, called Holy Garden, anciently attracted numerous pilgrims by the supposed miraculous efficacy of its waters.

BURIAN, ST., a parish, in the union of PENZANCE, W. division of the hundred of PENWITH and of the county of CORNWALL, 6 miles (S. W. by W.) from Penzance; containing 1911 inhabitants. This place, which is of very great antiquity, derives its name from a collegiate church founded by King Athelstan, in honour of St. Burienna, or Bærienna, who had an oratory and was interred here. Athelstan bestowed on this church the privilege of sanctuary, and other immunities; the college was in existence at the Conquest, and the establishment consisted of a dean and three prebendaries till the Reformation, when the lands, with which it was endowed, were seized to the king, and there was no longer any support for the prebendaries; but the rectories of Burian, St. Levan, and Sennan, remained to the dean, forming his sole estate. In 1663, Seth Ward, Bishop of Exeter, possessed this deanery in commendam, and it was so held by his successors till the year 1709: the dean is independent of all bishops, and has no superior but the king. Of the ancient collegiate buildings the church only remains. The parish comprises by measurement 6274 acres: the soil is of light quality, resting on a substratum of granite; the surface is pleasingly undulated, and the scenery in many parts picturesque. The village is neatly built, containing many good houses, and there are several small hamlets scattered over the parish. The living is a rectory, with those of St. Levan and Sennan united, and a royal peculiar, valued in the king's books at £48. 12. 1., and in the patronage of the Crown: the consolidated tithes have been commuted for £1050. The church, which is situated on an eminence nearly 400 yards above the level of the sea, is a spacious structure, with a lofty tower 88 feet high, forming a conspicuous landmark to mariners; it was repaired in 1812, when a handsome carved screen and other relics of antiquity were removed. Near the south porch is an ancient cross, and there is another close to the churchyard. A national school is supported by subscription. On the estate of Boslevan are some vestiges of a chapel, called the Sanctuary. At Boscawen, Rosemoddrep, Chyangwanga, and other places in the parish, are Druidical remains.

BURITON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of PETERSFIELD, hundred of FINCH-DEAN, Petersfield and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Petersfield; containing, with the tythings of Nursted and Weston, 993 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from London to Portsmouth, and comprises by measurement 6151 acres, of which 2305 are arable, 1594 meadow and pasture, 786 woodland, and 1405 uninclosed common. The manufacture of parchment is carried on to a small extent. The living is a rectory, with Petersfield annexed, valued in the king's books at £32. 16. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £1194; patron, Bishop of Winchester. The tithes of Buriton have been commuted for £1084. 7., and there is a glebe of 62 acres. The church is an ancient structure, in the Norman style, with a square tower, which was rebuilt, after having been destroyed by fire about the year 1721; the interior is neatly arranged, and has been repaired and beautified: it contains a monument to the Rev. William Lowth, rector of the parish, and father of Bishop Lowth. Schools are supported by charity. Gibbon, the Roman historian, spent his early years on his patrimonial estate in the parish.

BURLAND, a township, in the parish of ACTON, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Nantwich; containing 639 inhabitants. The Whitechurch branch of the Chester canal crosses the township. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £58. 10., and the vicarial for £35. 13. 5.

BURLATON, a chapelry, in the parish of SHERIFF-HALES, union of SHIFFNALL, W. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Shiffnall.

BURLESCOMBE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WELLINGTON, partly in the hundred of BAMP-TON, but chiefly in that of HALBERTON, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (S. W. by W.) from Wellington; containing 958 inhabitants. This parish comprises 3768a. 16p. of land, of which about 200 acres are wood, and the rest arable and pasture, in nearly equal portions: the soil is various, and in general of inferior quality: the Exeter and Bristol railway, and the small river Lyner, run through the district. The road from Wellington to Exeter passes for four miles through the parish, which it enters near the Red Ball Inn, on Maiden Down: skirting Uffculm Down, it follows the track of the Roman portway from the city Uxella (Taunton), in its progress to Isca Danmoniorum (Exeter). Maiden Down was inclosed in 1803, and Lyner Moor in 1810. There are considerable mountains of primitive limestone, of which great quantities are burnt, and sent away by the Grand Western canal, of which the summit level intersects the parish. Small pieces of pure silver have been found; manganese is supposed to abound, and there are indications of the existence of coal. The woollen manufacture was formerly carried on, but the only trade at present is the making of chairs.

The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 15. 10.; patron and impropiator, E. Ashford Sandford, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £235, and the small for £330, and a sum of £12 per annum is paid to the vicar of Halberton; the vicar's glebe consists of $3\frac{1}{4}$ acres. The demesnes of the ancient abbey of Canonsleigh, comprising more than 800 acres, are tithe-free. The church is a venerable structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a tower of four stages, embattled and crowned with a turret; it consists of a nave, chancel, and north and south aisles. The stone steps to the ancient rood-loft, and the screen separating the chancel from the nave, are still remaining; the latter is richly ornamented with crockets, finials, and roses. Within the rails of the communion is an altar-tomb, with monks bearing shields under enriched canopies, which was erected by Nicholas Ayshford, Esq., in 1500; and in the north aisle are four more ancient monuments to the Ayshford family, who had a chantry chapel at the east end of this aisle. Attached to the villa of Ayshford is a chapel, for which an endowment has been charged upon the estate. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A priory for Augustine canons was founded at Leigh, thence called Canonsleigh, in the parish, in the reign of Henry II., by William de Claville: it was originally dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. John the Evangelist; and there is now, at Exeter, a deed dated prior to 1247, to which is appended the seal of the convent, representing the Virgin Mary and St. John. In 1284, the establishment was surrendered to Maud, Countess of Gloucester and Hereford, who converted it into a nunnery, and re-dedicated it to St. Etheldreda, from which circumstance it is in some ancient records called Mynchynleye; and in 1286 the abbess obtained the grant of a weekly market. It continued to flourish till the Dissolution, when its revenues were estimated at £202. 15. 3.: the remains consist principally of the porter's lodge, which is entire, and the ancient gateway, in which is a fine Norman arch. Attached to the priory were the chapels of St. Thomas and All Saints: at Westleigh was a chapel dedicated to the Holy Trinity, now converted into two cottages; there was also a church in honour of St. Theobald, long since razed to the ground; and the remains of an ancient chapel are discernible on the farm of Fenacre, near the site of the abbey. The water of a spring at Ayshford possesses properties similar to the sulphureous waters of Harrogate, in the county of York.

BURLESTON, a parish, in the union of DORCHESTER, hundred of PIDDLETOWN, Dorchester division of DORSET, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from Dorchester; containing 65 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 364 acres, and is situated on the river Piddle, which skirts the southern side of the village. The living is a rectory, united to that of Admiston, and valued in the king's books at £3. 17. 1. There is a national school.

BURLEY (HOLY CROSS), a parish, in the union of OAKHAM, hundred of ALSTOE, county of RUTLAND, 2 miles (N. E. by N.) from Oakham; containing 252 inhabitants. The manor came, by purchase, into the possession of Villiers, the first Duke of Buckingham, who greatly enlarged and embellished the mansion, in which he successively entertained James I. and Charles I., with their respective courts. This stately edifice, on the breaking out of the civil war, was garrisoned by a small body of parliamentary troops, who, unable to sustain an attack of the royalists, set fire to the house, which was burnt to the ground; the site is now occupied by an elegant modern mansion. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 13. 1½.; net income, £350; patron and impropiator, G. Finch, Esq. A school on the national system is principally supported by Mr. Finch.

BURLEY, a tything, in the parish and union of RINGWOOD, N. division of the hundred of NEW FOREST, Ringwood and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (E.) from Ringwood; containing, with the ville of Bistern-Closes, and the extra-parochial place of Burley-Lodge, &c., 571 inhabitants. A species of concrete stone, called Burley rock, is found in great abundance, and is quarried for the foundations of houses. A church, dedicated to St. John, has been built at an expense of £2400, including £1000 for the endowment; patron, Bishop of Winchester. There is a place of worship for Independents. A school has an endowment of £3 per annum, and a national school-house has been built.

BURLEY, with HEADINGLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of ST. PETER, liberty of the borough of LEEDS, locally in the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, 2 miles (W. by N.) from Leeds; containing 4768 inhabitants. The hamlet of Burley consists of various detached houses and pleasing villas; the population is chiefly employed in the manufacture of woollen-cloths and stuffs. On some rising ground, between this place and Headingley, are the Leeds Zoological and Botanical gardens. The air is salubrious, and the environs abound with richly diversified scenery.

BURLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of OTLEY, Upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, 2½ miles (W. by N.) from Otley; containing 1736 inhabitants. This chapelry comprises 3190 acres, of which about one-half is uninclosed and uncultivated;

the surface is boldly varied by hill and dale, and the scenery is in many parts highly picturesque, and beautifully diversified with wood and water. Greenholme, the seat of Jonas Whitaker, Esq., is a handsome mansion. The village is situated in the vale of the Wharfe (the river flowing on the east), under the lofty acclivity of Rombald's moor: the inhabitants are chiefly employed in the cotton manufacture, for which there are two extensive mills: the worsted manufacture is also carried on upon a limited scale, and there are a scribbling-mill and a corn-mill. The chapel, a small structure, erected about the year 1630, being inadequate to the wants of the increasing population, was rebuilt in 1842, upon a larger scale, at a cost of about £1700, raised by subscription, aided by grants from the Incorporated and Ripon Diocesan Societies: it is in the early English style, with a handsome spire, and lighted on the north and south sides by twelve lancet windows of ground glass, and on the east by a beautifully painted window, very finely designed. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £80. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. A school is supported by annual donations from Messrs. Greenwood and Whitaker; and a spacious schoolroom, in connexion with the Church, was erected, in 1838, for 400 children, at an expense of £400, by subscription, aided by a grant of £100 from the National Society. William Vavasour, in 1642, left three acres of land; and there are also some other bequests for the poor.

BURLEY-DAM, a chapelry, in the parish of ACTON, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 3½ miles (W. by S.) from Audlem. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £100; patron, Viscount Combermere.

BURLEY-LODGE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of RINGWOOD, N. division of the hundred of NEW FOREST, Ringwood and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 21 inhabitants.

BURLINGHAM (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLOFIELD, E. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Acle; containing 214 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Norwich to Yarmouth, and comprises by measurement 743 acres, of which 528 are arable, and 214 pasture and plantation. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Burlingham-St. Edmund annexed, valued in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of Mrs. C. Burroughes: the tithes have been commuted for £296. 15., and there is a good glebe-house, with about 11 acres of land. The church has a square embattled tower, and in it are the remains of a carved screen, with representations of the Apostles. A school is supported by subscription.

BURLINGHAM (ST. EDMUND), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLOFIELD, E. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. W.) from Acle; containing 98 inhabitants. It comprises about 645 acres, of which 623 are arable, and 22 wood and pasture. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Burlingham-St. Andrew, and valued in the king's books at £12: the tithes have been commuted for £207. 11., and the glebe consists of about 11 acres. The church, which is chiefly in the early English style, has a square embattled tower; the nave is separated from the chancel by the remains of a beautiful carved screen, which, as well as the pulpit, is highly gilt; the southern entrance is through a decorated Norman doorway, and there is another on the north, now stopped up. The rector supports a small school.

BURLINGHAM (St. PETER), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLOFIELD, E. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Acle; containing 91 inhabitants. It is situated on the great road leading from Norwich to Yarmouth, and comprises 399 acres, of which 275 are arable, and 124 pasture and plantation. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5, and in the gift of H. N. Burroughes, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £148. 13., with a glebe of 10 acres; besides which a rent-charge of £3. 12. is paid from this parish to the incumbent of Fishley. The church is chiefly in the decorated style, and has a circular tower, the upper part of which is octagonal: there are neat monuments to members of the Burroughes family, who reside at the Hall, a handsome building, situated in a tastefully laid out park.

BURLINGTON, YORK.—See BRIDLINGTON.

BURMARSH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and liberty of ROMNEY-MARSH, though locally in the hundred of WORTH, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Hythe; containing 130 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £220. The church is a neat edifice of stone, with a square embattled tower.

BURMINGTON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of SHIPSTON-UPON-STOUR, Brails division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.) from Shipston; containing 188 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the borders of Gloucestershire and a detached portion of the county of Worcester, and is intersected by the road from Birmingham to Oxford; it comprises by measurement 764 acres, and the river Stour flows along its western boundary. The living is a rectory; net income, £197; patrons, Warden and Fellows of Merton College, Oxford. The church, having fallen into ruins, was rebuilt on a smaller scale, in 1693. A school is supported by subscription, and the poor have the interest of a small sum left by J. Court, Esq.

BURN, a township, in the parish of BRAYTON, union of SELBY, Lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Selby; containing 281 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 2370 acres: the new line of road from Doncaster to Selby passes through the village, near which is the Selby canal. The Hon. E. Petre is improPRIATOR. An endowment of £7 per annum, for instruction, was given by George Ellis, in 1711, and Edward Goodwin, in 1743.

BURNAGE, a township, in the parish of MANCHESTER, union of CHORLTON, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from Manchester; containing 489 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 610 acres.

BURNASTON, a hamlet, in the parish of ETWALL, union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Derby; containing 143 inhabitants.

BURNBY (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of POCKLINGTON, Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Pocklington; containing 110 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1700 acres, of which equal portions are arable and meadow, and about 300 acres wold land, with a small quantity of wood: the soil is generally a rich clay, the surface undulated, and the scenery in many situations very picturesque. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 15.; net income, £318; patron, Duke of Devonshire. The church is a small ancient fabric, with a Norman bell-gable and door at the west end.

BURNESIDE, a chapelry, in the parish, union, and ward, of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Kendal; comprising the townships of Strickland-Kettle and Strickland-Roger, and containing 878 inhabitants. This place is pleasantly situated on the river Kent, which flows through the village, separating it into two parts, connected by a bridge; and the chapelry comprises 5399a. 3r. 13p., of which 3133 acres are arable, 600 meadow and pasture, 65 woodland and plantations, and the remainder common and waste. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £109; patrons, the Landowners; improPRIATORS, Warden and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The chapel was rebuilt, in 1826, at an expense of £1300, of which £900 were raised by subscription, and the remainder by a rate. The school was enlarged, pursuant to the will of Mr. Alan Fisher, dated Oct. 28th, 1781, whereby he endowed it with £600; this was augmented with a gift of £100 by the will of Mr. Joseph Harling, in 1802; and the sums, having been invested in the funds, produce an income of about £40.

BURNESTON (St. LAMBERT), a parish, in the union of BEDALE, wapentake of HALLIKELD, N. riding of YORK; containing 1494 inhabitants, of whom 351 are in the township of Burneston, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Bedale. The parish, which is situated between the river Swale and the Ure, in the rich and fruitful vale of Mowbray, comprises the five townships of Burneston, Carthorp, Gatenby, Theakstone, and Exelby with Leeming and Newton; the whole forming an area of 7351a. 2r. 37p., of which there are in Burneston township 726 acres of arable, and 400 of meadow and pasture. The soil for the most part is of good quality, and favourable for the growth of wheat, barley, and turnips; and the surface is level, having itself no picturesque beauty, but commanding a view of the Wensleydale and Masham hills on the west, and of the Hambleton hills on the east. The township belongs principally to Lord Rokeby and J. V. Dent, Esq., the latter of whom is lord of the manor. The magistrates acting for the district hold their sittings at the York-Gate inn, in Leeming-Lane. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £37. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Duke of Cleveland, to whom, and W. R. L. Sergeantson and E. J. Carter, Esqrs., the impropriation belongs: the great tithes have been commuted for £772. 2. 6., and the vicarial for £600, and there are $3\frac{1}{2}$ acres of glebe. The first church was built in the time, and partly by the bounty, of Ribald and Hugh Fitzhugh; but the rude structure of the Norman founders gave place, probably about the close of Edward III.'s reign, to the present fine and spacious structure, of which the choir is both tasteful and beautiful. The ancient chapel of ease at Leeming has been lately rebuilt. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

Matthew Robinson, by deed dated in 1688, assigned a rent-charge of £43. 5., for the endowment of a school, and of an almshouse, which he had previously erected; other benefactions have been added, and the present income is about £67. Sunday schools for boys and girls are chiefly supported by the vicar; and an annual sum of about £20, arising from land, is distributed among the poor.

BURNETT (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and hundred of KEYNSHAM, E. division of SOMERSET, 2 miles (S. by E.) from Keynsham; comprising 607 acres by measurement. The village is situated on the river Chew, and was formerly part of the manor of Keynsham, which, with the advowson, was purchased by John Whitson, Esq., alderman, who assigned it in trust to feoffees, for the endowment of the "Red Maids' school," at Bristol. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 10. 7½., and in the gift of the Feoffees: the tithes have been commuted for £85. 8., and the glebe comprises 29¼ acres. The church is a neat edifice.

BURNHAM (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of ETON, hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Eton; containing 2284 inhabitants, and comprising the liberties of Upper Boveney, Britwell, East Burnham, Cippenham, and Town with Wood, and the chapelry of Lower Boveney. This place, which gives name to the hundred, is of very remote antiquity, and appears to have been the residence of the kings of Mercia during the heptarchy, and also of their successors of the Norman line after the Conquest, who had a palace near Cippenham, from which is dated the charter granted to Richard, Earl of Cornwall, who, in 1165, founded an abbey here for nuns of the order of St. Augustine, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, amounted to £91. 5. 11. The parish is bounded on the west by the river Thames: the substratum is chiefly clay, in some parts overlaid with beds of diluvial gravel. The village is pleasantly situated on rising ground, about two miles east of the river, and near it has been opened a brick-field, from which were obtained the bricks for the erection of the bridge carried over the Thames, near Maidenhead, as a viaduct for the Great Western railway. There are some extensive market-gardens, and a considerable part of the female population is employed in making lace by hand. A court leet for the manor is held every third year; and a statute fair on October 2nd. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Eton College; impropiators, Sir C. H. Palmer, Bart., and others. The church is a handsome structure. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a school, in union with the National Society, is situated a quarter of a mile from the village. The only remains of the abbey are some ruinous walls, converted into a barn; part of the abbot's dwelling-house; and the fish-pond, now attached to the vicarage garden. There are also the remains of an ancient encampment in the woodland, called Burnham Beeches. Robert Aldrich, Bishop of Carlisle in the reign of Henry VIII., was a native of the place.

BURNHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of MALDON, hundred of DENGIE, S. division of ESSEX, 12 miles (S. E.) from Maldon; containing 1735 inhabitants. This place takes its name from a small stream running near the church, and comprises 4277a. 3r. 16p.:

the village is situated on the northern bank of the river Crouch, near its estuary, and has a commodious quay, up to which vessels of 250 tons' burthen can come; and there are vessels of 1000 tons' aggregate burthen belonging to it, employing 100-seamen. The oyster-beds, both in the river and on the coast, are extremely productive. The fishery is held under lease from Lady St. John Mildmay by the Burnham Company, and, in addition to the home consumption, a considerable quantity of oysters are exported to Holland and Belgium: about 300 persons are engaged in the fishery. The living is a vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £22. 13. 4., with a net income of £558: it is in the patronage of Lady St. John Mildmay, to whom also the impropriation belongs. The church, built in 1525, stands about a mile from the village, on an elevated site; its altar-piece is embellished with a good painting of the Lord's Supper; and the pulpit and font are elaborately carved. Divine service is also performed in a national schoolroom, by license of the Bishop. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and the national school is endowed with about £80 per annum. Several Roman coins, fragments of ancient masonry, and urns containing burnt ashes, have been found on a farm at the edge of the marsh. Burnham formerly conferred the inferior title of Baron on the Fitzwalter family.

BURNHAM, a hamlet, in the parish of THORNTON-CURTIS, union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, N. division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 75 inhabitants.

BURNHAM, a hamlet, in the parish of HAXEY, union of GAINSBOROUGH, W. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 160 inhabitants.

BURNHAM (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of BEMFSTONE, E. division of SOMERSET, 9¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Axbridge; containing, with the hamlets of Edithmead and Highbridge, and part of the tything of Aston-Morris, 1469 inhabitants. It lies on the coast of the Bristol Channel, and the fine sandy beach has induced many respectable families to reside here during the summer. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 11. 10½.; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Wells. The great tithes have been commuted for £190, and the vicarial for £635; the glebe comprises 2 acres, to which is attached a glebe-house. The church, dedicated in 1316, is a spacious edifice, with a lofty tower, and has been lately enlarged by the addition of 471 sittings; it contains a fine altar-piece, of white marble, in the Grecian style, designed by Inigo Jones for the chapel of the intended palace of Charles II. at Whitehall, and afterwards placed in Westminster Abbey, by the dean and chapter of which it was presented to Dr. King, Bishop of Rochester, for many years incumbent of this parish, who erected it in the church at his own expense. There is a school on the national plan.

BURNHAM-DEEPDALE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of BROTHERCROSS, W. division of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (N. W.) from Burnham-Westgate; containing 109 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 1038 acres, of which 630 are arable, 55 woodland and plantations, and the remainder marsh, for draining which last an act was obtained in 1821, whereby 250 acres have been inclosed by a wall, 70 feet broad at the base, and 10 feet high, to protect it from the sea. The village, which joins the marsh, is sheltered on the south by a range of hills clothed with plantations. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of the Trustees of the late Mr. Blyth: the tithes have been commuted for £250, and the glebe contains 27 acres, to which is attached a handsome house, erected in 1840. The church is chiefly in the early English style, and consists of a nave and chancel, with a circular tower; its northern aisle was taken down in 1796. It once contained an ancient font, on which were engraved hieroglyphic characters, emblematic of the Saxon months; but, by being removed during the progress of some alteration of the edifice, about 20 years ago, it was accidentally broken. A school for girls, on the national system, is supported by the incumbent. On the shore are various artificial eminences, the supposed tombs of Saxons and Danes who fell in battle in the vicinity; and at a short distance are the vestiges of a fortification, probably raised by the Saxons, after the sanguinary battle between them and the Scots and Picts, at Stamford, in Lincolnshire.

BURNHAM, EAST, a liberty, in the parish and hundred of BURNHAM, union of ETON, county of BUCKINGHAM, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Eton; containing 312 inhabitants.

BURNHAM-MARKET, or BURNHAM-WESTGATE (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of BROTHERCROSS, W. division of NORFOLK, 36½ miles (N. W.) from Norwich, and 120 (N. N. E.) from London; containing 1126 inhabitants. This place derives its name from the small river Burn, on which it is situated, and takes the adjunct Westgate to distinguish it from adjoining parishes, of the same name. It is pleasantly situated in a fertile valley, environed by a range of hills on the west and south, within 3 miles of the sea; and comprises 3047*a. 2r. 1p.*, of which about 2533 acres are arable, 184 pasture and meadow, 169 woodland, and 68 waste. The town, the lower part of which is in the parishes of Burnham Sutton and Ulph, has experienced considerable improvement of late years, though its market has been discontinued, and the buildings appropriated to that purpose converted into dwellings; the houses are in general well built, and the inhabitants amply supplied with water. A small manufactory for iron and brass has been established, and hempen cloth is prepared to a limited extent. Fairs for toys are held on Easter Tuesday and Wednesday, and Aug. 1st and 2nd. The county magistrates hold petty-sessions here on the last Saturday in the month; and courts baron are occasionally held. The LIVING is a rectory, with the medieties of the consolidated rectories of Burnham Norton and Ulph united, valued jointly in the king's books at £20. 16. 8., and in the patronage of Christ-Church College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for £722, of which £361 are payable to the rector, and £361 to the college; the glebe comprises 84 acres, and there is a rent-charge of £38. 5. payable to the rector of Burnham-Sutton. The church is a neat structure of stone and flint, chiefly in the early style, consisting of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, with a square embattled tower, ornamented with sculptured figures: in the north aisle is a whole-length figure of a priest, rudely sculptured in stone. The site of another parochial church, dedicated to St. Edmund, is now occupied by a shop. There is a place of worship for Independents. Mr. John Wilmot bequeathed £100 for instruction, which lay dormant for many years, and accumulated to the sum of £237, now applied to the support of a national school, held in a neat building, erected in 1837, and capable of accommodating 110 children. There are almshouses for aged poor, and some bequests for charitable purposes.

BURNHAM-NORTON (St. Margaret), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of BROTHERCROSS, W. division of NORFOLK, 1¼ mile (N.) from Burnham-Westgate; containing 166 inhabitants. It comprises 3226*a. 3r. 36p.*, of which about 607 acres are arable, 506 pasture and meadow, and 2000 woodland, salt-marshes, common, &c. The living, consolidated with that of Burnham-Ulph, is a rectory divided into medieties, partly annexed, with Overy, to Sutton, and valued in the king's books, exclusively of Overy, at £17. 10.; and partly annexed to Westgate, valued together at £20. 16. 8. The tithes have been commuted for £253, and the glebe comprises 32¼ acres. The church, which is situated about half a mile to the south of the village, near a fertile valley, contains portions of the several styles of English architecture, and has a circular tower: there are remains of a beautiful carved screen; the font is Norman. A school, chiefly for girls, is supported by subscription. A Carmelite monastery was founded about 1241, by Sir Ralph de Hemenhale and Sir William de Calthorp, Knts., the revenue of which, at the time of the Dissolution, was granted to William, Lord Cobham, and estimated at £2. 5. 4. The remains of the entrance gateway, which has a fine groined roof, are still to be seen. Robert Bale, the historian, was prior of this house, and, dying in the reign of Henry VII., was interred here.

BURNHAM-OVERY (St. Clement), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of BROTHERCROSS, W. division of NORFOLK, 1½ mile (N. E.) from Burnham-Westgate; containing 613 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the coast, and comprises 2298*a. 2r. 9p.*, of which about 986 acres are arable, 1062 pasture and marsh, 155 woodland and water, and 77 salt-marsh and common. On a creek which crosses the marshes to the ocean, and is navigable for vessels drawing 8½ feet of water, is a small port, within the jurisdiction of that of Wells, and where a considerable trade is carried on in corn, coal, and malt, as well as in oysters, of which there is an excellent bed in the offing. There is an ancient cross in the village, which, with the church, stands on an eminence. The living is a vicarage, united, with the medieties of the consolidated rectories of Burnham Norton and Ulph, to Burnham-Sutton, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Crown. The great tithes have been commuted for £244, and the vicarial for £155: the glebe comprises 18½ acres. The church is chiefly in the early English style, and was re-pewed in 1837, when 120 additional sittings were obtained. There was once another church in the same inclosure, dedicated to St. Andrew, no remains of which now exist. A school is supported by subscription. Peterstone House stands on the site of an hospital and chapel, dedicated to St. Peter de Patra, and anciently belonging to a religious community.

BURNHAM-SUTTON (St. ALBERT), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of BROTHERCROSS, W. division of NORFOLK, adjoining Burnham-Westgate. The joint parishes of Burnham Ulph and Sutton contain 355 inhabitants, and comprise 1452*a.* 3*r.* 28*p.*, of which about 1402 acres are arable, 54 pasture and meadow, and 2372 woodland. The living of Sutton is a rectory, to which are annexed the medietyes of the rectories of Norton and Ulph, with Overy, valued jointly in the king's books, exclusively of Overy, at £17. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The tithes of Ulph and Sutton have been commuted for £380; the glebe comprises 14 acres, and the rector is entitled to a sum of £38. 5. from the parish of Burnham-Market: the incumbent of Burnham-Thorpe has four acres of glebe here. The church is in ruins. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BURNHAM-THORPE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of BROTHERCROSS, W. division of NORFOLK, 1½ mile (E. by S.) from Burnham-Westgate; containing 396 inhabitants. This place anciently belonged to the Calthorp family, of whom Sir William de Calthorp, in the 55th of Henry III., obtained a grant of a market to be held on Saturday, and a fair on the eve, day, and morrow of St. Peter ad Vincula, both of which have been long discontinued. The parish comprises 2328*a.* 1*r.* 23*p.* The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 10., and in the gift of the Earl of Orford: the tithes have been commuted for £697, and the glebe comprises 30 acres, to which is attached a commodious and handsome house, erected by the Rev. D. Everard. A rent-charge of £8. 15. per annum is paid to the rector of Sutton and Ulph. The church is chiefly in the decorated and later English styles, with a square embattled tower; in the chancel is a fine monument of brass to Sir William de Calthorp, also a monument to the Rev. Edmund Nelson, father of Lord Nelson, the renowned naval commander, who was born here, on the 29th of Sept., 1758, during the incumbency of his father. There is a national school.

BURNHAM-ULPH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of BROTHERCROSS, W. division of NORFOLK, adjoining Burnham-Westgate, and containing, with Burnham-Sutton, 355 inhabitants. The living, consolidated with that of Burnham-Norton, is a rectory, divided into medietyes, partly annexed, with Overy, to Sutton, and partly to Westgate. The church is now as a chapel to Westgate.

BURNISTON, a township, in the parish of SCALBY, union of SCARBOROUGH, PICKERING lythe, N. riding of YORK, 3¼ miles (N. W.) from Scarborough; containing 349 inhabitants. It is situated on the eastern coast, and comprises by computation 1900 acres: the village is on the road from Scarborough to Whitby. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BURNLEY, a market-town and chapelry, and the head of a union, in the parish of WHALLEY, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 25 miles (N.) from Manchester, 53 (E. N. E.) from Liverpool, and 210 (N. N. W.) from London; containing 10,699 inhabitants. This place, anciently Brunley, derives its name from the river Burn, on which it is situated, near the confluence of that stream with the river Calder; and, from the numerous coins, fragments of pottery, and urns containing ashes and burnt bones, that have been found in the neighbourhood, is supposed to have been a Roman station. Several Saxon remains have also been discovered; and at a short distance to the east of the town is a place called Saxifield, said to have been the scene of a battle in the year 597. About the same period Paulinus is stated to have visited Burnley, on a mission for converting the natives to Christianity; and the remains of an ancient cross, erected to commemorate his preaching, still exist. The town is pleasantly situated on a tongue of land formed by the Burn and Calder; the greater part is of very recent erection, and the houses are neatly built of freestone found in the neighbourhood. The streets are well paved, and lighted with gas, under an act obtained in 1819, for the improvement of the town; and the inhabitants are abundantly supplied with water. The barracks, standing in the adjoining township of Habergham-Eaves, were erected, in 1819, at an expense of £5500, of which sum £2500 were subscribed by the inhabitants. The trade was formerly confined to the manufacture of woollen-cloth and worsted goods; but that of cotton has been introduced, for the spinning, weaving, and printing of which large establishments have been erected. Coal, flag-stone, and slate, are found in abundance within a short distance. The Leeds and Liverpool canal, which winds nearly round the town, has contributed greatly to the promotion of its trade. The market, granted in the 22nd of Edward I. to Henry de Lacy, Earl of Lincoln, is on Monday and Saturday, the former being the principal; and on every alternate Monday is a market for cattle, established in January, 1819. Fairs are held on March 6th, Easter-eve, May 9th and 13th, July 10th, and Oct. 11th, for horses, cloth, and pedlery. Petty-sessions for the division are held here, and an act for the recovery of small debts was passed in 1841.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy; net income, £770; patron, R. Towneley Parker, Esq.; impropriator, Earl Howe. The chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, was erected soon after the Conquest, but having been rebuilt, and enlarged at different times, combines various styles of architecture: it is a spacious structure, and contains several monuments of the Towneley family, among which is one to the memory of Charles Towneley, Esq., a celebrated patron of the fine arts, whose collection of marbles was purchased by the British Museum for £20,000. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school was founded in the reign of Edward VI., and endowed, in 1578, by Sir Robert Ingham; the endowment has been considerably augmented by benefactions, and now produces about £130 per annum: the school has an interest in thirteen scholarships, founded in Brasenose College, Oxford, by Dr. Nowell, Dean of St. Paul's, London, in 1572. The Rev. W. Whitaker, D.D., the learned master of St. John's College, Cambridge, received the rudiments of his education in the school. National schools have been established: an institution for the relief of poor married women in child-birth was commenced in 1819; and there is a Strangers' Friend Society. The interest of £1244. 15. three per cent. consols., given by Mrs. Elizabeth Peel, in 1800, and of £450 by Mrs. Thompson, is expended in clothing. The union of Burnley comprises 26 townships and chapelries in the parish, and contains a population of 54,192.

BURNOP, with HAMSTEELS, a township, in the parish and union of LANCHESTER, W. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM; containing 154 inhabitants. Burnop, which probably derives its name from "Brunebop," the gill or hollow of the Brune or Browney, lies on that river; Hamsteels is situated across the water westward nearer Esh. The improper tithes have been commuted for £81. 7. 10. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BURNOPFIELD, a hamlet, in the township of LINTZ-GREEN, chapelry of TANFIELD, parish of CHESTER-LE-STREET, union of LANCHESTER, Middle division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 7 miles (S. W.) from Gateshead. The village stands on an eminence commanding a fine view of the vale of the Derwent, and of Gibside on the eastern bank of the river, and the air is remarkable for its salubrity. Burnopfield House is the property and residence of John Watson, Esq. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Friarside, an old and picturesque ruin, is in the chapelry.

BURNSALL (St. WILFRID), a parish, in the union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Skipton; containing 2726 inhabitants, of whom 284 are in the township of Burnsall with Thorpe-sub-Montem. The parish comprises the townships of Appletree-wick, Burnsall with Thorpe-sub-Montem, Cracoe, Hartlington, and Hetton with Boardley; and the chapelries of Rilston, and Coniston with Kilnsay; the whole forming an area, by computation, of 25,950 acres, of which 2680 are in the manors of Burnsall and Thorpe, of which Sir Charles Tempest, Bart. is lord. The soil, in the valley, is rich, but on the high grounds, poor turbary earth, with heath; the surface is varied, and the scenery, though mountainous, is picturesque and romantic. There are three factories, two for cotton and one for wool, employing about 120 hands. The village of Burnsall is situated on the river Wharfe, over which is a bridge of three arches, rebuilt in 1827; and that of Thorpe in a deep glen beneath the mountains of Thorpe Fell and Burnsall Fell, and in which is a singular cavern called Knave Knoll Hole, supposed to have been the abode of banditti. The parish, it is probable, anciently formed part of that of Linton, to the rector of which it still pays a modus in lieu of corn-tithes. The living is a rectory in two mediocrities, valued together in the king's books at £36; net income of the first, £315; patron, Rev. J. Graham; and of the second, £276; patron, Earl of Craven. The church is an ancient structure, partly in the Norman, and partly in the English, style, with a square embattled tower: on each side of the entrance of the choir are a pulpit and reading-desk, in which each of the portionists alternately officiates. The grammar school was founded on the 26th of May, 1602, by Sir William Craven, Knt., who endowed it with a rent-charge of £20, to which, on 16th of June, 1624, Dame Elizabeth Craven added a bequest of £200. Sir William improved the church, in 1612, built four bridges, for the repair of which and the highways he left a rent-charge of £8, and was a great benefactor to the parish, of which he was a native and resident. Various beautiful pieces of quartz and other variegated fossils, and spar, are dug from Greenhow hill, which has been a rich lead-mining district.

BURNTWOOD, a chapelry, in the parish of St. MICHAEL, LICHFIELD, union of LICHFIELD, S. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Lichfield; containing, with the townships of Edgehill and Woodhouses, 749 inhabitants. About 100 persons are employed in the manufacture of nails. At a short distance, on the south of the parish, passes the Wyrley and Essington canal. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £78; patron, Vicar of St. Mary, Lichfield; appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Lichfield: the glebe contains about 6 acres. The chapel, which was erected in 1820, contains 250 sittings. A school is supported by a gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Ball. At Edial, in the chapelry, the celebrated Dr. Samuel Johnson resided, in 1736.

BURPHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of PRESTON (under Gilbert's act), hundred of POLING, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Arundel; containing 280 inhabitants. It is bounded on the west by the river Arun, and comprises by measurement 2723 acres; the surface is hilly, and near the church is a high embankment, supposed to be of Roman origin, commanding a fine view of Arundel Castle and the windings of the river. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 12. 6.; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Chichester: the great tithes have been commuted for £295. 10., those belonging to the Prebendary of Highley for £27, and the vicarial for £149. 8. The church is principally of Norman architecture, and was originally cruciform, but the south transept has been taken down; the arch opening into it is ornamented with zigzag mouldings. A neat school-house was built by subscription, in 1839. On the downs are numerous barrows, several of which have been opened, and found to contain coins, skeletons, and military weapons; and at Peppering, near Arundel, were discovered, in 1820, near the foot of the downs, in a bed of gravelly loam resting upon chalk, about 3 feet from the surface, and 80 above the level of the sea, the bones, a tusk, and some grinders of an elephant.

BURRALS, a township, in the parish of APPLEBY-ST. LAWRENCE, East ward and union, county of WEST-MORLAND, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. by W.) from Appleby; containing 97 inhabitants. The township is supposed to have been anciently crossed by the borough walls of Appleby, and hence, by contraction, its name; it contains a great quantity of limestone.

BURREL, with COWLING, a township, in the parish of BEDALE, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANG-EAST, N. riding of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. W. by W.) from Bedale; containing 138 inhabitants. The township comprises 463a. 2r. 3p.: the former place has a small village, and the latter is a hamlet, in which is situated Cowling Hall.

BURRINGHAM, EAST, a chapelry, in the parish of BOTTESFORD, union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, E. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $10\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Glandford-Brigg; containing 624 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Here is a ferry over the Trent to Althorpe.

BURRINGTON (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of SOUTH MOLTON, hundred of NORTH TAWTON, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (N.

w. by w.) from Chumleigh; containing 1244 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Taw, by which it is bounded on the north and east, and the road from Exeter to Barnstaple passes near the river, through a richly-wooded district: it comprises by measurement 500 acres; and there are quarries of stone, used for repairing roads and for rough buildings. A fair is held on Trinity-Monday. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 11. 3.; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. Buckingham, LL.B.; inpropriator, M. Toat, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £301. 10., and the vicarial for £260; the glebe comprises 70 acres. The church is a very ancient structure, with a tower on the north side. There is a place of worship for Bryanites; also two small schools, one having a donation of £7, and the other one of £5, per annum.

BURRINGTON (St. GEORGE), a parish, in the union of LUDLOW, hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Leintwardine; containing 230 inhabitants. This parish, one of the most northerly in the county, being partly bounded on the east and north by Shropshire, is situated on the banks of the river Teme, which is celebrated for its fine trout and graylings, and forms a beautiful feature in the diversified and interesting scenery of the district. The number of acres is estimated at 2850; the soil is a heavy loam, approaching to clay; the surface is well wooded, and watered by many streams; the arable portion is elevated and undulated, and the meadows are flat, and frequently covered with water. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, valued in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £160, and the glebe consists of 44 acres. The church is an ancient structure. A school is endowed by Mrs. Knight.

BURRINGTON (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of BRENT with WRINGTON, E. division of SOMERSET, 12 miles (S. W.) from Bristol; containing 531 inhabitants. It is situated in a fertile district, and comprises 2009*a*. 2*r*. 9*p*., of which about 309 acres are arable, 662 pasture, and upwards of 1000 uncultivated down: the village is romantically situated on the northern side of the Mendip range of hills. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Inhabitants, subject to the approval of the rector of Wrington: the rector's tithes have been commuted for £33, and the glebe comprises 17½ acres; the perpetual curate's have been commuted for £147, and his glebe comprises 9½ acres. The church contains some fine screen-work. Two schools are supported by the principal inhabitants. An ancient catacomb was discovered, in 1795, containing about 50 skeletons, and is supposed to have been a place of sepulture in early times.

BURROUGH, or BURROW-ON-THE-HILL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of GARTREE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (S.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 149 inhabitants. This place has been identified by Camden with the Roman station Vernometum, and he also infers, from the meaning of the word, that here was a temple to a heathen deity: the summit of Burrough Hill exhibits traces of an encampment, the lines of which inclose an area of eighteen acres, now under cultivation.

The parish comprises by measurement 1500 acres; the hilly parts contain red sandstone, which is quarried for building and the repair of roads, and in which numerous fossil shells are found. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of Mrs. M. Barnaby; net income, £433; the glebe consists of about 75 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church, which is supposed to have been erected about the fourteenth century, contains a very ancient circular font. Cheselden, the surgeon and anatomist, was born here.

BURROUGH-GREEN (St. AUGUSTINE), a parish, in the union of NEWMARKET, hundred of RADFIELD, county of CAMBRIDGE, 5½ miles (S.) from Newmarket; containing 452 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2216 acres, of which 1747 are arable, 266 pasture, and 175 wood; the surface is diversified with gentle elevations terminating in a high ridge in the centre of the parish, which commands very extensive views: the soil is in general clayey and wet, except in the vicinity of Newmarket Heath, where it is dry and chalky, and of very inferior quality. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 10., and in the patronage of Thomas Redhead, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £527. 14. 10., and the glebe comprises 62 acres, to which there is a good glebe-house. Schools are supported by an endowment. Editha, consort of Edward the Confessor, had a palace here.

BURROW, a township, in the parish of TUNSTALL, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, union and N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2½ miles (S. by E.) from Kirkby-Lonsdale; containing 177 inhabitants.

BURROW-ASH, a hamlet, in the parish of OCKBROOK, union of SHARDLOW, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 4¾ miles (E. by S.) from Derby. The village is indebted for its rise and support to the extensive mills erected for spinning and preparing lace-thread. One of the intermediate stations of the Midland-Counties' railway is situated here.

BURROWGATE, a division, in the parish and union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND; containing 712 inhabitants.

BURSCOUGH, a township, in the parish and union of ORMSKIRK, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3¾ miles (N. E. by N.) from Ormskirk; containing 2228 inhabitants. A priory of Black canons was founded in the time of Richard I., by Robert Fitz-Henry, Lord of Latham, and dedicated to St. Nicholas: at the Dissolution there were a prior, five brethren, and forty servants, and the revenue was estimated at £129. 1. 10. Previously to that period, it was the burial-place of the noble family of Stanley, and the cemetery, in which stands the mutilated central arch of the church, the only relic of the conventual buildings, has subsequently been used as a place of interment by Roman Catholic families. There is a place of worship for Roman Catholics at Burscough Hall. A school is endowed with £18. 15. 4. per annum.

BURSLEDON, a chapelry, in the parish of HOUND, union of SOUTH STONEHAM, hundred of BISHOP'S-WALTHAM, Southampton and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4¾ miles (E. S. E.) from Southampton; containing 548 inhabitants. The chapelry lies at the head of the estuary of the river Hamble, which is crossed by a bridge on the road from Southampton to Portsmouth. Several large vessels have been built for the navy, the creek being very commodious for that purpose, and the water deep enough for eighty-gun ships. The village is irregularly built, on the bank of the river. The chapel, dedicated to St. Leonard, has recently been enlarged; and a national school was built in 1838.

BURSLEM (St. JOHN), a market-town and parish, forming, with WOLSTANTON, a poor law union, in the hundred of NORTH PIREHILL, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Newcastle, 19 (N.) from Stafford, and 151 (N. E.) from London; containing, with the lordship of Hulton-Abbey, the hamlet of Sneyd, and the ville of Rushton-Grange, 16,091 inhabitants, of whom 12,631 are in the township of Burslem. In Domesday book this place is named Barcardeslim, but in subsequent records Burewardeslyme, signifying, according to the best opinion, "a bower or dwelling near the Lyme," in allusion to the Lyme woodlands which formerly separated Staffordshire from Cheshire. It has long been celebrated as the seat of the earthenware manufacture. Dr. Plot, in his Natural History of Staffordshire, published in 1686, first noticed it as the principal spot for carrying on this important branch of trade; but it is supposed, with great probability, to have been entitled to this distinction from the Saxon era, if not from the time of the Roman dominion in Britain. The abundance of coal, which the parish and neighbourhood yield, was, no doubt, a primary cause of its establishment here, as it still continues to be the main stay and support of it, mines of coal and iron-stone being very extensively worked. The manufactures, however, did not acquire any celebrity, and were wrought altogether from the native clays, till after the commencement of the eighteenth century, when the finer clays of Dorsetshire and Devonshire were introduced. The celebrated Josiah Wedgwood, who was born here, and commenced business about the year 1756, advanced the pottery wares to a higher degree of perfection and importance; and since his time the manufacture of porcelain has been established, and now occupies at least one-fourth of the industry and capital of the district. The Grand Trunk canal, which passes through the parish, and has a branch to the town, tends greatly to advance its prosperity: the work was commenced near Burslem in July, 1766, and completed in 1777. The town is for the most part situated on a gentle eminence, and contains several large manufactories of imposing appearance, and some handsome villas and residences within its immediate vicinity. An act of parliament was obtained in 1835 for regulating the market, establishing a police, and lighting the streets with gas. The town-hall, which stands in the centre of the spacious market-place, was erected by subscription in 1761, and is a handsome building, recently improved, and surmounted by a cupola and balustrade roof. The trustees of the market erected near it, in 1836, at an expense of about £5000, a large covered market for the butchers and other traders, which, standing in the middle of the town, and being faced with stone, and adorned with an elegant Doric portico, has a very ornamental appearance. Markets are held on Monday and Saturday, and four fairs annually. A stipendiary magistrate and general system of police for the parliamentary borough of Stoke-upon-Trent, in which Burslem is comprised, were introduced by an act passed in 1839.

The parish was formerly one of the chapelries within the large parish of Stoke, from which it was separated in 1807, and made a distinct parish, comprising about 3000 acres: the population has of late years prodigiously increased, and the villages of Brownhills, Longport, Sneyd, Hulton-Abbey, and Cobridge, are now nearly united. The LIVING is a rectory not in charge; net income, £455; patrons, the Representatives of the late William Adams, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. John, is a small brick building, erected in 1717, with an ancient tower of stone. An additional church, in the later English style, dedicated to St. Paul, and capable of holding more than 2000 persons, was erected by the Parliamentary Commissioners, in 1831, at an expense of £10,000, towards which £2000 were contributed by the parishioners and others: it stands near Longport, and has a cemetery of three acres. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £109; patron, Rector of Burslem. A church, in the later English style, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, has been erected at Cobridge, the cost of which, together with the endowment, has been defrayed by the rector, aided by grants from societies. There are places of worship belonging to Baptists, Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. A free school was founded by John Bourne, Esq., in 1748, and endowed with a house and a small farm; and a national school, near the parish church, was erected in 1817, at an expense of nearly £2000, and one contiguous to St. Paul's, in 1835, at a cost exceeding £500. The poor law union of Wolstanton and Burslem is under the care of 16 guardians, eight for Burslem and eight for Wolstanton, and contains a population of 32,669: the union workhouse is about two miles from Burslem, and is a very capacious structure.

BURSTALL (St. MARY), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of SAMFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Ipswich; containing 223 inhabitants. It is united to the vicarage of Bramford.

BURSTEAD, GREAT (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of BILLERICAY, hundred of BARSTABLE, S. division of ESSEX; comprising the market-town of Billericay, and containing 2168 inhabitants. This parish, which at the time of the Norman survey belonged to Odo, Bishop of Bayeux, is pleasantly situated on elevated ground, commanding a distant view of the river Thames, and comprises by measurement 3052 acres. The village had formerly a weekly market and an annual fair, granted by Henry III. to the abbot and brethren of Stratford abbey. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17. 6. 8.; patron, Rev. Edward Evans; impropiator, Lord Petre. The great tithes have been commuted for £268. 10., and the vicarial for £177. 10. The church is an ancient and spacious structure, and a prominent feature in the landscape; it contains some very handsome monuments to members of the Tyrell family and others. There is an episcopal chapel at Billericay, which was once a chapel of ease, and endowed with a chantry for a priest. A school for boys is endowed with land, producing £60 per annum; and a national school has been lately built. Blunt's Walls, about a mile north of the church, is supposed to have been a Roman station: there were formerly some earthworks, inclosing a space of about four acres, and various remains have been dug up.

BURSTEAD, LITTLE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BILLERICAY, hundred of BARSTABLE, S. division of ESSEX, 2 miles (S. by W.) from Billericay; containing 170 inhabitants. This parish, at the time of the Norman survey, belonged to the Bishop of London, and the chief manor, with the advowson of the rectory, is still the property of his successors. It comprises, by measurement 1829 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12: the tithes have been commuted for £350, and the glebe comprises 26 acres. The church is a small neat edifice. A national school has been established.

BURSTOCK (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of BEAMINSTER, hundred of WHITCHURCH-CANONICORUM, Bridport division of DORSET, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Beaminster; containing 307 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 19. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of John Bragge, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £170, and the glebe consists of about an acre and a half.

BURSTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DEPWADE, hundred of DISS, E. division of NORFOLK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Diss; containing 468 inhabitants, and comprising 1449a. 13p. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £470, and the glebe comprises 76 acres, with a parsonage-house erected in 1840, by the Rev. T. Frere. The church is a handsome edifice, in the decorated English style, with an embattled tower. A school is chiefly supported by the rector.

BURSTON, a small hamlet, in the parish of STONE, S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (S. E.) from Stone. One of the sons of Wulphere, king of Mercia, is said to have suffered martyrdom here.

BURSTOW (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union, and Second division of the hundred, of REIGATE, E. division of SURREY, 8 miles (S. E. by S.) from Reigate; containing 863 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £600, and there is a glebe of 43 acres. The church is chiefly in the early style, with a wooden tower and spire. The Independents have a place of worship at Outwoods; and a school is supported by subscription. Sir Edward Byshe, Garter King at Arms and Clarencieux in the time of Cromwell and at the Restoration, was born at Smallfield Place; and the Rev. John Flamsteed, astronomer-royal, was rector of Burstow, and was buried here in 1719.

BURSTWICK (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of PATRINGTON, S. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESSE, E. riding of YORK; containing 726 inhabitants, of whom 440 are in the township of Burstwick, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Hedon. The parish comprises the townships of Burstwick, or Burstwick-cum-Skeckling, and Ryhill-cum-Camerton, the former township having 3340 acres, chiefly set out in large farms. The northern part of the village is the ancient hamlet of Skeckling, and the manor of Burstwick, with its members, parks, and free warren, was anciently called the "Dominion of Holderness." The wife of Robert Bruce,

King of Scotland, was confined here, for some time, by order of Edward I. The living is annexed to the perpetual curacy of Skeckling: the tithes were commuted, in 1773, for land and a money payment. The church, principally in the later style, is a small ancient edifice, with an embattled tower at the west end. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists.

BURTHOLME, a township, in the parish of LANERCOST-ABBEY, union of BRAMPTON, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Brampton; containing 330 inhabitants. In this township are situated the ruins of Lanercost Abbey, founded by Robert de Vallibus, lord of Gilsland, and endowed in 1169: it suffered much from the Scots during many years, and never seems to have been in a flourishing condition: it was burnt by David II. on his march into England, previous to the battle of Durham, in 1346. At the Dissolution a prior and seven canons were resident here, the revenue amounting to £77. 7. 11.—See LANERCOST-ABBEY.

BURTHORPE.—See EAST-LEACH-MARTIN.

BURTON, a township, in the parish of TARVIN, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Second division of the hundred, of EDDISBURY, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Tarporley; containing 79 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £72. 5., of which £49. 11. 3. are payable to the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, and £22. 13. 9. to the vicar of the parish.

BURTON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, (formerly a market-town,) in the union, and Higher division of the hundred, of WIRRAL, S. division of the county of CHESTER; containing, with the townships of Burton and Puddington, 428 inhabitants, of whom 282 are in the township of Burton, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Great Neston. The parish is situated on the river Dee. The manor for many generations belonged to the Bishops of Lichfield and Coventry, of whom Bishop Alexander de Savensby, in 1238, appropriated the tithes to the hospital of Denwall, in the parish, which, with all its revenues, Henry VII., about the year 1494, gave to the hospital of St. John the Baptist, Lichfield, to which establishment the property still belongs. At Denwall is a colliery, opened about the year 1750, and still in operation: the mine extends for nearly a mile and three-quarters under the river: the produce is sent chiefly to Ireland. There are also some quarries of excellent freestone; and facilities of communication with Chester and Liverpool are obtained by railway. The market, granted in 1298 to Bishop Langton, and a fair for three days on the festival of St. James, have been discontinued. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £54; patron, Richard Congreve, Esq. The church, with the exception of the chancel, was rebuilt in 1721. There is a Roman Catholic chapel at Puddington. The free school was founded in 1724, by Dr. Wilson, the pious and benevolent Bishop of Sodor and Man, who was born here in 1663, and who gave £200, and his son, Dr. Thomas Wilson, rector of St. Stephen's, Walbrook, gave £200 more, towards the endowment. A school is supported by R. Congreve, Esq.

BURTON, a township, in the parish of BAMBROUGH, union of BELFORD, N. division of BAMBROUGH ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Belford; containing 111 inhabitants. It lies about a mile and a half south-by-west from Bambrough, and consists of a farm and some cottages. The North Sea is on the east.

BURTON, a chapelry, in the parish and liberties of MUCH WENLOCK, union of MADELEY, S. division of SALOP, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Much Wenlock; containing 181 inhabitants. The chapelry is situated on the road from Wenlock to Ludlow, and comprises by computation 1800 acres: the soil is various, but fertile; the surface is boldly undulated, and the lower grounds are watered by a small stream, called the Corse. There are quarries of stone for building. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £50; patron, Vicar of Much Wenlock. A national school is supported by a private individual. There is a Roman camp in excellent preservation; and the rocks abound with fossil remains.

BURTON, a hamlet, in the parish of STOGURSEY, union of WILLITON, hundred of CANNINGTON, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 75 inhabitants.

BURTON, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, Ringwood and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 1¼ mile (N. by E.) from Christchurch.

BURTON, a township, in the parish of CASTLE-CHURCH, E. division of the hundred of CUTLESTONE, union and S. division of the county of STAFFORD; containing 12 inhabitants.

BURTON, or BODEKTON, in the union of SUTTON, hundred of ROTHERBRIDGE, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, 3½ miles (S. by W.) from Petworth; containing 7 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 776 acres, and is bounded on the north-east by the river Rother, over which is a bridge at Stopham. The living is a rectory, with that of Coates consolidated, discharged from the payment of first-fruits, but paying tenths to the bishop, valued in the king's books at £7. 3. 11½.; net income, £113; patron, Colonel Wyndham. The church, which is beautifully situated in the Park, is a handsome structure in the later English style, and contains several ancient brasses, under enriched canopies, to the memory of the Gorings and other families: divine service has not been performed for many years. Attached to the mansion is a Roman Catholic chapel.

BURTON, a hamlet, in the parish of WARCOP, EAST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 5½ miles (N. W.) from Brough. There are lead-works at Kirsty Bank, in the township. This is the birthplace of Christopher Bainbridge, Archbishop of York in the reign of Henry VIII.: having been sent on a mission to Rome, he was poisoned, in 1511, by his Italian steward, and interred at Rome.

BURTON, with WALDEN, a township, in the parish of AYSGARTH, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 7¼ miles (W. by S.) from Middleham; containing 523 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 6950 acres of land. The village is situated in a district abounding with fine scenery, on a small stream which falls into the river Ure, and contains a great quantity of salmon: the Bishop's-dale and Walden rivulets unite below the village. Wool-combing is carried on. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school was erected in 1748, at a cost of £80, left by John Sadler, in 1742.

BURTON-AGNES (ST. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of BRIDLINGTON, wapentake of DICKERING, E. riding of YORK; comprising the townships of Burton-Agnes, Gransmoor, Haisthorpe, and Thornholm; and containing 603 inhabitants, of whom 322 are in the township of Burton-Agnes, 6½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Great Driffield. The Hall, a noble brick mansion, and the seat of the ancient family of Boynton, was built about the year 1703. The living is a vicarage, with Harpham annexed, valued in the king's books at £20. 6. 3.; patron, Thomas Raikes, Esq.; appropriator, the Archbishop of York. The tithes have been commuted for £1601. 6. 5., of which £865. 16. 5. are payable to the Archbishop, and £735. 10. to the vicar, who has 130 acres of glebe. The church, an ancient structure, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles, presents every variety of style from Norman to later English, and contains a beautiful monument in alabaster, with the effigies of a knight and his lady; and also a fine old Norman font, which was lately restored, after having been used for many years as a flower-bed in the vicarage garden. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school is partly supported by a portion of the produce of land, bequeathed by Richard Green, a former vicar, in 1563, and yielding £50 per annum, of which the residue is appropriated to the relief of the poor and the repair of the church. An hospital for four widows was founded, and endowed with an annuity of £20. 10., by the widow of the late William Boynton, Esq.

BURTON, BISHOP (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BEVERLEY, Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 3 miles (W.) from Beverley; containing 532 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the road leading from York to Hull; comprises 4208a. 20p., of which about 170 acres are woods and plantations, and of the rest, two-thirds are arable, and one-third pasture; the soil is various, the greater part a strong clay, with some very rich grazing land near the village, and the surface is undulated. There is a good limestone quarry, part of which belongs to the lord of the manor, Richard Watt, Esq., and part to the parish, which has a right of procuring chalk for the roads, and for private use. On the village green is a fine pool of water, near which stood a long noted gigantic elm, that was blown down in 1837. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.; net income, £110; patron, Prebendary of North Newbald, in the Cathedral of York; appropriators, Dean and Chapter of York. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1767. The church, which stands on an eminence, has an ancient chapel and a tower; the nave was rebuilt some years since, at a cost of £1700. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. Ten children are instructed for £20 a year, the rental of land purchased with a legacy of £100 from Mrs. Elizabeth Gee, in 1714; and almshouses for four persons are endowed with about £70 per annum, arising from property given by Ralph Hansby, by deed dated July 24th, 1614. There are several tumuli, in which human bones and urns have been found; and near Killingwold-graves is a pillar called Stump Cross, supposed to have been one of the crosses which formerly marked the limits of the sanctuary of Beverley.

BURTON, BLACK, or IN LONSDALE, a chapelry, in the parish of THORNTON, union of SETTLE, W. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWROSS, W. riding of YORK, 12 miles (N. W.) from Settle; containing 629 inhabitants. This place was anciently the baronial residence of the Mowbray family, and on the attainder of John de Mowbray, in the reign of Edward II., was forfeited to the crown; but from an inquisition taken in the reign of Edward III., it appears that the same John de Mowbray died possessed of the manor, which is now the property of Hornby Roughsedge, Esq., of Bentham House, who has enfranchised the lands, reserving only his right of holding a manorial court. The township comprises by computation 1552 acres, and is situated on the road between Lancaster and Richmond, the former of which places is the post-town: the surface is varied, and the lower grounds are watered by the river Greta. The substratum abounds with coal of very good quality, and a mine has been opened, but the operation of it is impeded by the water of the river, which, finding an entrance, prevents its being worked with any considerable profit: clay of good quality for earthenware is also found, and a manufacture of the coarser kinds of pottery is carried on. A pleasure-fair is held on Whit-Monday. The chapel is a neat plain structure, and the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £94; patron, Vicar of Thornton.

BURTON-BRADSTOCK, (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BRIDPORT, and liberty of FRAMPTON, though locally in the hundred of GODDERTHORNE, Bridport division of DORSET, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Bridport; containing 1201 inhabitants. The parish, which is bounded on the south by the English Channel, and on the west by Bridport harbour, comprises by measurement 2700 acres: the scenery is bold, and in some parts strikingly romantic; the cliffs on the beach rise perpendicularly to a great height, and abound with fossil remains. In the village is an establishment for spinning flax, and the linen and woollen manufactures afford employment to about 200 persons: stone of good quality for building is extensively quarried. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £25, and in the gift of Lord Rivers: the tithes have been commuted for £416. 10., payable to the incumbent, and for £18. 3., belonging to impropiators; the glebe comprises 40 acres. The church is an ancient cruciform structure, in the Norman style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BURTON-BY-LINCOLN (St. Vincent), a parish, in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Lincoln; containing 206 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 15. $2\frac{1}{2}$; net income, £419; patron, Lord Monson.

BURTON, CHERRY (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of BEVERLEY, Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Beverley; containing 455 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Beverley to Malton, and comprises 3438a. 3r. 37p., of which 2683 acres are arable, 653 meadow, and 50 wood; the soil is clayey, and in most situations suitable for the growth of wheat, and the surface generally level, but in some parts undulated: about a third comes under the denomination of wold land. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £23. 6. 8.; patron, Robert Ramsden, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £1050, and the glebe comprises 25a. 3r. 27p. The church, a small ancient edifice, with a square tower, has traces of Norman and early English architecture, and was repaired in 1842. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BURTON-COGLLES (St. Thomas à Becket), a parish, in the union of GRANTHAM, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (W. N. W.) from Corby; containing 260 inhabitants. It is situated on the great north road, and comprises 2476 acres. Limestone of a soft quality is quarried. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 12. $3\frac{1}{2}$; and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £530, and there is a good glebe-house, with a glebe of 104 acres. The church is an ancient structure in the early English style, and contains the figures of two crusaders in good preservation. A school has an endowment of £21 per annum, arising from a bequest of land at Quadring by John Speight, in 1734, and by Catherine Chomeley, in 1773.

BURTON-CONSTABLE, a hamlet, in the parish of SWINE, union of SKIRLAUGH, Middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, 8 miles (N. E.) from Hull; containing 71 inhabitants. In the time of the Conqueror, this place was part of the possessions of the Archbishop of York; it shortly afterwards came to the family of Constable, who are the present owners. It comprises 1247a. 3r. 2p. of land, lying in West Newton township, in the parish of Aldbrough, but usually returned with Ellerby township, in Swine parish. Burton-Constable House, the seat of Sir Thomas Aston Clifford Constable, Bart., is a splendid mansion, said to have been partly erected so early as the reign of Stephen, but the two principal fronts of which, east and west, each about 130 feet long, have been built upon, and added to, a more ancient edifice, probably of the time of Henry VIII.: the apartments are of exceedingly handsome design, and appropriately embellished, and the whole of the buildings are of a character suitable to a residence of distinction: the parks, also, and the gardens, are beautiful in appearance, and are excellently kept.

BURTON-CONSTABLE, a township, in the parish of FINGALL, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANGWEST, N. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Middleham; containing 252 inhabitants. It comprises 2572 acres of land, chiefly the property of M. Wyvill, Esq., lord of the manor, who has a handsome seat, standing in a picturesque valley, with fine parks attached. A school is supported by Mr. Wyvill.

BURTON-DASSETT, or DASSETT MAGNA (All Saints), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of SOUTHAM, Burton-Dasset division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (E.) from Kington; containing 614 inhabitants. This place, which is reduced to a very small hamlet, is supposed to have been destroyed about the time of the battle of Edge-Hill, which place is distant about 2 miles; it is situated on the Warwick and Banbury road, and comprises by measurement 4500 acres. Large stone-quarries are wrought, the material of which is used for buildings. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14; net income, £167; patrons, Lord Willoughby de Broke and W. R. Blencow, Esq., of whom the former is impropiator: the glebe consists of 90 acres, to which there is a good glebe-house. The church is a very spacious and handsome structure.

BURTON-EXTRA, a township, in the parish and union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD; contiguous to the southern part of the town of Burton, and containing 1193 inhabitants.

BURTON-FLEMING, or NORTH (St. CUTHBERT), a parish, in the union of BRIDLINGTON, wapentake of DICKERING, E. riding of YORK, 7 miles (N. W. by W.) from Bridlington; containing 460 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 3590 acres: the soil, opening to the south-west, is chalky, producing all kinds of grain of an excellent quality, and turnips in great abundance. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books as a discharged vicarage at £6. 4. 2.; net income, £95; patron, Capt. Robert Mitford, R.N. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1768. The church is a neat edifice, consisting of a nave and chancel, with a low tower; it contains a beam perfectly sound, marked "June, 1574." There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists; and near the church is a good school, built by the parishioners.

BURTON-GATE (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of GAINSBOROUGH, wapentake of WELL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from Gainsborough; containing 126 inhabitants. It is situated on the banks of the Trent, and intersected by the Lincoln and Gainsborough road. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 10. 10.; net income, £88; patron, W. Hutton, Esq. The glebe consists of about 16 acres, to which there is a good glebe-house. A small petrifying spring has been lately discovered.

BURTON-HASTINGS (St. BOTOLPH), a parish, in the union of HINCKLEY, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from Hinckley; containing 276 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the line of the Roman Watling-street, and intersected by the Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal: it comprises by admeasurement 1335 acres, about one-third of which is arable, and the rest pasture. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £87; patron and impropiator, Thomas Grove, Esq.

BURTON-HILL, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of MALMESBURY, Malmesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of the county of WILTS, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (S.) from Malmesbury; containing 257 inhabitants.

BURTON-IN-KENDAL (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of KENDAL, partly in LONSDALE ward, and partly in KENDAL ward, county of WESTMORLAND; and partly in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER; comprising the township of Dalton, in Lancashire, and the townships of Burton, Holme, and Preston-Patrick, in Westmorland; and containing 2387 inhabitants, of whom 796 are in the market-town of Burton, $34\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Appleby, and 251 (N. W. by N.) from London. The ancient name of this place, Borton, a contraction of Borough town, is still retained by the inhabitants: it takes its adjunct from its situation in the dale, or valley, of the river Ken, to distinguish it from Burton, in Lancashire. The place was given at the Conquest, with many other estates in the neighbourhood, to Ivo de Talebois, who afterwards granted the church, and certain lands, to the abbey of St. Mary, at York; with which it remained till the Dissolution of monasteries, when it was granted to the Middletons, of Leighton Hale, in the adjoining parish of Warton. Burton is a neat town on the great north-western road: the houses, many of which are ancient, are well built, and the general appearance is prepossessing: the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. A communication with the Mersey, the Dee, the Humber, and the Trent, is afforded by the Kendal and Lancaster canal; but, notwithstanding its favourable situation, the town has little trade, the only branch being that of linen, of which there is a manufactory at Holme. The market, established in 1661, and once noted for corn, is on Tuesday: the market-place is a spacious area, adjoining which are some good houses and shops, and in the centre is a neat stone cross. A fair is held on Easter-Monday, for cattle and horses, which is also a statute fair. The county magistrates hold a petty-session every alternate Tuesday; and a manorial court is held on Whit-Monday and Martinmas-day, for the renewal of fines, and for the recovery of debts under 40s. The parish comprises 8740*a.* 36*v.* The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15. 17.; net income, £199; patrons, Trustees of the late Rev. C. Simeon; impropiators, Trustees of the late W. Atkinson, Esq. The vicarial tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1815, under an act of inclosure: there is a good glebe-house. The church is a plain ancient structure, with a square tower; the pulpit, and the canopy over it, are richly carved; and there are two sepulchral chapels, belonging to Dalton and Preston Halls: in the churchyard is a monument to the memory of William Cockin, author of the "Rural Sabbath," and other literary productions. There is a church at Preston-Patrick, and another at Holme, in the parish, the latter of which, in the later English style, was built by contributions. The Independents have a meeting-house. The grammar school has an income of £50 per annum, the produce of various benefactions since the year 1657; the premises were erected by subscription in 1817. There are also two other schools, having small endowments. Gerard Langbaine, Dr. William Lancaster, and Dr. Launcelot Dawes, prebendary of Carlisle, and 48 years vicar of the parish, all eminent literary characters in the reign of Charles I., were natives of the town.

BURTON-JOYCE (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of BASFORD, S. division of the wapentake of THURGARTON and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 5 miles (N. E. by E.) from Nottingham; containing, with the chapelry of Bulcote, 764 inhabitants. This place, in Domesday book called Bertune, belonged, in the reign of Henry II., to the family of Joez, from whom it derives the adjunct to its name, and from whom it descended to the ancestors of the Earl of Chesterfield. The village is pleasantly situated on the north bank of the river Trent, the vale of which is bounded by a range of lofty hills that shelter it on the north. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 19. 2.; net income, £145; patron and impropiator, Earl of Chesterfield: the tithes were commuted for land in 1768. The church is an ancient spacious structure, with a spire: in a niche of the north aisle is an upright effigy of an armed knight, standing on a lion, and bearing a shield on the left arm, said to represent Robert de Joez, who lived in the reign of Edward I.; and in the chancel are two altar-tombs of deceased members of the family of Stapelton, with inscriptions in Saxon characters. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BURTON, KIRK (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of HUDDERSFIELD, Upper division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, W. riding of YORK; containing 18,452 inhabitants, of whom 3474 are in the township of Kirk-Burton, 5 miles (S. E.) from Huddersfield. This parish comprises the townships of Cartworth, Foulston, Hepworth, Kirk-Burton, Shelley, Shepley, Thurstonland, Wooldale, and part of Cumberworth-Half, the whole forming an area of 15,990 acres, whereof 1260 are in Kirk-Burton, which includes the hamlets of Dogby-Lane, Green-Grove, Linfit-Lane, Spring-Grove, and Paddock, and the village of High Burton. The village of Kirk-Burton is of considerable size, and pleasantly seated on a declivity at the junction of two narrow ravines, or valleys. The woollen and fancy waistcoating manufactures are carried on to a great extent, affording employment to about 2600 persons: edge-tools, and spades and shovels, are manufactured in the village of High Burton; and there are coal-pits and good stone-quarries. A court of requests was established in 1839, for the recovery of small debts. Fairs for cattle are held on the last Mondays in April and October. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor; net income, £301; impropiators, Governors of Sheffield Hospital. The tithes were commuted for land in 1799. A sum of £4 is annually paid by Kirk-Burton to the Vicar of Dewsbury, as a mark of its dependence upon that ancient church. The parochial church, built in the reign of Edward III., is a large and commanding edifice, with a square tower; an organ was erected in 1836, at a cost of £300. At Holmfirth and New-Mill are district churches, the former an ancient structure; and at Thurstonland is an episcopal chapel. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists. A school, established in 1714, was endowed in 1721 by the Rev. Henry Robinson, with a bequest of £100, for instruction; and in the following year with a bequest of £360, by J. Horsfall, Esq.; which sums, having been invested in land and houses, produce about £80 per annum: the school was rebuilt in 1840.

BURTON-LATIMER (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of KETTERING, hundred of HUXLOE, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 3 miles (S. E.) from Kettering; containing 965 inhabitants. This place derives its distinguishing appellation from the barons Latimer, who had formerly a residence here. The parish is intersected by the road from Higham-Ferrers to Kettering, and comprises by computation 2300 acres; limestone of the oolite formation, with fossils, is abundant. A mill for spinning worsted-yarn affords employment to about 100 persons; and a silk manufactory, established a few years since, is conducted on an extensive scale. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £29. 10.; patron and incumbent, Rev. T. S.

Grimshawe. The tithes were commuted for land, under an inclosure act, in 1800; the glebe comprises 800 acres. The church is a handsome structure, partly in the Norman and partly in the early English style, and contains a richly carved oak screen. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. The free school was founded, in the reign of Elizabeth, by Margaret Burbank and William Vaux, Lord Harrowden, the former of whom endowed it with 10 acres of land, and the latter with a house. The Rev. S. Barwick, in 1792, left an endowment of 7 acres, producing £20 per annum, for preparing children for the free school; the rent of 40 acres of land is distributed among the industrious poor, and 70 acres are set apart in lieu of the right of cutting furze.

BURTON-LAZARS, a chapelry, in the parish and union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. E. by S.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 262 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. James. In the reign of Stephen, an hospital, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary and St. Lazarus, was founded here, by a general collection throughout England, the principal contributor being Roger de Mowbray: it was dependent on the great house at Jerusalem, and was the chief of all the lazar houses in England, and the revenue, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was estimated at £265. 10. 2. It stood near a spring, the water of which was formerly in high repute for curing the leprosy; a bath and a drinking-room were built about 1760.

BURTON-LEONARD (ST. HELEN), a parish, in the Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Knaresborough; containing 455 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1739a. 2r. 39p., of which 1100 acres are arable, and the remainder grass land: the soil is of an inferior kind, and the surface generally undulated: stone of excellent quality is burnt for lime. Many of the inhabitants were formerly employed in the flax and linen trade, but it has entirely ceased. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £3. 1. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £140; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of York: a glebe-house was erected in 1839, and there are 45 acres of glebe. The church is a small plain structure, built in 1782. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists; and a parochial school is partly supported by Thomas Duncombe, Esq., of Copgrove Hall.

BURTON, LONG (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union and hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of DORSET, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Sherborne; containing 386 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the great road between Bath and Weymouth, and comprises by measurement 1026 acres. The females are chiefly employed in making gloves for the Yeovil and other manufacturers. There are extensive stone-quarries, from which are obtained limestone, and excellent stone for building. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Holnest annexed, valued in the king's books at £10. 15.; net income, £275; patron, C. Cosens, Esq.; impropiator, R. Gordon, Esq.: there is a good glebe-house, with 20 acres of land. The church is in the later English style, and was built more than 200 years ago. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists.

BURTON-ON-THE-WOLDS, a township, in the parish of PRESTWOLD, union of LOUGHBOROUGH, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Loughborough; containing 448 inhabitants. The Wesleyans have a meeting-house. There is a small endowment for children, chiefly arising from benefactions by Miles Newton, in 1757, and John Kirk: the school is on the national system.

BURTON-OVERY (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of BILLEDON, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Leicester; containing 449 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1800 acres, and has an undulated surface, with a strong clay soil. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 5. 10.; net income, £497; patron and incumbent, Rev. T. Thorp. The tithes were commuted in 1765 for land, and the glebe consists of 272 acres, to which there is a good glebe-house. A Sunday school has the interest of £100, left by Mrs. Catherine Palmer.

BURTON-PEDWARDINE (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of SLEAFORD, wapentake of ASHWARDHURN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Sleaford; containing 125 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 1800 acres. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 12. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$.; patron and impropiator, H. Handley, Esq.: the glebe comprises 263 acres, valued at £332 per annum. The church is a plain edifice, built in 1802, to replace the former structure, which had been erected in 1340, on the site of a still more ancient foundation; one of the chapels in the old church is still existing. There are some remains of the ancient seat of Thomas Horseman, Esq., taster to Queen Elizabeth, and several tumuli.

BURTON-PIDSEA (St. Peter, or St. Mary), a parish, in the Middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESSE, E. riding of YORK, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Hedon; containing 400 inhabitants. The name of this place is a corruption of Burton-per-Sea, or by-the-Sea: it is one of the manors that have remained, as part of the original fee of Drogo the Norman, in possession of the succeeding lords of the seigniory of Holderness to the present day. The parish contains about 1980 acres by measurement: the soil is rich and fertile; and the village is picturesque, situated on ground commanding an extensive prospect, and surrounded by some fine trees. Chatt House, in the parish, once the residence of a family of that name in the 17th century, has been lately rebuilt, with much taste, by the Clapham family. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6; net income, £42; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of York. The tithes were commuted for a money payment, under an act passed in 1761. The church is a handsome edifice, principally in the later English style, with a lofty tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BURTON-PYNSENT, a tything, in the parishes of CURRY-RIVELL, DRAYTON, and FIVEHEAD, union of LANGPORT, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 43 inhabitants.

BURTON-SALMON, a township, in the parish of MONK-FRYSTON, Lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK, 2 miles (N. by E.) from Ferry-Bridge; containing 166 inhabitants. There is an intermediate station of the York and North-Midland railway, which takes a curvilinear course through the township.

BURTON-UPON-STATHER (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, N. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $35\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Lincoln, and $164\frac{1}{2}$ (N. by W.) from London; containing, with the hamlets of Normanby and Thealby, and part of that of Coleby, 799 inhabitants, of whom 429 are in the township of Burton. The parish comprises by measurement 3510 acres, the soil varying, through several gradations, from light sand to strong clay; a considerable portion is of a yellow colour, resembling ochre, and leaves a dark and indelible stain on the clothes of the ploughman. Along the side of the river is a hill of considerable elevation, forming a kind of terrace of six or seven miles in length, and commanding an uninterrupted view, as far as the eye can reach, of the county of York, and part of Nottingham. The village is situated on the brow of a hill, at the foot of which flows the river Trent, where there is a wharf, called Stather. It was formerly of much greater extent than it is at present, having been greatly reduced by a tempest that destroyed several houses, and injured the church. A market was once held on Tuesday, and there are still fairs on the first Monday in May, and the first Monday after Martinmas. The living is a vicarage, consolidated, in 1729, with the rectory of Flixborough, and valued in the king's books at £12: the tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1803. On the summit of Alkborough Hill is a kind of labyrinth, called the Julian Tower, supposed to be the remains of a Roman fortification.

BURTON-UPON-TRENT

(St. Mary and St. Modwena), a parish, and the head of a union, partly in the N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, and partly in the hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERBY; comprising the township of Winshill, in Derbyshire, and the townships of Branstone, Burton-Extra, Horninglow, and Stretton; and containing 8136 inhabitants, of whom 4863 are in the market-town of Burton, 24 miles (E.) from Stafford, and 124 (N. W. by N.) from London. This place derived its name from having been a Saxon burgh of some importance, and its adjunct from being situated on the river Trent. In the ninth century, St. Modwena, who had been expelled from her monastery in Ireland, came hither, and having obtained an asylum from King Ethelwulph, in reward for a miraculous cure that she is said to have performed on his son Alfred, erected a chapel, and dedicated it to St. Andrew: the site, still called St. Modwena's Garden, is the only part visible. In 1004, Wulfric, Earl of Mercia, founded an abbey for monks of the Benedictine order, which, from the vestiges still to be traced, appears to have been one of the most considerable in the kingdom: it was a mitred abbey, richly endowed and invested with extensive privileges, and its revenue, at the Dissolution, was £356. 16. 8. The remains consist principally of some fine Norman arches that formed part of the cloisters, which included an area 100 feet square, and of part of the entrance gateway, now converted into a shop. In 1225, a large portion of the town was destroyed by an accidental fire. In the reign of Edward II., Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, posted himself at Burton, and endeavoured to defend the passage of the river against the king; but being unsuccessful in his attempt, he fled with his forces into Scotland. During the parliamentary war, the town and neighbourhood were frequently the scene of action between the contending parties.

Arms.

Burton is pleasantly situated in a fertile vale, on the western bank of the Trent, which is navigable from Gainsborough for vessels of considerable burthen, and over which is a noble bridge of freestone, 512 yards in length, consisting of 37 arches, built prior to the Conquest, and substantially repaired in the reign of Henry II. The town, consisting principally of one street, parallel with the river, is well paved, lighted with gas, and plentifully supplied with water; the houses are in general modern and well built. There is a subscription library and news-room; and assemblies and concerts take place occasionally in the town-hall. The principal branch of trade is that of brewing ale, for which the town has been highly celebrated for more than a century, large quantities being sent to London and other places; and there are cotton-mills, with power-looms, employed in the weaving process. An ancient water-mill, in the vicinity of the town, noticed in the Norman survey, is partly appropriated to the grinding of corn, and partly used as a manufactory for safes: a few articles in iron are also made, particularly screws. A company was formerly established for regulating the navigation of the river; but a canal has been constructed, which joins the Grand Trunk canal, and affords a more direct medium for the transport of goods. Here is a principal station of the Birmingham and Derby Junction railway, which passes on the west side of the town. The market is on Thursday; and fairs are held on February 5th, April 5th, Holy-Thursday, July 16th, and October 29th, for cattle and cheese; the last continues six days, and is a great horse fair. The government is vested in a high steward, deputy-steward, and bailiff, appointed by the Marquess of Anglesey, lord of the manor, who holds a court leet and view of frankpledge in October, at which the police are appointed. The bailiff is a justice of the peace, having concurrent jurisdiction with the county magistrates, and acts also as coroner; and the corporation formerly had power to try and execute criminals, and to hold courts of pleas to any amount. The Genter's court is held every third Friday, before the steward, or his deputy, for the recovery of debts not exceeding 40s. The inhabitants, by virtue of letters-patent granted in the 11th of Henry VIII., are exempt from serving the office of sheriff, and from being summoned as jurors at the assizes and sessions for the county. The town-hall is a handsome building, erected at the expense of the Marquess of Anglesey, and containing, in addition to the offices for transacting the public business, a handsome suite of assembly-rooms.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Marquess of Anglesey, the impropriator; net income, £192. The ancient church formerly belonged to the abbey, and was made collegiate by Henry VIII.: having been greatly damaged in the parliamentary war, it was taken down; and the present edifice, a handsome structure with a tower, though less embellished than the former, was erected on its site, in 1720. A district church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected in 1823, on land given by the Marquess: it is a very handsome structure, in the decorated English style, and highly ornamental to the town. It was built and endowed by the executors of Isaac Hawkins, Esq.; and the living, which is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £261, is in the gift of the Marquess. A church has also been erected at Newhall, in the parish, by the Rev. J. Clay and J. Clay, Esq.; and a chapel was built at Stretton, in 1839, by subscription. A lectureship, of the value of £31 per annum, is in the patronage of the bailiff and principal inhabitants. There are places of worship for General and Particular Baptists, Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school was founded in 1520, by William Beane, abbot, and endowed with land producing at present £450 per annum; Richard Allsop, in 1728, bequeathed property, with which land was purchased, now worth £24 per annum, to found a school for the instruction of boys; and a national school, established in 1826, is supported by subscription. Almshouses were founded and endowed, in 1634, by Mrs. Ellen Parker, for six widows or maidens; and others were founded, in 1591, for five unmarried women, and endowed by Dame Elizabeth Pawlett, the present income of which is about £80. There are various other charities, the principal of which, by Mrs. Almund, yields about £72 per annum. The poor law union comprises 53 parishes and places, 13 of which are in the county of Stafford, and 40 in that of Derby, and contains a population of 28,878: the workhouse stands at the north-western extremity of the town, in the township of Horninglow, and was built, in 1839, at a cost of £8000. Near Branson is a chalybeate spring. Isaac Hawkins Browne, a poet of minor celebrity, was born here about 1705.

BURTON-UPON-URE, a township, in the parish of MASHAM, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANG-EAST, N. riding of YORK, 1 mile (N.) from Masham; containing 200 inhabitants. It is chiefly on the eastern bank of the river Ure, and comprises by computation 2920 acres of land, extending southward to Northcote, to Nutwith, to Ilton Grange (allotted to Burton from Ilton Common), and to Aldbrough, in which last place is Aldbrough Hall, a mansion built near the site of a castle founded by William le Gros, Earl of Albemarle, who, for having gained the battle of the Standard, was created Earl of York, in 1138. The tithes have been commuted for £57, of which £55 are payable to Trinity College, Cambridge, and £2 to the vicar.

BURTON, WEST (ST. HELEN), a parish, in the union of GAINSBOROUGH, North-Clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Gainsborough; containing 35 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Trent, which forms its eastern boundary; and comprises 936a. 39p. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £65; patron, John Barrow, Esq. The church is a plain edifice.

BURTON, WEST, a tything, in the parish and hundred of BURY, union of SUTTON, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX; containing 201 inhabitants.

BURTONWOOD, a chapelry, in the parish and union of WARRINGTON, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 5 miles (N. W.) from Warrington; containing 836 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 3812 acres, chiefly belonging to Lord Lilford and Sir H. Bold Hoghton, the lord of the manor. Nearly a mile and a half of the Liverpool and Manchester railway, and upwards of half a mile of the Grand Junction, pass through the district; and the Sankey canal crosses the chapelry in the direction of St. Helen's. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £90, derived partly from two farms, and partly from Queen Anne's Bounty; patron, Rector of Warrington. The tithes have been commuted for £421. The chapel, which is a plain brick edifice, was rebuilt about 1750, and has been lately enlarged.

BURWARDSLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of BUNBURY, union of NANTWICH, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 2 miles (N. W. by W.) from Tattenhall; containing 458 inhabitants. This place, the situation and scenery of which, especially in the vicinity of the chapel, are singularly beautiful, comprises 998*a.* 3*r.* 24*p.*: there are numerous quarries of white and red sandstone, the materials of one of which is of excellent quality for buildings. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the manufacture of gloves. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £50; patrons, 16 Trustees; impropiator, S. Aldersey, Esq. A rent-charge of £100 has been awarded as a commutation for the impropriate tithes, payable to the Haberdashers' Company, London. The chapel, dedicated to St. John, a small stone building, was built by subscription, in 1735.

BURWARTON (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of BRIDGENORTH, hundred of STOTTESDEN, S. division of SALOP, 9 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Ludlow; containing 151 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Bridgenorth to Ludlow, and contains by computation 1100 acres: some coal of inferior quality is worked. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 6. 8.; patron and incumbent, Rev. John Churton: the tithes have been commuted for £102, and the glebe comprises 20 acres, with a house. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BURWASH (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of TICEHURST, partly in the hundred of SHOYSWELL and HENHURST, but chiefly in that of HAWKESBOROUGH, rape of HASTINGS, E. division of SUSSEX, 8 miles (S. by W.) from Lamberhurst; containing 2093 inhabitants. The parish is on the road from Lewes to Cranbrook, which intersects the village: the neighbourhood abounds with iron-stone, for the smelting of which a blast-furnace formerly existed. The village is pleasantly situated on an eminence, surrounded by hills of greater elevation, and consists of one long street, containing several respectable houses. A fair for cattle and sheep is held on the 12th of May. The living consists of a sinecure rectory and a vicarage, the former valued in the king's books at £8. 10., and the latter at £18; patron and incumbent, the Rev. J. Gould: the tithes have been commuted for £1125, and the glebe comprises 80 acres. The church is partly in the early and partly in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, surmounted by a low spire. There are places of worship for Calvinists and Independents; and a national school is supported by an endowment of £35. 10. per annum. On Goodsial farm is a mineral spring.

BURWELL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of NEWMARKET, hundred of STAPLOE, county of CAMBRIDGE, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Newmarket; containing 1820 inhabitants. The village consists principally of one irregular street, nearly two miles long: the houses are built with stone obtained in the vicinity, in which pyrites and sharks' teeth, in good preservation, have been found. An act for draining fen lands, and for improving the navigable cuts, was passed in 1841. A great fair for horses is held on Rogation-Monday, at Reach, once a market-town, now an insignificant hamlet, partly in the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Burwell-St. Andrew consolidated, valued jointly in the king's books at £50. 14. 2.; net income, £335; patrons, Chancellor, Masters, and Scholars of the University of Cambridge (the impropiators); for two turns, and Heirs of the late Sir E. North, for one. The church is a beautiful edifice, in the decorated English style: the rent of 100 acres of land is appropriated for its repair. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. Here are the ruins of a castle, surrounded by a moat, which was besieged in the war between Stephen and the Empress Matilda, by Geoffrey de Mandeville, Earl of Essex, who was shot by an arrow from the walls. The parish register contains the record of a fire on Sept. 8th, 1727, when 78 persons lost their lives. The church of St. Andrew has long been demolished, and the cemetery converted into pasture ground.

BURWELL (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Weld division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Louth; containing 174 inhabitants. This place, which is situated on the road from London to Louth, appears to have been formerly of more importance than it is at present: a grant of a weekly market, and two annual fairs, was made in the reign of Edward III., and confirmed in that of Elizabeth; and the ancient market cross is still remaining, in a very perfect state. The parish comprises 2009*a.* 3*r.* 29*p.* The fairs are held on May-day and the festival of St. Michael (O. S.). The living is a discharged vicarage, with Walmsgate and Muckton annexed, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £51; patron and impropiator, Matthew Bancroft Lister, Esq. The church, anciently belonging to the priory, is a small edifice, partly of Norman architecture. A school on the national plan was established in 1825. There are the remains of a small alien priory of Benedictine monks, founded by John de Hay, and given by some of the lords of Kyme to the abbey of St. Mary Sylvæ Majoris, near Bourdeaux. This is the birthplace of Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, who was grand-daughter of the wife of Sir Martin Lister, ancestor of the present proprietor of the estate, and whose ascendancy in the affections of Queen Anne had for some time a material influence on political events.

BURWELL, a tything, in the parish of HAMBLEDON, union of DROXFORD, hundred of MEON-STOKE, DROXFORD and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON.

BURY (HOLY CROSS), a parish, in the union of ST. IVES, hundred of HURSTINGSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, 12 miles (N. N. E.) from Huntingdon; containing 359 inhabitants. This place formed part of the possessions of Ramsey Abbey; and there is a strong stone bridge of two arches over a small branch of the river Nene, which is supposed to have been built by one of the abbots. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Lady O. B. Sparrow, with a net income of £167: the tithes have been commuted for £140. A portion of land in the parish of Riseley, Bedfordshire, purchased by Queen Anne's Bounty, belongs to the living. The church is composed of the eastern part of a large cruciform edifice, and exhibits a mixture of Norman and early English architecture; the entrance to the chancel from the nave is under a carved wooden screen. The interest of benefactions, amounting to £50, is given to the poor.

BURY (ST. MARY), a parish, and the head of a union, chiefly in the hundred of SALFORD, S. division, and partly in the Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division, of the county of LANCASTER; comprising the townships of Coupe with Lenches, Musbury, Elton, Heap, Higher and Lower Tottington, and Walmersley with Shuttleworth; and containing 62,125 inhabitants, of whom 20,710 are in the newly created borough and market-town of Bury, 48½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Lancaster, 9 (N. N. W.) from Manchester, and 195½ (N. N. W.) from London. Some antiquaries suppose this to have been a Roman station: it was certainly a Saxon town, as its name obviously implies. Leland notices the remains of a castle near the church, the site of which, still called Castle Croft, was near the ancient bed of the river Irwell. This castle, one of the twelve baronial castles in the county, was demolished about the year 1644, by the parliamentary troops, who laid siege to the town, and battered down the small remains that were then existing: fragments are still occasionally discovered. In 1787, nearly three hundred persons having assembled in a barn, to witness the performance of some itinerant players, the gable end gave way, and the whole building fell, and buried the audience in its ruins. The town is situated on a gentle acclivity rising from the eastern bank of the river Irwell, over which is a stone bridge, and is skirted on the east by the river Roche, which falls into the Irwell about two miles and a half to the south. The houses, generally old and dilapidated, are giving place to modern structures; and among the earlier improvements may be noticed a spacious square of well-built houses, which has been formed within the last forty years at the northern extremity of the town. There are a public subscription library, a news-room, a botanical institution, and a mechanics' library; and a medical library has been recently established by John Woodcock, Esq. The woollen trade was introduced in the reign of Edward III., and increased so as to constitute the staple trade of the town in the reign of Elizabeth, who stationed one of her alnagers here, to stamp the cloth; it is still carried on to a considerable extent, and furnishes employment for nearly 4000 persons; the principal articles manufactured being baize, flannel, coating, blankets, &c. The cotton manufacture, improved by the various ingenious inventions of Mr. John Kay and his sons, is also carried on; and printing-establishments on an extensive scale owe their introduction to the late Sir Robert Peel, Bart., whose works, together with the houses of the workmen, extend along the banks of the river. There are also large bleaching-grounds in the neighbourhood; and at Longholme are works for spinning and weaving, in which 300 persons, and a water-mill of twenty-horse power, and a steam-engine of twenty-four horse power, are employed. Coal abounds. A branch of the Manchester and Bolton canal, constructed in 1791, affords a facility of communication with every part of the kingdom. The market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on March 8th, May 3rd, and September 18th. An act was passed, in 1839, for providing a market-place, and for regulating the markets and fairs.

The town was by the act 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, constituted a BOROUGH, with the privilege of sending a member to parliament, the right of election being vested in the £10 householders: the limits of the borough comprise by estimation 3660 acres; the returning officer is appointed by the sheriff. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a meeting every Saturday; and petty-sessions for the division are held every alternate Saturday. A court of requests, for the recovery of small debts, was established in 1839. Courts leet are held in April and October, and at Whitsuntide, at which last three constables are appointed, subordinate to whom is a deputy-constable, who holds his office for life; and a court baron is held every third week, for the recovery of debts under 40s. At a place named Castle Hill, not far hence, the court for the royal manor of Tottington was anciently held; it exercised jurisdiction in capital crimes, a neighbouring eminence, called Gallows Hill, having been the place of execution. The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £29. 11. 5½.; net income, £1937; patron, Earl of Derby. The parochial church was taken down, with the exception of the tower, which is surmounted by a low spire, and rebuilt in 1776. St. John's chapel, a neat edifice, was erected in 1770: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £159; patron, the Rector, who also presents to the other chapels in the parish. There are meeting-houses for Independents, Primitive Methodists, Wesleyans, New Connexion of Methodists, Presbyterians, and Unitarians, and a Roman Catholic chapel, erected in 1840. The free grammar school was founded, in 1726, by the Rev. Roger Key, who endowed it with estates, now producing yearly about £440; it has two exhibitions, of £25 per annum each, to be continued for six years during residence at either of the universities: the premises are handsomely built. A school was founded and endowed, in 1748, by the Hon. and Rev. John Stanley, formerly rector; and, in 1815, it was enlarged into a national school, and a spacious building erected, at an expense of £1000. Other schools, in union with the same society, one of which is also partly endowed, have been erected within the last few years. A savings' bank was established in 1822, and a dispensary in 1829; and there is also a lying-in charity. The union of Bury contains a population of 77,496. The Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Peel, Bart., was born, in 1788, at Chamber Hall, a mansion in the parish, now the residence of the family of Hardman. Bury confers the title of Viscount on the family of Keppel, Earls of Albemarle.

BURY, a hamlet, in the parish of BROMPTON-REGIS, union of DULVERTON, hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, W. division of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Dulverton. Near this place is an entrenched mount, called Bury Castle, supposed to have been originally a military post of the Romans, on which a mansion, belonging to the family of Besilles, was subsequently erected.

BURY, a parish, in the union of SUTTON, hundred of BURY, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, 7 miles (S. by E) from Petworth; containing, with the tything of West Burton, 611 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises 3397*a.* 3*r.* 18*p.*, is bounded on the east by the river Arun, and on the north by the Rother, and is intersected by the road from London to Bognor and Arundel: an act for inclosing lands was passed in 1841. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 5. 5.; net income, £59; patron and proprietor, Prebendary of Bury, in the Cathedral of Chichester. The tithes have been commuted for £485, and there is a good glebe-house, with about 20 acres of land. The church is an ancient edifice, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, surmounted by a low shingled spire.

BURY-ST. EDMUND'S, a borough and market-town, having exclusive jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of THINGOE, W. division of SUFFOLK, $26\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Ipswich, and 72 (N. E. by E.) from London; containing 12,538 inhabitants. This was a place of importance before the introduction of Christianity into Britain, and is by some antiquaries supposed to have been the Villa Faustini of the Romans. That it was in the possession of that people is evident, from the discovery of many Roman antiquities. Soon after the settlement of the Saxons it was made a royal borough, and called Beodrics worthe, signifying the dwelling of Beodric: it subsequently belonged to Offa, King of East Anglia, who, at his death, bequeathed it to Edmund, afterwards canonized as a martyr, from whom it was named St. Edmund's Bury. Edmund, having succeeded to the kingdom of East Anglia, on the death of Offa, was crowned here, in the fifteenth year of his age; but, being taken prisoner by the Danes, who in 870 made an irruption into this part of the country, he was cruelly put to death. The circumstances attending his death and burial are thus superstitiously related: on his refusal to become a vassal to the conquerors, they bound him to a tree, pierced his body with arrows, and striking off his head, threw it into a neighbouring forest. After the enemy had retired, the East Anglians assembled to perform the funeral obsequies to the remains of their sovereign; and having found the body, they went into the forest to search for the head, and discovered it between the fore-paws of a wolf, which immediately resigned it on their approach: the head, on being placed in contact with the trunk, is then said to have re-united so closely, that the juncture was scarcely visible. The subject of this fabulous story has been assumed for the device of the corporation seal.

Forty days after his death, the remains of Edmund, which had been interred at Hoxne, in a small chapel built of wood, were, from the report of miracles wrought at his tomb being promulgated and believed, removed to this place in 903; and a new church was built in honour of him, by some Secular priests, who were incorporated by King Athelstan, about the year 925, and the establishment made collegiate. The town and church having been nearly destroyed by Sweyn, King of Denmark, in 1010, were restored by Canute, who raised the town to more than its original splendour, rebuilt the church and monastery, which he endowed with great possessions, and, expelling the Secular canons, placed in their stead monks of the Benedictine order. The monastery of St. Edmund in process of time became one of the most splendid establishments in the kingdom; and, in magnificent buildings, costly decorations, valuable immunities, and rich endowments, was inferior only to that of Glastonbury. In the year 1327, the townsmen and neighbouring villagers, assembling to the number of 20,000, headed by their aldermen and capital burgesses, made a violent attack upon it, and reduced a considerable part to ashes: they wounded the monks, and pillaged the coffers, from which they took the charters, deeds, and other valuable property, including plate, £5000 sterling, and 3000 florins of gold. The king, on being informed of the outrage, sent a military force to quell the tumult; the aldermen and twenty-four of the burgesses were imprisoned, and thirty carts loaded with rioters were sent to Norwich. Of these, nineteen were executed; thirty-two of the parochial clergy were also convicted as abettors; and the inhabitants were adjudged to pay a fine of £140,000, which was afterwards mitigated on the restoration of the stolen property.

The monastery remained in the possession of the Benedictine monks for 519 years; it contained within its precincts the churches of St. Margaret, St. Mary, and St. James, and its revenue, at the Dissolution, was £2336. 16. The remains consist chiefly of the abbey-gate, still entire, and displaying some elegant features in the decorated English style; the abbey bridge, in good preservation; and detached portions of the walls, which still exhibit traces of former magnificence. About the year 1256, a fraternity of the Franciscan order came to Bury, but they were compelled by the abbot to remove beyond the precincts of the town, where their establishment continued till the Dissolution. Henry I., on his return from Chartres, repaired to the shrine of St. Edmund, where he presented a rich offering, in gratitude for his safe return to his dominions; and in 1173, Henry II., having assembled a large army at this place, to oppose his rebellious sons, caused the sacred standard of St. Edmund to be borne in front of his troops; and to its influence was ascribed the victory that he obtained over them in the battle of the 27th of October. In 1214, King John was met here by the barons. Henry III. held a parliament here in 1272, which may be regarded as the outline of a British house of commons; and in 1296, Edward I. visited the town, where he also held a parliament. In 1381, Sir John Cavendish, lord chief justice, was brought hither and beheaded by the Suffolk and Norfolk insurgents, amounting to 50,000 men, who afterwards attacked the abbey, executed the prior, Sir John Cambridge, and continued their career of lawless outrage till they were finally dispersed by the exertions of Spencer, the martial Bishop of Norwich. In 1526, the dukes of Suffolk and Norfolk assembled their forces here, to quell a dangerous insurrection of the inhabitants of Lavenham and the adjacent country; and on the death of Edward VI., in 1553, John Dudley, Duke of Northumberland, made this place the rendezvous of his forces, when he caused Lady Jane Grey to be proclaimed successor to the throne. In 1555-6, twelve persons were burned at the stake, in the persecutions during the reign of Mary: in 1583, her successor, Elizabeth, visited Bury, where she was magnificently entertained.

The town is delightfully situated upon a gentle eminence, on the western bank of the river Larke, also called the Bourne, in the centre of an open and richly cultivated tract of country; the streets are spacious, well paved, and lighted with gas. The houses are in general uniform, and handsomely built, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water; the air is salubrious, the environs abound with interesting scenery, and the peculiar cleanliness of the town, and the number and variety of its public institutions, render it desirable as a place of residence. The subscription library, formed by the union of two separate establishments, one of which was founded in 1790, and the other in 1795, contains a valuable collection, and is liberally supported: there are also a news-room, four circulating libraries, a mechanics' institute, and a billiard-room. The botanic garden, to which the abbey gate forms the principal entrance, is an agreeable promenade, supported by an annual subscription of two guineas from each member. The theatre, a neat building, erected in 1819, is opened during the great fair, by the Norwich company of comedians. Concerts take place occasionally in the old theatre, built in 1780, which has been converted to this use; and assemblies are held during the season at the subscription-rooms, erected in 1804, and handsomely fitted up. The spinning of yarn was formerly the principal source of employment for the poor, and the halls in which the wool was deposited are yet standing; but no particular branch of manufacture is at present carried on. About a mile from the town the river Larke becomes navigable to Lynn, whence coal and other commodities are brought hither in small barges. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday, the former for corn, &c., and the latter for meat and poultry. Fairs are held on the Tuesday in Easter-week, for toys, &c.; Oct. 1st, and Dec. 1st, for horses, cattle, butter, and cheese: the great fair commences on the 10th of Oct., and generally continues about three weeks.

The GOVERNMENT, by charter of incorporation granted in the 4th of James I., and extended in the 6th and 12th of the same reign, and in the 20th of Charles II., was vested in an alderman, six assistants, twelve capital burgesses, twenty-four common-councilmen, a recorder, coroner, town-clerk, four serjeants-at-mace, and subordinate officers; but by the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76.,

the corporation now consists of a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors, and the total number of magistrates is sixteen. The freedom is acquired by apprenticeship to a freeman and by birth. The borough first received a precept to return representatives to parliament in the 30th of Edward I., but made no subsequent return till the 4th of James I., since which it has continued to send two members. The right of election was formerly vested exclusively in the alderman, burgesses, and common-councilmen; but, by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, it has been extended to the £10 householders of the parishes of St. Mary and St. James, which constitute the borough, and comprise 3000 acres. The mayor is returning officer. The corporation hold courts of session for the trial of capital offenders, under a grant from William IV.; and a court of record, which embraces all pleas where the cause of action has arisen within the precincts of the borough, and the damages do not exceed £200, is held once a month. Petty-sessions occur weekly; and a court for the recovery of debts under 40s. is held under the chief steward of the liberty. The assizes for the county and liberty, the latter of which comprises seven hundreds within the county, are held here and at Ipswich alternately, there being always a separate commission for the borough and liberty; also the general quarter-sessions for a certain district of the county. The shire hall, on the site of the ancient church of St. Margaret, is a neat modern building, containing two courts for civil and criminal causes. The guildhall, where the borough courts are held, has a beautiful ancient porch of flint, brick, and stone, on which are sculptured the arms of the borough. The town bridewell, situated on the Hog Hill, was formerly a synagogue; the circular windows bespeak its antiquity, and it appears, from other parts, to be of Norman origin. The county gaol, erected in 1805, is a spacious building upon the radiating principle, surrounded by a stone wall, inclosing an octagonal area, the diameter of which is 292 feet: the house of correction near the gaol is arranged with a due regard to classification.

Bury comprises the parishes of St. Mary and St. James, each containing 6269 inhabitants: the living of each is a donative, the former in the patronage of the Corporation, to whom also the impropriations belong, and the latter in dispute between them and the bishop of Ely; net income of St. Mary's, £110; and of St. James', which is commonly called a preachership, £106. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, and completed about the year 1433, is a spacious and elegant structure, in the later English style, with a low massive tower; the north door is in the decorated style, and the porch, the roof of which is singularly beautiful, of later date; on the north side of the altar is a modern tablet of white marble to the memory of Mary Tudor, third daughter of Henry VII., wife of Louis XII. of France, and afterwards of Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk. The church of St. James is a large and handsome edifice, in the later style of English architecture, of which the western end is a rich and beautiful specimen; the church gate, leading to the precinct of the abbey, is surmounted by a fine Norman tower. A district church has been erected in the parish of St. James, the patronage of which is vested in the bishop of Ely. There are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, the Society of Friends, Methodists, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. The grammar school, founded by Edward VI., in the fourth year of his reign, and placed under the control of 16 governors; is open to the sons of inhabitants, upon the payment of two guineas entrance, and the same sum per annum, if taught Latin and Greek; the annual income is £411. 15. The school has four exhibitions, tenable for four years, of the annual value of £20 each, founded by Edward Hewer in the 11th of Elizabeth; two others, of the value of £25 each, founded by Dean Sudbury, in 1670, to either of the Universities; a scholarship at Corpus Christi, and another at Jesus' College, Cambridge. The residue of the funds of Dean Sudbury's bequest, which amount in the aggregate to £154 per annum, is applied in apprenticing four children. A new school-house has been erected, over the entrance to which is a bust of the founder, with an appropriate inscription. A school of industry for girls is supported by subscription; besides which are national and other schools.

The feoffees of the Guildhall estates hold in trust, for charitable uses, buildings, lands, and rent-charges, producing an annual income of £2038: a part of these estates was given by John Smyth, Esq., an inhabitant and a great benefactor to the town. The affairs have recently been in chancery, and in 1842, a new distribution of the funds was ordered to be made. Clopton's asylum was founded for the support of six aged widowers, and the same number of widows, in 1730, by Poley Clopton, M.D., who endowed it with property producing £730 per annum; it is a neat brick building, with projecting wings, having the arms of the founder over the entrance in the centre. John Sutton, in 1696, gave £32 per annum towards the maintenance of twelve poor religious men, and a rent-charge of £30 for maintaining six boys at the grammar school; but, part of the property having been lost, the latter part of the testator's will has not been carried into effect. Dorothy Calthorpe, in 1693, gave £500, directing the interest to be applied in apprenticing poor boys. In 1708, Jacob Johnson devised three houses and a rent-charge of £36 for lodging and clothing three widows, and for clothing eight men and eight women in addition, and apprenticing two boys; and two women of Bury are lodged, and receive £5 per annum, under Sir Robert Drury's charity. The rental of land given by William Cooke, in 1709, amounting to about £16, is applied in clothing four poor men. Sir John James, in 1740, bequeathed £1000, which was invested in Old South Sea annuities, and the dividends, amounting to £30, are paid for advice and medicine supplied to the poor. In 1769, Mrs. Chamberlayne and the Rev. A. Upcher gave, by indenture, £2000, invested in the three per cent. consols., and yielding a dividend of £68. 9. 4., which is distributed among 68 poor women. Mrs. Green, in 1814, gave £600, invested in the funds, of which the interest is distributed among 24 women, seventy years of age; and £500 invested in the three per cent. consols., for coal to the inmates of the almshouses. There are also minor charities, amounting in the whole to about £50 per annum, distributed among the poor. The Suffolk general hospital, established in 1825, and supported by subscription, was originally built by government for an ordnance depôt, but was afterwards purchased and converted to its present use.

Near the north gate, on the road to Thetford, are the ruins of St. Saviour's hospital, founded in the reign of King John, with an income of 153 marks, where the "good" Duke of Gloucester is believed to have been murdered. A little beyond it stood St. Thomas' hospital and chapel, now a private dwelling; and about half a mile distant may be traced the site of the old priory. Various other ruins connected with the abbey and its early history are visible. Many minor institutions were dependent on it, of which there are not at present any remains: among these may be noticed a college of priests, dedicated to the Holy Name of Jesus, founded in the reign of Edward IV., suppressed in that of Edward VI.; an hospital, dedicated to St. John, established by one of the abbots in the reign of Edward I.; an hospital, dedicated to St. Nicholas, founded also by an abbot of St. Edmund's, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £6. 19. 11.; and St. Peter's hospital, instituted in the latter part of the reign of Henry I., or the beginning of that of Stephen, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £10. 18. 11. Sir Nicholas Bacon, Bishops Gardiner and Pretymann, and Dr. Blomfield, the present Bishop of London, were born at this place.

BURYTHORP (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MALTON, wapentake of BUCKROSE, E. riding of YORK, 4 miles (S.) from New Malton; containing 226 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Malton to Pocklington, and at the base of the Yorkshire wolds, and comprises about 1200 acres, of which two-thirds are arable, and the remainder meadow, pasture, and woodland; the surface is hilly, the soil various, and in general good, and the scenery in many situations very beautiful. Stone is quarried for burning into lime, and for the roads. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 16. 3., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £264. 9. 9., and the glebe comprises 25 acres. The church is an ancient edifice, with substantial buttresses. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a parochial school is supported by subscription. In 1768, Francis Consith died here, at the extraordinary age of 150.

BUSBY, GREAT, a township, in the parish and union of STOKESLEY, W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Stokesley; containing 114 inhabitants. The manor of this place, which was ancient demesne of the crown, was granted by the Conqueror to Robert de Brus, of Skelton Castle, and his descendants continued lords till the death of Peter de Brus, the fourth, without issue, when the lands came to the family of de Roos, who held of the king in capite. Among the other principal proprietors in former times, occur the family of de Mowbray, and the monks of Rivaulx and of Fountains. The township is situated a little to the south-west of the road from Stokesley to Thirsk, and comprises, with Little Busby, formerly united with it, 2090 acres of land. The tithes have been commuted for £201.

BUSBY, LITTLE, a township, in the parish and union of STOKESLEY, W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Stokesley; containing 34 inhabitants. It is a small hamlet, distant about a mile from the village of Great Busby, and contains Busby Hall, a handsome stone mansion, occupying a commanding eminence. The tithes have been commuted for £73.

BUSCOT, or BURWASCOT (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of FARRINGDON, hundred of SHRIVENHAM, county of BERKS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by E.) from Lechlade; containing 405 inhabitants, and comprising 2684a. 2r. 31p. Buscot Park House, beautifully situated on the bank of the Thames, was built, in 1781, by Pryse Loveden, Esq., prior to which the family mansion of the Lovedens was near the church. Mr. Loveden took the name of Pryse, on coming into possession of property in Wales, as heir to his maternal grandfather. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 2. 8½., and in the patronage of Pryse Pryse, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £535, and the glebe consists of 64 acres.

BUSHBURY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of PENKRIDGE, partly in the E. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, and partly in the N. division of that of SEISDON, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Wolverhampton; containing, with the township of Essington, and the hamlet of Moseley, 1509 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the road from Wolverhampton to Liverpool and Manchester, comprises 6400 acres, of which 2950 are in the township of Essington: it abounds with coal, which is extensively wrought, and for the conveyance of the produce facility is afforded by the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal, and the Grand Junction railway, which pass through the parish. Moseley Hall, then the residence of Thomas Whitgreave, to whom there is a marble tablet in the church, was the place of temporary concealment for Charles II., when on his way to Bentley. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 11. 5½., and in the patronage of the Landowners; net income, £159. The church was built about the year 1460, and some years ago was repaired and enlarged. A parochial school is supported by subscription.

BUSHBY, a hamlet, in the parish of THURNBY, union of BILLESDON, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Leicester; containing 86 inhabitants.

BUSHEY (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of WATFORD, hundred of DACORUM, though locally in the hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of St. ALBAN'S, county of HERTFORD, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. E.) from Watford; containing 2675 inhabitants. This place appears to have attained some importance at an early period; and in the third of Edward I., David de Jarpanville, in answer to a writ of quo warranto, issued by that monarch, claimed the privilege of holding a market here. The parish comprises 2952 acres, of which 970 are arable, and nearly all the rest meadow and pasture; it is intersected by the London and Birmingham railway, which passes within a mile of the church. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 2. 1., and in the patronage of Exeter College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £765, and the glebe contains 35 acres, with a house. At Bushey Heath, an additional church, consecrated in June, 1837, has been erected by subscription, aided by a grant from the Incorporated Society: it is a handsome edifice; in the early English style, containing 400 sittings, of which 200 are free. A national school is supported by subscription.

BUSHLEY (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of UPTON-UPON-SEVERN, Lower division of the hundred of PERSHORE, Upton and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W.) from Tewkesbury; containing 334 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Severn, by which it is bounded on the east, and which, on the opposite bank, receives the waters of the Avon, a little above Tewkesbury, in the county of Gloucester; it comprises by admeasurement 1700 acres, more than two-thirds of which consist of pasture and orchards. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £58; patron and improprator, J. E. Dowdeswell, Esq. A small charity school is supported by the Dowdeswell family.

BUSLINGTHORPE, a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from Market-Rasen; containing 50 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £2, and in the patronage of the Governors of the Charter-house, London: the tithes have been commuted for £235.

BUSTABECK, a township, in the parish of CASTLE-SOWERBY, union of PENRITH, LEITH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Hesket-Newmarket; containing 249 inhabitants.

BUSTON, HIGH, a township, in the parish of WARKWORTH, union of ALNWICK, E. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Alnwick; containing 100 inhabitants. It is bounded on the east by the German Ocean, and comprises 690 acres, of which 350 belong to the duke of Northumberland; 257 to G. J. Forster, Esq.; and 85, with a mansion-house, commanding fine and extensive land and sea views, to Roger Buston, Esq., whose family has resided here for centuries past. Of the soil, which is rich, two-thirds are arable, and the remainder pasture; the surface is undulated, and an excellent beach affords every facility for bathing. The tithes have been commuted for £102. 5. 2., of which £78. 8. 8. are payable to the bishop of Carlisle, and £23. 16. 6. to the vicar of the parish.

BUSTON, LOW, a township, in the parish of WARKWORTH, union of ALNWICK, E. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Alnwick; containing 115 inhabitants. It is situated to the north of the river Coquet, and at some little distance to the east is the North Sea. Buston Vale, a neat mansion, is situated near the Buston burn. The tithes have been commuted for £215. 2. 6., of which £143. 18. 5. are payable to the bishop of Carlisle, and £71. 4. 1. to the vicar.

BUTCOMBE (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of HARTCLIFFE with BEDMINSTER, E. division of SOMERSET, 9 miles (S. S. W.) from Bristol; containing 256 inhabitants. It abounds in iron-stone, which is sent to Bristol, and there shipped to Wales. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 17. 10.; net income, £248; patron and incumbent, Rev. George John Sayce. The church is a very old structure. A singular barrow, 150 feet in length from north to south, and 75 in breadth from east to west, was opened in 1788, and exhibited an entire specimen of a well-arranged family vault, in which were found skulls and other fragments of human bones.

BUTELAND, with BROOMHOPE, a township, in the parochial chapelry of BIRLEY, union of BELLINGHAM,

N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTH-UMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Bellingham; containing 145 inhabitants. The township is connected with Birtley in ecclesiastical matters, and in civil affairs with the parish of Chollerton, from which Birtley was separated in 1765. The North Tyne river flows at a short distance from the hamlet on the west. An extensive farm here belongs to Greenwich Hospital.

BUTLEIGH (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of WELLS; hundred of WHITLEY, W. division of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Glastonbury; containing, with the hamlet of Wootton-Butleigh, 872 inhabitants. The manor anciently belonged to the abbots of Glastonbury, who had a park here. The parish is bounded on the north-east by the river Brue, and comprises by measurement 4670 acres: blue lias, which is used for paving and for building purposes, is quarried to a considerable extent. The living is a vicarage, with Baltonsborough annexed, valued in the king's books at £12. 6. 8.; net income, £380; patron, Hon. and Rev. G. Neville Grenville; impropiators, C. Neville Grenville, Esq., and the Saunders family. The church is a handsome structure, in the decorated English style, with a central tower, and contains monuments to the Right Hon. James Grenville, James Grenville, Baron Glastonbury, General Richard Grenville, Sir Samuel Hood, Capt. Alexander Hood, and several lords of the manor. Schools, in connexion with the Church, are supported by subscription; and the interest of £500 three per cents., bequeathed by Gen. Grenville, is divided among the poor. Admirals Viscounts Hood and Bridport were natives of the parish. There is a chalybeate spring, but in disuse.

BUTLEY, a township, in the parish of PRESTBURY, union and hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Macclesfield; containing 602 inhabitants. At the time of the Norman survey, this place, then the property of Ulluric, a Saxon free-man, was exempted, and is consequently unnoticed in Domesday book, a mark of clemency which the owner probably acquired by some signal service to the Conqueror. The manufacture of silk is carried on to some extent. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans, with a school attached. Some tumuli were discovered in the vicinity a few years since. This is the birthplace of Thomas Newton, a distinguished writer in the sixteenth century.

BUTLEY (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of PLOMESGATE, partly in the hundred of PLOMESGATE, but chiefly in that of LOES, E. division of SUFFOLK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Woodbridge; containing 364 inhabitants. It is bounded on the east by a branch of the river Ore, called Butley Creek or Eye, over which are two ferries to Orford. The living is a perpetual curacy, with Capel; net income, £85; patrons and impropiators, Trustees of P. Thellusson, Esq. A priory of Black canons, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, was founded, in 1171, by Ranulph de Glanvill, a celebrated lawyer, and afterwards justiciary of England: the revenue, at the Dissolution, was £318. 17. 2. There are only some trifling remains of the buildings of the abbey, but the gate-house is still in good preservation.

BUTSFIELD, a township, in the parish and union of LANCHESTER, W. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 11 miles (W. by N.) from Durham; containing 252 inhabitants. Two Roman aqueducts, for supplying the station at Lanchester, may be traced in the neighbourhood, particularly in the grounds belonging to Thomas White, Esq., who, on the inclosure of the common lands, in 1773, purchased a part which was sold to defray the expense incurred in carrying the act of parliament into effect, and out of a barren waste has succeeded in raising, in the course of a few years, the thriving and well-planted estate of Woodlands. Mr. White has also built a good mansion-house, laid out pleasure-grounds and gardens, and made the neglected waters of the aqueducts supply his fish-ponds and reservoirs. A school is supported partly by an annuity of £5 from the trustees of Lord Crewe's charity.

BUTTER-BUMP, a hamlet, in the parish of WILLOUGHBY, union of SPILSBY, Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 3 inhabitants.

BUTTER-CRAMBE, a chapelry, in the parish of BOSSALL, union of YORK, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of the county of YORK, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from York. The chapelry comprises by computation 1500 acres, of which the soil is very productive, and the scenery pleasing and picturesque. The village is pleasantly situated on the western bank of the navigable river Derwent, which is crossed by a stone bridge; and in the vicinity is Aldby Park, the seat of Henry Darley, Esq., proprietor of the soil, and which was originally the site of a Roman station, and subsequently that of a royal Saxon ville, once the summer retreat of Edwin the Great, and where that prince was assaulted by an assassin, whom Quichelm, King of the West Saxons, one of Edwin's secret enemies, had suborned to murder him. The ruffian met the prince at Aldby, and praying an audience, which was immediately granted, and pretending secret business, took him a little aside from his attendants, when, drawing a two-edged poisoned weapon, he struck with such force and determination that he wounded his intended victim through the body of a guardsman, named Lilla, who had perceived his design, and had thrown himself before the prince to intercept the stroke: the assassin was cut to pieces by the enraged courtiers, but not before he had, in his desperation, slain another knight of the guards, named Forther. The present mansion is a large and handsome quadrangular building of brick, ornamented with stone dressings, and beautifully situated in grounds richly wooded. The chapel is a small plain edifice. In the park and on the banks of the Derwent are vestiges of the Saxon ville; and those of an old castle, erected on an eminence, were visible in Camden's time.

BUTTERLAW, a township, in the parish of NEWBURN, union and W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Newcastle; containing 16 inhabitants. It comprises about 240 acres, and contains a few cottages only; and is the property of the duke of Northumberland.

BUTTERLEIGH, a parish, in the union of TIVERTON, forming a detached portion of the hundred of CLISTON, locally in the hundred of HAYRIDGE, Cul-lompton and S. divisions of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Tiverton; containing 155 inhabitants. It is situated on the old road from Tiverton to Exeter, and comprises about 450 acres by computation. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 8. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £85, and the glebe comprises 69 acres. The church is a neat substantial edifice.

BUTTERLEY, a hamlet, in the township of RIPLEY, parish of PENTRICH, union of BELFER, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 3 miles (S.) from Alfreton. Here are extensive iron-works, belonging to a company formed in 1792, and producing all the heavier articles in cast-iron, and machinery of various kinds: the ore and coal are conveyed to the spot by railways, and by the Cromford canal, which, by means of a tunnel, 2966 yards in length, passes under the works.

BUTTERLEY, a township, in the parish of EDWIN-RALPH, union of BROMYARD, hundred of WOLPHY, though locally in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, 3½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Bromyard.

BUTTERMERE, a chapelry, in the parish of BRIGHAM, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 8½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Keswick; containing 84 inhabitants. The village lies in a deep winding valley, environed by high rocky mountains, between the lake of Buttermere, noted for its char, and Crummock water, and in a district celebrated for picturesque and romantic beauty. Mines of lead and copper were formerly worked in the mountains; and many labourers are still occupied in the extensive quarries of fine blue slate in Honister Crag. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £56; patron and impropiator, Earl of Lonsdale. The chapel is a neat edifice, of modern construction.

BUTTERMERE (St. James), a parish, in the union of HUNGERFORD, hundred of KINWARDSTONE, Everley and Pewsey, and S. divisions of WILTS, 5¼ miles (S.) from Hungerford; containing 130 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester: the tithes have been commuted for £298. 10.

BUTTERSHAW, a hamlet, in the chapelry of WIBSEY, township of NORTH BIERLEY, parish and union of BRADFORD, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (W.) from Bradford. This place is situated in a district abounding with coal, and in the neighbourhood of the extensive iron-works of Low Moor, in which the inhabitants are chiefly employed. The surface, for a wide extent, is covered with vast heaps of shale and the refuse of the mines, and has a dreary and sterile aspect; but in some parts is enlivened with verdure, and pleasingly diversified. A church was erected in 1840.—See WIBSEY.

BUTTERTON, a township, in the parish of TRENT-HAM, union of STONE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, and of the county of STAFFORD; containing 56 inhabitants.

BUTTERTON, a chapelry, in the parish of MAYFIELD, S. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 7 miles (E.) from Leek; containing 388 inhabitants. The river Manifold runs through the district, which comprises by computation 1300 acres; limestone is quarried, and a small quantity of gritstone; and a lead-mine is in operation. Portions of copper-ore, stalactites, fossil shells, and an ore called by the miners "brown end," convertible into zinc, are found; and there is a mineral spring strongly impregnated with sulphur. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £90; patron, Vicar of Mayfield; impropiator, Duke of Devonshire. The chapel, which is a neat stone edifice with a tower, was rebuilt in 1780. William Mellor, in 1754, bequeathed property now producing £16 a year, for which children are taught to read.

BUTTERWICK, a tything, in the parish of FOLKE, union and hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of DORSET, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Sherborne.

BUTTERWICK, a township, in the parish and union of SEDFIELD, N. E. division of STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 11 miles (S. E.) from Durham; containing 51 inhabitants. This place formerly belonged to the see of Durham, and in the 13th century was granted by Bishop Nicholson, under the designation of Buterwyk, to the family of Sadberge; from them the estate passed to the Hotons, and among subsequent owners occur the families of Belasyse, Yong, Baynbrigg, and Salvin. The chantry of St. Katherine in the church of Sedgefield, also had land here, which was attached to it at the period of the Dissolution. The estate of Oldacres was the property of the late Robert Spearman, Esq., whose father purchased it from the Butlers, to whom it had been given by the crown. The township comprises 1495 acres. The tithes have been commuted for £113. 11. 8.

BUTTERWICK (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of BOSTON, wapentake of SKIRBECK, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 1 mile (N. N. E.) from Bennington; containing 579 inhabitants. It is situated on the road between Boston and Wainfleet, and comprises 1766a. 26p. The living is a discharged vicarage, united in 1751 to that of Frieston, and valued in the king's books at £8. 4. 2.: the tithes have been commuted for land. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A grammar school was endowed in 1665, by the Rev. Joshua Pinchbeck, with the rent of 130 acres of land, now valued at £280 per annum; besides which there are various minor sums for the poor.

BUTTERWICK, a chapelry, in the parish of FOXHOLES, union of DRIFFIELD, wapentake of DICKERING, E. riding of YORK, 10½ miles (N. by W.) from Great Driffield; containing 100 inhabitants. It comprises about 1645 acres, of which 1470 are arable, 95 grass, and 80 plantations: the village, which is neat, is situated on the banks of a small rivulet. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £47; patron, Rector of Foxholes. The tithes were commuted for land in 1771. In the church, which is a small ancient edifice, is a Knight Templar's monument at full length.

BUTTERWICK, a township, in the parish of BARTON-LE-STREET, union of MALTON, wapentake of RYE-DALE, N. riding of YORK, 6 miles (N. W.) from New Malton; containing 64 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Rye, and comprises about 500 acres of land. The tithes have been commuted for £150, and there is a glebe of 8 acres.

BUTTERWICK, EAST, a township, in the parishes of BOTTESFORD and MESSINGHAM, union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, E. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 10¼ miles (W.) from Glandford-Brigg; containing 378 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BUTTERWICK, WEST, a chapelry, in the parish of OWSTON, union of GAINSBOROUGH, W. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Epworth; containing, with the hamlet of Kelfield, 865 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £80; patron, Vicar of Owston. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

BUTTERWORTH, a township, in the parish and union of ROCHDALE, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Rochdale; containing 5088 inhabitants. A school at Milnrow, in the township, was built by Alexander Butterworth, about 1720, and endowed with a rent-charge of £20, by R. G. Townley, Esq. A school at Hollingworth is endowed with an estate producing £26 a year, and another at Ogden with one yielding a rent of £54, both devised by John Hill, in 1727.

BUTTOLPHS, a parish, in the union and hundred of STEYNING, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Steyning; containing 48 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the east by the navigable river Adur; and the Roman road from Bognor to Lewes probably passed near it. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to the rectory of Bramber: the church is an ancient edifice, with a low embattled tower, and consisted formerly of a nave, chancel, and north aisle, which last was divided from the nave by arches, now filled up. About 1830 a considerable number of Roman bricks, tiles, and pottery, was discovered by the plough, on the downs.

BUTTSBURY (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHELMSFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 7 miles (S. W. by S.) from Chelmsford; containing 521 inhabitants. At the time of the Norman survey, the lands were the property of Henry de Ferrers; at present not less than seven manors are either wholly or partly within the limits of the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Ingatestone: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £323. 6. 8., and a rent-charge of £6. 13. 4. is paid to the priest and paupers of Gyng Petre; the glebe consists of 8 acres. The church is a small ancient building, with a square tower of stone, surmounted by a shingled spire.

BUXHALL (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and hundred of STOW, W. division of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Stow-Market; containing 533 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Gipping, and comprises about 2249 acres, the surface of which is moderately undulated, and the soil a stiff, rich, fertile clay. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 0. 5., and in the patronage of the Rev. Henry Coppinger Hill: the tithes have been commuted for £668, and the glebe comprises 39 acres. The church is a spacious and handsome structure, in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower: there are some remains of ancient stained glass in the windows, and in the chancel are some memorials of the Hill family. A school is supported by subscription.

BUXLOW, formerly a chapelry, now a hamlet, in the parish of KNODISHALL, union and hundred of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Saxmundham. The chapel, now in ruins, was dedicated to St. Peter. Buxlow was annexed to the parish of Knodishall, in 1721.

BUXTED (St. Margaret), a parish, in the union of UCKFIELD, hundred of LOXFIELD-DORSET, rape of PEVENSEY, E. division of SUSSEX, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. N. E.)

from Uckfield; containing 1574 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the road from Lewes to Tonbridge-Wells, abounds with sandstone and iron-stone; and it is said that the first pieces of ordnance cast in England were produced here. Buxted Park, the seat of the Earl of Liverpool, is an elegant mansion, in an ample and richly-wooded demesne. The living is a rectory, with Uckfield annexed, valued in the king's books at £37. 5. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Archbishop of Canterbury: the tithes of Buxted have been commuted for £960, and there is a glebe of 50 acres. The church, beautifully situated within the grounds of the park, is a spacious and venerable structure, in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower, surmounted by a lofty spire. A district church was erected at Hadlow Down, in 1836. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school is supported by subscription. Dr. Saunders, Rector of Buxted, in 1719, bequeathed land, now producing £70 per annum, for the establishment of a free school at Uckfield, for six boys of this parish and six of Uckfield; and he also left land, now worth £12 per annum, for the instruction of girls. Sir Henry Fermor, in 1732, bequeathed £3000 for maintaining a chaplain, and for educating and clothing ten poor children of this place, and thirty of Rotherfield, in which latter parish he erected a chapel, with suitable school buildings at Howborough. The successors of Dr. Saunders in the benefice have been eminently distinguished for their talents, of whom may be noticed the Rev. William Clarke, author of a work on the connexion of the Roman, Saxon, and English coins, and his son Edward, who published "Letters concerning the Russian Nation," and other productions, and who was interred here: the late rector was Dr. George D'Oyly, and the present is Dr. Wordsworth. That celebrated scholar, Dr. W. Wotton, father-in-law of the Rev. William Clarke, lies interred in the churchyard; and the accomplished and intrepid traveller, Dr. E. D. Clarke, was born, and passed his boyhood, in the parsonage-house. There are several chalybeate springs.

BUXTON, a market-town and chapelry, in the parish of BAKEWELL, union of CHAPEL-EN-LE-FRITH, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 33 miles (N. W.) from Derby, and 159 (N. W. by N.) from London, on the high road from Derby to Manchester; containing 1569 inhabitants. Antiquaries agree in considering this to have been a Roman station, although they have not been able to ascertain its name. The place was subsequently called Bawkestones, supposed to be a corruption of Bathanstones, signifying the bath stones; and one of the Roman roads still retains the appellation Bathorn-gate. The Romans, attracted by the temperature of the waters, constructed a bath, the wall of which, covered with red cement, and other parts, are still remaining; and several Roman coins have been discovered. Near this spot two great military roads intersected, one connecting Little Chester and Manchester, and the other leading from Middlewich to Brough, and thence to York and Aldborough, at which places respectively were stations of considerable importance. The town is situated near the source of the small river Wye, in a valley surrounded by bleak elevated tracts of moorland; but several plantations have been formed on the adjacent eminences, which, with other improvements, will materially alter the appearance of the immediate vicinity. The older part, occupying the high grounds, consists chiefly of houses built of limestone, without order, and of mean appearance; the more modern, situated in the vale, comprises lodging-houses and hotels, erected and fitted up with every regard to the comfort of its numerous visitors. The old Hall, built in the sixteenth century, by the Earl of Shrewsbury, for several years afforded temporary accommodation to visitors of rank, and for some time was the abode of Mary, Queen of Scots, who, while in the custody of the earl, accompanied him and his countess in an excursion to this place: it underwent considerable alteration and enlargement in 1670, and is still the principal hotel; it contains various kinds of baths. The Crescent, erected in 1781, by the Duke of Devonshire, is a fine range of building, in the Grecian style, erected of gritstone obtained near the spot, fronted with fine freestone brought from a quarry about a mile distant. At the eastern extremity, and communicating with the Great Hotel, two hot baths have been constructed, and are supplied from Bingham's Well. The new square, nearly adjoining, has an arcade communicating with that of the Crescent, and forming a continued promenade of considerable extent; it contains many handsome lodging-houses, and there are also others in various parts of the town. St. Anne's Well, near the Crescent, the resort of those who drink the waters, is inclosed within a handsome building, in the style of a Grecian temple: the water issues from the spring into a marble basin, and opposite to it is a double pump, by which both hot and cold water are simultaneously raised from springs lying within a few inches of each other: the hot spring has a temperature of 81° of Fahrenheit. The waters are sulphureous and saline, and are efficacious in gout, rheumatism, and indigestion, and in nervous, scorbutic, and nephritic diseases: the season commences early in June, and continues generally till October. There is also a chalybeate spring, the water of which is strongly impregnated with iron held in solution by acidulous gas. The environs abound with picturesque and romantic scenery, and with pleasant walks and rides; of the latter, the Duke's Ride, on the Bakewell road, extending over the summit of a rock called the Lover's Leap, is a favourite excursion with equestrians. The principal branch of trade consists in the manufacture and sale of many beautiful ornaments in fluor spar, alabaster, and other mineral productions of the Peak; and a great quantity of lime, noted for its strength, is burnt to the west of the town, the workmen and their families living in huts excavated in the cinders, which cement firmly together, and become as hard as the rock itself. In the vicinity passes the Cromford and High Peak railway. The market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on Feb. 3rd, April 1st, May 2nd, and Sept. 8th, for cattle. The town is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy; net income, £105; patron and impropiator, Duke of Devonshire. A new church, an elegant structure near the town, was erected, in 1812, at the expense of his Grace. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians. A school, now conducted on Dr. Bell's plan, was founded towards the close of the seventeenth century, and reopened in 1817, after a suspension of 25 years, during which period its affairs had been in chancery; the income, arising from land and property in the funds, is £94 per annum; the school is held in the ancient chapel of St. John the Baptist. The Bath charity, for the benefit of poor invalids coming hither for the use of the waters, is liberally supported by subscription. About three-quarters of a mile to the south-west of the town is Pool's Hole, a dark and dreary cavern, narrow and very low at the entrance, but lofty and presenting an exceedingly interesting appearance within, abounding with stalactites representing various natural forms; near the extremity is a rude mass, called the Pillar of Mary, Queen of Scots, beyond which few persons advance. About one mile and a half beyond the cavern is Diamond Hill, so called from the detached crystals found there in profusion, denominated Buxton diamonds; their form is hexagonal, and their surface and angles well defined, but of bad colour; when first found they are hard, but they soon lose that property.

BUXTON (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of AYLSHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 3¼ miles (N. W.) from Coltishall; containing 713 inhabitants. The village is pleasantly situated on the western bank of the navigable river Bure. The living is a discharged vicarage, united with Oxhead, to the rectory of Skeyton, and valued in the king's books at £5. 13. 9.: the tithes of Buxton have been commuted for £256. 16., of which £145 belong to Sir E. Stracey, Bart., £12 to the Dean and Chapter of Norwich, and £99. 16. to the incumbent, who has also a glebe of 35½ acres. The church is in the later English style, and has a square embattled tower; the nave, which is lighted with clerestory windows, is separated from the chancel, by the remains of a beautiful carved screen; and on the north side of the chancel, in 1841, was discovered a beautiful piscina, with stone stalls for three priests. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Wesleyans; and a national school was built, and is partly supported, by a bequest of £500 from the late John Wright, a member of the Society of Friends. Thomas Bulwer, in 1694, left £200 for the poor, which, with the bequests of Sir John Picto and others, produce about £60 per annum. This was a subordinate Roman station, and several remains of that people have been discovered.

BWLCH, a township, in the parish of CWMYOY, union of ABERGAVENNY, hundred of EWYASLACY, county of HEREFORD; containing 87 inhabitants, and comprising 607 acres. It is surrounded on all sides by the county of Monmouth, except on the north-east, where it is connected by a bridge over the river Munnow with that of Hereford: the surface is undulated and well wooded, and the soil rather under the average fertility. The tithes have been commuted for £69. 0. 9., of which £32. 2. are payable to the perpetual curate of Cwmyoy, £24. 4. 9. to the incumbent of Oldcastle, and £12. 14. to the incumbent of Llancillo. There are the remains of a square camp.

BYAL-FEN, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred and ISLE of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE; containing 33 inhabitants. The tithes belonging to the crown for Byal, West, Hale, and Grunty, Fen, have been commuted for £400.

BYERS-GREEN, a township, in the parish of St. ANDREW-AUCKLAND, union of AUCKLAND, S. E. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Bishop-Auckland; containing 489 inhabitants. It was anciently a part of the possessions of the family of Neville. The Byers-Green branch of the Clarence railway diverges from the Durham branch at Ferry Hill, about 6 miles distant, and terminates at this place. A district church is about to be built, and endowed by the Bishop of Durham, for the townships of Byers-Green and Newfield. There is a school on the national system.

BYFIELD (Holy Cross), a parish, in the union of DAVENTRY, hundred of CHIPPING-WARDEN, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Daventry; containing 1079 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the borders of Warwickshire, which partly bounds it on the north; and consists of 2962a. 16p., the surface being generally level, and the soil of full average fertility: it is crossed from south to north, by the road from Banbury to Daventry. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £28; net income, £917; patrons, President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1778.

BYFLEET (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of CHERTSEY, First division of the hundred of GODLEY, W. division of SURREY, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Cobham; containing 672 inhabitants. The manor was presented by Edward II. to his favourite, Piers de Gaveston. The river Wey, and the Guildford canal, pass through the parish, and the London and South-Western railway very near it: it contains by measurement 2034 acres, the soil of which is sandy. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 11. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £187. An old mansion, called Byfleet Park, at present a farm-house, was built by Edward the Black Prince; and at this place Henry VIII. was nursed.

BYFORD (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of WEOBLY, hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Hereford; containing 236 inhabitants. The parish comprises 873a. 1r. 14p., of which about 175 acres are arable, 647 pasture, and 50 woodland: it is intersected by the river Wye and the road from Hereford to Hay. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £182, and there is a glebe of 32 $\frac{1}{4}$ acres, with a house.

BYGRAVE, a parish, in the union of HITCHIN, hundred of ODSEY, county of HERTFORD, 2 miles (N. E. by N.) from Baldock; containing 154 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1620 acres, about 100 of which are pasture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 9. 7.; net income, £377; patron, Marquess of Salisbury.

BYKER, a township, in the parish of ALL SAINTS, NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE, union of NEWCASTLE, E. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (E.) from Newcastle; containing 6024 inhabitants. This place, which is situated on the north bank of the Tyne, and forms the easternmost part of the parish, comprises about 636 acres, nearly equally divided between arable and pasture, with upwards of 100 acres occupied by houses, manufactories, and yards for various uses. The surface is low ground on the shores of the Tyne and the Ouse burn, a small stream running into that river, and partly bounding the township, and partly intersecting it on the west; and immediately behind those low shores, the lands attain a considerable elevation, and present fine views of the town of Newcastle, the course of the Tyne, with its banks, as far to the east as the sea, and of Northumberland as far as the Cheviot hills to the north. The soil is chiefly a bright clay, and of moderate quality, but yet productive from good manure. Sandstone is quarried, which is well adapted for large works; some of it is shipped to London, and much is being used in the handsome new quay and other works undertaken by the corporation of Newcastle. There are three or four coal-mines worked under the surface of the soil, though there are few pits, these being sunk in the adjoining townships: the shaft of one of the mines is on the south bank of the Tyne; so that the works extend below the entire bed of the river, and coal is dug beneath the lands of Byker at a distance of a mile and a half from the shaft. Among the manufactories, which are very numerous, are potteries for brown and common, and blue and white, ware, crown and bottle glass-works, cinder and coke kilns, foundries, chain and other iron works, soap-manufactories, white-lead and colour establishments, flour-mills, saw-mills, a considerable flax-mill, fire-brick works, alkali-works, and rope-walks; and on the banks of the river are large timber, ship, and boat building yards. Of these manufactures an extensive export trade is carried on, and the pottery-ware is much esteemed in the north of Europe; while the India vessels, built at St. Peter's dock by Messrs. Smith, are among the finest specimens of our commercial marine. A handsome church is about to be erected, as a chapel of ease to All Saints, Newcastle; for which purpose a subscription has been opened, already aided by grants from the Incorporated Society and the Church Building Commissioners; and Sir M. W. Ridley, Bart., has given a site, nearly in the centre of the township. There are six places of worship, nearly all belonging to the different Methodist connexions; and six schools, chiefly for the children of dissenters, and some dames' schools. A self-supporting dispensary, aided by subscription, has been established.

BYLAND-ABBEY, a township, in the parish of COXWOLD, union of HELMSLEY, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, 7 miles (S. W. by W.) from Helmsley; containing 97 inhabitants. The township comprises 1527a. 3r. 30p., of which 444 acres are arable, 414 meadow and pasture, and 669 wood, water, and common. A monastery and church were founded here, in 1177, by the abbot and monks of Furness, in Lancashire, who, having been disturbed by the Scots, fled to this part of the country, and were well received by Roger de Mowbray, at Thirsk Castle, who assigned lands at Byland for their support: at the Dissolution the revenue was estimated at £238. 9. 4. Of the abbey, which was a magnificent structure, the western front and other parts yet remain, in a high state of preservation, and afford a beautiful specimen of early English architecture: on the removal of a quantity of rubbish in the year 1818 was found a stone coffin, containing a perfect skeleton, conjectured to be that of Roger de Mowbray; and at the same time fragments of a beautiful tessellated pavement were also discovered.

BYLAND, OLD, a parish, in the union of HELMSLEY, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from Helmsley; containing 185 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 2200 acres of arable land, and by computation 800 acres in wood, and is chiefly of a red light soil; the aspect of the land is in many situations mountainous and wild. Freestone is quarried for building. The living is a donative; net income, £55; patron and impropiator, George Wombwell, Esq., of Newborough-park. The church is an ancient edifice, with a square tower, and is supposed to have been attached to Rivaulx Abbey; the whole of the pavement is tessellated, and wrought with a variety of figures. A school-house has recently been erected, to which Mr. Wombwell contributes £6 per annum.

BYLAUGH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of MITTFORD and LAUNDITCH, hundred of EYNSFORD, E. division of NORFOLK, 5½ miles (N. E.) from East Dereham; containing 85 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1544a. 2r. 19p., of which 1100 acres are arable, 200 pasture, and 200 woodland and heath. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £82; patron and impropiator, E. Lombe, Esq., whose tithes have been commuted for £200. The church, which is in the later English style, with a tower, circular in the lower, and octangular in the upper, part, was thoroughly repaired in 1809, when the chancel was rebuilt and transepts added by the late Sir John Lombe, who lies buried in the north transept.

BYLEY, with YATEHOUSE, a township, in the parish of MIDDLEWICH, union and hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 1¼ mile (N. E. by N.) from Middlewich; containing 149 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £128. 15. 9.

BYRNESS, a chapelry, in the parish of ELSDON, union of ROTHBURY, S. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 13¾ miles (N. N. W.) from Bellingham. This place is situated on the road from Newcastle to Jedburgh, and is watered by the Rede river: coal-mines, freestone, and limestone quarries are worked. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £75; patron, Rector of Elsdon. The income is paid from Queen Anne's Bounty and the rent of 16 acres of land; there is a good glebe-house, with about 3 acres of land. The chapel was built by subscription, in 1793, in an ancient burial-ground; it is 34 feet long, by 22 wide, and has a very small chancel, and a porch at the west end. The rector of Elsdon has the privilege of sending from his parish twelve poor children to be gratuitously taught by the resident curate, according to a stipulation annexed to the endowment of the chapel by the Rev. Lewis Dutens, a former rector, in 1800. Here was a Druidical temple, but every vestige of it has disappeared.

BYROME, or BYRAM, with POOL, a township, in the parish of BROTHERTON, Lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK, 1¾ mile (N. N. W.) from Ferry-Bridge; containing 79 inhabitants. It is situated on the east of the river Aire, and comprises by computation 850 acres, including the hamlet of Pool. Byram Hall, the seat of Sir John Ramsden, Bart., is a handsome mansion, in a fine and well-wooded park of about 200 acres.

BYSHOTTLES, with BRANDON, a township, in the parish of BRANCEPETH, N. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, union, and S. division of the county of DURHAM, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Durham; containing 467 inhabitants. In this place is Burn Hall, a handsome mansion, erected about twenty years since, near the site of an ancient residence.

BYTHAM, CASTLE (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of BOURNE, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Corby; containing, with the chapelry of Holywell with Aunby, and the hamlet of Couthorpe, 855 inhabitants. This place derives its name from an ancient castle, the origin of which is generally attributed to the Romans: it appears to have been strongly fortified; and within the foundations have been dug up, at various times, stone coffins and other relics of antiquity. In 1080, Odo, Earl of Albemarle and Holderness, having married Adelina, sister of William the Conqueror, obtained a grant of the castle and adjoining territory for the purpose of enabling them to feed their infant son, Stephen, with wheat bread, from which circumstance a close, constituting a part of the territory, still retains the name of "Wheaten Close." In 1340, William de Fortibus, Earl of Albemarle, rebelling against Edward III., fortified his castle of Bytham, and plundered the surrounding country; but the castle being soon afterwards besieged by the royal forces, was taken and levelled with the ground. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with the rectory of Little Bytham, and valued in the king's books at £7. 13. 6.: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1803. At Holywell, in the parish, is a chapel of ease. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is partly supported by £25 per annum, from an estate belonging to the parish. A convent for Cistercian monks, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, was removed hither, about the year 1147, from Fountains in the county of York, by William, Earl of Albemarle, but was afterwards removed to Edenham: it flourished, under an abbot and thirteen monks, till the Dissolution, when its revenue was estimated at £124. 5. 11.; the site was granted to Charles, Duke of Suffolk.

BYTHAM, LITTLE (St. MADARDUS), a parish, in the union of BOURNE, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (S.) from Corby; containing 311 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the vicarage of Castle Bytham consolidated, valued in the king's books at £4. 8. 4., and in the alternate patronage of the Bishop and the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln; net income, £610. Two schools are partly supported by subscription.

BYTHORN (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of THRAPSTON, hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, 6½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Kimbolton; containing 322 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Huntingdon to Northampton, and comprises by measurement 1500 acres. The living is united, with that of Old Weston, to the rectory of Brington: the tithes have been commuted for £20. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. John Mason Hustwait, in 1816, bequeathed £300, the interest of which is appropriated to the teaching of children.

BYTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of KNIGHTON, hundred of WIGMORE, county of HERE-FORD, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Presteign; containing 172 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 847 acres, of which 359 are arable, 400 meadow, and 88 woodland: there are also about 70 acres of common. It is bounded on the north by the river Lug, and intersected from north to south by the road between Leintwardine and Kington. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £115.

BYWELL (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing 452 inhabitants, of whom 51 are in part of the township of Bywell, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Corbridge, and $13\frac{1}{2}$ (W. by S.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne. The parish is on the north and south sides of the river Tyne, and comprises the townships of Bearl, Broomhaugh, Riding, Stocksfield-Hall, Styford, and part of Bywell, the whole forming an area, by computation, of 3680 acres. It is intersected by the road from Newcastle to Hexham; and the Newcastle and Carlisle railway also passes through the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £3. 9. 2., and in the patronage of T. W. Beaumont, Esq., with a net income of £162; impropriators, R. Trevelyan and H. Witham, Esqrs. The church is a small edifice with a lofty steeple. A large portion of the township of Bywell is the property of Mr. Beaumont.

BYWELL (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing 1512 inhabitants, of whom 131 are in part of the township of Bywell, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Corbridge, and 14 (W. by S.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne. The parish, which is about 13 miles in length, and from 2 to 3 in breadth, is on the north and south sides of the Tyne, and comprises the townships of East Acomb, Apperley, Broomley, Esper-shields, High Fortherley, Healey, Newton, Newton-Hall, Newlands, and Stelling; the chapelry of Whittonstall; and part of the township of Bywell; the whole forming an area, by measurement, of about 14,000 acres, of which 7000 are arable, about 4850 pasture, and 2150 woodland. The north and north-west parts are intersected by the parish of Bywell-St. Andrew: a portion of the land is very fertile and beautifully diversified by gentle swells, and wood and water, but much consists of wild moors, of which nearly 3000 acres have been inclosed. Bywell barony, in the reign of Richard II., was possessed by the Nevills, lords of Raby, and afterwards earls of Westmorland, and was subsequently purchased by a branch of the Fenwick family, and was sold in 1819 to its present owner, Thomas Wentworth Beaumont, Esq., to whom the whole township belongs, with the exception of 250 acres at Shilden Hill, the property of J. C. Jobling, Esq. The Mansion-House, the seat of Mr. Beaumont, stands in a lawn adorned by forest-trees, having the river on its south side, in which is a beautiful islet, and on the opposite bank are extensive plantations. The village, which is partly in the parish of Bywell-St. Andrew, and partly in that of St. Peter, is pleasantly situated on the north bank of the Tyne, and was formerly noted for the manufacture of saddlers' ironmongery, which was in a flourishing state in the 16th century, and is mentioned in their report by the commissioners of Queen Elizabeth; but it has now wholly declined; the Newcastle and Carlisle railway has a station here, and Mr. Beaumont has erected a handsome stone bridge of seven arches, at a cost of £10,000. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 18. $1\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £119; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Durham. The church is an ancient edifice, of large dimensions, with a square tower, standing near to the church of Bywell-St. Andrew, and having between them a stone cross. There are places of worship for Baptists, Roman Catholics, and Wesleyans; and a school is partly supported by Mr. Beaumont. At a short distance from the Hall are the ruins of the old baronial castle, once a very strong fortress; the fine square tower is entire, and from its top is an extensive prospect.

CABOURN (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (E. N. E.) from Caistor; containing 166 inhabitants. This place, which is situated on the road from Caistor to Great Grimsby, and in a small vale in the heart of the Lincolnshire wolds, comprises 2492a. 3r. 35p. of land, of which the subsoil is chalk, used for manure, and for the roads. The village is small, but from the numerous foundations of buildings in a field adjoining the vicarage, appears to have been formerly of considerable extent. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 18. 4.; patron and impropriator, Lord Yarborough: the income, arising from land allotted in 1811, is about £200. The church is a very ancient massive structure, with details of Norman architecture, and contains a large antique font.

CABUS, a township, in the parish and union of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2 miles (N.) from Garstang; containing 253 inhabitants.

CADBURY (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of TIVERTON, hundred of HAYRIDGE, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Cullompton; containing 251 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Tiverton to Crediton, and comprises by computation 1697 acres, of which about 1000 are arable, 500 meadow and pasture, 72 orchards, and 136 woodland and waste; the surface is hilly, and the soil in general light, resting upon a stony substratum. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 4. 3., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £163; impropriator, G. S. Farston, Esq. The benefice is endowed with half of the great tithes, and there is a good glebe-house, with five acres of land. On the summit of a high hill, called Cadbury Castle, is an inclosure nearly circular, consisting of a single vallum and fosse, supposed to be either of British or of Roman origin; near it some Roman coins were found, in 1827.

CADBURY, NORTH (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of CATSASH, E. division of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Castle-Cary; containing, with the hamlets of Galhampton and Wool-ston, 1075 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £28. 17. 3½., and in the patronage of Emanuel College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for £489. 12. 2., and the glebe comprises 143½ acres. The church is a stately and beautiful pile, pleasantly situated on the ridge of a hill. Overlooking the village is an entrenchment of an oval form, surrounded by a large double rampart, composed of loose limestone, the produce of the spot.

CADBURY, SOUTH (ST. THOMAS à BECKET), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of CATSASH, E. division of SOMERSET, 4½ miles (S.) from Castle-Cary; containing 254 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 3. 1½., and in the patronage of James Bennett, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £250, and there is a glebe of 29½ acres. Near the village are the remains of one of the most famous ancient fortifications in England: it was situated on the northern extremity of a ridge of hills, and encircled by four trenches; its figure inclined to a square, but conforming to the slope of the hill; the area is upwards of thirty acres. A higher work within, surrounded by a trench, is called King Arthur's Palace; the rampart is composed of large stones covered with earth, with only one entrance, from the east, guarded by six or seven trenches. Numerous Roman coins have been discovered, and the origin of the place may, with much probability, be ascribed to that people.

CADDINGTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of LUTON, partly in the hundred of FLITT, county of BEDFORD, but chiefly in the hundred of DACORUM, county of HERTFORD, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from Luton; containing 1747 inhabitants. It comprises 4515*a.* 2*r.* 27*p.*, of which about 540 acres are meadow and pasture, 3700 arable, and 140 wood and coppice; the soil consists of clay, gravel, and chalk, and the timber is chiefly oak and ash. A pleasure-fair is held on Whit-Tuesday. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £319; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1798, and the glebe consists of 30 acres, to which there is a good house. In addition to the parochial church, there is a chapel of ease, near Market-street. Here is a school, with an endowment.

CADEBY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 1¼ mile (E. S. E.) from Market-Bosworth; containing, with the township of Osbaston, 387 inhabitants. It comprises 797*a.* 3*p.*, of which about 240 acres are arable, 530 meadow and pasture, and 25 wood and plantations; part is a light soil well suited to turnips, and part good corn land. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 10. 2½., and in the patronage of Sir W. W. Dixie, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £175, and there is a glebe-house, with 54 acres of land.

CADEBY, or CATEBY, a township, in the parish of SPROTBROUGH, union of DONCASTER, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 4½ miles (W. S. W.) from Doncaster; containing 153 inhabitants. The priory of Bretton and the establishment at Nostal formerly held lands here; and among the families that have possessed property, occurs that of Metham, who settled here about the reign of Edward II., and continued to hold it in the time of Elizabeth. The township is situated in the south part of the parish, and upon the river Don, opposite to Conisbrough, with which place it is connected by the King's ferry. Two schools are supported by Sir J. Copley, Bart.

CADELEIGH (ST. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of TIVERTON, hundred of HAYRIDGE, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 4¼ miles (S. W.) from Tiverton; containing 403 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of Mrs. Moore: the tithes have been commuted for £193, and the glebe consists of 53 acres, to which there is a house. In the church is a curious ancient monument to the memory of Sir Simon Leach, Knt. A school is supported by subscription.

CADLEY, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and S. divisions of WILTS; containing, with Brimslade and South Savernake, 187 inhabitants.

CADNAM, a hamlet, partly in the parish of ELING, hundred of REDBRIDGE, and partly in the parish of MINSTEAD, N. division of the hundred of NEW FOREST, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4½ miles (N.) from Lyndhurst; containing 154 inhabitants. A chapel of ease to Eling was erected a few years since; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CADNEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, S. division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 2¼ miles (S. S. E.) from Glandford-Brigg; containing, with the township of Housham, 438 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 18. 4.; net income, £230; patron and impropiator, Lord Yarborough. In the church are a beautiful screen of carved oak, and a font of great antiquity, noticed by Camden. A farm-house, in the parish called Newstead Abbey, was formerly a priory of Cistercian monks.

CADWELL, a liberty, in the parish of BRIGHTWELL-BALDWIN, union of HENDLEY, hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD.

CAENBY (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the E. division of the wapentake of ASLACOE, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Spital; containing 185 inhabitants. The parish lies upon a slope, and comprises about 1600 acres, two-thirds of which are arable, 50 acres wood, and the rest pasture; it is bounded on the east by the river Ancholme, a small tributary stream of which runs through it. The soil consists of strong clay, sand, and a kind of red mould; and limestone is found on the higher grounds. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 13. 4.; net income, £117; patron, Sir C. M. L. Monck, Bart.

CAERLEON, a market-town, in the parish of LLANGATTOCK, union of NEWPORT, Caerleon division and hundred of Usk, county of MONMOUTH, 20½ miles (S. W.) from Monmouth, and 151½ (W.) from London; containing 1174 inhabitants. This place, called by the Britons Caerleon, "city of the legion," or, according to some, Caerliian, "city of the waters," was the Isca Silurum of the Romans, in the time of Claudius, whose second legion, being recalled from Germany, was stationed here under the command of Vespasian. It became the metropolis of that division of the island called Britannia Secunda, and one of the chief cities of the Romans, who fortified it with strong walls three miles in circuit, inclosing a quadrilateral area, measuring 530 yards by 460: they erected temples, an amphitheatre, baths, aqueducts, and splendid dwellings of various descriptions, the magnificent remains of which, in the twelfth century, are described by Giraldus Cambrensis, as emulating the grandeur of Rome itself. In the reign of Domitian, St. Julian and St. Aaron preached the doctrine of Christianity in this part of Britain, and suffered martyrdom here; but after the final submission of the Britons to the Roman power, Caerleon became, under the auspices of Antoninus, the seat of learning and devotion. Three Christian churches were erected, two in honour of the martyrs Julian and Aaron, to which a nunnery and a priory of Cistercian canons were annexed respectively; also a third, to which was added a monastery that afterwards became the metropolitan see of Wales, and of which Dubricius, the great opponent of the Pelagian heresy, was the first archbishop. Under his successors the see continued to flourish to such an extent, that, at the time of the Saxon invasion, its college is said to have contained, among other students, not less than 200 who were well skilled in geography and astronomy; it was afterwards translated to Menevia by St. David, and has since that time been known as the see of St. David's: some small remains of the monastery still exist. The castle was probably built about the time of the Conquest; but no mention of it occurs till the year 1171, when Henry II. seized the town, and deposed Iorwerth ab Owain, lord of Gwent, who, in 1173, retook it after a vigorous defence, and restored it to the Welsh. After repeated sieges it was retained by Llewelyn ab Iorwerth till the reign of Edward I., when, upon the overthrow of the independence of the Welsh, the town fell into neglect, and the castle into decay: the remains of the castle are inconsiderable.

The town is pleasantly situated on a gentle acclivity on the bank of the river Usk, over which is a handsome stone bridge of modern erection, and consists of two streets indifferently paved and lighted; the houses are mostly old and irregularly built, and are fast hastening to decay: some fragments of the ancient wall still remain, and bear testimony to the former extent and importance of the town. The trade consists principally in the manufacture and sale of tin plates and iron, for which there are two large establishments; the articles are conveyed to Newport by the river, in vessels of small burthen. The market is on Thursday; and fairs are held on July 31st and Oct. 2nd, the latter being a large fair for horses. The market-house is a dilapidated edifice, supported on four massive pillars of the Tuscan order, supposed to have belonged to some Roman structure, two bases of similar dimensions and character having been dug up near the walls. The county magistrates hold a petty-session once a fortnight. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans. The free school, for 25 boys and 25 girls, was founded and endowed, in 1724, by Charles Williams, Esq.; and there are a national school, and an almshouse for aged widows. Several remains of the Roman station are still visible, and numerous minor relics have been discovered, consisting of parts of columns, altars, tessellated pavements, coins, urns, a statue of Jupiter, portions of the baths, &c. To the north of the town is an extensive quadrilateral encampment, with seven smaller camps near it; and on the banks of the Usk are considerable remains of the amphitheatre, called by the inhabitants King Arthur's Round Table. St. Amphibalus, tutor of the proto-martyr St. Albanus, and the martyrs St. Julian and St. Aaron, were born at this place. The renowned King Arthur is stated to have been interred here.

CAERTON-ULTRA-PONTEM, a hamlet, in the parish of CHRISTCHURCH, union of NEWPORT, Lower division of the hundred of CALDICOT, county of MONMOUTH; containing 267 inhabitants.

CAER-WENT (St. STEPHEN), a parish, in the union and division of CHEPSTOW, hundred of CALDICOT, county of MONMOUTH, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Chepstow, on the road to Newport; containing, with the hamlet of Crick, 446 inhabitants. The parishes of Caer-went and Llanvair-Discoed comprise by estimation 1736*a.* 7*p.*, of which 953*a.* 1*r.* are arable, 511*a.* 20*p.* pasture and meadow, and 271*a.* 2*r.* 27*p.* woodland: for the most part, the surface is level, and the soil dry and gravelly. Caer-went, now an inconsiderable village, was anciently a Roman station, the Venta Silurum of Antoninus' Itinerary, and is supposed to have been the site of the capital city of the Britons in Siluria: it is still partially environed by the original Roman walls, inclosing an area of about a mile in circumference. The turnpike-road to Newport, the course of which here runs upon part of the Akeman-street, passes through the centre, where formerly stood the eastern and western gates; and coins, fragments of columns, statues, and some beautiful tessellated pavements, belonging to the Romans, have been discovered. The village is pleasantly situated upon ground somewhat elevated above the level tract around it; and at a small distance are the magnificent remains of Caldicot Castle, formerly possessed by the Bohuns, Earls of Hereford. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, and united, with the perpetual curacy of Llanvair-Discoed, to the vicarage of Mathern; it is valued in the king's books at £7. 11. 8.: the tithes have been commuted for £249. 2., and the glebe comprises 6 acres, with a house attached. The church, consisting of a nave and chancel, with a square embattled tower, exhibits portions of the early and decorated English styles. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. At Crick is a house, now a farm residence, in which King Charles was concealed for some time.

CAINHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of LUDLOW, hundred of STOTTESDEN, S. division of SALOP, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Ludlow; containing 973 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Leominster to Bridgenorth, and comprises by computation 2700 acres: the river Letwyth, celebrated for its fine trout, crosses its southern extremity. Stone is quarried for drains and buildings; and coal-mines, lime-works, and iron-foundries are in operation. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 13. 4.; net income, £338; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. Mainwaring; impropriators, the Landowners. There is an excellent glebe-house, with about 120 acres of land. The church is very ancient, and in the churchyard is an old cross. The Incorporated Society lately granted £300 towards building a church at Clee Hill, which was consecrated on the 29th January, 1840, and to which an ecclesiastical district has been assigned; patron, Bishop of Hereford. There are two places of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school is supported by subscription. The remains of a Roman encampment are to be seen.

CAIN'S-CROSS, a hamlet, partly in the parish of STROUD, hundred of BISLEY, and partly in the parishes of STONEHOUSE and RANDWICK, hundred of WHITSTONE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (W.) from Stroud. A district church, erected at an expense of £3600, raised chiefly by subscription, was consecrated on the 29th of January, 1837. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Colonel Daubeny, who endowed it with £1000, vested in the funds; the district assigned to it comprises the villages of Cain's Cross, Ebley, Westrip, Dudbridge, and Pakenhill.

CAISTOR, or CASTOR (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, partly in the N. division of the wapentake of WALSHCROFT, but chiefly in the S. division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 23 miles (N. N. E.) from Lincoln, and 153 (N.) from London; comprising the chapelries of Holton-le-Moor and Clixby, and the hamlets of Audleby, Fonaby, and Hundon; and containing 1988 inhabitants. This was evidently a station of the Romans, of whom numerous coins and other relics have been discovered. According to tradition, Hengist, after having repulsed the Picts and Scots, obtained from Vortigern the grant of so much land as he could encompass with the hide of an ox: having divided the hide into small thongs, he was enabled to inclose a considerable area, forming the site of the town, which, from that circumstance, was called by the Saxons, Thuang Ceastre, or Thong Ceastre. Dr. Stukeley, however, derives the prefix from the Saxon thegn, a thane, or nobleman. The marriage of Rowena, daughter of Hengist, to Vortigern, was solemnized here in 453. Egbert, who finally brought the several kingdoms of the heptarchy under his dominion, obtained a signal victory at this place over Wiglof, King of Mercia, in 827, in commemoration of which a cross was erected on the castle hill, where many bodies have been dug up, and a stone with a mutilated inscription, apparently recording the dedication of the spoils by the victor to some sacred purpose.

The town, which commands extensive prospects over the vale of the Ancholme and the western ridges of the wolds, is well supplied with water from four springs issuing out of a grey-stone rock, three of which unite their streams on the western side of it, and fall into the Ancholme; the other flows into the same river, near the junction of the Kelsey canal with that to Glandford-Brigg. Its market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on the Saturdays before Palm-Sunday, Whit-Sunday, and Old Michaelmas-day. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. The parish comprises an area of 3220a. 3r. 28p. of land, including Caistor moor, which extends three miles west, and was inclosed in 1798; the soil is partly sandy, but generally fertile and well cultivated. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Clixby annexed, valued in the king's books at £7. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Prebendary of Caistor in the Cathedral of Lincoln, with a net income of £250: the tithes of Caistor were commuted at the inclosure for 91 acres of land to the appropriator, the prebendary, and 80 acres to the vicar; but the hamlets of Audleby, Fonaby, and Hundon pay a yearly modus of £252. 7: to the former, and one of £180 to the latter. The church is a spacious structure, in the early English style, with some remains of Norman architecture: it has a fine tower, with a chapel on the south side, now used as a vestry-room, and stands within the area of the ancient castle, with the materials of which it is partly built. A singular ceremony is observed, on the performance of which depends the tenure of an estate in the parish of Broughton: the holder sends an agent on Palm-Sunday, who cracks a whip three times in the north porch of the church, while the minister is reading the first lesson; after which, attaching a small purse to the thong, he enters the church, and on the commencement of the second lesson, flourishes the whip thrice, and on the conclusion of it retires into the chancel: when the service is ended, the whip and purse are deposited in the manor-house at Hundon. There are places of worship for Independents and Methodists. The free grammar school was founded, in 1630, by the Rev. Francis Rawlinson, who endowed it with £400, afterwards laid out in the purchase of a portion of the great tithes of Beesby, now producing £130 per annum; besides which there are £60 a year, arising from land bought with a donation by Wm. Hansard, Esq.: the school has an exhibition of £10 per annum to Jesus' College, Cambridge: the building was thoroughly repaired in 1838, at a cost of £200, raised by subscription. The poor law union of Caistor comprises 76 parishes or places, and contains a population of 27,068.

CAISTOR (St. EDMUND'S), a parish, in the union and hundred of HENSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, 3½ miles (S.) from Norwich; containing 147 inhabitants. This place, though at present inconsiderable, was anciently one of the most flourishing cities of the Britons, and the residence of the kings of the Iceni; it was the Venta Icenorum of the Romans, and the principal station of that people in the territory of the Iceni, from the ruins of which the present city of Norwich has gradually risen. The walls of the ancient city, which was deserted after the departure of the Romans, in 446, were in the form of a parallelogram, inclosing an area of about 32 acres, within which foundations of buildings may be traced. The remains consist of a single fosse and vallum, and were surrounded by a strong wall as an additional rampart, built upon the vallum, the inclosed space being capable of containing 6000 men. On the north, east, and south sides, are large mounds raised from the fosse, and the west side has one formed on the margin of the river Taas, as are also the remains of the Water-gate. Within the area of the camp, at the south-east angle, stands the church, the materials for building which were evidently taken from the ruins of the rampart. The parish comprises about 1045 acres: the river Taas, which once filled the whole valley, is now an inconsiderable stream. The living is a rectory, with that of Merkshall, or Mattishall-Heath united, valued in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of Mrs. H. Dashwood: the tithes have been commuted for £445, and the glebe comprises 58½ acres, to which is attached a house. The church is partly in the early, and partly in the perpendicular style, with a square embattled tower, and has a font, exhibiting very curious sculpture. A school is partly supported by Mrs. Dashwood, the lady of the manor. Numerous Roman urns and coins have been discovered, the latter being chiefly those of Constantine; and a few years since a bronze figure of a satyr was found of very fine workmanship, and about eight inches in length.

CAISTOR NEAR YARMOUTH (St. EDMUND), a parish, in the EAST and WEST FLEGG incorporation, hundred of EAST FLEGG, E. division of NORFOLK, $19\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Norwich; containing 909 inhabitants. The name is evidently a corrupted Saxonism of Castrum, it being clear, from the visible remains of fortifications, and the discovery of numerous coins, that the Romans had a camp here, opposite to, and connected with, Garianonum. The manor was anciently in the possession of the family of Fastolf; and Sir John Fastolf, a celebrated warrior and an estimable man, whose character some consider Shakspeare to have pervertedly drawn in his Sir John Falstaff, was born here. He was the founder of the castle, the cost of which was defrayed with the money obtained for the ransom of the Duke d'Alençon, whom he took prisoner at the battle of Agincourt; it was supposed to be one of the oldest brick mansions in the kingdom, and was a castellated edifice, in the form of a parallelogram, surrounded by a moat, of which nothing now remains, except a circular tower about 90 feet high, with portions of the north and west walls. Eastward of the castle stood a college, forming three sides of a spacious square, with two circular towers; it was established in the reign of Edward I. by one of the Fastolfs, and afterwards patronized by the founder of the castle, and his successors, till its dissolution: the remains have been converted into stables and a barn. Caistor was formerly divided into two parishes, Trinity and St. Edmund's, which were consolidated Sept. 22nd, 1608; the church belonging to the former has been suffered to fall into ruins. The living is a rectory, with that of St. Edmund's consolidated, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £875; patron and incumbent, Rev. G. W. Steward, who lately erected a handsome glebe-house. The church is chiefly in the decorated style, and consists of a nave, chancel, and south aisle, with a square embattled tower. A neat school has been erected near the south-east end of the chancel; and the Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have places of worship. The sum of £105, the rental of land devised by Elizabeth Blennerhaysett, Sir William Paston, and others, is annually applied in relief for the poor. A line of sand-hills, called the Meals or Marum Hills, commences here, and extends, with occasional interruptions, to Hapsbury Point, and thence to Cromer bay.

CAISTRON, a township, in the parish and union of ROTHBURY, W. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Rothbury; containing 54 inhabitants. This pleasant village, around which is a fertile alluvial soil, is situated on the brink of the Coquet, one mile south-by-west from Flotterton, and was formerly the property of three persons of the name of Hall, called respectively in the neighbourhood, duke, lord, and lawyer, and one of whom bequeathed, in 1779, the annual sum of £4. 15. to be paid out of his estate towards the support of a schoolmaster in the place. A school-house was erected in 1792, with money left by the Rev. John Tomlinson and others.

CAKEMORE, a township, in the parish of HALES-OWEN, union of STOURBRIDGE, Hales-Owen division of the hundred of BRIMSTREE, S. division of SALOP; containing 357 inhabitants.

CALBURN (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the liberty of WEST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Newport; containing, with the chapelry of Newton, 750 inhabitants. The parish derives its name from the beautiful stream by which it is intersected; the surface is varied, and the scenery abounds with interest. Stone of very compact and durable quality is extensively quarried for building purposes, for which it is in great repute. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 12. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester: the tithes have been commuted for £660, and the glebe comprises 80 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church is a handsome structure, in the early English style, and contains an ancient tomb, inlaid with brass, representing a knight in complete armour, with his feet resting on a dog; considerable alterations have recently been made. A national school, for which a building was erected in 1834, is supported by subscription. Dr. Fisher, Bishop of Salisbury, was a native of the parish, of which his father was rector.

CALCEBY (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W.) from Alford; containing 52 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Wainfleet to Great Grimsby, and comprises about 618 acres; it lies towards the southern extremity of the chalk formation of the county; of which a bold line of hills in the neighbouring parish of Drily forms part of the eastern escarpment towards the sea. The living is a discharged vicarage, united, in 1774, to the rectory of South Ormsby, and valued in the king's books at £5. 10. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$.; impropriator, C. B. Massingberd, Esq.

CALCETHORPE (St. FAITH), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Wold division of the hundred of LOUTHESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (W. by N.) from Louth; containing 69 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1100 acres, which are arable, with the exception of 150 acres of grass land. The living is a sinecure rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 2. 6.; net income, £16; patron, W. Briscoe, Esq. The church is a ruin.

CALCUTT, a hamlet, in the parish of LOWER HEYFORD, union of BICESTER, hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD; containing 146 inhabitants.

CALDBECK (St. KENTIGERN), a parish, in the union of WIGTON, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND; containing 1553 inhabitants, of whom 282 are in High, 646 in Low, and 567 in Haltcliffe, Caldbeck, 8 miles (S. E.) from Wigton. This parish comprises a mountainous district of 18,000 acres, not more than 6000 of which are inclosed, the remainder being appropriated to depasturing numerous flocks of sheep. The hills contain various mineral productions, principally lead and copper ores, limestone, and coal, and there are several establishments for working the mines: a considerable proportion of silver is occasionally extracted from the lead-ore. The river Caldbeck flows through the village, about half a mile from which, in a romantic glen, called the Howk, where it is crossed by a natural bridge of limestone, the stream dashes impetuously over the rocks, and forms two interesting cascades, by the sides of which are singular excavations, named the Fairies' Kirk and Fairies' Kettle. A manufactory for blankets, flannels, &c., has been long established; and there are also a brewery, a small paper-mill, a fulling-mill, a gingham and check manufactory, and a dye-house. Heskett-New-Market, in the division of Haltcliffe, is a smaller village, but more compact than Caldbeck, from which it is about a mile and a quarter distant to the east; it is situated on the south side of the river Caldew, which divides this parish from that of Castle Sowerby. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £45. 13. 6½.; net income, £436; patron, Bishop of Carlisle. The church bears date 1112, and was founded soon after the establishment of an hospital for travellers, by the prior of Carlisle, with the permission of Ranulph D'Engain, chief forester of Inglewood: it stands in the township of Low Caldbeck, and was new roofed and greatly embellished in 1818. There are three meeting-houses for the Society of Friends, who settled here in the time of George Fox, their founder, who resided for some time at Woodhall; but their number, although formerly considerable, is now reduced to a few families only. Robert Sewell, a natural philosopher of considerable repute, was a native of the parish.

CALDBRIDGE, a township, in the parish of COVERHAM, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 3¼ miles (S. W.) from Middleham; containing 95 inhabitants. This place, also named Caldberg, comprises about 1500 acres, and includes the hamlet of East or Little Scrafton, which occupies the acclivities on the east of the river Cover: lead-ore is obtained, though in small quantity, on the moors that adjoin Witton Fell. Here is a well, called St. Simon's, formerly in great estimation, but the properties of which are unknown; and it is probable that the monks of Coverham, who had land here, valued at £7. 13. 4. per annum, possessed near this well an oratory, designated St. Simon's chapel.

CALDECOT (VIRGIN MARY), a parish, in the union of SWAFFHAM, hundred of SOUTH GREENHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (N. E.) from Stoke-Ferry; containing 48 inhabitants, and comprising about 640 acres. The living is a discharged sinecure rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 1. 10½.; net income, £6; patron and impropiator, Sir H. R. P. Bedingfield, Bart. The church has been in ruins upwards of a century and a half, and the village has disappeared.

CALDECOTE (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of CAXTON and ARRINGTON, hundred of LONGSTOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Caxton; containing 117 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to the rectory of Toft, and valued in the king's books at £3. 11. 0½.: the tithes have been commuted for £69. A school-house, built by subscription, is endowed with £18 per annum, left by a late rector.

CALDECOTE (ST. DAVID AND ST. CHAD), a parish, in the union of NUNEATON, Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 1½ mile (N. N. W.) from Nuneaton; containing 93 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 668 acres, and is intersected by the river

Anker and the Coventry canal. On the north-east it is bounded by the Watling-street, which separates it from Leicestershire, and on the south-west by the road between Nuneaton and Atherstone. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 15., and in the gift of Dempster Heming, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £170. In 1647, George Abbot bequeathed land, directing the annual produce, about £4. 10., to be expended in teaching children.

CALDECOTT, a township, in the parish of SHOCKLACH, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 5½ miles (N. W.) from Malpas; containing 69 inhabitants.

CALDECOTT (ST. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of HITCHIN, hundred of ODSEY, county of HERTFORD, 3½ miles (N. by W.) from Baldock; containing 41 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 319 acres, chiefly arable. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of W. Hale, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £70, and the glebe comprises 14 acres. In the year 1724, several Roman urns, containing burnt bones and ashes, were discovered.

CALDECOTT, a hamlet, in the parish of CHELVESTON, union of THRAPSTON, hundred of HIGHAM-FERRERS, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON; containing 101 inhabitants.

CALDECOTT, a chapelry, in the parish of LIDDINGTON, union of UPPINGHAM, hundred of WRANDIKE, county of RUTLAND, 4¾ miles (S.) from Uppingham; containing 260 inhabitants. The Welland, which here separates this county from Northamptonshire, and the small river Eye, flow through the chapelry, which comprises 1089 acres of, in general, good land. The chapel is dedicated to St. John.

CALDER-BRIDGE, a hamlet, in the parish of PONSOMBY, union of WHITEHAVEN, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 5 miles (S. E.) from Egremont. This place owes its origin and name to a bridge erected over the river Calder, and is celebrated for the remains of an abbey founded for Cistercian monks, by Ralph de Meschines, second earl of Chester and Cumberland, in 1134, in honour of the Virgin Mary, and the revenue of which, at the suppression, was £64. 3. 9.: the beautiful ruins are situated in a sequestered and well-wooded vale, and consist principally of part of the transepts of the church, and a tower. The chapel was rebuilt in 1841, in aid of the expense of which, the Incorporated Society granted £100; and a national school has lately been established, for the instruction of the children of the poor.

CALDEWEGATE, a township, in the parish of ST. MARY, city and union of CARLISLE, E. division of CUMBERLAND; containing 5558 inhabitants.

CALDEY-GRANGE, a township, in the parish of WEST KIRBY, union, and Lower division of the hundred, of WIRRALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 8½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Great Neston; containing 152 inhabitants. Here is an endowed school.

CALDEY, GREAT, a township, in the parish of WEST KIRBY, union, and Lower division of the hundred, of WIRRALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 6¾ miles (N. W. by N.) from Great Neston; containing 104 inhabitants.

CALDICOT (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and division of CHEPSTOW, hundred of CALDICOT, county of MONMOUTH, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Chepstow; containing 625 inhabitants. The name is said to have been derived from Cil y Coed, signifying the "skirt of the wood." The parish comprises by computation 2000 acres, the soil of which is dry and gravelly. Caldicot Level, a portion of the lands called "the Moors," was, in ancient times, subject to continual inundations; but the greater part having been drained by the monks of a religious house in the vicinity, it now forms a rich grazing district, protected from the encroachments of the sea by walls and embankments. Here are limestone quarries. The new passage ferry across the Bristol Channel is only two miles distant, and vessels under thirty tons' burthen approach, at spring tides, to within about a mile of the village, which contains a lofty cross. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 0. $7\frac{1}{2}$.; patron, Sir E. Keynton Williams; impropiator, T. Rowland, Esq.: the great tithes have been commuted for £240, and the vicarial for £188, and the glebe contains about 15 acres. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is chiefly in the decorated and later English styles, and consists of a nave, chancel, and north aisle, with a square tower rising between the chancel and nave, and a very large south porch, supposed to have been a chapel. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. In 1680, Catherine Kemys gave a rent-charge of £3 for teaching children, and there are lands appropriated to the poor, of the value of £25 a year. Here stand the remains of a magnificent castle that formerly belonged to the Bohuns, Earls of Hereford, as hereditary constables of England, and was held by the service of that office. The walls are of an oblong form, with round towers at the different angles; the principal entrance is under a lofty gate of smooth stone, flanked by others of massive construction; and opposite to this grand gateway is another entrance, through a fine hexagonal tower with a machicolated battlement. Within are the ruins of several apartments, particularly the baronial hall. At the northern angle is a circular tower on a mound of earth, evidently the keep, encircled by a ditch, and another dilapidated circular tower stands at the southern angle; and the whole is still surrounded by a moat.

CALDICOTE (St. Mary Magdalene), a parish, in the union of PETERBOROUGH, hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, county of HUNTINGDON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Stilton; containing 52 inhabitants. It is situated on the great north road from London to York. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 3. 6.; net income, £156; patron, William Wells, Esq.

CALDICOTT, a hamlet, in the parish of NORTHILL, hundred of WIXAMTREE, county of BEDFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W. by N.) from Biggleswade; containing 509 inhabitants, of whom 270 are in Upper, and 239 in Lower, Caldicott.

CALDWELL, a township, in the parish of STANWICK-ST. JOHN, union of RICHMOND, wapentake of GILLING-WEST, N. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Greta-Bridge; containing 209 inhabitants. This was formerly a place of much greater importance than it is at present. The township comprises by computation 2000 acres, of which the soil is light and fertile: the Tees flows to the north, at the distance of about three miles from the village. A chapel of ease is in course of erection. A Roman military road passed through the township, and a variety of coins have been found in the vicinity.

CALKERTON, a tything, in the parish of RODMARTON, union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of LONGTREE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 145 inhabitants.

CALLALEY, with YETTINGTON, a township, in the parish of WHITTINGHAM, union of ROTHBURY, N. division of COQUETDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Alnwick; containing 306 inhabitants. This place anciently gave name to its possessors, and was granted, by Gilbert de Callaley, in the reign of Henry III., to Robert Fitz-Roger, Baron of Warkworth and Clavering, an ancestor of the present family of Clavering, one of the most ancient in the county. Callaley Castle, their residence, stands in a large and beautiful park, and the scenery around it is truly romantic and picturesque. Attached to the castle is a place of worship for Roman Catholics; and a house and garden are allowed by E. Clavering, Esq., to a master for teaching children at a reduced rate. On Castle Hill, a conical eminence, embosomed in woods, is a circular intrenchment, with vestiges of buildings, denoting a British or Saxon position.

CALLERTON, BLACK, a township, in the parish of NEWBURN, union and W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 158 inhabitants. It is situated not far distant from the road between Newcastle and Rothbury, and $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-by-east from Newburn, and comprises 1377 acres, of which 1145 are arable, 197 meadow, 15 plantations, and 18 roads; of these, 800 acres are held by James Colbeck, Esq., under lease of Thomas Henry Graham, Esq., of Edmond Castle, Cumberland, and are cultivated in the best manner. The rectorial tithes have been commuted for £220, and for the vicarial a modus of £6 is paid. A bequest of £9. 10. per annum, by Nathaniel Blackeston, is paid, and a house and garden assigned, for the instruction of children on the national plan; and William Alder bequeathed £3 per annum for apprenticing children.

CALLERTON, HIGH, a township, partly in the parish of PONTELAND, and partly in that of NEWBURN, union and W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 131 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 989 acres: the village stands a considerable distance south of the church of Ponteland. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £127. 1. 8., of which £116. 1. 8. are payable to Merton College, Oxford, and £11 to the vicar of Ponteland. Lady's Land, in the township, consisting of about eight acres, belongs to Morpeth free school.

CALLERTON, LITTLE, or Low, a township, in the parish of PONTELAND, union and W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 34 inhabitants. It is situated on the Pont, and comprises 573 acres, of which 380 are arable, 150 pasture, and 43 wood and water: the soil is a strong clay, suitable for the culture of wheat. The township is the property of George Thomas Dunn, Esq. The tithes have been commuted for rent-charges amounting to £87. 6., of which £77 are payable to Merton College, Oxford, and £10 to the vicar of the parish.

CALLINGTON (St. MARY), a market-town and parish, and formerly a borough, in the union of LISKEARD, Middle division of the hundred of EAST, E. division of CORNWALL, 10½ miles (S. by E.) from Launceston, 14 (N.) from Plymouth, and 213 (W. S. W.) from London; containing 1685 inhabitants. This town, anciently called Calweton, Calvington, and Killington, is situated on a gentle acclivity, and consists principally of two spacious streets; the houses are in general of mean appearance, and irregularly built, but the town is paved, and amply supplied with water. The inhabitants once had a considerable trade in wool, which has of late declined: mining is carried on to some extent, there being several copper-mines in operation, the chief of which are those at Holm-bush and Redmoor, the former employing more than 100 persons; and there are also some manganese mines in the vicinity. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday, of which the former is for corn and provisions, and the latter for meat only; and a cattle-market is held on the first Wednesday in every month. An excellent market-place has lately been opened, together with a corn-market 90 feet long, by the lord of the manor, Lord Ashburton; it is a very commodious building, ornamented with a colonnade round it, supported on granite pillars. The fairs, chiefly for cattle and sheep, are on the first Thursday in May and September, and the first Wednesday and Thursday in November. The county magistrates hold a petty-session on the first Thursday in every month; and a portreeve and other officers for the town are appointed annually at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The court-house, a commodious edifice, has been rebuilt by Lord Clinton. The borough first received the elective franchise in the 27th of Elizabeth, from which time it continued to return two members of parliament, till it was disfranchised by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of South-Hill: the glebe comprises 50 acres. The church, a spacious structure, containing three aisles, and constructed entirely of granite, was chiefly built at the expense of Nicholas de Ashton, one of the judges of the court of King's Bench, who died in 1645, and to whose memory a marble tomb is in the chancel: in the churchyard is the shaft of an ancient cross, on the upper part of which is a representation of the Crucifixion. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. A school, endowed by Lord Orford, with £30 per annum, was continued by Lord Clinton, but ceased on the property passing into other hands: a handsome school-house has, however, lately been erected by subscription, which is highly ornamental to the eastern and southern entrances to the town.

CALLOW, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of WIRKSWORTH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 2½ miles (S. W.) from Wirksworth; containing 112 inhabitants.

CALLOW (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the hundred of WEBTREE, union and county of HEREFORD, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Hereford; containing 171 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Hereford to Ross, and comprises by measurement 582 acres; the surface is moderately undulated and well wooded, and the soil is nearly of average fertility. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with the rectorial tithes, and annexed to the vicarage of Dewsall; 22 acres of land are tithe-free, having formerly belonged to the fraternity of St. John of Jerusalem. The tithes have been commuted for £86. 2. 10.; in addition to which, £12 a year are received from fourteen acres of land, purchased a few years ago, with an allowance from Queen Anne's Bounty. The church is pleasantly situated on the summit of a hill overlooking, at a short distance, the high road, and was rebuilt about the year 1831. The rent of four acres of land, bought with £100 bequeathed by Henry Pearle, Esq., a native, is given to the poor on St. Thomas's-day, when a distribution is also made of the interest of £80 in the savings' bank at Hereford, the produce of timber cut down on the land a few years since. There are the remains of two Roman camps.

CALMSDEN, a tything, in the parish of NORTH CERNEY, hundred of RAPSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 5¼ miles (N. N. E.) from Cirencester; containing 65 inhabitants.

CALNE (St. MARY), a borough, market-town, and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of CALNE, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, 30 miles (N. N. W.) from Salisbury, and 87 (W. by S.) from London, on the road to Bath and Bristol; comprising the tythings of Blackland, Calstone, Eastmead-Street, Quemerford, Stock, Stockley, Studley, Whetham, and Whitley; and containing 5128 inhabitants, of whom 2483 are in the borough. This place is of very remote origin, and is supposed to have risen from the ruins of a Roman station on the opposite side of the river, near the town of Studley, where numerous Roman antiquities have been discovered. It is said by tradition to have been the residence of the West Saxon monarchs; but there are no vestiges of their palace or castle, the remembrance of which is preserved only in the name of a field thought to have been its site, and of a street which probably led to it. A synod was assembled here in 977, for adjusting the differences existing at that time between the monks and the secular clergy, at which Dunstan, Archbishop of Canterbury, presided. During the controversy the floor of the chamber gave way, and several of the secular priests were killed; but Dunstan, and the monks whose cause he advocated, having escaped unhurt, their preservation was regarded as a miraculous interposition of Heaven, and they were allowed to take immediate possession of the religious houses throughout the kingdom, to the exclusion of the secular clergy. The town consists principally of one long street, lighted with gas; the houses are in general well built of stone, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from springs, and from the river Marden, which, after passing through the town, falls into the Avon. It has been much improved under the auspices of the Marquess of Lansdowne, whose extensive and stately mansion is in the adjoining liberty of Bowood; and the environs abound with pleasing scenery. The woollen-manufacture, formerly carried on to a great extent, is now conducted on a very limited scale; the articles are principally broad-cloth, kerseymere, and serge. A branch of the Wilts and Berks canal comes up to the town, and, uniting with the Kennet and Avon canal, and with the Thames at Abingdon, affords a facility of communication with London, Bristol, and the intermediate places. The market is on Wednesday; and fairs are held on May 6th and September 29th, for cattle and sheep.

The CORPORATION formerly consisted of two guild stewards, and an indefinite number of free burgesses, who annually appointed two constables; but the government is now vested in a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, under the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76. The borough first sent members to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I.; from that time it made irregular returns until the reign of Richard II., since which it uninterruptedly returned two members; but, by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the number was reduced to one. The right of election, formerly in the members of the corporation, was, by the above act, extended to the £10 householders of the borough, the limits of which were increased from 800 to 8080 acres: the mayor is returning officer. A court of requests, the jurisdiction of which extends over the hundreds of Calne, Chippenham, and North Damerham, and the lordship of Corsham, is held every six weeks, for the recovery of debts under 40s. The town-hall is a neat and commodious building, erected by the lord of the manor, and has been lately repaired, and an upper story added, by the Marquess of Lansdowne; the lower part is used as a market-place. The LIVING is a vicarage, with Cherhill and Berwick-Basset annexed, valued in the king's books at £8. 5.; net income, £769; patron and appropriator, the Treasurer in the Cathedral of Salisbury. A portion of the vicarial tithes was commuted for land in 1813. The church is a venerable structure, in the early English style, with a square embattled tower. A district church, of which the first stone was laid at Derry Hill, in 1839, by the Marquess of Lansdowne, attended by a large concourse of the nobility and gentry, was completed in 1840; it is an elegant edifice, in the later English style, with a spire, and contains 500 sittings, of which 400 are free, for the benefit of the inhabitants of Derry Hill, Studley, and Pewsham, many of whom are four miles distant from the mother church. The living was augmented in 1842 with £100 per annum, by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Methodists, and Unitarians. The free school was founded, in 1660, by John Bentley, Esq., who endowed it with property, afterwards sold, and the produce vested in the purchase of annuities amounting to £50. Sir Francis Bridgman, Knt., in 1730, founded six scholarships, of the value of £50 per annum each, in Queen's College, Oxford, of which two are for natives of this town. Other schools, named after Finamore, Woodroffe, and Foreman, have each a small endowment; and a national school, and a school on the British system, are supported by subscription. The poor law union of Calne comprises 11 parishes or places, and contains a population of 9324. An hospital, dedicated to St. John, existed here in the reign of Henry III., the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £2. 2. 8. At the distance of three miles to the east of the town is the figure of a horse, cut in the chalk hill, 157 feet long.

CALOW, a township, in the parish and union of CHESTERFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, 2 miles (E. by S.) from Chesterfield; containing 536 inhabitants. There are extensive collieries in the neighbourhood, and a furnace for smelting iron-ore.

CALSTOCK (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of LISKEARD, Middle division of the hundred of EAST, E. division of CORNWALL, 5¼ miles (E.) from Callington; containing 2553 inhabitants. This place anciently belonged to the family of the Coteheles, of whom the last heiress, more than three centuries since, conveyed it by marriage to the Edgcumbe family, whose descendant, the Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe, is the present proprietor. In the reign of Richard III., Sir Richard Edgcumbe, a zealous adherent to the Earl of Richmond, erected a chapel in the grounds of his baronial mansion, in commemoration of his escape from the partisans of Richard III., by whom he had been pursued. In the reign of Charles II., that monarch passed several nights in this residence; and, in 1789, it was visited by the Princess Royal, and the princesses Augusta and Elizabeth. The house is a spacious and highly interesting quadrangular structure, having on the north side a lofty square tower, containing the state apartments, with all their ancient furniture, which has been carefully preserved, and attached to it is the family chapel, a small neat edifice. In the grounds are the remains of the chapel erected by Sir Richard Edgcumbe, which has been much defaced by modern alterations, and externally retains but little of its original character. The parish is separated from those of Tavistock and Beer-Alston, in Devon, by the navigable river Tamar, which forms its boundary on the east and south, and over which are a ferry and a bridge: the surrounding scenery is richly diversified, and, especially near Cotehele House, is singularly wild and beautiful. The tide flows nearly to the centre of the parish, where is a weir; and a very productive fishery is carried on, in salmon and trout of excellent quality, with which the Tamar abounds. A steamer runs three times a week to Plymouth, distant upwards of twenty miles. The parish comprises by computation 5035 acres, of which the surface on the hilly parts is shelly, and the soil light; the remainder is tolerably good corn land. Mines of copper and tin are in operation; and a lead-mine, the ore of which is richly intermixed with silver, has been recently opened; the fine mineral Uranium is likewise procured, and there is a quarry of fine granite, of which considerable quantities were used in the erection of Waterloo Bridge. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 7. 8½., and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Cornwall; net income, £510. The church is an ancient structure, with a lofty embattled tower, crowned by pinnacles; it stands upon a hill, and commands fine prospects. The parsonage-house was built, in 1710, by Launcelot Blackburn, Archbishop of York, then rector. There are several places of worship for dissenters; and a national school is supported by subscription. On Hengist Down are several tumuli: here also was fought a great battle between the Saxons and ancient Britons.

CALSTONE, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of CALNE, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 219 inhabitants.

CALSTONE-WELLINGTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the parliamentary borough, union, and hundred of CALNE, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Calne; containing 31 inhabitants. It comprises 183 acres; the surface is hilly, and the soil various, in some parts chalk, and in others a fertile loam. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 13. 4.; net income, £192; patron, Marquess of Lansdowne. A portion of the vicarial tithes was commuted for land in 1813.

CALTHORPE, LEICESTER.—See CATHORPE.

CALTHORPE (St. Margaret), a parish, in the union of AYLSHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Aylsham; containing 214 inhabitants. It comprises 1048 acres, the soil of which is in general rich and loamy; a small tributary stream of the river Bure forms the boundary of the greater part. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the patronage of the Corporation of Norwich; improprator, Earl of Orford. The great tithes have been commuted for £195, and the vicarial for £138; the impropriate glebe consists of 34 acres, and the vicar's comprises 23 acres. A school is partly supported by private charity.

CALTHWAITE, a township, in the parish of HESKET-IN-THE-FOREST, union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 7 miles (N. N. W.) from Penrith; containing 206 inhabitants. The river Petherill, over which a bridge of one arch was built by subscription in 1793, flows on the eastern side of the village.

CALTON, a chapelry, partly in the parish of BLORE, N. division, and partly in the parishes of CROXDEN, MAYFIELD, and WATERFALL, S. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 5½ miles (W. N. W.) from Ashbourn; containing 244 inhabitants. It comprises about 1400 acres, of which the surface is hilly, and the soil in general rich and productive. The river Hamps, which separates the district from Waterfall, is said to disappear at Waterhouses, and after running under ground for upwards of five miles, again to make its appearance near Ilam. The Calton-Low quarries supply the material for lime to the greater part of the county. The living is a donative, in the patronage of the inhabitants; net income, £86, with a good parsonage-house. The chapel, a small edifice, dedicated to St. Mary, has not been consecrated.

CALTON, a township, in the parish of KIRKBY-IN-MALHAM-DALE, union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 7 miles (N. W.) from Skipton; containing 79 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1730 acres, of which the surface is varied, and the land chiefly in pasture. Calton Hall, now a farm-house, was formerly the residence of the Lambert family, of whom General Lambert was one of the principal leaders of the parliamentarians in the reign of Charles I.

CALVELEY, a township, in the parish of BUNBURY, union of NANTWICH, First division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 6 miles (N. W. by N.) from Nantwich; containing 190 inhabitants. This was the birthplace and residence of the famous Sir Hugh Calveley, whose niece, in 1360, married Arthur, the sixth son of Sir John Davenport, of Merton, whose descendants have resided here up to the present time. A school is supported by Mrs. Davenport.

CALVER, a township, in the parish and union of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 1 mile (E. S. E.) from Stoney-Middleton; containing 573 inhabitants. There are extensive lime-works; also cotton-mills, in which from 200 to 300 persons are employed. The village is situated on the river Derwent. A school is principally supported by the Earl of Newburgh, and Messrs. Heygate and Co.

CALVERHALL, a chapelry, in the parish of PREES, union of WEM, Whitchurch division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP; containing, with Willaston and Millenheath, 262 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £65; patron and improprator, John W. Dodd, Esq. The chapel is dedicated to St. Bartholomew.

CALVERLEIGH (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and hundred of TIVERTON, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 2 miles (N. W.) from Tiverton; containing 81 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement, 500 acres, about 50 of which are woodland, and the rest arable and pasture, in nearly equal portions. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of G. W. Owen, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £85. 13., and the glebe comprises 72 acres. In the church is a curious monument to a former proprietor, named Southcot, dated 1638. There is a Roman Catholic chapel.

CALVERLEY (St. Wilfrid), a parish, in the union of BRADFORD, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 5 miles (N. E.) from Bradford; containing, with the township of Bolton, and the chapelries of Idle and Pudsey, 21,039 inhabitants, of whom 4142 are in the township of Calverley cum Farsley. This extensive parish, which is within the honour of Pontefract, belonged, at the time of the Conquest, to the family of the Lacys, by whom the manor was given to Gospatrick, Earl of Northumberland, and by one of his daughters and co-heiresses conveyed by marriage, in the reign of Stephen, to the family of Scot, whose descendants assumed the name of Calverley. The manor continued in that family till the year 1754, when Sir Walter Calverley, who took the surname of Blackett, sold it, with the whole of the estates, to the great-uncle of Thomas Thornhill, Esq., the present lord. The parish comprises 8644*a. 3r. 14p.*; the soil is fertile, the surface is pleasingly varied, and the higher grounds command extensive and interesting views of the country adjacent. Calverley House is the residence of William Horsfall, Esq., and Woodhall, that of Daniel Peckover, Esq. The village is beautifully situated on the brow of an acclivity on the south side of Airedale, and partly on the bank of the river, and near the Leeds and Liverpool canal. The population is principally employed in the woollen-manufacture, for which there are extensive establishments; and there are also some stone-quarries and coal-mines. A court of requests was established in 1839. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 11. 10.; net income, £150, with a good glebe-house; patron, the Crown. The church is a venerable structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, crowned by pinnacles, and contains several handsome monuments. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; and a school is endowed with half of £16. 14. 6., arising from the sale of a house bequeathed by Joseph Hillary, Esq., in 1658. Here is an aluminous and chalybeate spring.—See IDLE, PUDSEY, FARSLEY, &c.

CALVERTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of POTTER'S-PURY, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 1 mile (N.) from Stony-Stratford; containing 493 inhabitants. This parish once included the western portion of Stony-Stratford, which was separated from it by act of parliament: the manor formerly belonged to Simon Bennet, Esq., who, during the commonwealth, built the manor-house on the site of a more ancient structure. The parish comprises about 2000 acres, both the surface and soil of which are considerably varied; the river Ouse skirts it on the north. The substrata are chiefly limestone and sandstone; the former, which abounds with numerous fossil shells, is quarried for burning into lime and for building purposes. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 2. 11.; net income, £346; patron, Lord Arden: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1782. The church is a neat plain edifice, erected in 1818, by Lord Arden and the Rev. George Butler, D.D., then rector; it has been embellished with stained glass, by the Rev. C. G. Perceval, the present incumbent, and the interior has a neat and pleasing appearance. The rectory-house, built by Lord Arden, in 1820, occupies the site of a small Roman camp, and numerous fragments of Roman pottery, with arrow-heads, and a spear, were discovered in forming the plantations. Six small almshouses were built in 1830. A chalybeate spring, called the Bloody Hawk, was formerly much resorted to by persons who, on those occasions, formed groups for dancing to the violin.

CALVERTON (ST. WILFRID), a parish, in the union of BASFORD, S. division of the wapentake of THURGARTON and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 7 miles (N. N. E.) from Nottingham; containing 1339 inhabitants. The parish is separated from that of Oxton by a small stream called Dover beck, which rises in the forest of Sherwood, and runs in a south-easterly direction into the Trent; it comprises by measurement 3300 acres. The chief manufactures are those of stockings and lace, which afford employment to about 600 persons. The village is of considerable extent, and situated in a picturesque valley. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4, and in the alternate patronage of the Prebendaries of Oxton, in the Collegiate Church of Southwell, who are also improPRIATORS; net income, £127: the tithes were commuted for 203 acres of land, under an inclosure act passed in 1779. The church, erected in 1774, is a neat and substantial edifice. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans, and for a sect peculiar to the parish, founded in the latter part of the last century, by John Roe. A school is endowed with £6 per annum; and £40 per annum, a house and garden, and four tons of coal, are also allowed by the trustees of Mr. Jonathan Labray's Hospital.

CALWICK, a township, in the parish of ELLASTONE, S. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 3½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Ashbourn; containing 131 inhabitants. A hermitage was anciently established here, which was given to the priory of Kenilworth before the year 1148, by Nicholas de Greselei Fitz-Nigell, and a small convent of Black canons placed therein. This house was assigned by Henry VIII. to the monastery of Merton, in Surrey, in exchange for the manor of East Moulsey, as parcel of which it was again granted by that monarch to John Fleetwood.

CAM (ST. GEORGE), a parish, in the union of DURSLEY, Upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 1 mile (N.) from Dursley; containing 1851 inhabitants. This place is distinguished as the scene of a battle, fought between the Saxons and the Danes, in the reign of Edward the Elder. The parish, which takes its name from a rivulet that divides it into Upper and Lower, and falls into the SVERN at Frampton, comprises 2531a. 1r. 26p., of which 2025 acres are pasture, 263 arable, and 242 common land; the soil is in general a strong clay. There are several quarries of white and of brown freestone, which, when kept dry, is of good quality for building; and facility of communication is afforded by the Gloucester and Bristol railway, which crosses the lower part of the parish. A considerable portion of the land lies low, but the meadows afford excellent pasture, and the district is noted for the superiority of its cheese. The majority of the inhabitants are employed in the finer branches of the clothing trade, and the weavers of the place are among the best workmen in the kingdom. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £150; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. The tithes have been commuted for £500, and the glebe consists of 23a. 2r. The church, which has been improved and newly pewed at a considerable expense, is an ancient structure, in the later English style: in the porch was formerly a figure of the patron saint, carved in wood, which, in the reign of Edward VI., was taken down and removed to Colnbrook, from which circumstance the George inn in that town received its name. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. In 1730, Mrs. Frances Hopton bequeathed an estate for a school, now producing nearly £200 per annum; and a national school is supported by subscription.

CAMBERWELL (ST. GILES), a parish and union, in the E. division of the hundred of BRIXTON and of the county of SURREY, 3¼ miles (S.) from London; containing, with the hamlets of Dulwich and Peckham, 39,868 inhabitants. This place, in the Norman survey called Cambrewell, and in other ancient records Camerwell, appears to have been known at a very early period to the Romans, whose legions are by some antiquaries supposed to have here forded the Thames, and to have constructed a causeway leading from the river through the marshes in this parish, of which a considerable part, consisting of square chalk stones, and secured with oak piles, was discovered, fifteen feet below the surface of the ground, in digging the bed of the Grand Surrey canal, in 1809. In Domesday book mention is made of a church, and in the register of Bishop Edington, at Winchester, a commission dated 1346, for "reconciling Camberwell church, which had been polluted by bloodshed," is still in existence. The village is pleasantly situated, and the beauty of its environs has made it the residence of many wealthy merchants in the metropolis: it is paved, and lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from springs, and from the works of the South London Company. The ancient part of the village contains several spacious mansions in detached situations; the more modern is built on rising ground to the south-east, and comprises the Grove, Champion, Denmark, and Herne Hills, which are occupied by elegant villas, in a pleasing and appropriate style. In Union-row is a building, purchased a few years since, for the Surrey Literary Institution. There are several coal and coke wharfs, and a limekiln on the banks of the Surrey Canal, which terminates in the parish, through which the London and Croydon railway also passes. By the act to "amend the representation," the whole parish, except Dulwich, was included within the limits of the new borough of Lambeth. The magistrates for the district hold a meeting every alternate week; and the jurisdiction of the court of requests, held in the borough of Southwark, for the recovery of debts under £5, extends to this parish. A noted pleasure-fair, held on the green for three days in the month of August, was abolished in 1840.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £20; net income, £1820; patron and impropiator, the Rev. Sir Edward Bowyer Smith, Bart. The great tithes have been commuted for £80, and the vicarial for £1100; the glebe comprises 21 acres, with a good glebe-house. The church, an ancient structure in the later English style, with a low embattled tower surmounted by an open lantern turret rising from the centre, and which contained numerous ancient monuments, was destroyed by an accidental fire on the morning of Monday, the 8th of February, 1841, and only the roofless walls left standing: a meeting of the parishioners was held on the 13th for the appointment of a committee, who, at a subsequent meeting, were empowered to raise £15,600, for the erection of a new edifice. The district church, dedicated to St. George, is situated on the bank of the Surrey canal, and is a handsome structure in the Grecian style, erected in 1824, at an expense of £17,000, of which £5000 was a grant from the Commissioners for Building New Churches: the interior is well arranged, and adapted for a congregation of 1700 persons. The living is a perpetual curacy; net value, £500; patron, the Vicar of Camberwell. Emanuel district church, situated in the High-street, near the old mansion-house, and of which the first stone was laid in 1841, has been completed at an expense of £6000, of which £2000 were contributed by the Metropolitan Church Building Society, £1000 by the Incorporated Society, and £1900 by Sir Edward Bowyer Smith, who also gave the site and a house for the minister, and presented the organ. It is a handsome structure, of white brick, in the Norman style, with two towers, surmounted by small spires, at the east end, where is the principal entrance; the interior is well arranged, and contains 1000 sittings, of which 500 are free. The first stone of a church on Herne-Hill was laid in June, 1843; it will be a brick building faced with Sneaton stone, in the English style, with a tower and steeple 115 feet in height; the extent of the plan is 115 feet from east to west, and the internal length of the nave 80 feet, and its breadth, including the side aisles, 50; of the windows, 25 will be of stained glass: the edifice will afford accommodation to 700 persons; the estimated cost is £4958. Two new churches have been also erected at Peckham, where are also two proprietary Episcopal chapels; which are noticed in the account of that hamlet. Camden Proprietary Episcopal chapel, originally built in 1795, and subsequently enlarged, is a handsome edifice of brick, with a campanile turret. There is also a chapel, dedicated to St. Matthew, on Denmark Hill, and which, though locally in this parish, is dependent on that of Lambeth. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans.

The free grammar school, originally intended for 12 boys, was founded in 1618, by the Rev. Edward Wilson, vicar of the parish, who built the premises, and gave seven acres of land for its endowment, which are let on lease for £60 per annum, paid to the master, who has also a house rent-free, and the privilege of taking boarders: the school is under the management of governors, who are a body corporate, and have a common seal. The Camberwell collegiate school is a proprietary establishment, on the principles of King's College, London, and under the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester; the buildings, to which are attached two acres of garden and playground, are situated in the Grove, and are in the collegiate style, with a cloister in the centre of the front, forming the principal entrance. The Royal Naval school, formerly at Alfred House, Camberwell, has been recently removed to a spacious building, erected for its use at New Cross. The Green-coat school, on Camberwell Green, was established in 1721, by Henry Cornelison, Esq., and the original endowment has been increased by subsequent benefactions; it is, however, chiefly supported by subscription. There are several national, Lancasterian, and infants' schools in the parish, all well supported; and of these, the principal are, the national school in the district of St. George's, for which a handsome building, in the Elizabethan style, was erected in 1840; and the national schools attached to Christ-church, containing also accommodation for an infants' school. Sir Edmund Bowyer, in 1626, bequeathed houses and land, producing £98. 10., for charitable uses; Mrs. Abigail Bowles, in 1676, gave 5 acres of land to the poor; Mrs. Harriet Smith, in 1808, gave £3000 three per cents., the dividends on which are annually distributed among ten poor housekeepers; and there are various other charitable bequests. Almshouses for 60 aged and destitute Christians of all denominations, were erected in 1835, by the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society. The union, which comprises the whole extent of the parish, is under the management of fifteen guardians. On the south of the village is Ladland's Hill, on which are the remains of a Roman camp, defended on the south side by a double intrenchment; and in a field in the neighbourhood, called Well Hill, three large wells, 36 feet in circumference, and lined with cement, were discovered, from which the place probably derived its name. A head of Janus, 18 inches high, was found, about a century since, at a place designated St. Thomas' Watering, where pilgrims used to stop on their way to Becket's shrine; and near it is a hill, called Oak of Honour Hill, from an oak under which Queen Elizabeth is said to have dined. The late Dr. Lettsom, an eminent physician, lived for many years in a beautiful cottage in the Grove, where he had an extensive library and philosophical apparatus; and the uncle of George Barnwell, the hero of Lillo's tragedy, resided in an ancient house, of which there are still some vestiges remaining.

CAMBLESFORTH, a township, in the parish of DRAX, union of SELBY, Lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.) from Snaith; containing 321 inhabitants. There is a charity school, with an endowment of £6 per annum; likewise almshouses for six people, endowed with £109 per annum. The poor children also participate in the advantages of the free grammar school at Drax, liberally endowed by Mr. Charles Reed, in 1669.

CAMBO, a township, in the parish of HARTBURN, union of MORPETH, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Morpeth; containing 99 inhabitants. The township comprises 630 acres, of which the greater part is rich pasture land. The village is on the road from Hexham to Alnwick: there is a small subscription library. The tithes have been commuted for £17. 10., payable to the impropiator, and £19 to the vicar. A chapel has lately been built. The school, which is on the national plan, has a small endowment left by Thomas and James Cook; and some children are taught at the expense of the Trevelyan family. Launcelot Brown, the late celebrated landscape gardener, received his early education here. At Cambo was anciently a chapel, of which there are no remains: several tombstones have been dug up near its site, but service has not been performed in it since the reign of Elizabeth. There are also the ruins of a peel-house, or fortalice, in the village.

CAMBOIS, a township, in the parish of BEDLINGTON, union of MORPETH, E. division of CHESTER ward, county of DURHAM, but on the eastern side, and for election purposes attached to the N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Morpeth; containing 109 inhabitants. This township, which has its name, pronounced "Camus," from being a place of barter or commerce, was once held under Ulf de Camhow, and Nicholas, his son, by Walter de Camhow, as tenant, who was sheriff of the county in 1278 and 1279; and the estate continued in the same family until it passed by marriage to the knightly family of Coventree, whence it descended to the Fenwicks, of whom Sir John Fenwick sold it, in 1659, to Sir William Blackett, with the rest of the Wallington property. Sir M. W. Ridley, Bart., is now the proprietor of the township, and lord of the manor to low-water mark. The lands extend along the sea-shore, between the rivers Blyth and Wansbeck; and the village is situated among rich pastures on a dry green knoll, formed by the banks of the sea and the Wansbeck, which has here a ferry over it. There is a small harbour, where corn, timber, and grindstones are shipped. Some spacious granaries were built during the late war with France, at which period a great quantity of grain was exported. About half a mile south-east of the Wansbeck is a cluster of rocks, named Cambois ridge, the tops of which are dry at low water, but as this part of the coast is little frequented, except by small vessels, accidents seldom occur.

CAMBORNE, (St. Martin), a market-town and parish, in the union of REDRUTH, E. division of the hundred of PENWITH, W. division of CORNWALL, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Redruth, and 267 (S. W.) from London, on the road from Truro to Penzance; containing 10,061 inhabitants. This town, situated in the centre of an extensive district abounding with copper, tin, and lead mines, consists of several streets, uniformly built, but indifferently supplied with water: two book-clubs have been established. The Dolcoath copper-mine has been sunk to the depth of 1000 feet, and extends laterally for more than a mile, in a direction from east to west; the number of persons employed exceeds 1500, and the annual expenditure of the proprietors is more than £50,000. There are several other mines, on a smaller scale: the neighbourhood abounds with granite, and there are an iron-foundry and a manufactory for safety fuzes used by the miners in blasting, together employing about sixty persons. The market is on Saturday: the market-house, a shed supported on pillars of granite, was erected at the expense of Lord de Dunstanville. The fairs are on March 7th, June 5th and 29th, and November 12th, principally for cattle. The county magistrates hold a petty-session for the district every alternate Tuesday; and a court leet is held in November, at which constables are appointed.

The parish comprises by computation about 6000 acres. The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £39. 16. 10½., and in the patronage of Lord de Dunstanville: the tithes have been commuted for £900, and the glebe comprises 40 acres. The church is an ancient structure, principally in the later English style; and contains several monuments to the family of Pendarves; the altar-piece is of marble handsomely sculptured, and the pulpit of oak curiously carved. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Wesleyans, and Bryanites. A free school, now conducted on the national plan, was founded, in 1763, by Mrs. Grace Percival, of Pendarves, who endowed it with a house and £21 per annum; and Francis Basset, Esq., left an endowment of £5 per annum, for teaching children. There is a cromlech at Carwynen, in the parish. Mr. Arthur Woolf, an eminent civil engineer, who died in 1837, was born here about the year 1765; he made considerable improvements in the construction of steam-engines, and took out a patent for the application of two cylinders. Mr. Richard Trevithic, who was born here in 1775, and died in 1833, in conjunction with Captain Andrew Vivian, now residing here, constructed the first locomotive engine, for which they took out a patent, in 1802; they also constructed a high pressure steam-engine, and invented the cylindrical boiler with a single tube, which is very economical in the use of fuel. Mr. Bickford, resident here, invented, with Mr. Thomas D'Arcy, the patent safety fuze used by miners for blasting; and John Stackhouse, Esq., of Pendarves, who was born here in 1748, and died in 1819, was author of the "Nereis Britannica," and editor of the "Theophrasti Plantarum Historia."

CAMBRIDGE, a university, borough, and market-town, having separate jurisdiction, and forming a union and hundred of itself, in the county of CAMBRIDGE, on the river Cam, 51 miles (N. by E.) from London; containing 24,453 inhabitants. This ancient town was the Grantan-brycege, Grantabrigge, or Grante-brige, of the Saxon Chronicle, signifying "the Bridge over the Granta," the ancient name of the river Cam : by the substitution of cognate letters, the Saxon compound was altered after the Norman Conquest to Cantebrige, since contracted into Cambridge. The earliest authenticated fact in its history is its conflagration, in 871, by the Danes, who established on its desolated site one of their principal stations, which they occasionally occupied until the year 901. When the Danish army quartered here had submitted to Edward the Elder, that monarch restored the town; but, in 1010, the Danes again laid it waste. During the period that the Isle of Ely was held against William the Conqueror, by the Anglo-Saxon prelates and nobles, William built a castle at Cambridge, on the site, as it is supposed, of the Danish fortress, including also the sites of twenty-seven other houses, which, according to Domesday book, were then destroyed. In 1088, the town and county were ravaged by Roger de Montgomery, Earl of Shrewsbury, who had espoused the cause of Robert, Duke of Normandy. Upon the agreement made in 1201, during the absence of Richard I. in Palestine, between Prince John and Chancellor Longchamp, the castle was among those which the chancellor was allowed to retain. The town was taken and despoiled by the barons, in 1215. King John was at Cambridge about a month before his death : soon after his departure, the castle was taken by the barons, and on his decease a council was held here between them and Louis the Dauphin. In 1265, the inhabitants of the Isle of Ely being in rebellion against Henry III., the king took up his abode in the town, and began to fortify it; but being suddenly called away by the tidings of the Earl of Gloucester's success, he left Cambridge without a garrison, in consequence of which it was plundered by the rebels in the isle, the townsmen having fled at their approach. On the death of Henry VI., the Duke of Northumberland, at that time chancellor of the university, aiming to place Lady Jane Grey on the throne, came hither with an army to seize the Lady Mary, who, being at Sir John Huddleston's house at Sawston, and receiving intelligence of his design, escaped into Suffolk. The duke advanced towards Bury, but finding himself almost deserted by his forces, he returned with a small party to Cambridge, and proclaimed Queen Mary in the market-place, but was arrested for high treason the same night in King's College. In 1643, Cromwell, who, before he acquired any celebrity as a public character, was for some time an inhabitant of the Isle of Ely, and twice returned for the borough of Cambridge, took possession of it for the parliament, and placed in it a garrison of 1000 men : in August, 1645, the king appeared with his army before Cambridge, but it continued in the possession of the parliamentarians until the close of the war. The town has suffered several times from accidental calamities : in 1174, the church of the Holy Trinity was destroyed by fire, and most of the other churches injured ; in 1294, another conflagration destroyed St. Mary's church, and many of the adjoining houses ; and in 1630, the plague raged so violently that the summer assizes were held that year at Royston ; the university commencement was postponed till October, and there was no Stourbridge fair.

Situated in a fenny agricultural district, CAMBRIDGE owes its chief picturesque attractions to the number and variety, and in several instances to the magnitude and beauty, of the buildings connected with the university, and the walks and gardens attached to them. The town, which is upwards of a mile in length, and one mile in its greatest breadth, lies chiefly on the south-eastern side of the river ; notwithstanding recent alterations, the streets in general are narrow and irregularly formed ; but on the whole the town has been much improved by many elegant additions to the several colleges and university buildings. The town was paved under an act passed in 1787, and has lately been drained at a great expense ; the streets, and many of the public buildings, are lighted with gas ; and an act was obtained, in 1834, to incorporate a company for affording a better supply. Water is procured from a conduit in the market-place, erected in the year 1614, by the eccentric and benevolent Thomas Hobson, carrier, and supplied by a small aqueduct communicating with a spring about three miles distant. Dramatic exhibitions are not permitted, within nine miles of the town, at any other period than that of Stourbridge fair, when, for three weeks, the Norwich company of comedians perform in a commodious theatre lately erected at Barnwell. Several public concerts are held in term-time, usually at the town-hall, when the best performers are engaged ; and at the Public Commencements, which generally take place every fourth year, there are grand musical festivals. A choral society on an extensive scale has been formed ; and there are several book societies, the most considerable of which has been established many years.

Cambridge has lately become a considerable thoroughfare, particularly since the draining of the fens, and the formation of excellent roads towards the east and north-east coasts, over tracts previously impassable ; and the Northern and Eastern railway, which is now in progress, will, when completed, pass close by the town. There is no manufacture ; but a considerable trade in corn, coal, timber, iron, &c., is carried on with the port of Lynn, by means of the Cam, which is navigable to Cambridge. A great quantity of oil, pressed at the numerous mills in the Isle of Ely, from flax, hemp, and cole-seed, is brought up the river ; and butter is conveyed hither weekly from Norfolk and the Isle of Ely, and sent by waggons to London. The markets, which are under the control of the university, though the tolls belong to the corporation, are held every day in the week, Saturday's being the largest, and are excellently supplied with provisions : the market-place consists of two spacious oblong squares. There are two fairs : one of them, for horses, cattle, timber, and pottery, beginning on the 22nd of June, and commonly called Midsummer or Pot fair, is proclaimed by the heads of the university, and the mayor and corporation successively. The other, called Stourbridge fair, anciently one of the largest and most celebrated in the kingdom, is proclaimed on the 18th of Sept. by the vice-chancellor, doctors, and proctors of the university, and by the mayor and aldermen, and continues upwards of three weeks : the staple commodities exposed for sale are leather, timber, cheese, hops, wool, and cattle ; the 25th is appropriated to the sale of horses. Both the fairs have been for some years declining.

The town, though a BOROUGH by prescription, was first incorporated by Henry I., in the early part of his reign ; and 24 other charters, none of which, however, with the exception of that of the 5th of Richard II., caused any material change in the municipal government, were granted previously to the charter of the 7th of Charles I., under which the officers of the corporation consisted of a mayor, four bailiffs, twelve aldermen, twenty-four common-councillors, and two treasurers; others not named in the charter were a high steward, recorder, deputy-recorder, four councillors, two coroners, a town-clerk, and deputy town-clerk. The government is now, under the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76, vested in a mayor, ten aldermen, and thirty councillors; the borough is divided into the five wards of East Barnwell, West Barnwell, Market, Trinity, and St. Andrew; and the number of magistrates is twenty-five. The borough has returned members to parliament since the 23rd of Edward I.: the right of election was formerly in the freemen not receiving alms, but, by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the non-resident freemen have been disfranchised, and the privilege has been extended to the £10 householders of the borough, the limits of which comprise 3195 acres: the returning officer is the mayor. The privilege of sending two representatives was conferred upon the university by charter in the first of James I.; the right of election is vested in the members of the senate; the vice-chancellor is returning officer. The recorder holds a court of session quarterly; also a court of pleas, taking cognizance of actions, real and personal, arising within the town; and a court leet is held annually, for the appointment of constables, &c. There are petty-sessions daily. The steward of the university holds a court leet twice a year, for inquiring into matters connected with weights and measures, and for licensing victuallers in the town, and the adjoining village of Chesterton. The Bishop and the Archdeacon of Ely hold their courts and have their registries here; and both the spring and the summer assizes, and the quarter-sessions for the county, are held at Cambridge. The shire-hall is a building, in the market-place, containing two courts, and resting upon arches faced with stone, beneath which are shops. The county courts, on the road to Ely, and opposite to the gaol, with which they have a subterraneous communication, form a handsome structure of freestone from the Whitby quarries, recently erected in the Palladian style of architecture, at an expense of £11,000. The principal front, which projects from the main building, is 102 feet in length, and is divided into seven compartments, by a series of arches, of which five in the central portion form an open arcade, leading to the judges' apartments and to the grand jury room and other offices, and are separated by single columns of the Tuscan order. The other two compartments, at the extremes, are inclosed with spacious venetian windows, and ornamented with duplicated columns, together supporting an enriched entablature and cornice, surmounted by a balustraded parapet, divided into corresponding compartments by pedestals, of which those in the central portion support emblematical statues, and those of the extremes are crowned with ornamental urns. At each extremity of the front are handsome rusticated doorways, leading to the main building, which is 136 feet in length, and of higher elevation than the front, and affording an entrance into those parts of the courts which are open to the public; the court-rooms are each 51 feet in length, and 32 feet wide, and are commodiously fitted up with oak. The town-hall, rebuilt in 1782, is obscurely situated behind the shire-hall. A new and commodious town gaol, on the radiating principle, has been erected in the parish of St. Andrew-the-Less, on the north-east of the road to Colchester. The town is a parliamentary polling-place for the shire, for which it is also the principal place of election.

University Arms.

The ORIGIN of the UNIVERSITY is enveloped in great obscurity: it is, however, probable that Cambridge first became a seat of learning in the seventh century, when, as Bede in his Ecclesiastical History informs us, Sigebert, King of the East Angles, with the assistance of Bishop Felix, constituted within his dominions a school in imitation of some that he had seen in France, and this is thought to have been established here. It is certain, that at a very early period the town was the resort of numerous students, who at first resided in private apartments, and afterwards in inns, where they lived in community under a principal, at their own charge. Several of these houses were at length deserted, and fell into decay; others were purchased in succession by patrons of literature, and, obtaining incorporation with right of mortmain, received permanent rich endowments. It is believed that a regular system of academical education was first introduced in 1109, when the Abbot of Crowland having sent some monks, well versed in philosophy and other sciences, to his manor of Cottenham, they proceeded to the neighbouring town of Cambridge, whither a great number of scholars repaired to their lectures, which were arranged after the manner of the university of Orleans. The first charter known to have been granted to the university is that in the 15th of Henry III., conferring the privilege of appointing certain officers, called taxors, to regulate the rent of lodgings for students, which had been raised exorbitantly by the townsmen: this was about 50 years before the foundation of Peter-house, the first endowed college. In 1249, the discord between the scholars and the townsmen had arrived at such a pitch, as to require the interference of the civil power; and, in 1261, dissensions arose in the university between the northern and the southern men, which were attended with such serious consequences, that a great number of scholars, in order to pursue their studies without interruption, withdrew to Northampton, where a university was established, and continued four years. In 1270, Prince Edward came to Cambridge, and caused an agreement to be drawn up, by virtue of which certain persons were appointed by the town and the university, to preserve the peace between the students and the inhabitants. In 1333, Edward III. granted some important privileges to the university, making its authority paramount to that of the borough, and ordaining that the mayor, bailiffs, and aldermen, should swear to maintain its rights and privileges. These eminent favours caused the townsmen to be more than ever jealous of its authority; and their discontents broke out into open violence in the succeeding reign, when, taking advantage of the temporary success of the rebels of Kent and Essex, in 1381, the principal townsmen, at the head of a tumultuous assemblage, seized and destroyed the university charters, plundered Benedict College, and compelled the chancellor and other members of the university to renounce their chartered privileges, and to promise submission to the usurped authority of the burgesses. These lawless proceedings were put an end to by the arrival of the Bishop of Norwich with an armed force; and the king soon after punished the burgesses, by depriving them of their charter, and bestowing all the privileges which they had enjoyed upon the university, together with a grant that no action should be brought against any scholar, or scholar's servant, by a townsman, in any other than the chancellor's court. In 1430, Pope Martin V. decided, from the testimony of ancient evidence, that the members of the university were exclusively possessed of all ecclesiastical and spiritual jurisdiction over their own scholars. Richard II. restored to the burgesses their charter, with such an abridgment of their privileges as rendered them more subordinate to the university than they had previously been. On the first symptoms of an approaching war between King Charles and the parliament, the university stood forward to demonstrate its loyalty, by tendering the college plate to be melted for his majesty's use. In 1643, the Earl of Manchester, at that time chancellor of the university, came to Cambridge, and, after a general visitation of the colleges, expelled all the members that were known to be zealously attached to the king and to the church discipline. In March, 1647, Sir Thomas Fairfax visited the university, and was received with all the honours of royalty at Trinity College; and on the 11th of June he kept a public fast at the place. Queen Elizabeth visited Cambridge, Aug. 5th, 1564, and stayed five days, during which she resided at the provost's lodge, King's College, and was entertained with plays, orations, and academical exercises; and on the 7th of March, 1615, James I., with his son Henry, Prince of Wales, was here, and was lodged at Trinity College, which has ever since, on the occasion of royal visits, been the residence of the sovereign. King James honoured the university with another visit in 1625; and Charles I. and his queen were here in 1632, when they were entertained with dramatic exhibitions. It has also been visited by Charles II., Oct. 14th, 1671, and Sept. 27th, 1681; by William III., Oct. 4th, 1689; by Queen Anne and the Prince of Denmark, April 16th, 1705; by George I., Oct. 6th, 1717; and by George II., in April, 1728; on all which occasions the royal guests were entertained by the university in the hall of Trinity College; and it was customary for the corporation to present them with 50 broad pieces of gold. Her present Majesty honoured the town with a visit, accompanied by his royal highness, Prince Albert, Oct. 25th, 1843.

The University is a society of students in all the liberal arts and sciences, incorporated, in the 13th of Elizabeth, by the name of the "Chancellor, Masters, and Scholars of the University of Cambridge." It is formed by the union of seventeen colleges, or societies, devoted to the pursuit of learning and knowledge, and for the better service of the church and state; and each college is a body corporate, and bound by its own statutes, though controlled, as in Oxford, by the paramount laws of the university. The present statutes were given by Queen Elizabeth, and, with former privileges, were sanctioned by parliament. Each of the seventeen departments, or colleges, in this literary republic, furnishes members both for the executive and the legislative branch of its government; the place of assembly is the senate-house. All persons who are masters of arts, or doctors in one of the three faculties, viz., divinity, civil law, and physic, having their names upon the college boards, holding any university office, or being resident in the town, have votes in the assembly. The senate is divided into two classes or houses; and according to this arrangement they are denominated regents, or non-regents, with a view to some particular offices allotted by the statutes to the junior division. Masters of arts of less than five years' standing, and doctors of less than two, compose the regent or upper house, or, as it is sometimes styled, the "White-hood house," from its members wearing hoods lined with white silk; and all the rest constitute the non-regent or lower house, otherwise called the "Black-hood house," its members wearing black silk hoods. But doctors of more than two years' standing, and the public orator of the university, may vote in either house according to their pleasure. Besides the two houses, there is a council named the Caput, chosen on October 12th, by which every university grace must be approved before it can be introduced to the senate; and this council consists of a vice-chancellor, a doctor in each of the three faculties, and two masters of arts, the last representing the regent and non-regent houses. No degree is ever obtained without a grace for that purpose: after the grace has passed, the vice-chancellor is at liberty to confer the degree. The university confers no degree whatever, unless the candidate has previously subscribed a declaration that he is bona fide a member of the Church of England, as by law established; for all other degrees, except those of B.A., M.B., and B.C.L., it is necessary that persons should subscribe to the 36th canon of the Church of England, inserted in the registrar's book.

The EXECUTIVE branch of the university government is committed to a chancellor, high steward, vice-chancellor, and other officers. The Chancellor is the head of the whole university, and presides over all cases relative to that body; his office is biennial, or tenable for such a length of time beyond two years as the tacit consent of the university chooses to allow. The High Steward is elected by the senate, who has special power to try scholars impeached of felony within the limits of the university (the jurisdiction of which extends a mile each way from any part of the suburbs), and to hold a court leet, according to the established charter and custom; he has power, by letters-patent, to appoint a deputy. The Vice-chancellor is elected on Nov. 4th, by the senate; his office, in the absence of the chancellor, embraces the government of the university, according to the statutes; he acts as a magistrate both for the university and the county, and must, by an order made in 1587, be the head of some college. A Commissary is appointed by letters-patent under the signature and seal of the chancellor; he holds a court of record for all privileged persons, and scholars under the degree of M.A. A Public Orator is elected by the senate, and is the oracle of that body on all public occasions: he writes, reads, and records the letters to and from the senate, and presents to all honorary degrees with an appropriate speech: this is esteemed one of the most honourable offices in the gift of the university. An Assessor is specially appointed, by a grace of the senate, to assist the vice-chancellor in his court, in causis forensibus et domesticis. Two Proctors, who are peace-officers, are elected annually on Oct. 10th, by the regents only, and are chosen from the different colleges in rotation, according to a fixed cycle. A Librarian, Library-keeper, and Assistant Library-keeper, are chosen by the senate, to whom the management of the university library is confided. A Registrar, elected also by the senate, is obliged, either by himself or deputy, to attend all congregations, to give requisite directions for the due form of such graces as are to be propounded, to receive them when passed in both houses. Two Taxors are elected on Oct. 10th, by the regents only, who must be masters of arts, and are regents by virtue of their office; they are appointed to regulate the markets, and to lay the abuses thereof before the commissary. Two Scrutators are chosen at the same time by the non-regents only; they are ex-officio non-regents, and attend all congregations, read the graces in the lower house, gather the votes, and pronounce the assent and dissent. Two Moderators, nominated by the proctors, and appointed by a grace of the senate, officiate in the absence of the proctors. Two Pro-proctors are appointed, to assist the proctors in that part of their duty, which relates to the preservation of the public morals: this office was instituted by a grace of the senate, April 29th, 1818, and bachelors in divinity, as well as masters of arts, are eligible. Classical Examiners are nominated by the several colleges, according to the cycle of proctors, and the election takes place at the first congregation after Oct. 4th. There are three Esquire Bedells, whose duty it is to attend the vice-chancellor. The University Printer, the Library-keeper, and Under Library-keeper, and the School-keeper, are elected by the body at large. The Yeoman Bedell is appointed by letters-patent under the signature and seal of the chancellor; and the University Marshal by letters-patent of the vice-chancellor. The Syndics are members of the senate chosen to transact all special affairs relating to the university.

The PROFESSORS have stipends allowed from various sources; some from the university chest, and others from her Majesty's government, or from estates left for the purpose. Lady Margaret's Professorship of Divinity was instituted, in 1502, by Margaret, Countess of Richmond, mother of Henry VII., the election to be every two years. The Regius Professorship of Divinity was founded by Henry VIII., in 1540; the candidates may be either bachelors, or doctors in divinity. The Regius Professorship of Civil Law was also established by Henry VIII. in 1540; the professor is appointed by the Queen, and continues in office during her Majesty's pleasure. The Regius Professorship of Physic, instituted at the same time, may be held for life; the appointment is by the Queen. The Regius Professorship of Hebrew was likewise founded at the same time; a candidate must not be under the standing of M.A. or B.D.; but doctors of all faculties are excluded. A Professorship of Arabic was established by Sir Thomas Adams, Bart. in 1632. The Lord Almoner's Reader and Professorship of Arabic is in the gift of the lord almoner, and the stipend is paid out of the almonry bounty. The Lucasian Professorship of Mathematics was instituted in 1663, by Henry Lucas, Esq., M.P. for the university; a candidate must be M.A. at least, and well skilled in mathematical science. The Professorship of Casuistry was founded in 1683, by John Knightbridge, D.D., fellow of St. Peter's: a candidate must be a bachelor or doctor in divinity, and not less than 40 years of age. The Professorship of Music was established by the university, in 1684. The Professorship of Chemistry was founded by the university, in 1702. The Professorship of Astronomy and Experimental Philosophy was instituted in 1704, by Dr. Plume, Archdeacon of Rochester. The Professorship of Anatomy was founded by the university, in 1707. The Professorship of Modern History was established by George I., in 1724; the professor is appointed by the Queen, and holds the office during her Majesty's pleasure; he must be either a master of arts, or bachelor in civil law, of a superior degree. The Professorship of Botany was founded by the university, in 1724, and has since been made a patent office. The Professorship of Geology was instituted by Dr. Woodward, in 1727; only unmarried men are eligible. The Professorship of Astronomy and Geometry was founded by Thomas Lowndes, Esq., in 1749. The Norrisian Professorship of Divinity was founded by John Norris, Esq., of Whitton, in the county of Norfolk, in 1768: the professor cannot continue in office longer than five years, but may be re-elected: he may be a member of either university, may be lay or clerical, but cannot be elected under his 30th, nor re-elected after his 60th year. The Professorship of Natural and Experimental Philosophy was established in 1783, by the Rev. Richard Jackson, M.A.; a member of Trinity College is to be preferred, and next, a candidate from the counties of Stafford, Warwick, Derby, or Chester. The Downing Professorship of the Laws of England, and the Downing Professorship of Medicine, were founded in pursuance of the will of Sir George Downing, Bart., K.B., in 1800. The Professorship of Mineralogy was instituted by the university, in 1808, and afterwards endowed by her Majesty's government. The title of Professor of Political Economy was conferred by a grace of the senate in May, 1828, on George Pryme, Esq., M.A., late fellow of Trinity College, and is to be a permanent professorship.

Lady Margaret's Preachership was founded in 1503; doctors, inceptors, and bachelors of divinity, are alone eligible, one of Christ's College being preferred. The Barnaby Lectureships, four in number, viz., in mathematics, philosophy, rhetoric, and logic, are so called from the election taking place on St. Barnabas-day, June 11th: the mathematical lecture was founded at a very early period, by the university; and the other three were endowed in 1524, by Sir Robert Rede, lord chief justice of the court of common pleas in the reign of Henry VIII. The Sadlerian Lectureships in Algebra, seventeen in number, were founded by Lady Sadler, and the lectures commenced in 1710: the lecturers were required to be bachelors of arts at least; the lectureships are tenable only for ten years, and no one can be elected unless previously examined and approved by the mathematical professor. The Rev. John Hulse, who was educated at St. John's College, and died in 1789, bequeathed his estates in Cheshire to the university, for the advancement and reward of religious learning; the purposes to which he appropriated the income being, first, the maintenance of two scholars at St. John's College; secondly, to recompense the exertions of the Hulsean prizemen; thirdly, to found and support the office of Christian Advocate; and, fourthly, that of the Hulsean Lecturer, or Christian Preacher. The Christian Advocate must be a learned and ingenious person, of the degree of master of arts, or of bachelor or doctor of divinity, of thirty years of age, and resident in the university; he has to compose yearly, while in office, some answer in English to objections brought against the Christian religion, or the religion of nature, by notorious infidels. The office of the Hulsean Lecturer, or Christian Preacher, is annual; but the same individual may, under certain circumstances, be re-elected for any number of successive years not exceeding six: the preacher is afterwards ineligible to the office of Christian Advocate: his duty is, to preach and print twenty sermons in each year, the subject of them being to show the evidences of revealed religion, or to explain some of the most obscure parts of the Holy Scriptures. William Worts, M.A., of Caius College, formerly one of the esquire bedells of the university, gave two pensions, of £100 per annum each, to two junior bachelors of arts, who are required to visit foreign countries, to take different routes, and to write, during their travels, two Latin letters each, descriptive of customs, curiosities, &c.: the annuity is continued for three years, the period they are required to be absent.

The PRIZES for the encouragement of literature, the competition for which is open to the university at large, amount annually to nearly £1200 in value, three-fourths of which are given for the classics and English composition, and the remainder for mathematics. The amount of the annual prizes in the different colleges is upwards of £300, two-thirds of which are for the encouragement of classical literature. Two gold medals, value £15. 15. each, are presented annually by the chancellor to two commencing bachelors of arts, who, having obtained senior optimes at least, show the greatest proficiency in classical learning: these prizes were established in 1751, by the Duke of Newcastle, then chancellor. The members of parliament for the university give four annual prizes, of £15. 15. each, to two bachelors of arts and two under-graduates, who compose the best dissertations in Latin prose: these were founded by the Hon. Edward Finch and the Hon. Thomas Townsend. Sir Edward Browne, Knt., M.D., directed three gold medals, value £5. 5. each, to be given yearly to three under-graduates on the commencement day; the first to him who writes the best Greek ode in imitation of Sappho; the second for the best Latin ode in imitation of Horace; the third for the best Greek and Latin epigrams, the former after the manner of the Anthologia, the latter on the model of Martial. The Rev. Charles Burney, D.D., and the Rev. John Cleaver Bankes, M.A., only surviving trustees of a fund raised by the friends of the late Professor Porson, and appropriated to his use during his lifetime, transferred to the university by deed, bearing date Nov. 27th, 1816, the sum of £400 Navy five per cents. upon trust, that the interest should be annually employed in the purchase of one or more Greek books, to be given to such resident under-graduate as shall make the best translation of a proposed passage selected from the works of Shakspeare, Ben Jonson, Massinger, or Beaumont and Fletcher, into Greek verse. The Rev. Robert Smith, D.D., late master of Trinity College, left two annual prizes, of £25 each, to two commencing bachelors of arts, the best proficient in mathematics and natural philosophy. John Norris, Esq., founder of the divinity professorship, bequeathed a premium of £12 per annum, of which £7. 4. are to be expended on a gold medal, and the remainder in books, to the author of the best prose essay on a sacred subject, to be proposed by the Norrisian professor. The Rev. John Hulse, mentioned above, directed that, out of the rents and profits of the estates which he bequeathed to the university, an annual premium of £40 should be given to any member, under the degree of M.A., who should compose the best dissertation on any argument proving the truth and excellence of the Christian religion. The Rev. Thomas Seaton, M.A., late fellow of Clare Hall, bequeathed an estate, producing a clear income of £40 per annum, to be given yearly to a master of arts who should write the best English poem on a sacred subject.

The university Scholarships are as follow. John, Lord Craven, founded two classical scholarships, tenable for fourteen years, of £25 per annum each: by a decree of the court of chancery, in 1819, the income of the scholars has been augmented to £50, and three additional scholarships founded, which are tenable for seven years only. William Battie, M.D., left an estate producing £18 per annum, to endow a scholarship similar to the preceding. Sir William Browne left a rent-charge of £21 for endowing a scholarship tenable for seven years. The Rev. J. Davies, D.D., provost of Eton College, bequeathed, in July, 1804, the sum of £1000 three per cents., to found a scholarship similar to Lord Craven's, for the greatest proficient in classical learning. The Rev. William Bell, D.D., late fellow of Magdalen College, in 1810, transferred £15,200 three per cents. to establish eight new scholarships, for sons or orphans of clergymen of the Church of England. By a grace of the senate, Dec. 9th, 1813, it was directed that the sum of £1000, given by the subscribers to Mr. Pitt's statue, for the purpose of founding the Pitt scholarship, and afterwards augmented by a donation of £500 from the Pitt Club, should be placed in the public funds until the syndics were able to vest it in land, the clear annual income to be paid to the scholar. The Rev. Robert Tyrwhitt, M.A., fellow of Jesus' College, who died in 1817, bequeathed £4000 Navy five per cents. for the encouragement of Hebrew learning; and in the following year the senate decreed the foundation of three Hebrew scholarships, which number, in 1826, was increased to six, a scholar of the first class receiving an annual stipend of £30, and one of the second class a stipend of £20, for three years. The number of scholarships and exhibitions in the university is upwards of 700. The annual Income of the university chest is about £16,000, including about £3000 of floating capital: it arises from stock in the funds, lands, houses, fees for degrees, government annuity (for the surrender of the privilege of printing almanacs), profits of the printing-office, &c. The expenditure is about £12,000, disbursed to the various officers, the professors, the library and schools, the university press, and in taxes, donations to charities, &c. The whole is managed by the vice-chancellor for the year, and the accounts are examined by three auditors appointed annually by the senate.

There are two Courts of Law, namely, the consistory court of the chancellor, and the consistory court of the commissary. In the former, the chancellor, or vice-chancellor, assisted by some of the heads of colleges, and one doctor or more of the civil law, administers justice in all personal pleas and actions arising within the limits of the university, wherein a member of the university is a party, which, excepting only such as concern mayhem and felony, are to be here solely heard and decided: the proceedings are according to the course of the civil law; and from the judgment of the court an appeal lies to the senate. In the commissary's court, the commissary, by authority under the seal of the chancellor, sits both in the university, and at Midsummer and Stourbridge fairs, to proceed in all cases, excepting those of mayhem and felony, wherein one of the parties is a member of the university, excepting that within the university all causes and suits to which one of the proctors or taxors, or a master of arts, or any one of superior degree, is a party, are reserved to the sole jurisdiction of the chancellor or vice-chancellor: the manner of proceeding is the same as in the chancellor's court, to which an appeal lies, and thence to the senate. The Terms, three in number, are fixed: October, or Michaelmas, term begins on Oct. 10th, and ends on Dec. 16th; Lent, or January, term begins on Jan. 13th, and ends on the Friday before Palm-Sunday; and Easter, or Midsummer, term begins on the eleventh day after Easter-day, and ends on the Friday after Commencement day, which last is always the first Tuesday in July.

The several orders in the different colleges are as follow. A Head of a college or house, who is generally a doctor in divinity. Fellows, who are usually doctors in divinity, civil law, or physic, bachelors in divinity, masters or bachelors of arts; the number is about 400. Noblemen Graduates, Doctors in the several faculties, Bachelors in Divinity, who have been masters of arts, and Masters of Arts, who are not on the foundation, but whose names are kept on the boards for the purpose of being members of the senate. Graduates, who are neither members of the senate nor in statu pupillari, and are bachelors in divinity denominated four-and-twenty men, or ten-year men; they are allowed by the ninth statute of Queen Elizabeth, which permits persons who are admitted to any college, 24 years of age and upwards, to take the degree of bachelor in divinity, when their names have remained on the boards ten years. Bachelors in Civil Law and in Physic, who sometimes keep their names upon the boards until they become doctors. Bachelors of Arts who are in statu pupillari, and pay for tuition whether resident or not, and generally keep their names on the boards, either to show their desire to become candidates for fellowships, or members of the senate. Fellow Commoners, who are generally the younger sons of the nobility, or young men of fortune, and have the privilege of dining at the fellows' table; they are equivalent to gentlemen commoners at Oxford. Pensioners and Scholars, who pay for their respective commons, rooms, &c.; but the latter are on the foundation, and, from the enjoyment of scholarships, read the graces in hall, the lessons in chapel, &c. Sizars are mostly men of inferior fortune, who usually have their commons free, and receive various emoluments.

The terms required by the statutes to be kept for the several degrees are as follow. A bachelor of arts must reside the greater part of twelve several terms, the first and last excepted. A master of arts must be a bachelor of three years' standing. A bachelor in divinity must be M.A. of seven years' standing. A bachelor in divinity (ten-year man) is allowed, by the ninth statute of Queen Elizabeth, to take the degree of B.D. at the end of ten years, without having taken any other. A doctor in divinity must be a bachelor in divinity of five years', or a master of arts of twelve years', standing. A bachelor in civil law must be of six years' standing complete, and must reside the greater part of nine several terms: a bachelor of arts of four years' standing may be admitted to this degree. A doctor in civil law must be of five years' standing from the degree of B.C.L., or a master of arts of seven years' standing. A bachelor in physic must reside the greater part of nine several terms, and may be admitted any time in his sixth year. A doctor in physic is bound by the same regulations as a doctor in civil law. A licentiate in physic is required to be M.A. or M.B. of two years' standing. A bachelor in music must enter his name at some college, and compose and perform a solemn piece of music as an exercise before the university. A doctor in music is generally a bachelor in music, and his exercise is the same.

The ordinary Course of Study preparatory to the degree of bachelor of arts may be considered under the three heads of Natural Philosophy, Theology and Moral Philosophy, and the Belles Lettres. On these subjects, besides the public lectures delivered by the several professors, the students attend the lectures of the tutors of their respective colleges. In addition to a constant attendance on lectures, the under-graduates are examined in their colleges, yearly or half-yearly, on those branches of learning which have engaged their studies; and, according to the manner in which they acquit themselves their names are arranged in classes, and those who obtain the honour of a place in the first class receive prizes of books, differing in value, according to merit. By this course the students are prepared for those public examinations and exercises which the university requires of all candidates for degrees. The first of these takes place in the second Lent term after the commencement of academical residence, at the general public examination held annually in the senate-house, in the last week of that term, and continues for four days; two classes, each arranged alphabetically, are formed out of those examined, the first consisting of those who have passed their examination with credit, and the second of those to whom the examiners have only not refused their certificate of approval. Those who are not approved by the examiners are required to attend the examination of the following year, and so on; and no degree of B.A., M.B., or B.C.L., is granted unless a certificate be presented to the Caput that the candidate for such degree has passed, to the satisfaction of the examiners, some one of these examinations. The student, having passed this preparatory step, has next to perform the exercises required by the statutes for the degree which he has in view. By a late regulation of the court of directors of the Honourable the East India Company, with the approbation of the Board of Commissioners for the affairs of India, an examination has been appointed for those candidates for writerships in the service of the company, who have not resided in the college at Haileybury. An examiner is appointed by each university, and the examination takes place at the India House. The present number of members of the university is 5973, of whom 3116 are of the senate.

The principal PUBLIC BUILDINGS belonging to the university are, the senate-house; the public schools, and the library; the first forming the north, and the others the west, side of a grand quadrangle, which has Great St. Mary's church on the east, and King's College chapel on the south. The Senate House is an elegant building of Portland stone, erected from a design by Sir James Burrough, at the expense of the university, aided by an extensive subscription; the foundation was laid in 1722, but it was not entirely completed until 1766. The exterior is of the Corinthian order, and the interior of the Doric, capable of accommodating 1000 persons; near the centre of one side of the room is a marble statue of George I., by Rysbrach, executed at the expense of Lord Viscount Townshend; and opposite to it is that of George II. by Wilton, executed in 1766, at the cost of the Duke of Newcastle: at the east end, on one side of the entrance, is a statue of the Duke of Somerset, by Rysbrach; and on the other one of William Pitt, by Nollekins, erected by a subscription at Cambridge, amounting to upwards of £7000. The Public Schools, in which disputations are held and exercises performed, were commenced on their present site in 1443, at the expense of the university, aided by liberal benefactions: they form three sides of a small court, the philosophy school being on the west, the divinity school on the north, and the schools for civil law and physic on the south; on the east is a lecture-room for the professors, fitted up in 1795. Connected with the north end of the philosophy school, is an apartment containing the valuable mineralogical collection presented by Dr. Woodward, in 1727. The magnificent public Library occupies the whole quadrangle of apartments over the schools, and consists of four large and commodious rooms, containing upwards of 100,000 volumes: at the commencement, it occupied only the apartment on the east side, but was afterwards extended to the north side also. Its most important acquisition was in the early part of the last century, when George I., having purchased of the executors of Dr. Moore, Bishop of Ely, that prelate's collection of books, amounting to upwards of 30,000 volumes, for £6000, gave them to the university, at the same time contributing the sum of £2000 towards fitting up rooms for their reception. The upper part of a mutilated colossal statue, from the temple of Ceres, at Eleusis, the gift of Messrs. Clarke and Cripps, of Jesus' College, by whom it was brought to England, is placed in the vestibule. The rents of the university's estate at Ovington, in the county of Norfolk, are appropriated to the purchase of books for the library, that estate having been bought with money given, in 1666, by Tobias Rustat, Esq., to be so employed. William Worts, M.A., Fellow of Caius College, bequeathed the annual surplus of the produce of his estate at Landbeach, in Cambridgeshire, to be applied to the use of the library; and a quarterly contribution of one shilling and sixpence from each member of the university, excepting sizars, is also made towards its support. The superintendence of the university press is committed by the senate to syndics, who meet to transact business in the parlour of the printing-office, and cannot act unless five are present, the vice-chancellor being one.

Richard, Viscount Fitzwilliam, formerly of Trinity Hall, who died in 1816, bequeathed to the university his splendid collection of books, paintings, drawings, engravings, &c., together with £100,000 South Sea annuities, for the erection of a Museum to contain them; and the collection has since been augmented by many valuable donations. The building was commenced in 1838, from the designs of Mr. G. Basevi, and forms nearly a square of 160 feet; the principal or east front is a rich composition, with 14 columns of the Corinthian order, surmounted by a pediment. The ground-floor contains three rooms for libraries, extending along the west front, and communicating with two others, one to the south for medals, and that to the north for terracottas, &c.; the upper hall is 70 feet by 46, and will contain casts from the antique, &c. There are also three picture galleries, the floors of which, and also those of the libraries, will be of Dutch oak. The Botanical Garden occupies between three and four acres on the south-east side of the town, conveniently disposed and well watered; it was purchased, with a large old building that formerly belonged to the Augustine friars, for £1600 by the late Richard Walker, vice-master of Trinity College. The building having been sold, a new one has been erected for the use of the lecturers in chymistry and botany. The garden is under the government of the vice-chancellor, the provost of King's College, the masters of Trinity and St. John's colleges, and the Professor of Physic.

The Anatomical School, situated near Catherine Hall, contains a large collection of rare and valuable preparations, including the museum of the late professor, Sir B. Harwood, and a set of models beautifully wrought in wax, recently imported from Naples; it is a small building conveniently fitted up, with a theatre for the lectures on anatomy and medicine, which are delivered in Lent term. Measures for the establishment of an Observatory were first adopted in 1820, when a sum of £6000 was subscribed by the members of the university, to which £5000 were added out of the public chest by a grace of the senate. The building was commenced in the year 1822, and completed at an expense exceeding £18,115; it stands on an eminence, about a mile from the college walks, on the road to Madingley, and is in the Grecian style; the centre, surmounted by a dome, is appropriated to astronomical purposes, and the wings for the residence of the observers. The superintendence is vested in the Plumian professor, under whose direction are placed two assistants, who must be graduates of the university, and are chosen for three years, being capable of re-election at the expiration of that term. The Philosophical Society was instituted Nov. 15th, 1819, for the purpose of promoting scientific inquiries, and of facilitating the communication of facts connected with the advancement of philosophy and natural history; it consists of fellows and honorary members, the former being elected from such persons only as are graduates of the university, and no graduate or member of the university can be admitted an honorary member. Attached to the society is a reading-room, supplied with the principal literary and scientific journals, and the daily newspapers.

ST. PETER'S COLLEGE, commonly called Peter-house, was founded in 1257, by Hugh de Balsham, Bishop of Ely. There are sixteen fellowships on the foundation, to which no person can be elected who is not M.A., or of sufficient standing to take that degree; and there cannot be more than two fellows from any one county, except those of Cambridge and Middlesex, each of which may have four: one-fourth of the foundation fellows are required to be in priest's orders. By Queen Elizabeth's licence the five senior clerical fellows may hold, with their fellowships, any living not rated higher than £20 in the king's books, and within twenty miles of the university. There are ten bye-fellows distinct from the former, and not entitled to any office or vote in the affairs of the college, but eligible to foundation fellowships. There are fifty-nine scholarships, of different value, which are paid according to residence; also an exhibition from the Company of Clothworkers, and one from the Ironmongers' Company. The Bishop of Ely is visiter, and appoints to the mastership one of two candidates nominated by the society. The number of members on the boards is 222. The college, which stands on the west side of Trumpington-street, consists of three courts, two of which are separated by a cloister and gallery: the largest of these is 144 feet long, 84 broad, and cased with stone; the least, next the street, is divided by the chapel, and has on the north side a lofty modern building faced with stone, the upper part of which commands an extensive prospect of the country towards the south; the third was completed in 1826, by means of a donation from a late fellow, the Rev. Fras. Gisborne, from whom it is called the Gisborne Court. The chapel, a handsome structure, erected by subscription in 1632, is chiefly remarkable for its fine east window of painted glass, representing the Crucifixion. Among the eminent persons who have been members of this society, or educated at the college, may be enumerated Cardinal Beaufort; Archbishop Whitgift; Andrew Perne, Dean of Ely; Bishops Wren, Cosin, Walton (editor of the Polyglot Bible), and Law; Moryson, the traveller; Crashawe, the poet; Dr. Sherlock, Dean of St. Paul's; Sir Samuel Garth; the learned Jeremiah Markland; the poet Gray; and Lord Chief Justice Ellenborough.

CLARE HALL was founded in 1326, by Dr. Richard Badew, afterwards chancellor of the university, by the name of University Hall; but having been burned to the ground about the year 1342, it was rebuilt and munificently endowed, through the interest of Dr. Badew, by Elizabeth de Burgh, one of the sisters and co-heiresses of Gilbert, Earl of Clare, and from her received its present name. The society consists of a master, ten senior, or foundation, fellows, nine junior, and three bye-appropriation, fellows; the senior and junior fellowships are open to all counties. The master is elected by the senior and junior fellows, and must be either a bachelor or a doctor in divinity; and the seniors must all be divines, except two, who, with the consent of the master and a majority of the fellows, may practise law and physic. Of the nine junior fellowships, two may be held by laymen; the other seven require priest's orders after a certain standing. The three bye-appropriation fellows hold no college office, nor have they any vote in college business, and are ever after ineligible to any other fellowship; they must take priest's orders within seven years after they are bachelors of arts. There are thirty-four scholarships, eight of which have been lately increased, four of the value of £50 per annum each, and the other four £20 each, besides a weekly allowance in the buttry of three shillings and three pence during residence. Four exhibitions of £20 per annum each were founded by Archdeacon Johnson, with preference to persons educated at Oakham and Uppingham schools. The visitors are, the chancellor, and two persons appointed by a grace of the senate. The number of members on the boards is 176. This hall, one of the most uniform buildings of the university, is very pleasantly situated on the eastern bank of the Cam, over which it has an elegant stone bridge, leading to a shady walk, opening into a beautiful lawn surrounded by lofty elms. It was rebuilt in 1638, of Ketton stone, and consists of one grand court, 150 feet long, and 111 broad; the front towards the fields is very handsome, being adorned with two rows of pilasters, the lower in the Tuscan, the upper in the Ionic order. The chapel, the rebuilding of which, from an elegant design by Sir James Burrough, was completed in 1769, at an expense of £7000, is remarkable for the neatness of its stucco-work. Among the Society's eminent members, &c., were Thomas Philipot, the herald and antiquary; Archbishops Heath and Tillotson; Bishops Hugh Latimer, Gunning, Moore, and Henchman; George Ruggle, author of Ignoramus; Dr. Burnet, author of the Theory of the Earth; John Parkhurst, the lexicographer; Dr. Cudworth, author of the Intellectual System; William Whiston; Martin Folkes; Dr. Langhorue; Whitehead, the poet-laureate; Thomas Cecil, Earl of Exeter; Thomas Holles, Duke of Newcastle; and the late Marquess Cornwallis.

PEMBROKE COLLEGE was founded in 1343, by Mary, Countess of Pembroke, and its endowment greatly enlarged by Henry VI. There are fourteen foundation and two bye-fellowships, open to all counties, but no county to have more than three; six of the fellows must be in deacon's or priest's orders. There are twelve scholarships, varying in value from £12 to £50 per annum each, besides several of smaller amount. The lord high chancellor is visiter; the number of members on the boards is 133. The college, or hall, is situated on the east side of Trumpington-street, nearly opposite to St. Peter's College, and consists of two courts of nearly equal dimensions, being about 95 feet by 55, with the hall between them. On the east side of the inner court is a small detached building, erected for the purpose of containing a hollow sphere, eighteen feet in diameter, turning round with ease, and having the constellations painted inside, constructed by Dr. Long, Lowndean Professor of Astronomy, and formerly master of this college: the interior is so contrived as to form an excellent astronomical lecture-room, being capable of containing conveniently about 30 persons. Among the college plate is preserved a curious gilt silver cup, of considerable antiquity, the gift of the foundress in the reign of Edward III. The chapel, built by Dr. Matthew Wren, Bishop of Ely, from a design by his nephew Sir Christopher, and consecrated by that bishop in 1665, is one of the most elegant and best proportioned in the university. Among the more eminent members, &c., may be reckoned, Archbishops Grindal and Whitgift; Bishops Lindwood, Fox, Ridley and Andrews; the martyrs, Rogers and Bradford; the poets, Spenser, Gray, and Mason; Dr. Long, the Astronomer; Stanley, editor of Æschylus; and the late illustrious statesman, William Pitt.

GONVILLE AND CAIUS COLLEGE, originally styled Gonville Hall, was founded in 1347, by Edmund, son of Sir Nicholas Gonville, of Terrington, in the county of Norfolk; in 1558, the hall was consolidated with the new foundation by Dr. John Caius, and under the charter then obtained the united foundations received the name they now bear. There are 29 fellowships, of which 21 are open to all counties, and 17 to laymen; two of the fellows must be physicians. There are 26 scholarships, open to all counties; three are of the value of £56 per annum each, six of £40, six of £36, six of £30, one of £24, one of £22, and three of £20. There are also, a scholarship in chemistry, of the value of £20 per annum; and four studentships in physic, of the annual value of £113. 8. each, founded by C. Tancerd, Esq., who died in 1754, and who likewise founded four studentships of nearly the same annual value, appropriated to law, to be held only by students of Lincoln's Inn, who are not required to be members of the university. And in addition to these, are fourteen exhibitions of different value. The visiters are, the master of Corpus Christi College, the senior doctor in physic, and the master of Trinity Hall; the number of members on the boards is 281. The college stands on the west side of Trinity-street, having Trinity College on the north, Trinity Hall on the west, and the senate-house on the south: it consists of three courts: the south court, and three remarkable gates of Grecian architecture, built by Dr. Caius, are supposed to have been designed by John of Padua, architect to Henry VIII., and to be the only works of his now remaining in the kingdom: of the principal court, part has been rebuilt, and the rest cased with stone and elegantly sashed. The chapel, though small, is admired for its beauty: on the south wall is a monument of Dr. Caius, under a canopy: on the same wall is a monument of Stephen Perse, M.D., a great benefactor to the university, who died in 1615; and in the ante-chapel is the gravestone of Sir James Burrough, Knt., formerly master, an ingenious architect, who designed the senate-house and other public buildings in Cambridge, and died in 1774. The library is small, but contains some exceedingly valuable books and manuscripts, particularly in heraldry and genealogy. The college has been a celebrated seminary for professors of medicine and anatomy, ever since the time of its second founder, the learned physician, Dr. Caius: of those who have most eminently conferred honour on the society in this faculty may be enumerated Dr. Francis Glisson; Sir Charles Scarborough; Dr. William Harvey, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood; and Dr. William Hyde Wollaston. Among other distinguished members, or students, were Dr. Branthwaite, one of the translators of the Bible; Sir Thomas Gresham; Sir Peter le Neve, the herald and antiquary; Richard Parker, author of the Σκελετός Cantabrigiensis; Dr. Brady, the historian; Henry Wharton, author of the Anglia Sacra; Sir Henry Chauncy and Francis Blomefield, the historians of Hertfordshire and Norfolk; the celebrated Bishop Taylor; Bishop Skip, one of the compilers of the Liturgy; Jeremy Collier; the learned Dr. Samuel Clarke; Shadwell, the poet; and Lord Chancellor Thurlow.

TRINITY HALL was founded in 1350, by William Bateman, Bishop of Norwich. There are twelve fellowships, which are ordinarily held by graduates in civil law; ten of the fellows are usually laymen, and two in holy orders. The lord chancellor is visitor; the number of members on the boards is 132. The Hall stands behind the senate-house, near the river, and on the northern side of Clare Hall; the principal court is very neat, being faced with stone both within and without; the second is a convenient and handsome pile of brick and stone, recently erected for the accommodation of under-graduates. The chapel is chiefly worthy of notice for its finely-painted altar-piece. The library contains, among other valuable books, a complete body of the canon, Roman, and common law. Among remarkable persons who have been members, or students, were Bilney, the martyr; Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester; Bishops Barlow, Halifax, and Horsley; Thomas Tusser, the writer on husbandry; Sir Peter Wyche, the traveller; Dr. Haddon, master of the requests to Queen Elizabeth; Sir Robert Naunton, secretary of state to James I.; Philip, the celebrated Earl of Chesterfield; Sir William de Grey, chief justice of the common pleas; and several other eminent lawyers, who have recently filled distinguished offices in that profession.

CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE was founded in 1351, by the brethren of two guilds in Cambridge, bearing the names of Gilda Corporis Christi, and Gilda Beate Mariæ Virginis. There are twelve fellowships, four of which are appropriated, two for pupils from the school at Norwich, and two for natives of the county of Norfolk: the rest are open, with the restriction only that four of the candidates shall, if possible, be natives of Norfolk; all the fellows are required to take orders within three years after their election. The visiters are, the vice-chancellor, and the two senior doctors in divinity; in extraordinary cases the sovereign is visitor. The number of members on the boards is 283. This college, frequently called Bene't College, from its proximity to the church of St. Benedict, is situated opposite to Catherine Hall: the extent and magnificence of its buildings give it a high rank among the recent improvements which have added so much to the splendour of the university. It consists of two large courts, the old and the new, the latter having been lately erected out of the funds which had accumulated for that purpose, from the munificent bequests of Archbishop Herring, and Bishops Mawson and Green, formerly masters of the college. The new buildings were commenced in July 1823: the grand west front of the new court is 222 feet long, with a lofty massive tower at each extremity, and a superb entrance gateway, in the centre, flanked by towers corresponding with the former: the exterior is built of Ketton stone, and richly ornamented: the court is 158 feet long, and 129 broad, having the chapel on the east side, the library on the south, and the hall on the north. The chapel, begun in 1579 by the Lord Keeper Bacon, is 66 feet long, and its exterior is richly adorned with sculpture. The library is a fine lofty room, 88 feet long, and contains the valuable manuscripts bequeathed to the college by Archbishop Parker, comprising a collection of papers upon ecclesiastical affairs, made on the dissolution of religious houses by Henry VIII., with other interesting documents relating to the Reformation, and the original record of the Thirty-nine Articles. The old court, situated behind the hall, is a very ancient pile of building, entirely appropriated to the accommodation of the students. Among the college plate is a curious ancient drinking-horn, which belonged to the guild of Corpus Christi. Of the distinguished members were, Archbishops Parker, Tenison, Herring, and Sterne; Bishops Allen, Fletcher, Jegon, Greene (Thomas), Bradford, Mawson, Green (John), Ashburnham, and Yorke; Sir Nicholas Bacon; Roger Manners, fifth Earl of Rutland; Philip, second Earl of Hardwicke; his brother, the Right Hon. Charles Yorke; Sir John Cust, Bart., speaker of the house of commons; John Fletcher, the dramatic poet; Stephen Hales, the natural philosopher; Nathaniel Salmon, the topographer; and Dr. Stukeley, Robert Masters (the historian of the college), and the late Richard Gough, three celebrated antiquaries.

KING'S COLLEGE was founded in 1441, by King Henry VI. The society consists of a provost and seventy fellows and scholars; the latter are supplied by a regular succession from Eton College, and, at the expiration of three years from the day of their admission, they are elected fellows. The college possesses some remarkable privileges and exemptions: by charter it appoints its own coroner: no writ of arrest can be executed within its walls; the provost has absolute authority within the precincts: by special composition between this society and the university, the members are exempt from the power of the proctors and the university officers, within the limits of the college; neither by usage do they keep any public exercises in the schools, nor are they in any way examined for the degree of bachelor of arts. The Bishop of Lincoln is visitor; the number of members on the boards is 113. The buildings stand on the west side and near the centre of King's Parade, between it and the river, over which is a handsome stone bridge, communicating with the shady walks on the other side: they consist principally of the old court, now uninhabited, and purchased by the university to be taken down, in order to enlarge the public schools, and the grand court, recently completed, having Gibbs' building on the west, the magnificent chapel on the north, the library and hall on the south, and a grand entrance from Trumpington-street on the east, forming altogether the most superb group of buildings in Cambridge. The old court, built of stone, about 120 feet by 90, appears to be coeval with the foundation. A little to the south of it stands the chapel, the chief architectural ornament of the town, and one of the finest specimens of the later style of English architecture in the kingdom; it was begun by King Henry VI., in 1441; continued by Edward IV., Richard III., and Henry VII.; and completed with money bequeathed by the latter for that purpose, in the year 1515. It forms the north side of the grand court; its extreme length is 316 feet, its breadth 84 feet, its height to the summit of the battlements 90 feet, to the top of the pinnacles 101, and to the summit of the corner towers 146 feet. About the middle of the interior is a wooden screen, supporting the organ gallery, and separating the ante-chapel from the choir, erected in 1534, and very curiously carved; the choir is paved with marble; the present altar-piece was erected about the year 1780. One of the most striking features of the edifice is the magnitude and beauty of its painted windows, of which there are twelve on each side, nearly fifty feet high, which, together with the east window, are enriched with various subjects from Scripture history: this beautiful glass was put up in the early part of the reign of Henry VIII. On each side are nine small chapels, seven of which on the south side contained, until recently, the college library, to which the late learned Mr. Bryant bequeathed his valuable collection, in 1804. It was the intention of the royal founder that the chapel should form the south side of a large court, and for this purpose he granted two quarries of stone, in Yorkshire, besides £1000 per annum, payable out of the duchy of Lancaster, until the college should be completed; but Edward IV. deprived the college of this money, together with nearly two-thirds of its possessions, in consequence of which nothing further was done towards completing the design, until the new building, an edifice of Portland stone, 236 feet long, and intended to form the west side of the great court, was begun in 1724, and completed from a design by Mr. Gibbs. The provost's lodge, adjoining the bridge leading to the college walks, is very spacious and magnificent. Amongst the eminent members and students may be enumerated Archbishop Rotherham; Bishops Fox, West, Aldrich, Cox, Guest, Wickham, Montagu, Pearson, Fleetwood, Hare, Weston, and Dampier; the martyrs, Fryth, Saunders, Glover, and Fuller; the statesmen, Sir John Cheke, Dr. Thomas Wilson, Sir Francis Walsingham, Sir Walter Haddon, Sir William Temple, Sir Albert Moreton, Sir Robert Walpole, Horatio, 1st Lord Walpole, and Lord Chancellor Camden; Anthony Wootton, provost of Eton; Edward Hall, the historian; William Oughtred, the mathematician; Dr. Cowell, the civilian; Dr. Castell, author of the Heptaglot Lexicon; Waller, the poet; Dean Stanhope; Christopher Anstey; Jacob Bryant; and Horace, Earl of Orford.

Arms.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE was founded by Margaret of Anjou, consort of Henry VI., in 1446, and refounded by Elizabeth Widville, consort of Edward IV., in 1465. There are eighteen foundation fellowships, the number of which may be increased or diminished according to certain circumstances declared by the statutes. In general there can be only one fellow from a county, and two from a diocese, the diocese of Lincoln excepted, from which there may be three; there may also be one fellow beyond the prescribed number from Middlesex, Essex, Cambridge, and Kent, in which the college has property sufficient for the maintenance of a fellow: two fellows may remain laymen, and, within twelve years from M.A., one of the two must proceed to D.C.L., the other to M.D. The vice-president and the five senior fellows hold their fellowships with property; the others quit the society when possessed of a stated annual income. The five senior divines may hold livings rated in the king's books at not higher than £20 per annum, and within twenty miles of Cambridge. Every other fellow must resign his fellowship at the expiration of a year after he is become possessed of preferment rated in the king's books at £10 per annum or upwards, or of real property producing an income of £100 per annum, clear of all deductions. There is one bye-fellowship, which is perfectly open, may be held by a layman, and is tenable with any property or preferment; but the holder has no vote in the society. The scholarships have recently been consolidated into twenty-six, and augmented by college grants, many of them having previously been inconsiderable: they are payable weekly according to residence. The president must be elected by a majority of the whole existing body, must have graduated B.D. at least, and must possess property to the amount of £20 per annum. The sovereign is visitor: the number of members on the boards is 336. The Buildings are situated to the west of Catherine Hall, on the banks of the Cam, and consist of three courts of considerable magnitude: the entrance to the outer or principal court, which is 96 feet by 84, is through an elegant tower gateway; the inner court is furnished with cloisters about 300 yards in circumference, and extends to the bank of the river: Walnut-tree court has buildings on one side only. The front of the college, next the Cam, was rebuilt a few years since, in an elegant style. The grove and gardens are particularly beautiful, and, lying on both sides of the stream, are connected by a wooden bridge of one arch, built in 1746, and much admired for the ingenuity of its construction. Amongst eminent members, or students, of the college, were Archbishop Grindal; Bishops Fisher, Davenant, Sparrow, and Patrick; Sir Thomas Smith, the statesman, Dr. Thomas Smith, the ecclesiastical historian; Thomas Brightman, author of a treatise on the Revelations; John Weaver, author of the Funeral Monuments; Dr. Thomas Fuller, author of the Worthies of England; and Dr. John Wallis, the mathematician. The celebrated Erasmus, also, was for some time a student.

CATHERINE HALL was established in 1475, by Robert Woodlark, D.D., chancellor of the university, and provost of King's College. There are six fellowships on the foundation, the number of which may be increased or diminished, in proportion to the revenue of the college:

there cannot be more than two fellows from any one county at the same time; and two of them at least must be in priest's, and one in deacon's, orders. There are also eight other fellowships, in filling up six of which, "a preference is to be given to persons born in the city of York, if duly qualified." The scholarships are 43 in number, varying in value from £2 to £35 per annum each, of which thirteen are appropriated, and to several of which chambers rent-free are attached. The number of members on the boards is 220. The Buildings form three sides of a quadrangle, 180 feet by 120, the fourth side being open towards Trinity-street, and having iron palisades, and a piece of ground planted with lofty elm-trees; the front is towards the west, and has an elegant portico in the centre. The library, a very handsome room, was fitted up at the expense of Dr. Thomas Sherlock, Bishop of London, who bequeathed to the college his large and valuable collection, and also left a stipend for the librarian. Amongst eminent members and students were Archbishops Sandys and Dawes; Bishops Overall, (who compiled a work called "The Convocation Book," wrote the sacramental part of the Church Catechism, and assisted in the translation of the Bible,) Brownrigg, Leng (author of the Cambridge Terence), Blackall, Hoadley, and Sherlock; John Bradford, the martyr; John Strype, the ecclesiastical historian and biographer; Ray, the naturalist; and Dr. Lightfoot, the orientalist, and author of the Horæ Hebraicæ.

JESUS' COLLEGE was founded by John Alcock, Bishop of Ely, in 1496, on the site of a Benedictine nunnery, established about the year 1130, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary, St. John the Baptist, and the Virgin St. Rhadegund, the endowment of which was augmented by Malcolm, fourth king of Scotland, and the possessions of which, on its dissolution in the reign of Henry VII., were granted to the bishop. There are sixteen foundation fellowships: eight of the fellows are to be natives of the northern, and eight of the southern, counties, and six in priest's orders; and by a recent statute, granted by the Bishop of Ely, and with the king's licence, the society has been empowered to elect fellows from any part of England and Wales, without restriction. On each vacancy the master and fellows nominate two candidates, of whom the Bishop of Ely appoints one. There is one fellowship to which the bishop has an exclusive right both to nominate and appoint; he is also visitor, and appoints the master. There are 46 scholarships and exhibitions, varying in value from £9 to £70 per annum, of which 27 are appropriated. The number of members on the boards is 197. The Buildings, which are situated at the extremity of the town, consist of a principal court, 141 feet by 120, which is built on three sides; and a small court surrounded by a cloister: an addition has lately been made to the eastern side of the college. The grand front looks towards the south, and is 180 feet long, being regularly built and sashed: both the master and fellows have spacious gardens. The library contains many scarce and valuable editions of the classics. The chapel, anciently the conventual church of St. Rhadegund, exhibits, particularly in the chancel and the interior of the tower, considerable remains of the original structure; the altar-piece, representing the Presentation in the Temple, was given, in 1796, by Dr. Pearce, master of the college. In the south transept of what is now the ante-chapel are the tombs of one of the nuns, named Berta Rosata, and of Prior John de Pykenham, the latter of which is supposed to have been removed hither from the neighbouring convent of Franciscans: in the north transept is the monument of Tobias Rustat, yeoman of the robes to King Charles II., a benefactor to the college, and remarkable for his great wealth and extensive charities. Amongst eminent members and students may be reckoned Archbishops Cranmer, Sterne, Herring, and Hutton; Bishop Bale, the biographer; Dr. John Nalson, the historian; Roger North, the biographer; John Flamsteed, the astronomer; Fenton, the poet; Dr. Jortin; the witty Lawrence Sterne; Tyrwhitt, the founder of the Hebrew scholarships; Gilbert Wakefield, the classical editor and critic; and the celebrated traveller, Dr. Edward Daniel Clarke.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE was originally founded in 1456, by King Henry VI., under the name of God's House; but in 1505, the Lady Margaret, Countess of Richmond and Derby, changed the name, incorporated the former society with the present college, and endowed it liberally for the maintenance of a master and twelve fellows. This foundation is for divinity, and the fellows are required to take priest's orders within twelve months after they have attained the requisite age. The only appropriation is to the counties of England and Wales; the restrictions are, that there shall not be two of the same county, and that there shall be six, and only six, from nine specified shires in the north of England collectively. Edward VI. added another fellowship, the holder of which participates in the emolument of the original foundation; he may be from any county, and is not obliged to take holy orders. Sir John Finch and Sir Thomas Baines founded two more fellowships unappropriated as to county, but with preference to the kindred of the founders: the revenues are independent of the college. These fifteen fellows have an equal claim to the college patronage, and are allowed by the statutes to hold preferment with their fellowships, provided it does not exceed the value of ten marks, after the deductions found in the king's books. Lady Margaret founded 47 scholarships, now augmented to 15s. per week during residence; there can only be three scholars of one county. Three were added by Edward VI.: various other scholarships and exhibitions have been founded by private benefactors; and four divinity studentships, the present value of which is £113. 8. per annum each, were established by C. Tancred, Esq., who also founded a scholarship, value about £35 per annum, with preference to a native of Newmarket, secondly to the county of Cambridge. The visiters are the vice-chancellor and the two senior doctors of divinity; or, if the vice-chancellor be of this college, the provost of King's. The number of members on the boards is 248. The Buildings stand north of Emanuel College, and opposite to St. Andrew's church, and consist of the principal court, a handsome quadrangle, 130 feet by 120, and a second court, built on two sides, of which that next the garden and fields is an elegant and uniform pile of stone, about 150 feet long. The chapel is 84 feet long, with a floor of marble: in the east window are portraits of King Henry VII., and some others of the family of the foundress; and within the rails of the altar is the gravestone of Dr. Ralph Cudworth, author of the Intellectual System, and master of the college, who died in 1698. The garden has a bowling-green and a cold bath, and contains a large mulberry-tree, planted by Milton, when a student here. Besides the great poet just mentioned, the following eminent persons have been members of the society, or students at the college: Leland, the antiquary; Archbishop John Sharp; Bishops Latimer, Law, and Porteus; Hugh Broughton, and Dr. Lightfoot, the orientalist; the poets, John Cleland, and Francis Quarles; Dr. Joseph Mede, an eminent divine; Dr. Thomas Burnet, author of the Theory of the Earth; Dr. Lawrence Echard, the historian; Dr. Saunderson, the mathematician; and Archdeacon Paley.

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE was founded in 1511, by the executors of Margaret, Countess of Richmond and Derby: the original endowment was for 50 fellows, but part of the foundation estates having been seized by Henry VIII., the funds were found to be sufficient only for 32. These, by letters-patent from King George IV., are now open to natives of England and Wales, without any restriction or appropriation whatsoever; one of them is in the appointment of the Bishop of Ely. Candidates for the fellowships must have taken the degree of B.A. at least, and none are superannuated, provided they have proceeded regularly to their degrees. This being a divinity college, the fellows are obliged to be in priest's orders within six years from the degree of M.A., except four, who are allowed by the master and seniors to practise law and physic; and the others must proceed to the degree of B.D. at the regular time: the electors are the master and eight senior resident fellows, in whom is vested the entire management of the college concerns. There are also 21 appropriated fellowships, which have all the privileges of the foundation fellowships, and an equal claim to the college patronage; and besides these there are three fellowships, founded by Mr. Platt, and subsequently increased to nine by the society, which are open to all candidates; but the fellows are not allowed to hold any college preferment. There are 114 scholarships, nine of which, founded by the Duchess of Somerset, have been augmented by the society to sixteen, which are appropriated to Manchester, Hertford, and Marlborough schools; and four, founded by Mr. Platt, have been increased by the college to nine, and are tenable, like the above-mentioned fellowships founded by him, by candidates born in any county. There are numerous exhibitions, varying from £70 each downwards. All livings under £30 in the king's books are tenable with the college preacherhips, of which there are thirteen. The Bishop of Ely is visitor; the number of members on the boards is 1198.

The Buildings are situated to the north of Trinity College, and occupy the whole space between Trinity-street and the river, consisting of three courts, built for the most part of brick: the first, which is the most ancient, is about 228 feet by 216, and is entered from the street by a handsome gateway, with turrets coeval with the foundation; the second court, about 270 feet by 240, built by the benefaction of Mary, Countess of Shrewsbury, is very handsome, and chiefly consists of the fellows' apartments; the third, next the river, is of smaller dimensions than the others. The north side of the first court is occupied by the chapel, that of the second by the master's lodge, and that of the third by the library; extending altogether the whole length of the college from east to west, about 480 feet. The chapel is 120 feet long: in the ante-chapel is the tombstone of Thomas Baker, D.D., commonly called "Socius Ejectus," some time fellow of this college, and who wrote its history; and in the chapel is a tablet, in memory of the learned Dr. Whitaker, master, who died in 1595. In the master's lodge is a spacious ancient gallery, nearly 155 feet long, with a richly ornamented ceiling, now divided into a suite of rooms, containing numerous portraits of benefactors and members of the college. The library, built by Archbishop Williams, contains one of the most valuable and extensive collections of books in the university, among which are those left by Dr. Baker, and those presented to the college by Matthew Prior, consisting chiefly of the works of the French historians. The spacious gardens and walks lie on the west side of the river, over which is a stone bridge of three arches, leading from the inner court: the fellows' garden has a bowling-green. A large and splendid addition to the college has been lately completed, from a design by Rickman and Hutchinson, on the western side of the river, consisting of a spacious court, united to the three ancient courts by a covered stone bridge. The inner and the eastern and western fronts are all varied; the cloister extends from the east to the west wing, and has a lofty entrance in the centre; this building affords additional accommodation for one hundred and seven students, including ten suites of apartments for the fellows of the college. Amongst eminent members, &c., were Roger Ascham; Sir John Cheke; Sir Thomas Wyatt; Lord Treasurer Burleigh; Lord Keeper Williams; Dr. John Dee; Thomas Wentworth, Earl of Strafford; Lord Falkland; Dr. William Whitaker; Dr. William Cave; Archbishop Williams; Bishops Day, Gauden, Gunning, Jeremy Taylor, Stillingfleet, and Beveridge; Dr. Jenkins, who wrote on the reasonableness of Christianity; Dr. Powell; Dr. Balguy; Dr. Ogden; Thomas Stackhouse, author of the History of the Bible; Dr. William Wotton, and Dr. Bentley, the critics; Ben Jonson; the poets, John Cleland, Ambrose Philips, Prior, Otway, Broome, Hammond, Mason, and Henry Kirke White; Martin Lister, the naturalist; Francis Peck, and Thomas Baker, the antiquaries; the late Dr. Heberden; and Dr. Herschel, the Queen's astronomer.

MAGDALEN COLLEGE was begun in 1519, by Edward Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, by the name of Buckingham House, but was not completed at the time of his attainder, after which it was granted to Thomas, Baron Audley, lord high chancellor, who, in 1542, endowed it for a master and four fellows.

There are thirteen bye-fellowships; two of them are appropriated, one of the two being a travelling fellowship, founded by the Rev. Drue Drury, and worth upwards of £200 per annum, but tenable for only nine years, and appropriated to the county of Norfolk: the master has the sole appointment to this fellowship, and the person must either be in holy orders or designed for such. The other was founded by Dr. Millington, for the benefit of Shrewsbury Grammar School. All the fellows, except those of the two last-mentioned fellowships, must take orders within three years after election, if the master think fit. The mastership is in the appointment of the possessor of the estate at Audley-End, now belonging to Lord Braybrooke. There are 42 scholarships, varying in value from £3 to £70 per annum each, 12 of which are appropriated. The possessor of Audley-End is visiter; the number of members on the boards is 197. This is the only college which stands on the north side of the river; it consists of two courts, the larger being about 110 feet by 78. On the north side of the second court is a stone building, the body of which comprises the Pepysian library, given to the college by Samuel Pepys, secretary to the admiralty in the reigns of Charles II. and James II., and which contains many valuable curiosities; and in the wings are the apartments of the fellows. Among distinguished members, &c., were Archbishop Grindal; Dr. Thomas Nevile, who erected the beautiful court in Trinity College which bears his name; Pepys, the founder of the library; Dr. Dupont, the celebrated Greek professor; the Lord Keeper Bridgeman; Bishop Walton, editor of the Polyglot Bible; Bishop Rainbow; Dr. Howell, the historian; Bishop Cumberland; Dr. Waterland; and the eminent mathematician Professor Waring.

TRINITY COLLEGE stands on ground formerly occupied by seven hostels and two colleges, Michael House and King's Hall: the former college was established in 1324, by Hervey de Stanton, chancellor of the exchequer to Edward II.; the buildings of the latter, founded by Edward III., in 1337, for a master and 32 scholars, are said to have been of sufficient magnitude to accommodate Richard II. and his court, when he held a parliament at Cambridge, in 1381. Both these colleges were suppressed in 1546, and in the same year the present magnificent one was instituted by Henry VIII., for a master, 60 fellows, and 69 scholars, whose endowment was considerably augmented by his daughter, Queen Mary. The fellows are chosen from the scholars, ineligible if M.A., or of sufficient standing to take that degree; they are all required to go into priest's orders within seven years after they commence masters of arts, except two appointed by the master, one of whom is supposed to study law, the other physic. The scholarships, except four or five, are open to persons of any county. The government is vested in the master and eight seniors; and to so many of these as are absent the resident fellows next in seniority act as deputies: the mastership is in the gift of the sovereign, who is visiter. The number of members on the boards is 1857.

The extensive Buildings of the college are situated between those of St. John's and Caius Colleges, occupying the space between Trinity-street and the river, and consisting of three quadrangular courts. The first court, which is the largest, forms a magnificent assemblage of buildings: on the north side is the chapel; on the west, the hall and the master's lodge; the other two sides comprise apartments for the fellows and students: the south end of the west side has been rebuilt in a handsome style. The second court, called Nevile's Court, built in 1600, chiefly by the benefaction of Dr. Thomas Nevile, master of the college and Dean of Canterbury, is more elegant than the former, though less spacious: the library, forming the west side, is of later date, the building having been projected by Dr. Barrow, and the north and south sides, containing fellows' and students' apartments, have been almost wholly rebuilt: the library and the cloisters, which extend along the north, west, and south sides, were designed by Sir Christopher Wren. Beyond Nevile's Court is the newly erected and magnificent quadrangle, called King's Court, in honour of George IV., the building of which was commenced in 1823, and completed in 1825, at an expense of upwards of £40,000, partly defrayed by a subscription, headed by a donation of £2000 from that monarch; the buildings are from designs by William Wilkins, Esq., M.A., and the principal front, with a fine tower gateway, faces the college walks, in a line with the library. The Chapel, upwards of 200 feet long, and in the later style of English architecture, was begun by Queen Mary, and finished by Queen Elizabeth; on each side of the choir are rows of very elegant stalls for the masters and scholars, with carved work by Gibbons; and the thrones for the master and the vice-master are remarkably grand and beautiful. Among the monuments in the ante-chapel, the most interesting are, a statue of Sir Isaac Newton, by Roubilliac, presented to the society by Dr. Robert Smith, master of the college; a tablet in memory of the eminent mathematician, Roger Cotes, Plumian professor, who died in 1716; another in memory of Isaac Hawkins Browne, celebrated for his poem on the Immortality of the Soul, and other works, who died in 1762; and a bust and tablet, by Chantrey, in memory of the late Professor Porson. The Hall, built in the later English style, is about 100 feet long and 50 high. The Master's Lodge, which contains some magnificent apartments, has, since the reign of Elizabeth, been the residence of the sovereign, when the university has been honoured with a royal visit; and the judges always reside in it during the assizes. The Library, a splendid room, 200 feet long, and proportionately lofty, was built by subscription, amounting to nearly £20,000, procured chiefly by the exertions of Dr. Barrow. The collection of books is large and valuable, and among the busts are those of Bacon, Newton, Ray, Willoughby, Roger Cotes, and Edward Wortley Montagu: there is also a statue of Charles Seymour, Duke of Somerset, for sixty years chancellor of the university, executed by Rysbrach, in 1754; and at the upper end is a curious statue of Æsculapius, found at Samæ, about fourteen miles from Rome. Of the portraits the most interesting are, an original half-length of Shakspeare, by Mark Garrard, and an original full-length, in the hall, of Sir Isaac Newton, by Valentine Ritts. The room is paved with marble; and at the south end, opposite to the entrance, is a window of painted glass, from a design by Cipriani, representing the presentation of Sir Isaac Newton to his Majesty George II., for the execution of which £500 were bequeathed by Dr. Robert Smith. Amongst eminent members and students of the college were, Archbishops Whitgift and Fowler; Bishops Powell, Wilkins, Pearson, Pearce, Hinchcliffe, and Watson; Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex; Sir Francis Bacon; Sir Edward Coke; Fulke Greville; Lord Brooke; Charles, Earl of Halifax; Sir Isaac Newton; William Outram; Dr. Isaac Barrow; Dr. Bentley; Ray, the naturalist; Roger Cotes; Dr. William Whitaker; Bishop Hacket; the poets, Dr. Donne, Cowley, and Dryden; Nathaniel Lee, the dramatist; George Herbert, Richard Duke, Lord Lansdowne, Sir Robert Cotton, Sir Henry Spelman, Dr. Gale, John le Neve, Francis Willoughby, Philemon Holland, Andrew Marvell, Robert Nelson, Dr. Samuel Knight, Dr. Conyers Middleton, Professor Porson, and Lord Byron.

EMANUEL COLLEGE was founded in 1584, by Sir Walter Mildmay, chancellor of the exchequer and privy councillor in the reign of Elizabeth: it occupies the site of a Dominican friary, established before the year 1275, and enriched by Alice, widow of Robert Vere, second Earl of Oxford, which, after the Dissolution, was purchased by Sir Walter, prior to the institution of the college. The number of foundation fellowships is twelve, besides one, the holder of which receives a dividend arising from a distinct estate, but is in most respects on an equality with the foundation fellows. These thirteen fellowships are open to Englishmen of all counties, but there cannot be more than one from the same county: all the fellows must proceed to the degrees of M.A. and B.D., as soon as they are of sufficient standing; and the four seniors must take priest's orders. In addition to the above, there are two fellows on the foundation by Sir Wolstan Dixie, Knt., who must proceed in their degrees, equally with those on the original foundation, but have no vote in the society, nor any claim to the offices or dividends of the college. There are likewise four scholarships of the same foundation, and subject to the same restrictions. The foundation scholarships are open to Englishmen of all counties, but there can only be three from the same county: the scholars receive upwards of £12 per annum, in addition to the weekly payment of 7s. 6d. during residence. Besides these, there are many scholarships and exhibitions, founded by various benefactors, to be given to the candidates most distinguished for learning and exemplary conduct. The visitors are, in some cases, the vice-chancellor and the two senior doctors in divinity; in others, the master of Christ's College and the two senior doctors. The number of members on the boards is 216.

The college is very pleasantly situated in St. Andrew's-street, near the south-eastern entrance into the town; the greater part of it is modern, and elegantly built of stone. It consists of one principal court, 128 feet by 107, to which a range of buildings for the accommodation of students was added a few years since, forming, with the library and the north side of the hall, a second court. The chapel, which is 84 feet long, and has a marble floor, was designed and commenced by Archbishop Sancroft, in 1668, and completed in 1677, the principal contribution to which was £1040, given by Sir Robert Gayer, K.B. The old chapel has been fitted up as the library, to which Archbishop Sancroft gave his own collection of books. The hall is furnished with great elegance; at the upper end is a fine painting of Sir Wolstan Dixie. Among eminent members were, Archbishop Sancroft; Bishops Hall, Bedell, Kidder, Hurd, Percy, and Bennet; Matthew Poole, author of the Synopsis Criticorum; Joshua Barnes; Dr. Wallis, the mathematician; Sir Robert Twiston, the antiquary; John Morton, the historian of Northamptonshire; Sir Francis Pemberton; Sir William Temple; Anthony Blackwall, author of The Sacred Classics Defended and Illustrated; Dr. Farmer, the sagacious commentator on Shakspeare, to whose memory there is a tablet in the cloister, near the entrance into the chapel; and the late Dr. Samuel Parr.

SIDNEY-SUSSEX COLLEGE was instituted in 1598, pursuant to the will of Frances Sidney, Countess of Sussex, who died in 1599. There are nine foundation fellowships, open to natives of any part of her Majesty's dominions; besides which there are two established by Mr. Peter Blundell, and appropriated to his scholarships in this college, and one, the nomination to which is vested in the Company of Fishmongers, London. No fellow of the college derives any benefit from his fellowship unless he be M.A. complete. This being a divinity college, all the fellows must take orders within three years from the time of their election, and the degree of B.D. at the regular period. There are twenty foundation scholarships, value 7s. per week during residence, and two founded by Mr. Blundell, appropriated to Twerton school. Sir John Shelley Sidney, Bart., is visiter, as the representative of the foundress; but, by the statutes, the vice-chancellor and the two senior doctors in divinity are visitors in some cases, and the vice-chancellor, with the masters of Christ's and Emanuel Colleges, in others. The number of members on the board is 111. The buildings are situated on the east side of Sidney-street, and consist of two courts built of brick, and completed in 1598. The chapel and the library were rebuilt in 1780; and the hall and the master's lodge have lately been eased with stone, and greatly improved. The grounds are spacious, and the fellows' garden has a large bowling-green. Amongst eminent members or students may be recorded Oliver Cromwell; Archbishop Bramhall; Bishops Seth Ward, Montagu, and Garnet; Thomas Fuller, the historian; Lord Chief Baron Atkins; Sir Roger L'Estrange; Gataker, the critic; Dr. Comber, Dean of Durham; Thomas Woolston, who wrote against miracles; and William Wollaston, author of The Religion of Nature Delineated. In the master's lodge is a portrait, in crayons, of Cromwell, by Cooper, and in the library, a bust by Bernini, from a cast taken after the usurper's death.

DOWNING COLLEGE was founded by Sir George Downing, Bart., of Gamlingay Park, Cambridgeshire, who, by will dated in 1717, devised his estates in the counties of Cambridge, Bedford, and Suffolk, first to Sir Jacob Garrard Downing, and afterwards to other relatives, in succession, and, in failure thereof, to found a college in the university, upon a plan to be approved by the two archbishops and the masters of St. John's College and Clare Hall. Sir Jacob died in 1764, the other devisees having died previously without issue; but the estates being held by Lady Downing, and afterwards by her devisees, though without any real title, the university was obliged to sue in Chancery for the establishment of the college, in favour of which a decree was obtained in 1769, and, after much litigation, a charter, in Sept. 1800. A piece of land comprising nearly thirty acres, situated between Emanuel and Pembroke Colleges, having been purchased for the site, the first stone was laid on May 18th, 1807, since which time the building has proceeded at intervals, at an expense of more than £60,000. The object of the foundation is stated in the charter to be the study of law, physic, and other useful arts and learning; and the society will consist of a master, professors of law and medicine, sixteen fellows (of whom two only are to be clerical), and six scholars. At present, however, only the master, the professors, and three fellows are appointed, to take possession of the estates, administer the revenues, and superintend the building of the college; the appointment of the remaining fellows is reserved until the completion of the buildings. The scholars will also be elected after that period, but not more than two in each year. There are two chaplains nominated by the master, who is to be chosen, by the archbishops of Canterbury and York, and the masters of St. John's College and Clare Hall, from amongst those who are, or have been, professors or fellows. The visiter is the sovereign, by the Lord Chancellor; the number of members on the board is 53. In May 1821, a portion of the buildings, sufficient for opening the college, being completed, under-graduates were admitted to reside and keep terms. The whole, when finished, will form a quadrangle, larger than the principal court of Trinity College, in the Grecian style, and faced with Ketton stone. The master's lodge is of the Ionic, and the entrance to the college will be of the Doric, order; the designs are by William Wilkins, Esq. The late Mr. John Bowtell, of the town, bequeathed to the college a collection of books, manuscripts, fossils, and antiquities.

The TOWN is divided into four distinct wards, named respectively Bridge ward, Market ward, High ward, and Preacher's ward; and contains the fourteen PARISHES of All Saints, in which are 1231 inhabitants; St. Andrew the Great, 1983; St. Andrew the Less, 9486; St. Benedict, 1022; St. Botolph, 723; St. Clement, 1039; St. Edward, 619; St. Giles, 2087; St. Mary the Great, 1013; St. Mary the Less, 704; St. Michael, 432; St. Peter, 627; St. Sepulchre, 638; and the Holy Trinity, 2189. The university, by custom and composition, is exempt from episcopal and archidiaconal jurisdiction. The living of All Saints is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 3.; net income, £120; patrons and impropiators, Master and Fellows of Jesus' College. The living of St. Andrew's the Great is a discharged vicarage; net income, £120; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Ely: the tithes were commuted for land in 1807. The church was repaired, and a great part of it rebuilt, in 1643, chiefly by aid of a benefaction of Christopher Rose, Esq., and it has lately been rebuilt and enlarged, 424 additional sittings having been provided; in the north transept is a cenotaph in memory of the celebrated navigator, Captain Cook, and his three sons. The living of St. Andrew's the Less, or Barnwell, is a donative; net income, £48; patron and impropiator, James Geldart, Esq., as owner of the priory at Barnwell: the tithes were commuted for land in 1807. The church stands eastward from the town, and is supposed to have been built from the ruins of the priory. The village of Barnwell has suffered from repeated fires, the last and most destructive of which was on the 30th of Nov. 1731, when the greater part of the houses were consumed. A chapel of ease was erected a few years since; and an additional church, dedicated to Christ, a handsome edifice in the later English style, and now used as the parish church, was consecrated on the 27th of July, 1839; it contains 1400 sittings, of which 700 are free. At New Town, also in the parish, a church was erected in 1841, at an expense of £5180, in the same style of architecture as the former, and containing 900 sittings, half of which are free, the Incorporated Society having granted £450 in aid of the expense. The living of St. Benedict's is a perpetual curacy, valued at £4. 7. 11.; net income, £151; patrons and impropiators, Master and Fellows of Corpus Christi College. In the church was interred Thomas Hobson, the well-known Cambridge carrier. The living of St. Botolph's is a discharged rectory, valued at £2. 14. 4½.; net income, £87; patrons, President and Fellows of Queen's College. The living of St. Clement's is a perpetual curacy, valued at £4. 5. 7½.; net income, £102; patrons, Master and Fellows of Jesus' College. The church stands a little south of the great bridge. The living of St. Edward's is a perpetual curacy, valued at 3s. 4d.; net income, £66; patrons and impropiators, Master and Fellows of Trinity Hall. The church is to the west of Trinity-street. The living of St. Giles' is a vicarage not in charge, to which the perpetual curacy of St. Peter's is united; net income, £170; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Ely: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1802. St. Giles' church stands at the north end of the town; St. Peter's, opposite to it, has been disused for many years. The living of St. Mary's the Great is a rectory not in charge; net income, under £100; patrons, Master and Fellows of Trinity College: the tithes were commuted for land in 1807. The church, commonly called the University church, is situated nearly in the centre of the town, on the east side of Trinity-street, and opposite to the public schools and library; it is in the later English style, and consists of a nave, the dimensions of which are about 120 feet by 68, two aisles, and a chancel, with a lofty tower surmounted by pinnacles, and containing twelve bells. The rebuilding of the church, by contribution, was begun in 1478, and finished in 1519, except the tower, which was not completed until 1608. In it was interred the celebrated reformer, Martin Bucer, whose body was taken up in the reign of Mary, and burned, with that of Paul Phagius, in the market-place. Academical exercises were anciently performed, and public orations delivered, here; and, in 1564, Queen Elizabeth was present at the disputations held in it: the university sermons are still preached here. William Worts, Esq., who died in 1709, left the sum of £1500, to accumulate for the purpose of building the galleries, and £20 per annum for keeping them in repair. The living of St. Mary's the Less is a perpetual curacy; net income, £95; patrons and impropiators, Master and Fellows of St. Peter's College, whose tithes were commuted for land in 1807. The church was built in 1327, on the site of a former edifice, dedicated to St. Peter, which gave name to the adjoining college of Peter-house. The living of St. Michael's is a perpetual curacy; net income, £95; patrons and impropiators, Master and Fellows of Trinity College. The church stands on the east side of Trinity-street, opposite to Caius College: in the spacious chancel are held the bishop's visitations and confirmations. In 1556, it was placed under an interdict, as being the burial-place of Paul Phagius, then esteemed an arch-heretic, and was re-consecrated by the Bishop of Chester, acting as the deputy of Cardinal Pole. The living of St. Sepulchre's is a vicarage, valued at £6. 11. 0½., and in the patronage of the parishioners; net income, £123; St. Sepulchre's, or the church of the Holy Sepulchre, is on the east side of Bridge-street, and is remarkable for the peculiarity of construction of the more ancient part of it, which is believed to be the oldest remaining specimen of the circular churches erected by the Knights Templars, on the model of that of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem, and to have been built in the reign of Henry I.; it is 41 feet in diameter, and has a peristyle of eight rude massive pillars supporting circular arches with chevron mouldings; it contains a tablet in memory of Dr. Ogden, the eminent divine, who died in 1778. The living of Holy Trinity parish is a perpetual curacy, valued at £7. 6. 8.; net income, £96; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Ely. The church is situated at the south end of Bridge-street, and was some years since enlarged by the addition of 540 sittings. The new cemetery and chapel, of which the former comprises three acres of ground, are a little to the north of the town, on the Histon road; the entrance lodge and gates are of brick, with Caen stone dressings; and in a direct line with the entrance, and in the centre of the area, is the chapel, standing east and west, and raised somewhat above the general level on a low terrace: the walls are of rubble, but all the quoins, copings, and windows, are of Caen stone. There are meeting-houses for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists.

The Free Grammar school, situated near Corpus Christi College, was established in pursuance of the will of Stephen Perse, M. D., senior fellow of Caius College, who, in 1615, bequeathed property, producing £180 per annum, for its erection and endowment. The new free school, for boys, in St. Peter's parish, founded in 1808, for the instruction of the poor, was, in 1813, placed under the controul of the National Society. The old charity schools for both sexes, commonly called Whiston's charity schools, were instituted in 1703, chiefly by the exertions of the distinguished William Whiston, at that time Lucasian Professor of the Mathematics, and to which William Worts, Esq., in 1709, bequeathed £30 per annum: on the union of the new free school with the National Society, the boys from these schools were transferred to that institution, to which, in consequence, the above sum of £30 is allowed. In 1816, a new schoolroom for girls was built in King-street, and the establishment put on the plan of the National Society. In a school in the parish of St. Andrew the Less, ten boys are paid for by Trinity and St. John's Colleges; and a school of industry for girls is supported by dissenters. The General hospital, or infirmary, commonly called Addenbrooke's hospital, situated at the entrance into the town from London, was founded by John Addenbrooke, M. D., fellow of Catherine Hall, who, in 1719, bequeathed about £4000 to erect and maintain a small physical hospital: the building was begun about 1753, and opened for the reception of patients in 1766, when the funds being found insufficient for its support, an act of parliament was obtained to make it a general hospital. Mr. John Bowtell, of Cambridge, by will dated in 1813, bequeathed to the institution £7000 three per cent. consolidated Bank annuities, between £3000 and £4000 of which have been appropriated to the addition of two extensive wings. The annual income from rents, stock, and contributions, is upwards of £3000. There are almshouses for upwards of fifty poor persons, founded and endowed by different individuals. John Crane, apothecary, who died in 1654, bequeathed money to purchase an estate, now producing upwards of £300 per annum, to be settled on the university of Cambridge, and the towns of Wisbech, Cambridge, Lynn, and Ipswich; the rents to be received in rotation, and to be applied by the university, in its turn, towards the relief of sick scholars. The gift to the town was to accumulate until it amounted to £200, which sum was to be disposed of in loans of £20 each, bearing no interest for twenty years, to ten young men, to set them up in trade. After the sum of £200 had been set apart, Mr. Crane directed that the rents of the estates should be applied to the relief of persons confined for debt, and of poor men and women of good character. Cambridge is also one of the twenty-five cities and towns to which Sir Thomas White gave, in rotation, the sum of £104, of which £100 were to be lent, in sums of £25 each, to four young freemen for ten years, without interest, preference being given to clothiers. William Worts, Esq., besides other benefactions to the town and university, left £1500 of the produce of his estates, bequeathed in trust, for making a causeway towards Gogmagog hills, which was done before the year 1767; and Thomas Hobson, by will dated in 1628, left houses, and £100 to purchase land for building and maintaining a house of correction and workhouse for setting the poor to work, which bequest has been increased by several others, particularly one of £500 by the late Mr. Bowtell.

The Religious Houses at Cambridge were numerous: the most ancient was that of Augustine canons, founded near the castle, in 1092, by Picot, the sheriff, and augmented and removed to Barnwell, by Payne Peverel, standard-bearer to Robert, Duke of Normandy; its revenue, at the Dissolution, was valued at £351. 15. 4.: some remains of the conventual buildings have been converted into farm offices. The Benedictine nunnery of St. Rhadegund appears to have been established about the year 1130, and was originally dedicated to Mary, but was re-dedicated to Rhadegund by Malcolm IV., King of Scotland, who augmented its revenue, and about the year 1160, rebuilt the conventual church, the remaining portion of which forms the chapel of Jesus' College: for the purpose of founding that college, it was granted to Bishop Alcock by Henry VII., having escheated to the crown, in consequence of its being deserted by the nuns. The monastery of the Grey friars, or Franciscans, the site of which is occupied by Sidney-Sussex College, was instituted about 1224, and was very flourishing. The Bethlemite friars settled in Cambridge, in 1257, in a house in Trumpington-street, of which they had procured a grant; the friars De sacco, or De penitentiâ Jesu Christi, whose order was suppressed in 1307, settled in the same street in 1258; and the brethren of St. Mary settled in the parish of All Saints, near the castle, about 1274. The priory of the Black friars, the site of which is occupied by Emanuel College, was founded before 1275. The Augustine friars are supposed to have settled here about 1290, and their convent, which was in the parish of St. Edward, was established by Sir Geoffrey Pitchford, Knt. The White friars, or Carmelites, the site of whose convent is occupied by the garden of the provost of King's College, settled first at Chesterton, and afterwards at the adjoining hamlet of Newenham, about 1249, from which they removed, in 1316, to a spot of ground just within the walls, given them by Edward II. A small priory of Gilbertines was founded by Bishop Fitzwalter, in 1291: the society occupied the old chapel of St. Edmund, opposite to Peter-House.

The Castle, built in the reign of William the Conqueror, on the site of a Roman station, afterwards occupied by a Danish fortress, was, in early times, an occasional residence of the English sovereigns: after it had ceased to be so occupied, the buildings, which were extensive, went to decay: during the civil war it was made a garrison for the parliament. The county was in possession of it, subject to a fee-farm rent, so early as 1660; and the quarter-sessions were regularly held in it from that time until after the building of the shire-hall: the remains of the ancient building, consisting of a gate-house, which was long used as a prison, until the erection, about thirty-five years ago, of a new county gaol within the limits of the castle, have been recently levelled with the ground, to afford space and supply materials for the erection of the new county courts. Some of the earthworks that surround it are undoubtedly Roman. A somewhat curious piece of architectural antiquity exists in the mansion-house of Merton Hall, in the parish of St. Giles, which has long borne the name of Pythagoras' School, though for what reason is unknown: the most remarkable part of the building is a large hall, measuring 61 feet by 22, and which had formerly an undercroft, with circular arches and plain pillars, apparently constructed in the early part of the twelfth century. There are several springs in the parish of All Saints, the water of which is strongly impregnated with iron. Amongst Eminent Natives of Cambridge were, Sir John Cheke, tutor, and afterwards secretary of state, to Edward VI.; Dr. Thirlebye, first and only bishop of Westminster, and afterwards, successively, bishop of Norwich and Ely; the eloquent Jeremy Taylor; Dr. Goldisborowe, Bishop of Gloucester; Dr. Townson, Bishop of Salisbury; Dr. Love, Dean of Ely; Thomas Bennett, who suffered martyrdom at Exeter, in 1530; and Richard Cumberland the dramatist. Prince Adolphus Frederick, fifth and youngest surviving son of King George III., was created Duke of Cambridge, November 27th, 1801.

CAMBRIDGE, a hamlet, in the parish of SLIMBRIDGE, union of DURSLEY, Upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Dursley. This place, which derives its name from a bridge over the river Cam, is situated on the great road from Bristol to Gloucester. There is an endowed place of worship for Independents.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE, an inland county, bounded on the north-west by the county of Lincoln, on the north-east by Norfolk, on the east by Suffolk, on the south by the counties of Essex and Hertford, and on the west by those of Bedford, Huntingdon, and Northampton: it extends from 52° 2' to 52° 45' (N. Lat.) and from 28' (E. Lon.) to 18' (W. Lon.), and contains 858 square miles, or 549,120 statute acres. The county contains 33,095 inhabited houses, 1227 uninhabited, and 236 in the course of erection; and the population amounts to 164,459, of which number, 81,611 are males, and 82,848 females. At the time of the Roman invasion, Cambridgeshire formed part of the kingdom of the Iceni, being, according to Whitaker, inhabited by a tribe of that people, called the Cenomanni. In the first division of Britain by the Romans it was included in Britannia Superior; in the second, in Britannia Prima; and in the last, in Flavia Casariensis. During the heptarchy it was part of the kingdom of the East Angles; and on the subsequent division of England into three great districts, it was comprised in that styled Denelege, or the Danish jurisdiction. The county forms an archdeaconry, in the diocese of Ely, and province of Canterbury, comprising the deaneries of Barton, Bourne or Knapwell, Cambridge, Camps, Chesterton, Ely, Shengay, and Wisbech; the number of parishes is 162. For civil purposes it is divided into the hundreds of Armingford, Chesterton, Cheveley, Chilford, Ely, Flendish, Longstow, Northstow, Papworth, Radfield, Staine, Staploe, Thriplow, Wetherley, Whittlesford, Wisbech, North Witchford, and South Witchford; and it contains the city of Ely; the university, borough, and market-town of Cambridge; the market-towns of Linton, March, Thorney, and Wisbech; and part of those of Newmarket and Royston. Three knights are returned to parliament for the shire, and two representatives each for the university and borough of Cambridge. It is within the Norfolk circuit; and the assizes and general quarter-sessions are held at Cambridge, where stands the county gaol and house of correction. The ISLE of ELY, at an early period, was constituted a separate district, with an independent jurisdiction, being called by the Saxons South-Girwa; and was bestowed on the abbey by Ethelreda, the foundress, with all its liberties. After the destruction of Ely by the Danes, King Burrhed annexed the isle to the kingdom of Mercia; but on the re-establishment of the monastery by King Edgar, it was restored, with all its immunities, to the society; and the abbots, and afterwards the bishops, exercised the privileges of a county palatine until the reign of Henry VIII., when these powers were, with those of other palatinates, considerably abridged. The bishop is, however, still custos rotulorum of the isle, including the hundreds of Ely, Wisbech, and Witchford, his jurisdiction being entitled the royal franchise, or liberty, of the Bishop of Ely; and the civil officers of the franchise are, a chief justice, who holds a court of pleas above 40s., under a commission from the bishop, and a court of Oyer and Terminer and gaol delivery, by virtue of a commission from the king; a chief bailiff, who exercises the same functions in the isle as the sheriff does in a county; a deputy bailiff, two coroners, and several subordinate officers, all of whom are appointed by the bishop. The spring assizes and the April and October sessions for the isle, are held at Ely; and the summer assizes and the other sessions, at Wisbech; and at each of these places there are a court-house and a gaol.

The SURFACE of the county exhibits considerable variety; the parts adjoining the counties of Suffolk, Essex, and Hertford, have gently rising hills, with downs, and open corn-fields, and a considerable portion of wood in the part contiguous to Suffolk, from Wood-Ditton to Castle-Camps; but in other parts there is a great scarcity of timber. Gogmagog hills, commencing about four miles south-east of Cambridge, though of no great elevation, yet, being the highest in the county, command extensive prospects. The northern part of the county, including the Isle of Ely, is for the most part fen land, and quite level, intersected by numerous canals and ditches, and containing many windmills, like those of Holland, and steam-engines, for conveying the water from the land into channels for carrying it off to the sea; the inclosures are chiefly formed by ditches, and there are few trees except pollard willows. The great expanse of fen land in the district comprises nearly half of that extensive agricultural tract, called the Bedford Level, the remainder of which is situated in the counties of Norfolk, Lincoln, Northampton, and Huntingdon. From the various remains that have been discovered in constructing the channels, it is conjectured, that at some remote period the county was all firm land, reduced to a marshy state by frequent inundations of the sea, and by the obstruction of the old natural outlet, at Wisbech, of the rivers Ouse, Nene, and Granta, and of several lodes and lakes. To prevent subsequent inundations, commissions were issued, from time to time, to enforce the repair of banks and sewers. The most important work of this kind, executed before the reign of James I., was the great channel made by Bishop Morton, which carried off the overflowings of the Nene, and furnished water carriage from Wisbech to Peterborough. From the reign of Henry VI. to that of James I. various commissions were granted for a general drainage; but no great progress was made. In 1630, Sir Cornelius Vermuyden, a Dutchman, agreed to undertake the work; but the landowners rejected his offer, and petitioned Francis, Earl of Bedford, who had a large property in the fens, to undertake it, to which that nobleman acceded; and a deed of agreement, the foundation of the laws by which the Bedford-Level Corporation is still governed, having been made and ratified at a session of sewers held at Lynn, in 1631, the earl associated with himself others, to whom he assigned shares; and so rapid was the progress of the work that, in about three years, the Great level was adjudged to be drained according to the Lynn law, and 95,000 acres were allotted to the parties as a compensation for the trouble and expense they had incurred. However, at a session of sewers held at Huntingdon, in 1639, the whole proceedings were annulled, the drainage was adjudged to be defective, and it was determined that the earl and his associates were not entitled to the land that had been allotted to them. The king (Charles I.) now proposed to undertake the whole concern; but the national troubles which soon afterwards ensued having frustrated the design, the works progressively fell into decay, and continued so till the year 1649, when an ordinance was passed by the Convention Parliament, declaring all the proceedings at Huntingdon null and void; and the entire management of draining the level, on the general plan of the Lynn law, was entrusted to the care of William, Earl of Bedford, son and heir of Earl Francis. This ordinance was confirmed by an act passed in 1662, by which also taxes were imposed on the 95,000 acres, for maintaining the works of the level, and this taxation was further adjusted by an act of 1667: twelve thousand acres were allotted to the crown, including 2000 granted by Charles I. to Jerome, Earl of Portland; and the remaining 83,000 were vested in the corporation of the Bedford level, which, under this act, consists of a governor, six bailiffs, twenty conservators, and a commonalty including all persons possessing 100 acres in the fens. The Great level, comprising a tract of about 400,000 acres, has been from an early period divided into three districts, viz., the North level, the Middle level, and the South level; the greater part of the Middle level, and a considerable portion of the South level, are in Cambridgeshire, containing the whole of the Isle of Ely, and a few parishes to the south-east of it, and consisting of nearly 200,000 acres.

The Substrata of the county are, chalk, which extends through the hilly part, from Royston to Newmarket; clunch, a calcareous substance found in large masses, but neither so white nor so soft as chalk, chiefly abounding in the parishes of Burmell and Isleham, and much used for lime and fire-stones; gault, a stiff blue clay, prevailing in the eastern and western parts of the county; sand, which, crossing Bedfordshire, begins in this county in the parish of Gamlingay; silt, a sea sand finely pulverized by the agitation of the waters, and found in the marsh land of several parishes in the northern extremity of the county; peat earth, extending through the whole of the fen district; and gravel. The Soil is chiefly arable, and produces an abundant supply of corn, particularly in the fen district; vast quantities of barley are constantly sent to Lynn, in Norfolk, and thence shipped to every part of the kingdom; and it is estimated that about one-fourth of the fen-lands actually in cultivation is sown with cole seed, the plant being mostly eaten off by sheep. Hemp and flax are cultivated to a considerable extent in the parishes of Upwell, Welney, Outwell, Elm, and Wisbech, especially in the two first. The parishes of Chatteris, Mepal, Sutton, Swavesey, Over, Willingham, Cottenham, Rampton, Landbeach, Waterbeach, Stretham, Ely, Littleport, Soham, and Fordham, constitute the principal dairy district, a great quantity of the butter produced in which is sent to London, and there sold under the name of Cambridge butter. In the parishes of Cottenham and Willingham is made the cheese so much esteemed for its flavour, called Cottenham cheese; and the parish of Soham is also celebrated for good cheese.

The principal Rivers are the Ouse, which is navigable in its entire course through the county; the Cam or Granta, formed by two small streams that unite between Grantchester and Harston, and navigable from its junction with the old line of the Ouse near Thetford, to Cambridge; and the Nen, or Nene, also navigable: the Lark falls into the Old Ouse at a place called Prickwillow, near the eastern border of the county, and is navigable to Bury-St. Edmund's. The Canals intersecting the Isle of Ely were made for the purpose of drainage, but many of them are likewise navigable. Vermuyden's canal, commencing at Ramsey, enters the isle near Ramsey moor, and extends to Welche's dam, where it joins the Old Bedford river, and proceeding in the old course of that river, leaves the county a little to the west of Welney. The New Bedford river is the main channel for barges passing from the upper to the lower parts of the Ouse. The Old Bedford river, which runs parallel with the last from Earith to Denver sluice, is now seldom navigated, excepting the lower part of it, having been almost choked up since the construction of the New Bedford line. A canal from Outwell to Wisbech was made about the end of the last century. There is also a canal from Peterborough to the Old Nene, a little below Benwich, and thence to March; and there are short cuts from the Ouse to Soham, Reach, and Burwell. The Northern and Eastern railway, now in progress, will pass through the county.

Few Roman antiquities have been discovered, except on the site of the station at Cambridge, the only one of importance within the limits of the county. The principal ancient roads that crossed it were, the Ikeneld-street, the Ermin-street, and the great Roman way from Colchester to Chester: the first and last may be distinctly traced in different parts of their course. Before the Reformation there were in the county 32 religious houses, including two preceptories of the Knights Templars, two commanderies of the Knights Hospitallers, and three alien priories, of which there are various remains. Of ancient castles there is little left, except the earthworks. The most considerable encampment is that called Handlebury, on the highest part of Gogmagog hills, supposed to be of British origin. The most remarkable earthworks are the trenches that extended from the woods on the east side of the county to the fens, the most entire of which is named the Devil's Ditch, which runs seven miles, from Wood-Ditton to Reach, in the parish of Burwell, nearly in a straight line; and parallel with it, extends another trench, called Fleam Dyke, at the distance of seven miles, stretching from the woodlands at Balsham to the fens at Fen-Ditton, a large part of which has been levelled. The Isle of Ely gives the title of Marquess to the reigning sovereign.

CAMDEN-TOWN, a chapelry, in the parish of St. PANCRAS, Holborn division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from St. Paul's; containing 14,987 inhabitants. This place takes its name from the Marquess Camden, lessee of the prebendal manor of Cantelows, on which it is situated. The principal part has been erected within the last few years; the houses are in general well built and regular, and the crescent, terrace, and other ranges in the upper part of it, are of handsome appearance, and command a partial, but pleasing, view of the Hampstead and Highgate hills. Among the most recent improvements, those in the direction of the road to Holloway, along the sides of which many elegant residences are in progress of erection, are particularly deserving of notice, and will, together with the formation of buildings in other parts of the neighbourhood, contribute greatly to increase the importance and enlarge the limits of this appendage to the western part of the metropolis. The streets, which are wide and regularly formed, are lighted and partially paved; and the inhabitants are supplied with water from a conduit, into which it is conveyed from Hampstead. The Regent's canal passes through the northern part of the suburb. A veterinary college, in which lectures are delivered on the anatomy and diseases of the horse, was established in 1791, and subsequently confirmed by royal charter; the premises, which are neatly built of brick, include a spacious area, and comprise a school for the instruction of pupils, a theatre for dissections and the delivery of lectures, a museum for anatomical preparations, and an infirmary, in which is stabling for 60 horses, with paddocks adjoining. The chapel, erected in 1828, on ground given by Marquess Camden, who appoints the minister, is a neat edifice of brick, with a handsome stone portico of the Ionic order at the west end, above which rises a circular turret with a cupola. Near it are a chapel and cemetery belonging to the parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, in connexion with which parish, also, there are nine almshouses in Bayham-street. The Independents and Wesleyans have each a place of worship; and there are a national and an infants' school, partly supported by subscription. On the eastern side of Haverstock-hill is a range of neat and commodious almshouses, in the Elizabethan style, recently erected for decayed journeymen tailors by the master tailors of the metropolis; the ground was given by Mr. Stultz, who also built a chapel, which was consecrated in June 1843, and to which there is a chaplain, who has apartments on the spot.

CAMEL, QUEEN (ST. BARNABAS), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of CATSASH, E. division of SOMERSET, 7 miles (N. N. W.) from Sherborne; containing 739 inhabitants. This was a place of some note previously to its being burnt, about the close of the sixteenth century; and a charter was anciently granted, for a market to be held twice a week, and four fairs annually: the former has long been discontinued, and only two of the latter are now held, one on Trinity-Tuesday, and the other on Oct. 25th. The parish comprises by admeasurement about 2500 acres. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17. 16. 8., and in the gift of P. S. J. Mildmay, Esq.: the great tithes, payable to the family of Rogers, have been commuted for £337, with a glebe of 73 acres, and those of the incumbent for one of £177, with a glebe of 41½ acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Opposite the hamlet of Wales, near the bank of the river Camel, is a spring, the water of which has been successfully used in scrofulous cases.

CAMEL, WEST (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of YEOVIL, hundred of SOMERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from Ilchester; containing 344 inhabitants. This parish, which is within a quarter of a mile of the road from London to Exeter, comprises by admeasurement 2034 acres: stone of good quality for building is very extensively quarried. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 8. 9., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells: the tithes have been commuted for £250, and the glebe comprises about 65 acres, with a good house, mostly rebuilt in 1836. The church is a very ancient edifice, and has a pulpit of stone, and a handsome sculptured font. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a parochial school is partly supported by the rector. Near the close of the last century, in a hill about half a mile to the north of the church, were discovered two catacombs, in which were several human bodies, arranged in rows.

CAMELEY (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of CLUTTON, hundred of CHEWTON, E. division of SOMERSET, 12 miles (S. by E.) from Bristol; containing 643 inhabitants. This place is thought to have been the site of a Roman station, where, in the time of Ostorius, was a temple in honour of Claudius Cæsar, from which circumstance, Temple-Cloud, a tything in the parish, derived its name, supposed to be a corruption of Templum Claudii; and this opinion is in some degree confirmed by the frequent discovery of relics of Roman antiquity. The parish, which is on the road from Bristol to Wells, comprises by measurement 1633 acres, mostly fertile land in profitable cultivation: stone of a peculiarly good quality for flagging, and of which considerable quantities are sent to Bath, is extensively quarried. In Temple-Cloud are a respectable inn and a post-office: a considerable business is carried on by a firm as cheese-factors and wool-staplers, and many of the inhabitants, of whom the greater number reside in this part of the parish, are employed in collieries in the neighbourhood. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the family of Hippsley: the tithes have been commuted for £218. 12., and the glebe comprises 96 acres. The church has been enlarged by the erection of a gallery. Mrs. Anne Mogg and her sister Mrs. Joyce Mogg, bequeathed £205 to be invested in the funds, and the dividends distributed in bedding to the poor on the 5th of November.

CAMELFORD, an incorporated market-town, having separate jurisdiction, and the head of a union, in the parish of LANTEGLOS cum CAMELFORD, locally in the hundred of LESNEWTH, E. division of CORNWALL, 16 miles (W. by S.) from Launceston, and 228 (W. S. W.) from London; containing 705 inhabitants. This place, supposed to have been the Guffelford of the Saxon Chronicle, takes its name from a ford on the river Camel, and is generally thought to be the scene of a memorable battle between King Arthur and his nephew Mordred, about the year 542, in which the former was mortally wounded, and the latter killed on the spot; and about a mile to the north of the town, where the road crosses a small brook, is a place, called "Slaughter Bridge," in allusion to the carnage which then ensued. In 823, a battle took place between the Britons and the Saxons under Egbert, when the former were defeated with great loss. The town, though in a dreary part of the county, has a pure air, and is considered healthy; it is indifferently built, and consists principally of one street, part of which is spacious, and was macadamized a few years since; it is well lighted, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The Camel is noted for its trout and salmon-peel, and is much resorted to by anglers. There is a manufactory on a small scale for the making of serge; and the spinning of yarn affords employment to a few persons. The market is on Friday; the fairs are on the Friday after March 10th, May 26th, July 17th and 18th (the former day being noted for the sale of sheep and lambs), and Sept. 6th, chiefly for cattle; another fair has been recently established, which is held on the second Wednesday in November. Camelford was made a free BOROUGH by Richard, Earl of Cornwall: its privileges were confirmed by charter of Henry III., in 1259; and in the 21st of Charles II. it received a charter of incorporation, by which the government is vested in a mayor, nine capital burgesses, and an indefinite number of free burgesses, assisted by a recorder, town-clerk, sergeant-at-mace, and subordinate officers. The mayor, who is elected on the Monday after Michaelmas, by the capital burgesses, from their own body, is a justice of the peace. The elective franchise was granted in the reign of Edward VI., from which time the borough returned two members to parliament, but was disfranchised by the act of the 2nd and 3rd of William IV., cap. 64: the right of election was vested in the free burgesses, being householders, residing in the borough, and paying scot and lot, in number about twenty; the mayor was returning officer. The town-hall, begun in June, 1806, was built at the expense of the Duke of Bedford, then proprietor of the borough; the lower part forms the market-place. The ancient chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, has long been desecrated, and a new chapel has been built. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school was founded, in 1672, by Sir James Smyth, and endowed with the tenement of Great Tregarth, now producing £28 per annum; the school-room was rebuilt in 1823, at the expense of the Duke of Cleveland, on land belonging to the corporation. There is an estate worth £60 per annum, which are distributed in clothing among the poor. The union of Camelford comprises 14 parishes or places, and contains a population of 8063. The renowned King Arthur is said to have been born at Tintagel Castle, about five miles north-west from the town.

CAMERTON (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of CLUTTON, hundred of WELLOW, E. division of SOMERSET, 7 miles (S. W. by S.) from Bath; containing 1647 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 1810 acres; the Somersetshire coal canal crosses it, and an old Roman fosse-way traces its south-eastern boundary. Here is a coal-mine, wherein impressions of fern, rushes, and other plants, have been discovered. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 9. 2.; net income, £481; patron, John Jarrett, Esq. There are meeting-houses for Baptists and Wesleyans. A school for girls is supported at the expense of Mrs. Jarrett, of Camerton House; and another school is aided by the rector. Various relics of the Britons, Romans, and Saxons, have been found in the vicinity.

CAMERTON, with RYHILL, a township, in the parish of BURSTWICK, union of PATRINGTON, S. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Hedon; containing 286 inhabitants, of whom 39 are in Camerton. The township comprises by computation 1500 acres: the village is situated on the road from Hedon to Patrington. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an act of inclosure, in 1805. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CAMMERINGHAM (St. Michael), a parish, in the W. division of the wapentake of ASLACOE, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Lincoln; containing 139 inhabitants. Limestone is obtained. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 4. 2.; net income, £140; patron and impropiator, Lord Monson. The glebe comprises about 60 acres, which, with an annual money payment, have been awarded in lieu of tithes. The church is a modern building, constructed with the materials of a former edifice. A school is partly supported by subscription.

CAMMERTON, a parish, in the union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND; containing 941 inhabitants, of whom 154 are in the township of Cammerton, 2 miles (E. N. E.) from Workington. The parish comprises 3384*a. 2r. 20p.*, and is bounded on the north by the Solway Firth, and on the south by the river Derwent, whence passes a canal to the Seaton iron-works; and there are some mines of coal within its limits. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £95; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Carlisle, whose tithes have been commuted for £327. 1. 6., and who have 18 acres of glebe. The church, rebuilt in 1794, contains an effigy in full length, the feet resting on a lamb, of a person called "Black Tom of the North," whose seat here, according to tradition, was Barrow Castle, now in ruins.

CAMPDEN, BROAD, a hamlet, in the parish of CHIPPING-CAMPDEN, union of SHIPSTON, Upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 1 mile (S. E.) from Chipping-Campden; containing 230 inhabitants.

CAMPDEN, CHIPPING (St. James), a parish, in the union of SHIPSTON, Upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing, with the hamlets of Berrington, Broad-Campden, and Westington with Combe, 2087 inhabitants, of whom 1521 are in the market-town of Chipping-Campden, 29 miles (N. E. by E.) from Gloucester, and 90 (N. W. by W.) from London. This place, which is of very great antiquity, is supposed to have derived its name from an encampment formed prior to a battle between the Mercians and the West Saxons. In 689, a congress of the Saxon chiefs, confederated for the conquest of Britain, was held here. In the fourteenth century it became noted as a staple town for wool, and was the residence of many opulent merchants, who exported a great quantity of that article to Flanders; but on the emigration of the Flemings, who settled in England, and introduced the manufacture of woollen-cloth, Campden lost its trade with Flanders, and its importance from that time rapidly declined. Sir Baptist Hickes erected a magnificent mansion here in the fifteenth century, which cost £29,000, and, with the offices, occupied a site of eight acres; and which, at the commencement of the civil war in the reign of Charles I., its loyal owner demolished, to prevent its being garrisoned for the parliamentarians. The town is pleasantly situated in a fertile vale surrounded by hills richly wooded, and consists principally of one street, nearly a mile in length; the houses are in general ancient, and some of them fine specimens of the style of domestic architecture prevailing about the time of Elizabeth; the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from numerous springs. On Dover hill, about a mile from the town, athletic exercises, in imitation of the Olympic games, were instituted in the reign of James I., by Robert Dover, and were resorted to by the nobility and gentry resident in the surrounding country; prizes were awarded to such as excelled in the games, which were continued until the time of the commonwealth. The manufacture of silk and rugs is carried on. The market is on Wednesday; and fairs are held on Ash-Wednesday, April 23rd, Aug. 5th, and December 11th. In the 3rd of James I., Campden received a charter of incorporation, by which the government was vested in two bailiffs, a steward, fourteen capital and twelve inferior burgesses, who had power to hold a court of session, and a court of record for pleas and debts limited to £6. 13. 4.; but the charter has fallen into disuse, and though the bailiffs are still appointed on the Wednesday before New Michaelmas-day, they exercise no authority. A court leet is held once a year, in a court-house situated nearly in the centre of the street.

The LIVING is a vicarage, endowed with two-thirds of the great tithes of the parish of Winfrith-Newburgh, in the county of Dorset, and valued in the king's books at £20. 6. 8.; net income, £640; patron and impropiator, Lord Barham. The tithes of Campden were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1799. The church, situated to the north of the town, in the hamlet of Berrington, is a spacious and handsome structure, in the decorated style of English architecture, with a fine lofty tower: some portions of the finely-carved oak roof are still preserved in the north aisle, but in other instances the beauty and character of the interior have been defaced by modern alterations and repairs. It contains some beautiful sepulchral monuments to the memory of Sir Baptist Hicke, first Viscount Campden; Noel, Earl of Gainsborough; and other distinguished persons. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. The free grammar school was founded in 1487, and endowed by John Fereby, or Verbey, with a moiety of the manor of Lynham, in Oxfordshire; but owing to mismanagement, the estate was sold, and another purchased, producing only £60 per annum, which, in 1627, was vested in trustees. It has an interest in eight scholarships, established in Pembroke College, Oxford, by George Townsend, Esq., by will dated in 1632, for boys from the schools of Gloucester, Cheltenham, Campden, and Northleach. The charity Blue school for girls was endowed with £1000 by James Thynne, Esq.; and there is a national school for boys, which has been incorporated with an ancient foundation by George Townsend; also an infants' school, maintained at the expense of the vicar. Almshouses for six aged men and the same number of women were endowed by Baptist, Lord Hicke, the first Viscount Campden, who rebuilt the market-house, and during his life gave £10,000 for charitable uses; he died in 1629. Col. Olney recently bequeathed £200, the interest to be applied in providing coal and blankets for the poor at Christmas. George Ballard, author of Memoirs of Learned British Ladies, was a native of Campden; he died at Oxford, in 1755. There are some petrifying springs in the neighbourhood.

CAMPSALL (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of DONCASTER, Upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, W. riding of YORK; containing 2149 inhabitants, of whom 385 are in the township of Campsall, 8 miles (N. N. W.) from Doncaster. The parish consists of the townships of Askerne, Campsall, Fenwick, Moss, Norton, and part of Sutton, and comprises by computation 9700 acres, of which 1470 are in the township of Campsall, including the hamlet of Barnsdale: the district, which is fertile and picturesque, is all in the honour of Pontefract. The village is pleasantly situated on a gentle acclivity, about seven miles distant from the river Don, on the south, and on the north, the same distance from the Aire. Stone of good quality is quarried. Camps Mount, the seat of George Cooke Yarborough, Esq., is an elegant mansion, standing at the head of a fine lawn, and embowered in luxuriant foliage; and Campsall Park is also a handsome residence. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £16. 16. 8.; net income, £128; patron and impropiator, Mr. Yarborough. The tithes were commuted for land in 1814. The church is a large ancient edifice, and has some fine specimens of Norman architecture. A female school, connected with a Female Friendly Society, was established by the Misses Frank, in 1800; at Askerne is a national school, and there are some other schools in the parish. The remains of a Roman road may be traced.

CAMPSEY-ASH, county of SUFFOLK.—See ASH.

CAMPTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BIGGLESWADE, hundred of CLIFTON, county of BEDFORD, 6 miles (S. W.) from Biggleswade; containing, with the town of Shefford, 1390 inhabitants. The manor, in which the small village of Campton, formerly called Camelton, is situated, was anciently possessed by the noble family of Lisle: the manor-house is now occupied as a school-house. The parish comprises 1350 acres, about three-fourths of which are arable, and the rest pasture and wood; the surface is in general flat, and the soil runs through the several varieties of sand, gravel, and clay. Many females are engaged in making straw-plat, which is sold at Shefford market on Fridays, for the manufacturers of bonnets at Luton and Dunstable; a few hands are also engaged in making pillow-lace. Fairs for cattle, pigs, sheep, &c., are held on Jan. 23, March 25, and May 19; and a pleasure-fair on October 11. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 9. 7.; net income, £374; patron, Sir J. Osborne, Bart. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1797; the glebe contains 65 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is in the later English style. The chapel of ease at Shefford was enlarged about twenty years ago, in aid of the expense of which, the late rector, the Rev. Edmond Williamson, gave £600, the Incorporated Society £200, and the Duke of Bedford £50; there are 600 sittings, all free. The Roman Catholics have a chapel, and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A national and infant school was erected in 1840, by the Misses Williamson, the Rev. Dr. Williamson, master of Westminster school, and the Rev. W. Williamson, tutor of Clare Hall, Cambridge, by whom also it is entirely supported. Robert Bloomfield, author of the Farmer's Boy, died at Shefford, in Aug. 1823, and was buried at Campton, where a neat stone was erected to his memory by Archdeacon Bonney.

CANDLESBY (St. BENEDICT), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, Wold division of the wapentake of CANDLESHOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3½ miles (E. by N.) from Spilsby; containing 247 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 1010 acres. There are considerable pits of chalk-stone, which is turned into lime. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 19. 4.; net income, £200; patrons, President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land in 1777. The church is a neat modern edifice, erected in 1838. A small school is partly supported by the rector.

CANDOVER, BROWN (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of ALRESFORD, hundred of MAINSBOROUGH, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (N. by W.) from New Alresford; containing 313 inhabitants. It comprises 2040 acres, of which about 1500 are arable, and 370 wood. The living is a rectory, with that of Woodmancott annexed, valued in the king's books at £23. 4. 2., and in the gift of Lord Ashburton: the tithes have been commuted for £368, and the glebe comprises 59 acres of land, and a house. The church is a Norman structure. A school is supported by private aid. A vase, some coins, and three human skeletons, were dug up in 1830.

CANDOVER, CHILTON (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of ALRESFORD, hundred of MAINSBOROUGH, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (N.) from New Alresford; containing 103 inhabitants. The river Itchin has its source in this parish, which comprises between 1400 and 1500 acres; the surface is hilly, and the soil a poor light earth, resting on a substratum of chalk and flint. The ancient mansion of the Lords Cartwright has long since been taken down; but the terraces, which denote its pristine grandeur, are still remaining. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 6. 3., and in the gift of Lord Ashburton: the tithes have been commuted for £232, and the glebe comprises 13 acres, with a residence. The church is approached by an avenue of very ancient yew-trees, three-quarters of a mile in length. A school is supported by the rector.

CANDOVER, PRESTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BASINGSTOKE, hundred of BERMONDSPIT, Basingstoke and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 6 miles (N. by E.) from New Alresford; containing 481 inhabitants. It comprises 3150a. 1r. 24p.: facilities of communication are afforded by the Basingstoke canal. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Nutley annexed, valued in the king's books at £18; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Winchester, the impropiators of Preston-Candover; impropiator of Nutley, G. P. Jervoise, Esq. The vicarial tithes of the united parishes have been commuted for £202, and the appropriate tithes of Preston-Candover for £201; the glebe comprises 16 acres. Thomas Hall, in 1772, bequeathed £4. 4. per annum for instruction, which, with a similar small endowment, are applied to teach 12 children; another school, for girls, is supported by voluntary contributions; and a boys' school, endowed by G. P. Jervoise, Esq., with £20 per annum, is also aided by subscription.

CANEWDON (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union and hundred of ROCHFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 3½ miles (N. E. by N.) from Rochford; containing 723 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the north by the navigable river Crouch, derives its name from Canute the Dane, who held his court here. It comprises by admeasurement 5509 acres of fertile land; the surface is finely varied, and the village is pleasantly situated on rising ground, commanding an interesting view over the surrounding country. A fair is held on the 24th of June. Canewdon Creek, which is navigable for small craft, is in the northern part of the parish. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £34. 1. 8.; net income, £495; patron, Bishop of London; impropiator, Thomas Laver, Esq. The church is a large structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a massive western tower. A national school is partly supported by funds arising from land.

CANFIELD, GREAT, a parish, in the union and hundred of DUNMOW, N. division of ESSEX, 5 miles (S. W.) from Great Dunmow; containing 496 inhabitants. The parish obtained the appellation of Canfield ad Castrum, from a castle supposed to have been founded here by the family of the De Veres, but of which there are no remains. It comprises 2471a. 3r. 6p.: the soil is fertile, and the surrounding country is agreeable, and in some parts enriched with wood. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13; net income, £140; patron and impropiator, J. M. Wilson, Esq. The church is a small ancient edifice, with a tower of stone. A national school has been recently built.

CANFIELD, LITTLE, a parish, in the union and hundred of DUNMOW, N. division of ESSEX, 2¾ miles (W. by S.) from Great Dunmow; containing 258 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 0. 7½., and in the gift of Christ's College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for £410, and there is a glebe of 70 acres. The church, which formerly belonged to the priory of Lewes, in the county of Sussex, consists of a nave and chancel, with a small belfry, surmounted by a spire of wood.

CANFORD, GREAT, a parish, in the union of POOLE, hundred of COGDEAN, Wimborne division of DORSET, 2¼ miles (S. E. by E.) from Wimborne-Minster; comprising the chapelries of Kinson and Parkstone, and the tything of Longfleet; and containing 3957 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the south bank of the river Stour, and on the road from Poole to Southampton, and comprises by measurement 12,395 acres. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 9. 9½.; net income, £450; patrons, the Trustees of the manor. The parish, with respect to tithes, is separated into the eastern, middle, and western divisions: the tithes of the eastern division have been commuted for £380, and are payable every third year to the vicar, and in the two other years to the impropiator; the tithes of the western division have been commuted for £286, payable every third year to the vicar, and £133 two years in three to the impropiators; and the tithes of the middle division have been commuted for £295, payable every third year to the vicar, and £35 payable two years in three to impropiators. The glebe comprises 86 acres. The church consists of a nave and chancel, with a north aisle to each, and a tower between the two aisles; there are also a south aisle to the nave, and a south chapel to the chancel; the font, of Purbeck marble, is of great antiquity. There is a district church at Kingston, in the parish, a handsome edifice, in the later style, erected in 1833, and containing the remains of the late Sir Frederick Cavendish Ponsonby, brother of Lord de Mauley, and governor of Malta. The Independents have a place of worship. Schools on the national system have been established, and are partly supported by Lord and Lady de Mauley; and at Kingston is a national school, supported by subscription. A small portion of the ancient manor-house, called John of Gaunt's Kitchen, is still remaining.

CANN (St. RUMBOLD), a parish, in the union of SHAFTESBURY, hundred of SIXPENNY-HANDLEY, Shaston division of DORSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Shaftesbury; containing 524 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 2. 1., and in the gift of the Earl of Shaftesbury: the tithes have been commuted for £250, and there is about an acre of glebe.

CANNINGS, BISHOP'S (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DEVIZES, hundred of POTTERNE and CANNINGS, Devizes and N. divisions of WILTS, 3 miles (N. E.) from Devizes; containing, with the tythings of Bourton with Easton, Chittoe, Coate, and Horton, and the chapelry of South Broom, 3843 inhabitants. The manor belongs to the Bishop of Salisbury, whose predecessors had a residence here. The parish comprises by measurement 11,026 acres. The living is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury, valued in the king's books at £17. 19. 2.; net income, £351; impropriator, under the bishop, T. G. B. Estcourt, Esq. The church is a handsome structure, in the early English style, supposed to have been either erected or rebuilt about the same time as Salisbury Cathedral, which it much resembles in its details. There is a national school.

CANNINGTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of CANNINGTON, W. division of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Bridgwater; containing 1349 inhabitants. This place is of considerable antiquity, having given name to the hundred, and was formerly of much greater importance than it is at present. Camden derives its name from its having been occupied by a tribe of Britons, called the Cangi. The navigable river Parret flows on the north and east sides of the parish. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 10. 10.; net income, £371; patron and impropriator, Lord Clifford, whose tithes have been commuted for £965. There is a Roman Catholic chapel at Court House. A national school, erected at an estimated expense of £290, has an endowment of £19. 12. per annum. Mr. Rogers bequeathed £300 per annum, directing that £6 each should be annually given to twenty poor men, and the remainder to the poor generally. A Benedictine nunnery was founded in the reign of Stephen, by Robert de Courcy, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin; it consisted of a prioress and six or seven nuns, whose revenue was estimated at £39. 15. 8. The buildings are now occupied by a society of nuns, who support a school.

CANNOCK (St. LUKE), a parish, in the union of PENKRIDGE, E. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 8 miles (N. by W.) from Walsall; containing 2852 inhabitants, of whom 1125 are in the township of Cannock. This place, in ancient times, was a forest or chace belonging to the Mercian kings, and is supposed to have derived its name from Canute, the first Danish king of England, the extensive heath, on the western verge of which it stands, having been the favourite chace of that monarch. The parish, situated on the road between Walsall and Stafford, comprises by computation 20,000 acres, about half of which is still uninclosed on Cannock Chace, a heath about 12 miles long, and from 3 to 5 wide. There are collieries at Wyrley, Church-Bridge and other places within a short distance of the village, in some of which is found a peculiar description of iron-stone, called Cannock stone, which oxygenates so rapidly, as to be capable of much useful application; and a fine white gravel is found, excellently adapted to ornamental walks. The Grand Junction railway passes through Penkridge, about four miles from the village of Cannock, and a canal was lately cut, at a great expense, by Mr. W. Gilpin, from Church-Bridge, to meet the Trent and Mersey canal at Galey, three miles distant. The village is supplied with water by means of a conduit and leaden pipes from Leacroft, about a mile distant, constructed by Bishop Hough. There are manufactories for edge-tools at Church-Bridge and Wedges-Mill, which afford employment to about 200 persons; the coal used is supplied from the immediate neighbourhood. There is a market on Tuesdays; and fairs are held on May 8th, Aug. 24th, and Oct. 18th, principally for cattle and sheep. The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, the appropriators, and has a net income of £144: the tithes have been commuted for £1217. 6.; a good glebe-house has been recently built, to which are attached a few acres of land. The church is a very ancient edifice of stone, in the early English style. The parish is remarkable as having been the first curacy held by the famous Dr. Sacheverell. There is a place of worship for Independents. A school, founded by John Wood, was, in 1727, enfeoffed with land by Thos. Wood, the income of which is £8 per annum; and John Biddulph, Esq., gave a meadow for the use of the master. In 1725, Mrs. M. Chapman bequeathed a small sum for education; the endowment altogether produces about £20 per annum, with a house and two acres of land. A national school has been endowed by Mrs. Walhouse, mother of Lord Hatherton. Castle Ring, situated on the summit of Castle Hill, near Beaudesert Park, the seat of the Marquess of Anglesey, part of which is in the township of Cannock, is supposed to have been a British encampment, and is nearly a circular area of eight or ten acres, surrounded by a double trench occupying three or four acres more; and near it are the remains of a moat, inclosing an oblong square of about three acres, named the Old Nunnery, where a Cistercian abbey was founded in the reign of Stephen, which was shortly after removed to Stoneleigh, in Warwickshire. A similar inclosure at a small distance is called the Moat Bank.

CANNOCK-WOOD, a township, in the parish of CANNOCK, union of PENKRIDGE, E. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD; containing 275 inhabitants.

CANNONBY, CROSS (St. JOHN), a parish, in the union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND; comprising the town of Maryport, and the townships of Birkby, Cross-Cannonby, and Crossby; and containing 5731 inhabitants, of whom 59 are in the township of Cross-Cannonby, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Maryport. This parish, which is situated on the shore of the Solway Firth, and bounded on the south by the river Ellen, comprises by computation 2415 acres; it contains coal and freestone; and in a quarry of the latter, implements, supposed to be Roman, were found some years ago, from which it is thought that the stone used in erecting the Roman station at Ellenborough was obtained here. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Dean and

Chapter of Carlisle, the appropriators, with a net income of £150. The church is of early Norman architecture. There is a chapel of ease at Maryport. A school of industry for girls is supported by subscription; as is also, partly, a school for both sexes.

CANNONHOLD, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of MELKSHAM, Melksham and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 321 inhabitants.

CANON-FEE, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of CREDITON, Crediton and N. divisions of DEVON; containing 1411 inhabitants.

CANON-FROOME.—See FROOME, CANON.

CANONGATE, a township, in the parish and union of ALNWICK, E. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing 572 inhabitants.

CANON-PION (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of WEOBLEY, hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Weobley; containing 681 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 13. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford: the great tithes, payable to the Dean and Chapter, have been commuted for £300, and those of the incumbent for £277. 15.; there is a glebe of 10 acres. The church is principally in the early English style, with some fine screen-work; the font is ancient, and has an octagonal top enriched with quatrefoils. A school is partly supported by the clergyman.

CANON-TEIGN, a hamlet, in the parish of CHRISTOW, hundred of WONFORD, Wonford and S. divisions of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Chudleigh. Here was formerly a chapel of ease.

CANTELOSE, or CANTELOFF (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the hundred of HUMBLEYARD, E. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (S. W.) from Norwich. The living is a rectory, annexed to the rectory of Hetherset, in 1397, from which time the church was served as a free chapel until the Reformation, when it was demolished.

CANTERBURY, an ancient city, and a county of itself, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of BRIDGE and PETHAM, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, 26 miles (S. E. by E.) from Rochester, 16 (N. W. by W.) from Dover, and 55 (E. by S.) from London; containing 15,435 inhabitants. This place, the origin of which is not distinctly known, is, from the discovery of numerous Druidical relics, supposed to have been distinguished at a very early period for the celebration of the religious rites of the Britons, prior to the Christian era. That it was a British town of considerable importance before the Roman invasion, is not only confirmed by the numerous celts, and other instruments of British warfare, that have been at various times found in the vicinity, but by the name of the station which the Romans fixed here, on their establishment in the island, and which they called Durovernum, a name obviously derived from the British Dwr, a "stream," and whern, "swift," being characteristic of the Stour, upon which it is situated. From this station three roads branched off to Rhutupis, Dubræ, and Lemanum, now Richborough, Dover, and Limne. By the Saxons, who, on their arrival in Britain, were established in this part of Kent, it was called Cantwara-byrig, from which its present name is evidently deduced. Canterbury was the metropolis of the Saxon kingdom of Kent, and the residence of its kings, of whom Ethelbert, having married Bertha of France, who had been educated in the principles of Christianity, allowed her by treaty the free exercise of her religion, and suffered her to bring over with her a limited number of ecclesiastics. The Christian religion had been partially promulgated during the occupation of the city by the Romans, and two churches had been built in the second century, one of which, on Bertha's arrival, was consecrated for her use by the Bishop of Soissons, and dedicated to St. Martin. During the reign of this monarch, Augustine, who had been sent by Pope Gregory to convert the Britons to Christianity, took up his station at Canterbury, where, through the influence of Bertha, he was courteously received: his mission was attended with success; the king, who soon became a convert, resigned to him his palace, which he converted into a priory for brethren of his own order; and, in conjunction with Ethelbert, he founded an abbey without the city walls, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. Being invested by the pope with the dignity of an archbishop, he made this city the seat of the metropolitan see, which distinction it has retained for more than twelve centuries, under an uninterrupted succession of ninety archbishops, many of whom have been eminent for their talents and their virtues, and distinguished by the important offices they have held in the administration of the temporal affairs of the kingdom. Among these may be noticed Dunstan, who governed the kingdom with absolute authority during the reigns of Edred and Edwy; Stigand, who, for his opposition to William the Conqueror, was displaced from his see; Lanfranc, his successor, who rebuilt the cathedral, and founded several religious establishments; the celebrated Thomas à Becket; Stephen Langton, who was raised to the see in defiance of King John; Cranmer, who, for his zeal in promoting the Reformation, was burnt at the stake in the reign of Mary; and Laud, who, for his strenuous support of the measures of his sovereign, Charles I., was beheaded during the usurpation of Cromwell. The abbey was intended as a place of sepulture for the successors of the archbishop in the see of Canterbury, and for those of the monarch in the kingdom of Kent: the cathedral, which was not completed at the time of Augustine's decease, was dedicated to our Saviour, and is still usually called Christ-Church.

The city suffered frequently from the ravages of the Danes, of whom, on their advancing against it in 1009, the inhabitants, by the advice of Archbishop Siricius, purchased a peace for the sum of £3000, obtaining from them an oath not to renew their aggressions; but in 1011, they again landed at Sandwich, and laid siege to the city, which, after a resolute defence for three weeks on the part of the inhabitants, they took by storm and reduced to ashes. In this siege, 43,200 persons were slain, more than 8000 of the inhabitants were massacred, and among the prisoners whom they carried off to their camp at Greenwich was Alphege, the archbishop, whom they afterwards put to death at Blackheath, for refusing to sanction their extortions. Canute, after his usurpation of the throne upon the death of Edmund Ironside, contributed greatly to the rebuilding of the city, and the restoration of the cathedral; and, placing his crown upon the altar, gave the revenue of the port of Sandwich for the support of the monks. From this time the city began to revive, and continued to flourish till the Norman Conquest, when, according to Stowe, it surpassed London in extent and magnificence. In Domesday book it is described, under the title Civitas Cantuarie, as a populous city, having a castle, which, as there is no previous mention of it, was probably built by the Conqueror, to keep his Saxon subjects in awe: the remains now visible are evidently of Norman character. In 1080, the cathedral was destroyed by fire, but was restored with greater splendour, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity, by Archbishop Lanfranc, who rebuilt the monastic edifices, erected the archbishop's palace, founded and endowed a priory, which he dedicated to St. Gregory, and built the hospitals of St. John and St. Nicholas. In 1161, the city was nearly consumed by fire, and it suffered materially from a similar calamity at several subsequent periods. In 1170, the memorable murder of Thomas à Becket was perpetrated in the cathedral, as he was ascending the steps leading from the nave into the choir: his subsequent canonization tended greatly to enrich the city and the church, by the costly offerings of numerous pilgrims of all ranks, who came not only from every part of England, but from every place in Christendom, to visit his shrine. From this source a rich fund was obtained for the enlargement and embellishment of the cathedral, which rapidly recovered from the repeated devastations to which it had been exposed, and from which it invariably arose with increased magnificence. Four years after the murder of Becket, Henry II. performed a pilgrimage to Canterbury, where, prostrating himself before the shrine of the martyr, he submitted to be scourged by the monks, whom he had assembled for that purpose. In 1299, the nuptials of Edward I. and Margaret of Anjou were celebrated with great pomp in this city, which, in the reign of Edward IV., was constituted a county of itself, under the designation of the "City and County of the City of Canterbury." Little variety henceforward occurs in the civil history of the city, the interests of which were so closely interwoven with the ecclesiastical establishments that, upon their dissolution in the reign of Henry VIII., its prosperity materially declined.

The Jubilees, which, by indulgence of the pope, were celebrated every fiftieth year, in honour of St. Thomas à Becket, caused a great influx of wealth into the city, which owed much of its trade to the immense number of pilgrims who came to visit his shrine: according to the civic records, more than 100,000 persons attended the fifth jubilee, in 1420, when the number and richness of their offerings were incredible: the last of these jubilees was celebrated in 1520. The dissolution of the priory of Christ Church was effected gradually: the festivals in honour of the martyr were successively abolished, his gorgeous shrine was stripped of its costly ornaments, and the bones of the saint were, according to Stowe, ultimately burnt to ashes, and scattered to the winds: the revenue, at the Dissolution, was estimated at £2489. 4. 9., a sum greatly inferior to the actual value of its numerous and extensive possessions. At this period, part of the monastery of St. Augustine was converted by Henry VIII. into a royal palace, in which Queen Elizabeth held her court for several days. During her reign, the Walloons, driven from the Netherlands by persecution, on account of their religious tenets, found an asylum at Canterbury, where they introduced the weaving of silk and stuffs; their descendants are still numerous in the city and its neighbourhood, and continue to use, as their place of worship, the crypt under the cathedral, which was granted to them by Elizabeth, and where the service is performed in the French language. Charles I., in 1625, solemnized his marriage with Henrietta Maria of France at this place; and during the war in the reign of that monarch, the city was occupied by a regiment of Cromwell's horse, that committed great havoc in the ecclesiastical buildings, and wantonly mutilated and defaced the cathedral, which they used as stabling for their horses. A political tumult occurred in 1647, in which originated the celebrated Kentish Association in favour of Charles I., that terminated in the siege of Colchester, and in the execution, after its capture, of Lord Capel, Sir Charles Lucas, and Sir George Lisle. Charles II., on his return from France at the Restoration, held his court in the royal palace at Canterbury, for three days; and, in 1676, that monarch granted a charter of incorporation to the emigrant silk-weavers settled in this city, who, on the revocation of the edict of Nantes, in 1685, were joined by a considerable number of other artisans from France.

The CITY is pleasantly situated in a fertile vale environed with gently rising hills, from which numerous streams of excellent water descend, and is intersected by the river Stour, which, dividing and re-uniting its stream, forms several islands, on one of which, anciently called Birmewith, the western part of it is built; it still occupies the original site, and is of an elliptic form. The walls with which the Romans surrounded it, appear to have been built of flint and chalk, and to have included an area of a mile and three-quarters in circumference, defended by a moat one hundred and fifty feet in width; of these nearly the whole is remaining, and on that part which forms the terrace of the promenade, called Dane John Field, are four of the ancient towers in good preservation. The arches over the river have been taken down at various times; and of the six gates that formed the principal entrances, only the western, through which is the entrance from the London road, is standing: it is a handsome embattled structure, erected about the year 1380, by Archbishop Sudbury, who also rebuilt a considerable portion of the city wall, and consists of a centre flanked by two round towers, having their foundations in the bed of the western branch of the Stour, over which is a stone bridge of two arches, that has been widened for the accommodation of carriages and foot passengers, an approach having been cut through the city walls for each. The principal streets, which intersect at right angles, and the smaller streets, were originally paved, under an act of parliament obtained in the reign of Edward IV.; they were subsequently made more convenient by an act passed in 1787, for the improvement of the city, and are now lighted with gas by a company established under an act obtained in 1822. The inhabitants are amply supplied with water conveyed into their houses from the river, by a company established in 1824, by act of parliament, and with excellent spring water brought from St. Martin's Hill into a spacious conduit in one of the ancient towers on the city wall, whence it is distributed to the most populous parts of the city, at the expense of the corporation. The houses in some parts retain their ancient appearance, with the upper stories projecting; the greater part of the old Checquers Inn, mentioned by Chaucer, as frequented by pilgrims visiting Becket's shrine, has been converted into a range of dwelling-houses, extending from St. Mary Bredman's church nearly half-way down Mercery-lane; and the remains of the palace of Sir Thomas More, in the dancing-school yard in Orange-street, are now used as a warehouse for wool. In other parts of the city the houses are in general handsome, and many of them modern and well built.

The Environs are pleasant, and the surrounding scenery is agreeably diversified with simple and picturesque beauty. On the road leading into the Isle of Thanet are extensive Barracks for cavalry, artillery, and infantry of the line: the cavalry barracks, erected in 1794, at an expense of £40,000, are a handsome range of brick building, occupying three sides of a quadrangle, and, with the several parades and grounds for exercise, comprise sixteen acres, inclosed with lofty iron palisades; the barracks for 2000 infantry, erected near the former, in 1798, have been since made a permanent station for detachments of the royal horse and foot artillery; the barracks erected on the site of St. Gregory's Priory, and in other parts of the city, have been taken down, and new streets of small houses occupy their places. To the south is Dane John Field, so called from a lofty conical mount, said to have been thrown up by the Danes when they besieged the city, or, more probably, from its having been the site of a keep, or donjon. It is tastefully laid out in spiral walks and shrubberies, and planted with lime-trees: on the city wall, by which it is bounded to the south-east, is a fine broad terrace, with sloping declivities covered with turf; and on the promenade is a sun-dial, supported on a handsome marble pedestal, sculptured with emblematical representations of the seasons, by Mr. Henry Weeks, a native artist. On the summit of the mount, from which a fine panoramic view of the city and its environs is obtained, a stone pillar has been erected, with tablets recording, among other benefactions, a vote of £60 per annum by the corporation for keeping the promenade in order. The Philosophical and Literary Institution is a chaste and elegant edifice of the Ionic order, with a handsome portico of four columns, erected by subscription in 1825, after the model of a temple on the river Ilissus, in Greece: it comprises a spacious museum, in which is an extensive and valuable collection of minerals, fossils, and natural curiosities, scientifically arranged, and in an order peculiarly adapted to assist the student in natural history; also an extensive library, and a theatre, in which lectures are delivered once in every week throughout the year. The Theatre, a neat and commodious edifice, erected by Mrs. Sarah Baker, was opened in 1790: opposite to it is a concert-room belonging to the members of the Catch Club, but now used by the members of the Apollonian Club for their concerts every Friday evening. The original Catch Club is at present held in the new concert-room in Guildhall-street. Assemblies are held in a handsome suite of rooms built by subscription; and races take place, in the month of August, upon Barham Downs, within three miles of the city. The course, on which there is a commodious stand, has been greatly enlarged.

The MANUFACTURE of silk, established by the Walloons, under the auspices of Queen Elizabeth, and which had flourished in such a degree as to obtain from Charles II. a charter of incorporation, gave place, in 1789, to the introduction of the cotton manufacture by Mr. John Callaway, master of the company of weavers, who discovered a method of interweaving silk with cotton in a fabric still known by the name of Canterbury, or Chambray, muslin. A considerable TRADE in long wool is carried on, and there is an extensive manufactory for parchment; but the principal source of employment for the labouring class is the cultivation of hops, for the growth of which the soil is peculiarly favourable, and with extensive plantations of which the neighbourhood abounds. A great quantity of corn is also raised in the vicinity, and forms a material part of its trade. The city is geologically situated on the plastic clay of the London basin, with which red bricks and tiles are made; and, at a short distance to the south-east, flint imbedded in chalk is found in abundance, from which lime of an excellent quality is produced. There are numerous mills on the banks of the river, several of them extensive, particularly that called the Abbot's Mill, from its having anciently belonged to the abbey of St. Augustine; it is now the property of the corporation, by whom it was purchased in 1543. Canterbury has been long celebrated for its brawn. Frequent attempts, attended with considerable expense, have been made to improve the navigation of the river Stour; and an act was obtained, in 1825, to make it navigable to Sandwich, and to construct a canal from that port to a harbour to be formed near Deal; but the undertaking has not yet been commenced. The Canterbury and Whitstable railway, which is chiefly for the conveyance of coal from Whitstable, was opened in 1830: it is six miles and a quarter in length, and runs nearly in a straight line from North Lane to Whitstable, where it terminates at the harbour; it is worked by horses, and by two fixed engines; it was commenced with a capital, raised by subscription, of £40,000, with power to raise £40,000 more by loan, and is leased by the company to Messrs. Nicholson and Baylis. The MARKET for cattle, corn, hops, and seeds, is on Saturday, and the market for provisions daily. The cattle-market is held on the site of the ancient city moat, in the parish of St. George without the walls; the corn, hop, and seed market is held in a spacious room in the Corn and Hop Exchange, a handsome building of the composite order, erected a few years since, and ornamented with the city arms and appropriate devices, behind which is a spacious area for the daily market for meat and vegetables: the market for eggs, poultry, and butter, is held in the ancient butter market, near Christ-Church gate; and there is a convenient market-place for fish in St. Margaret-street. These markets are under the regulation of the corporation, by an act passed in 1824. The Michaelmas fair commences on the 10th of October, and continues during three market days.

The city, which at the time of the Conquest was governed by a prepositus, or prefect, appointed by the king, received from Henry II. a charter, conferring peculiar privileges, in addition to those it previously enjoyed; and Henry III. granted the city to the inhabitants, at a fee-farm rent of £60, and empowered the citizens to elect two bailiffs, who were superseded by a mayor in the reign of Henry VI., who granted them the privilege of choosing a coroner. Edward IV. confirmed the preceding charters, remitted £16. 13. 4. of the fee-farm rent, and constituted the city a county of itself: Henry VII. limited the number of aldermen to twelve, and the common-councilmen to twenty-four; and Henry VIII., by an act of the 35th of his reign, empowered the mayor and aldermen to levy a fine of six shillings and eightpence per day upon all strangers who should keep shops, or exercise any trade in the city. James I., in the sixth year of his reign, confirmed all the former charters and privileges, and re-incorporated the citizens, under the title of the "Mayor and Commonalty of the city of Canterbury." By the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76, the corporation now consists of a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors; and the council appoints a sheriff and a clerk of the peace. By that act also the city is divided into three wards, called Westgate, Dane-John, and Northgate, instead of six as before; and there are nine justices of the peace, including the mayor, who is a justice during his mayoralty and the year following. The freedom of the city is inherited by birth, or acquired by servitude, or marriage with a freeman's daughter. The city has returned two members to parliament since the 23rd of Edward I.: the right of election was formerly vested in the freemen and citizens at large, in number about 2000; but, by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the non-resident voters, except within seven miles of the city, were disfranchised, and the privilege extended to the £10 householders; and by the act of the 2nd and 3rd of William IV., cap. 64, the limits of the parliamentary borough, which once comprised 2780 acres, have been enlarged to an extent of 4250 acres. Courts of quarter-sessions are held for the trial of offenders, but the capital jurisdiction is taken away; and there is a court of petty-session on the first Thursday in every month, for determining minor offences. The mayor's court, which is also a court of record, is but rarely held; the last instance of its exercising jurisdiction in civil pleas was in Feb. 1793. A court of requests is held every Thursday, under an act passed in the 25th of George II., for the recovery of debts under 40s. within the city and borough. The guildhall is an ancient and lofty building, the interior of which is decorated with portraits of the most distinguished benefactors to the city, and with various pieces of armour. In 1453, Henry VI. granted to the corporation the custody of his gaol at Westgate, which gate, from that time at least, if not previously, has been used as a city gaol; considerable additions have been made to it, and a house for the gaoler was erected, in 1829, in a style corresponding with the character of the original building. The quarter-sessions for the eastern division of the county are regularly held here, and the petty-sessions on the first Saturday in every month; and a king's commission of sewers, having jurisdiction over the several limits of East Kent, sits four times in the year at the sessions-house. The sessions-house, and common gaol and house of correction, form an extensive pile of building within the precinct of the abbey of St. Augustine. Canterbury is the principal place of election for the eastern division of the county.

Arms of the Archbishopric.

The PRIMACY, though immediately delegated by the pope to the see of Canterbury, was not maintained without considerable difficulty; its establishment was violently opposed by the native British prelates, who refused to acknowledge the supremacy either of the archbishop or the pope. Offa, King of Mercia, attempted to divide the jurisdiction, and the archbishops of York persevered in asserting their claims; but the archbishop of Canterbury was ultimately acknowledged Primate and Metropolitan of all England. In this dignity he ranks as first peer of the realm, and, with the exception of the royal family, takes precedence of all the nobility and chief officers of state: at coronations he places the crown upon the head of the sovereign; the bishops of London, Winchester, Lincoln, and Rochester, are respectively his provincial dean, sub-dean, chancellor, and chaplain; he is a privy councillor in right of his primacy, and has the power of conferring degrees in the several faculties of divinity, law, and physic, except within the immediate jurisdiction of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. The province of Canterbury comprehends the sees of 21 bishops, including the four Welsh sees. The diocese, pursuant to the provisions of the act of the 6th and 7th of William IV., cap. 77, founded on the reports of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, is to consist of the county of Kent, except the city and deanery of Rochester, and certain parishes which it is proposed to include in the diocese of London; and of the parishes of Croydon and Addington, and the district of Lambeth Palace, in the county of Surrey. Nearly 100 parishes in Kent and other counties are in the peculiar jurisdiction of the archbishop, and the benefices now under his immediate jurisdiction are 338. The ecclesiastical establishment consists of an archbishop, dean, two archdeacons, eleven prebendaries, six preachers, six minor canons, six substitutes, twelve lay clerks, ten choristers, two masters, fifty scholars and twelve almsmen. The archbishop's patronage comprises the two archdeaconries, three canonries, the six preacher-ships, and 149 benefices, besides the alternate patronage of nine others; and the patronage of the Dean and Chapter consists of the minor canonries, and 26 benefices, with the alternate presentation to seven others. The income of the archbishop amounts to £17,000 per annum, and that of the Dean and Chapter to £14,377; the Chapter is charged with the expense of supporting the fabric of the cathedral, upon which large sums are expended. One canonry has been suspended, the proceeds of which, amounting to nearly £1000 per annum, are paid to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

The CATHEDRAL, dedicated to our Saviour, originally the church of the monastery founded by St. Augustine, on the site of the palace of Ethelbert, King of Kent, rebuilt by Archbishop Lanfranc soon after the Conquest, and enlarged and enriched by several of his successors, is a magnificent and splendid structure, exhibiting in their highest perfection the finest specimens in every style of architecture, from the earliest Norman to the latest English, and is equally conspicuous for the justness of its proportions, the correctness of its details, and the richness of its decoration. Its form is that of a double cross, with a lofty and elegant tower rising from the intersection of the nave and the western transepts, in the later style of English architecture, with a pierced parapet and pinnacles, and having octagonal turrets at the angles, terminating in minarets. At the west end are two massive towers, of which the north-west is in the Norman style, and the south-west, though crowned with battlements, is of similar character, and little inferior to the central tower: between the western towers is a narrow entrance, through a sharply pointed arch, with deeply receding mouldings, surmounted by canopied niches, over which is a lofty and magnificent window of six lights, decorated with richly-stained glass representing figures of the saints. The south-west porch, which is the principal entrance, is a highly enriched specimen of the later style, and is profusely ornamented with niches of elegant design; the roof is elaborately groined, and at the intersections of the ribs are numerous shields. The Nave, which, with the western transepts, is also in the later style, is peculiarly fine; the roof is richly groined, and supported by eight lofty piers, which on each side separate it from the aisles, and of which the clustered shafts are banded, like those of the early English. The eastern part of the nave derives a grandeur of effect from the numerous avenues leading from it to the various chapels in different parts of the interior: of these the chapel of Henry IV. is conspicuous for the elegant simplicity of its design, and the beautiful fan tracery depending from the roof; the lady chapel, separated from the eastern side of the transept by a finely carved stone screen, is small, but exquisitely beautiful; the chapel of the Holy Trinity, in which was the gorgeous shrine of St. Thomas à Becket, opens into that part of the cathedral called Becket's Crown, where is preserved the ancient stone chair in which the archbishops are enthroned: there are various other chapels equally deserving attention. A triple flight of steps leads from the nave into the choir, which are separated by a stone screen of exquisite workmanship; the roof, which is plainly groined, is supported on slender shafted columns, alternately circular and octagonal, with highly enriched capitals of various designs: this part of the structure is chiefly in the early English, intermixed with the Norman style, which prevails also in the triforium, and other parts of the choir, and in the eastern transept. The archbishop's throne, on the south side of the choir near the centre, and the stalls of the dean and prebendaries, are strikingly elegant; a new altar-piece, in accordance with the prevailing style of architecture, has been recently erected with the Caen stone of St. Augustine's monastery. The entire length of the cathedral from east to west is 514 feet, the length of the choir 180, the length of the eastern transepts 154, and the length of the western 124. Under the whole building is a spacious and elegant Crypt, the several parts of which correspond with those of the cathedral; the western part is in the Norman style, and the eastern in the early style of English architecture; the vaulted roof is about 14 feet in height, and supported on massive pillars, of which the prevailing character is simplicity and strength, though occasionally sculptured with foliage and grotesque ornaments. Near the south end of the western transept, Edward, the Black Prince, in 1363, founded a chantry, and endowed it for two chaplains with his manor of Vauxhall, near London: there are some remains of the chapel, consisting of the vaulting of the roof, supported on one central column. Near the centre of the crypt are the remains of the chapel of the Virgin, in a niche at the east end of which was her statue, supported on a pedestal sculptured in basso-relievo with various subjects, among which the Annunciation may be distinctly traced. The western part is still called the French church, from its having been given by Queen Elizabeth to the Walloons and the French refugees, and from the service being still performed there in the French language. The cathedral contains many splendid and interesting Monuments, and other memorials, of the archbishops, deans, and other dignitaries of the church, and of illustrious persons who have been interred within its walls. In the arches surrounding the chapel of the Holy Trinity are the tomb of Henry IV. and his queen, Joan of Navarre, whose recumbent figures, arrayed in royal robes, and crowned, are finely sculptured in alabaster; the monument of Edward, the Black Prince, whose effigy in complete armour and in a recumbent posture, with the arms raised in the attitude of prayer, is finely executed in gilt brass, and surmounted by a rich canopy, in which are his gauntlets and the scabbard of his sword; and the cenotaph of Archbishop Courteney, with a recumbent figure of that prelate in his pontificals. In the north aisle of the choir are the splendid monuments of the Archbishops Chicheley and Bourchier. In the chapel of the Virgin are monuments to the memory of six of the deans; and in that of St. Michael are those of the Earl of Somerset, and the Duke of Clarence, second son of Henry IV., whose effigy, with that of the duchess in her robes and coronet, is beautifully sculptured in marble; also the monuments of Archbishop Langton and Admiral Sir George Rooke. In the south aisle of the choir are those of the Archbishops Reynolds, Walter Kemp, Stratford, Sudbury, and Meopham; and within an iron palisade, on the north side of Becket's Crown, is the tomb of Cardinal Pole, the last of the archbishops who were buried in the cathedral. There are several monuments in the crypt, among which are some to distinguished individuals that have been connected with the county.

The precincts of the cathedral comprehend an area three-quarters of a mile in circumference: the principal entrance is on the south side, through Christ-Church gate, erected by Prior Goldstone, in 1517, and exhibiting, though greatly mutilated, an elegant specimen of the later style of English architecture; the front is richly sculptured, and ornamented with canopied niches, and consists of two octangular embattled towers, with a larger and a smaller arched entrance between them, the wooden doors of which are carved with the arms of the see, and those of Archbishop Juxon. On the north side is the Library, containing a valuable collection of books, and a series of Grecian and Roman coins; in the centre is an octagonal table of black marble, on which is sculptured the history of Orpheus, surrounded with various hunting-pieces. A passage from the north transept of the cathedral to the library leads into a circular room, called Bell Jesus, the lower part of which is of Norman character; it is lighted by a dome in the centre, under which is placed the font, removed from the nave of the cathedral. On the east side of the cloisters is the Chapter-house, a spacious and elegant building, containing a hall 92 feet in length, 37 in width, and 54 in height; on the sides are the ancient stone seats of the monks, surmounted by a range of trefoil-headed arches supporting a cornice and battlement; the east and west windows are large, and enriched with elegant tracery, and the roof of oak is panelled, and decorated with shields of arms and other ornaments. The Cloisters form a spacious quadrangle, on each side of which are handsome windows of four lights; the vaulted stone roof is elaborately groined, and ornamented at the points of intersection with more than 700 shields; against the north wall is a range of stone seats, separated from each other by pillars supporting canopied arches; on the east side are, a doorway leading into the cathedral, highly enriched, and an archway leading to the chapter-house; on the west side is an arched entrance to the archbishop's palace, the only remains of which are the porter's gallery and the surveyor's house. The Treasury is a fine building, in the Norman style of architecture, the staircase to which, in the same style, is of very curious design.

The city comprises the PARISHES of All Saints, containing 377 inhabitants; St. Alphage, 1073; St. Andrew, 509; St. George the Martyr, 1113; Holy Cross Westgate, 191; St. Margaret, 761; St. Martin, 198; St. Mary Bredman, 402; St. Mary Bredin, 754; St. Mary Magdalene, 419; St. Mary Northgate, 4273; St. Mildred, 1900; St. Peter, 1094; and St. Paul, 1480; also the extra-parochial precincts of the archbishop's palace, containing 184; Christ-Church, 248; Eastbridge Hospital, 46; St. John's Hospital, 46; Old Castle, 39; and the Almonry, 328. The living of All Saints is a rectory, with which that of St. Mary in the Castle is consolidated, valued together in the king's books at £80, and united with that of St. Mildred's, valued at £17. 17. 11.; it is in the gift of the Crown, and the net income is £150. The living of the parish of St. Alphage is a rectory, united to the vicarage of St. Mary's Northgate, the former valued at £8. 13. 4., and the latter at £11. 19. 4½.; net income, £150; patron, the Archbishop; impropriator of St. Mary's Northgate, G. Gipps, Esq. The living of St. Andrew's is a rectory, with that of St. Mary's Bredman united, valued together in the king's books at £22. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Archbishop for two turns, and the Dean and Chapter for one; net income, £224. The living of St. George the Martyr is a rectory, with that of St. Mary Magdalene united, the former valued at £7. 17. 11., and the latter at £4. 10.; net income, £150: patrons, the Dean and Chapter. The living of St. Margaret's is a royal donative, in the gift of the Archdeacon; net income, £57. The living of St. Martin's is a rectory, united to the vicarage of St. Paul's, the former valued at £6. 5. 2½., and the latter at £9. 18. 9.; net income, £300: it is in the alternate patronage of the Archbishop and the Dean and Chapter, the appropriators; and the tithes have been commuted for £210. The living of St. Mary's Bredin is a vicarage, valued at £4. 1. 5½.; net income, £149; patron and impropriator, H. Lee Warner, Esq. The living of St. Peter's is a rectory, with the vicarage of the Holy Cross united, the former valued at £3. 10. 10., and the latter at £13. 0. 2½.; net income, £161; patrons, alternately, the Archbishop and the Dean and Chapter; impropriators, the Archbishop, and the Corporation of Eastbridge Hospital, jointly: the glebe consists of nearly 2 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. Of the several churches, few possess any distinguishing architectural features. St. Martin's is said to have been founded during the occupation of Canterbury by the Romans, and consecrated for the celebration of the Christian service prior to the conversion of Ethelbert, who is said to have been baptized in it. The materials of the building, particularly the chancel, are chiefly Roman tiles: the chancel is supposed to be the original church, and the other part of less antiquity. It has been plastered over with rough mortar, thus concealing the Roman materials of which it is almost entirely built. It contains a very handsome, but somewhat dilapidated, monument to the Lord-Keeper Finch, who was compelled to leave the kingdom to escape the malice of the republicans, before the death of Charles I., but returned at the Restoration, and lived to pass sentence on the regicides: the inscription is a remarkably elegant specimen of monumental Latinity, written with great power and spirit. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics; also a synagogue.

The king's Free Grammar school, coeval with the establishment of the cathedral, was founded by Henry VIII. on the recommendation of Cranmer, for fifty scholars from all parts of the kingdom; the management is vested in the Dean and Chapter. Belonging to it are two scholarships of £3. 6. 8. per annum each, founded in Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and endowed with a portion of the revenue of Eastbridge Hospital, by Archbishop Whitgift, in 1569; one of three exhibitions, of about £15 per annum each, founded in the same college by Archbishop Parker, in 1575; a medical scholarship, founded by the same archbishop in Caius College, Cambridge; and one of three scholarships founded in the same college by John Parker, Esq., in 1580. It has also four scholarships at either university, founded, in 1618, by Robert Rose, Esq., who endowed them with twenty-six acres of land in Romney Marsh; two exhibitions to any college in Cambridge, founded, in 1635, by William Heyman, Esq.; four scholarships, of £10 per annum each, established in St. John's College, Cambridge, by a decree of the court of chancery, in 1652, in lieu of two fellowships and two scholarships, founded in that college by Henry Robinson, Esq., in 1643; five exhibitions, of £24 per annum each, to Emanuel College, Cambridge, founded, in 1719, by Dr. George Thorpe, prebendary of Canterbury; two Greek scholarships, of £8 per annum each, founded in the same college by the Rev. John Brown, B.D.; and one exhibition, of £9 per annum, to any college in Cambridge, founded, in 1728, by Dr. George Stanhope, Dean of Canterbury. By the liberality and exertions of the members of a society of gentlemen educated at the school, a fund has been raised, that has enabled them to found an exhibition of £60 per annum, to be held for four years with any of the preceding. Among the eminent men who have received the rudiments of their education in the school, may be noticed, the celebrated Dr. Harvey, who discovered the circulation of the blood; Dr. Marsh, Bishop of Peterborough; and Lord Tenterden, the late lord chief justice of the court of king's bench. The Blue-coat school was established by the mayor and commonalty, and sixteen boys, nominated by them, are clothed, maintained, and instructed, and, on leaving school, apprenticed with premiums, which, though originally fixed at £5, are, according to circumstances, increased to £21. There is also a school for ten choristers and four probationers, all expenses being paid by the Dean and Chapter. The Grey-coat school is supported by the Dean and Chapter, the mayor and commonalty, and other subscribers; and two schools are supported by endowment and conducted on Dr. Bell's plan, having been united to the National Society, in 1812, and made central schools.

Eastbridge Hospital is supposed to have been founded by Archbishop Lanfranc, for the entertainment of pilgrims, and endowed by succeeding archbishops, for a master, five brothers, and five sisters resident, and an equal number of non-resident brothers and sisters, above the age of 50, who must have lived in the city or suburbs for seven years; the vacancies are filled by nomination of the mayor, who appoints two candidates, one of whom is elected by the master. A school was annexed to it by an ordinance of Archbishop Whitgift, confirmed by act of parliament in the 27th of Elizabeth; it is endowed with an estate at Blean, and with an investment of £2624 in the three per cent. consols. Maynard's Hospital was founded, about the year 1312, by Mayner le Rich, an opulent citizen, who endowed it with land for the support of three unmarried brothers, one of whom is prior and reader, and four unmarried sisters; they are a corporate body by prescription, having a common seal. Cotton's Hospital, adjoining, was founded, in 1605, by Leonard Cotton, who endowed it for one aged widower and two widows. These hospitals are united, and the right of appointing the brothers and sisters is vested in the mayor. Jesus' Hospital was founded, in 1596, by Sir John Boys, first recorder of the city, for a warden, nine brothers, and nine sisters, above fifty-five years of age; there are at present eight brothers and four sisters; the mayor and aldermen, the Dean of Christ-Church, and the Archdeacon of Canterbury, are visitors. St. John's Hospital, without the North gate, was founded, in 1084, by Archbishop Lanfranc, who endowed it with £70 per annum for poor infirm, lame, or blind men and women; but it may be considered as almost refounded by Archbishop Parker, who gave it a body of statutes in 1560. At the time of the Dissolution, its revenue was £93. 15., but, for the last few years, the clear income has averaged about £300 per annum, which is divided among a chaplain, 53 brothers and sisters, and seven non-residents, making in all 60, who receive their appointment from the Archbishop of Canterbury. John Smith, Esq., in 1644, bequeathed £200 to build almshouses, and £32 per annum for their endowment. Smith's Hospital, in the suburb of Langport, without the liberties of the city, for four brothers and four sisters, born within the manor of Barton, was founded, in 1662, by Mrs. Ann Smith, who endowed it with land, producing £171 per annum, of which sum she appropriated £32 to the inmates of the hospital; £20 to poor children of Hornsey, in the county of Middlesex; £20 to the minister of St. Paul's, in this city; and the residue to the apprenticing of children of that parish. Cogan's Hospital was founded in 1657, and endowed with an estate, by Mr. John Cogan, for six clergymen's widows, but the only property derived from his bequest was the site of the hospital, and the institution is indebted to subsequent benefactions for the whole of its income. The Rev. John Aucher, D.D., by deed in 1696, gave a rent-charge of £60 for six clergymen's widows, with preference to those in Cogan's Hospital; and a society raises annually by subscription £36, which is divided among three widows of clergymen. Harris' Almshouses, in Wincheap, were founded, in 1726, by Thomas Harris, Esq., who endowed them with houses and land, producing £21 per annum, for five poor families. The Kent and Canterbury Infirmery was opened for the reception of patients on the 26th of April, 1793, under the auspices of the late Dr. William Carter; the building, which is spacious and well adapted to the purpose, was erected on part of the ancient cemetery of St. Augustine's Abbey, and contains apartments for a house-surgeon and 60 patients. A Dispensary, situated in Watling-street, near the Dane John Field, was instituted in 1836, under the patronage of Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, the Archbishop, and other authorities. Trustees of charities have been lately appointed by the Lord Chancellor.

Of the numerous MONASTIC ESTABLISHMENTS that anciently flourished here, the principal was the abbey which St. Augustine, in conjunction with King Ethelbert, founded for monks of the Benedictine order, and dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul; the revenue, at the Dissolution, was £1412. 4. 7. The remains consist principally of the gateway entrance, a beautiful specimen of the decorated style of English architecture, with two embattled octagonal turrets highly ornamented with canopied niches, and enriched with bands, mouldings, and cornices; between these turrets is the entrance, through a finely pointed arch, in which are the original wooden doors richly carved. One of the towers, called St. Ethelbert's Tower, was a fine structure, in the Norman style, highly ornamented in its successive stages with a series of intersecting arches: part of it fell down in 1822, and part has been since taken down from apprehension of danger; a portion of the base of the tower, and some trifling remains of the church belonging to the abbey, are still existing. The cemetery gate is also standing, and used as part of a private dwelling-house; it was lately repaired, in a creditable manner, by Mr. J. Mears, a native of the city. At the north-west of the cemetery are the remains of the chapel of St. Pancras, rebuilt in 1387, on the site of a previous chapel, said to have been a pagan temple, resorted to by Ethelbert before his conversion. The remains of this once splendid abbey have been converted into a public-house; the gateway is now a brewery, the room over it a cockpit, the church a tennis-court, and the area a bowling-green. In Northgate-street was a religious house, founded, in 1084, by Archbishop Lanfranc, for Secular priests, and dedicated to St. Gregory; the revenue, at the Dissolution, was £166. 4. 5.; the remains, consisting of parts of the walls, arches, and some windows in the Norman and early English styles of architecture, have been converted into a pottery, and a tobacco-pipe manufactory. To the south-east of the city was a Benedictine nunnery, founded by Archbishop Anselm, and dedicated to St. Sepulchre; the revenue, at the Dissolution, was £38. 19. 7. This convent obtained celebrity from the pretended inspiration of Elizabeth Barton, one of the nuns, called "the Holy Maid of Kent," who, for denouncing the wrath of the Almighty upon Henry VIII., for his intended divorce of Catharine of Arragon, was hanged at Tyburn, with her confederate, Richard Deering, cellarer of Christ-Church. To the right of the city, on the road to Dover, was an Hospital dedicated to St. Lawrence, for leprous monks, founded by Hugh, abbot of St. Augustine's, in 1137, and endowed for a warden, chaplain, clerk, and sixteen brothers and sisters, of whom the senior sister was prioress; the revenue, at the Dissolution, was £39. 8. 6. In the parish of St. Peter was an Hospital, founded by William Cockyn, citizen, and dedicated to St. Nicholas and St. Catherine, which, in 1203, was united to that of St. Thomas East-bridge. In the parish of St. Alphage was a priory of Dominicans, or Black friars, founded about the year 1221 by Henry III., the only remains of which are the hall, now a meeting-house for Baptists; and near the hospital for poor priests was a priory of Franciscans, or Grey friars, founded by the same monarch in 1224, which was the first house of that order established in the kingdom; the remains consist chiefly of some low walls and arches. There are also slight vestiges of a convent of White friars that once existed here.

Numerous relics of British and Roman antiquity have been discovered, among the latter of which are, aqueducts, tessellated pavements, vases, and coins; and a Roman arch, called Worthgate, considered to be one of the finest and most ancient structures of the kind in England, has been carefully removed from that part of the castle yard which was crossed by the new road from Ashford, and re-constructed in a private garden. There are some chalybeate springs, and one slightly sulphureous, in the extensive nursery-grounds of Mr. W. Masters, near the West gate; and without the North gate is a fine spring of water, where a bath, called St. Rhadigund's bath, has been constructed, with requisite accommodation. Dr. Thomas Linacre, founder of the Royal College of Physicians, in London; Dr. Thomas Nevile, master of Magdalen College, and afterwards master of Trinity College, Cambridge, who was sent by Archbishop Whitgift to tender the English crown to King James;

William Somner, author of the Antiquities of Canterbury, and of a Saxon Glossary; and W. Frend, M.A., author of the Ephemeris, were natives of the city; and among other literary characters that have flourished here, may be noticed, the Primate Langton, who first divided the Old and New Testaments into chapters; Osbern, a monk in the eleventh century, who wrote in Latin the life of St. Dunstan, and who, from his skill in music, was called the English Jubal; and John Bale, Prebendary of Canterbury and Bishop of Ossory, the Protestant historian and biographer. Isaac Casaubon, whom, on account of his learning, James I. invited over from France, and Meric, his son, were both installed prebendaries.

CANTERTON, with FRITHAM, a tything, in the parish of MINSTEAD, union, and N. division of the hundred, of NEW FOREST, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 38 inhabitants.

CANTLEY (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLOFIELD, E. division of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Acle; containing 210 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south and south-west by the navigable river Yare, and comprises 1850a. 26p., of which 877 acres are arable, and 900 pasture, heath, marsh, and wood. The railway from Norwich to Yarmouth passes through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14, and in the gift of W. A. Gilbert, Esq.; the tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £300, and there is a good glebe-house, with 43 acres of land. The church is chiefly in the later English style, and has a square tower; the entrance to the chancel is through a decorated Norman doorway. The poor have the benefit of 19 acres of land, allotted at the inclosure.

CANTLEY (St. WILFRID), a parish, in the union of DONCASTER, S. division of the wapentake of STRAFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Doncaster; containing 651 inhabitants. This place, of which large portions were anciently possessed by different religious foundations, including those of Worksop, Kirkstall, and Hampole, comprises about 5160 acres, and includes the hamlets of Branton, Bessecar, High and Low Ellers, Gatewood, and Kilholme: the surface of the land is level, and in some parts it is well wooded. The parish is intersected by the road between Doncaster and Bawtry, which enters it near the race-ground, and leaves it at Rossington bridge; and the Torn forms its southern boundary, dividing it from those portions of Finningsby parish which are in Yorkshire. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 6. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of John Walbanke Childers, Esq., who is the impropiator: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for land, producing £175 per annum, and there is a good glebe-house. The church was formerly in the hands of a religious community; it is a small cemented structure, with a low tower. A national school is supported by subscription, aided by £7 per annum, the produce of land.

CANTSFIELD, a township, in the parish of TUNSTALL, union of LANCASTER, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Kirkby-Lonsdale; containing 114 inhabitants. It lies near the road from Lancaster to Kirkby-Lonsdale.

CANVEY-ISLAND, a chapelry, partly in the parishes of NORTH and SOUTH BENFLEET, BOWERS-GIFFORD, LAINDON, PITSEA, and VANGE, hundred of BARSTABLE, and partly in the parishes of LEIGH, PRETTLEWELL, and SOUTHCHURCH, hundred of ROCHFORD; partly in the union of BILLERICAY, and partly in that of ROCHFORD, S. division of ESSEX; containing 277 inhabitants: the chapel is $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Leigh. This island is situated near the mouth of the Thames, and contains 3600 acres; it is encompassed by branches of that river, which, on the south side, is two miles broad; but on the other side there is a passage over the strand at low water, and at high water a ferry-boat is used. A fair is held on the 25th of June. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £58. 10.; patron, Bishop of London. The tithes have been commuted for £190. The chapel is dedicated to St. Catherine. Divine service was formerly performed by the vicar, or curate, of South Benfleet; but, in 1837, a perpetual curate was inducted by the bishop.

CANWELL, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of TAMWORTH, S. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Tamworth; containing 27 inhabitants. In 1142, a priory of Benedictine monks was founded by Geva Ridell; it subsequently went to decay, and became a poor cell for one monk, and was granted to Cardinal Wolsey by Henry VIII., towards the endowment of his two intended colleges.

CANWICK (ALL SAINTS), a parish, within the liberty of the city of LINCOLN, union and county of LINCOLN, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. E. by S.) from Lincoln; containing 190 inhabitants. It comprises 2039*a.* 27*p.*, the chief part of which is arable. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.; net income, £231; patrons and impropriators, Mercers' Company, London. There are springs strongly impregnated with iron.

CAPEL (ST. ANDREW), a hamlet, in the parish of BUTLEY, union of WOODBRIDGE, hundred of WILFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Orford; containing 222 inhabitants. This was formerly a distinct parish, but the church is now in ruins, and the living, a perpetual curacy, has been consolidated with Butley.

CAPEL (ST. MARY), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of SAMFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 7 miles (S. W.) from Ipswich; containing 608 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1876 acres. The living is a rectory, with that of Little Wenham consolidated, valued in the king's books at £13. 18. 4.; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. Tweed. The tithes have been commuted for £522, and the glebe comprises 22 acres, to which is attached a good glebe-house. Here is a national school.

CAPEL (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of DORKING, Second division of the hundred of WOTTON, W. division of SURREY, 6 miles (S. by E.) from Dorking; containing 989 inhabitants. The living is a donative, in the patronage of the Duke of Norfolk, with a net income of £84: the tithes have been commuted for £610. The church was enlarged in 1836, at the expense of J. S. Broadwood, Esq. A parochial school is supported by subscription, and attended by the children of the poor.

CAPEL (ST. THOMAS à BECKET), a parish, in the union, and partly in the lowey, of TONBRIDGE, but chiefly in the hundred of WASHINGTON, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Tonbridge; containing 516 inhabitants. It is crossed by the South-Eastern railway, and comprises 1584*a.* 2*r.* 14*p.*, about 70 acres of which are hop-grounds. The living is a vicarage, united with that of Tudely: the rectorial tithes have been commuted for £158, and the vicarial for £132. The church was formerly a chapel of ease to Hadlow. A small parochial school is supported by subscription.

CAPEL-LE-FERNE (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of DOVOR, hundred of FOLKESTONE, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Folkestone; containing 247 inhabitants. The parish is on the road from Folkestone to Dovor, and comprises 1636*a.* 3*r.* 3*p.*: the South-Eastern railroad runs at the foot of the cliff on the south side of the parish, which occupies an elevated situation and stretches down to the sea, where it joins Folkestone and Hougham. It was originally little else than a waste. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Alkham: the tithes of Capel have been commuted for £316. 10. 6., of which £175 are payable to the Archbishop of Canterbury, £41. 10. 6. to the impropriators, and £100 to the incumbent, who has also nearly an acre of glebe. The church, at some distance from the high road, is surrounded by handsome firs, which encircle the churchyard, and give it a very solemn and retired character; it consists of only an aisle and chancel, and is a good specimen of massy ancient architecture. On a flat stone in the chancel, is a brass, to the memory of a family named Gubbiss.

CAPESTHORNE, a chapelry, in the parish of PRESTBURY, union and hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 6 miles (N. by W.) from Congleton; containing 95 inhabitants. This place is the principal residence of the oldest, and now the only, branch of the Davenport family; it comprises by computation 800 acres, 600 of which are meadow and pasture, and 100 arable. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £76; patron and impropriator, E. D. Davenport, Esq. The chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected by Mr. Ward, of Capesthorne, about the year 1726, in the Grecian style.

CAPHEATON, a township, in the parish of KIRK-WHELPINGTON, union of CASTLE ward, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 13 miles (W. S. W.) from Morpeth; containing 213 inhabitants. The township comprises 2213 acres, and forms a very picturesque and highly cultivated district, a possession of the Swinburne family from the 13th century: the castle is first mentioned in the 15th century, and styled by Leland "a faire castle," and "the oldist house of the Swinburnes;" it was taken down in 1668, and the present beautiful mansion, Capheaton Hall, now the seat of Sir John Swinburne, Bart., F.R.S., and F.S.A., erected on its site. The village is exceedingly neat; and directly in its front is an artificial lake, comprehending, with its islands, between 40 and 50 acres. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £87. 16., and the vicarial for £23. 2. 9. A schoolroom has been erected in the village by the baronet. Several Roman coins, silver vessels, and ornaments, were discovered near Capheaton Hall, by some labourers, in 1745.

CAPLAND, a tything, partly in the parish of BEER-CROCOMBE, and partly in that of BROADWAY, union of CHARD, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Ilminster. Here was anciently a chapel, subordinate to Beer-Crocombe.

CAPPENHURST, a township, in the parish of SHOTWICK, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of WIRRALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Chester; containing 154 inhabitants. The Chester and Birkinhead railway passes close to the township. The tithes have been commuted for £100, payable to the Dean and Chapter of Chester.

CARBROOKE (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union and hundred of WEYLAND, W. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (E. N. E.) from Watton; containing 807 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3012a. 2r. 32p., of which 2162 acres are arable, 765 meadow and pasture, and 30 woodland. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 12. 6.; patron and impropiator, Sir William Clayton, Bart., whose tithes have been commuted for £517. 4., and the vicarial for £22. 4. Tithes upon 218 acres of land in Great Ellingham belong to this parish. The church, rebuilt in the early part of the reign of Henry VI., has a lofty square tower, two aisles, and a chancel, which is separated from the nave by an early English screen; the roof of the church is splendidly carved and painted, and ornamented with roses. There were formerly 16 stalls in the chancel, which were some years ago converted into pews, and which originally belonged to the Knights Templars, who had a preceptory here, founded by Roger, Earl of Clare, who died in 1173, and subsequently given by Maud, his widowed countess, who amply endowed it, to the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, as a commandery: at the Dissolution it was valued at £65. 2. 9., and the revenues, with the house and church, were granted to Sir Richard Gresham and Sir Richard Southwell. There are places of worship for Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. An allotment to the poor of 55 acres of land was made, under an inclosure act, in 1801.

CARBURTON, a chapelry, in the parish of EDWINSTOWE, union of WORKSOP, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Worksop; containing 193 inhabitants, and comprising 1516 acres.

CAR-COLSTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and N. division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 9 miles (S. W. by S.) from Newark; containing 276 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 1. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £203; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. C. Girardot; impropiator, Rev. R. Lowe; the glebe contains about 20 acres, to which there is a house. The church has a handsome tower, with four bells. There is a meeting-house for Wesleyans. This place was the residence of Dr. Thoroton, author of the "History and Antiquities of Nottinghamshire."

CARDEN, a township, in the parish of TILSTON, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Malpas; containing 233 inhabitants. A detachment of dragoons from the parliamentary garrison at Nantwich, on the 12th of June, 1643, plundered Carden Hall, and made its owner, John Leche, Esq., a prisoner.

CARDESTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of ATCHAM, hundred of FORD, S. division of SALOP, 6 miles (W.) from Shrewsbury; containing, with part of the township of Wattlesborough, 372 inhabitants. It comprises about 2000 acres, some portions of which are occasionally flooded by the river Severn, that runs not far distant on the north. The soil is cold, resting chiefly on a stiff clay; coal and limestone exist, of which the latter is worked. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £3; net income, £274; patron, Sir B. Leighton, Bart.

CARDINGTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BEDFORD, hundred of WIXAMTREE, county of BEDFORD, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Bedford; containing, with the township of Eastcotts, 1466 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the north by the river Ouse, comprises by computation 4000 acres. The manufacture of lace is carried on, affording employment to about 250 females, who work at their own houses. The river Ouse is navigable for barges to Bedford. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 17.; patrons and impropiators, Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The great tithes have been commuted for £1350, and the vicarial for £250; the impropriate glebe consists of about 5 acres, and the vicarial of 2 acres; there is a good glebe-house. The church contains a tablet in memory of John Howard, the eminent philanthropist, who lived some years at this place, and served the office of sheriff for the county in 1773; and a splendid monument by Bacon, the last of his works, was erected, in 1799, to the memory of Samuel Whitbread, Esq., whose family first settled here in 1650, at a house called the Barns. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans, and at Cotton-End is one for Particular Baptists. A parochial school is supported by subscription; and there are some almshouses, founded by John Howard and Mr. Whitbread, and endowed with about £30 per annum.

CARDINGTON (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of CHURCH-STRETTON, hundred of MUNSLOW, S. division of SALOP, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Church-Stretton; containing 691 inhabitants. It is romantically situated in a district characterised by bold and picturesque scenery. A species of very fine quartz, considered equal in quality to that brought from Carnarvonshire, for the use of the potteries, is found; and the parish abounds also with clay. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 2. 6.; net income, £287; patron, R. Hunt, Esq.; impropiators, Archdeacon Corbett and others. Edward Hall, serjeant-at-law, in 1720, bequeathed £400, with part of which a school-house was erected adjoining the churchyard; and the remainder was vested in the purchase of lands, producing £45 per annum. Another school is endowed with £5 per annum; and a schoolmistress has a salary of £10, for teaching girls, both arising from a dividend bequeathed by John Russel in 1813. An allotment of fifteen acres, on the inclosure of the manors of Lydley and Cardington, was assigned to the parish.

CARDINHAM (St. MEWBRED), a parish, in the union of BODMIN, hundred of WEST, E. division of CORNWALL, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Bodmin; containing 802 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Fowey, and comprises about 7750 acres; the surface consists of extensive plains, intersected by deep valleys, of which the channels are traversed by numerous streams, and the slopes clothed with oak coppices to the extent of several hundreds of acres; the soil rests principally on a slate bottom, and small quantities of copper, tin, and lead, have been found. Towards the north-eastern extremity of the parish are two large granite tors, or groups of rocks, one of which is named St. Bellarmine's Tor, and the other, Corner Quoit Stone. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £24. 17. 8½., and in the presentation of E. J. Glynn, Esq., subject to the right of the Rev. Thomas Grylls, the present incumbent, to the next presentation: the tithes have been commuted for £450, and there is a rent-charge of £50 on coppices and other woodlands; there is likewise a good glebe-house, with nearly 200 acres of land. At a copious spring, called Holy Well, and also on Bellarmine's Tor, and at a place named Vale, are some remains of ancient chapels. Here was once a castle, the residence of the Dinham family, of which only the circular intrenchment is remaining; and on some high ground is a similar intrenchment, comprehending an area of two acres, called Berry Castle.

CAREBY (St. STEPHEN), a parish, in the union of BOURNE, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (N. E.) from Stamford; containing 73 inhabitants. This place was for many generations the property and residence of the ancient family of Hatcher, of whom Sir John Hatcher, the last who bore that title, died in 1640. The parish comprises by measurement 1418 statute acres: there is a quarry of excellent building-stone. The village is small, but delightfully situated, and of pleasingly rural appearance; and there are still some remains of the ancient mansion of the Hatchers, which was formerly a spacious building, with extensive pleasure-grounds, fish-ponds, and a park well stocked with deer. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 17. 1., and in the gift of General Birch Reynardson: the tithes have been commuted for £275, and the glebe comprises 46 acres. The altar of the church is embellished with a large painting of the Salvator Mundi, by the Rev. J. R. Deverell, rector, who has also presented a neat and fine-toned organ; in the chancel is a monument to Sir John Hatcher, whose statue is beautifully executed in stone. An excellent parsonage-house has recently been built.

CARGO, or CRAGHOW, a township, in the parish of STANWIX, union of CARLISLE, CUMBERLAND ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 3¼ miles (N. W.) from Carlisle; containing 259 inhabitants.

CARHAISE (St. MICHAEL), county of CORNWALL.—See MICHAEL, ST., CARHAISE.

CARHAM (St. CUTHBERT), a parish, in the union of GLENDALE, W. division of GLENDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 3½ miles (W. S. W.) from Coldstream; containing 1274 inhabitants. This place, according to Leland, was the scene of a sanguinary battle between the Saxons and the Danes, in which eleven bishops and two English counts were killed; and in 1018, a fierce conflict took place here between the English and the Scots, in which the latter were victorious: the loss of the English was severe, and this event, according to some writers, is said to have made so deep an impression on the mind of Aldun, Bishop of Durham, that he died of a broken heart. In 1296, the Scots, under William Wallace, encamped on a hill in the neighbourhood, since called Campfield, and reduced to ashes an abbey of Black canons, which had been founded at a period unknown, as a cell to the priory of Kirkham, in the county of York. In 1370, a battle took place between the Scots under Sir John Gordon, and the English, commanded by Sir John Lelburne, in which, after a severe and obstinate conflict, the former were victorious, and the English general and his brother were made prisoners. The parish is pleasantly situated at the north-western extremity of the county, and is bounded on the north and west by Scotland; it comprises, according to a recent survey, 10,262 acres; the surface, generally undulated, rises, in some parts, to a considerable elevation, and the scenery is enriched with fine plantations, and enlivened by the river Tweed, on the south bank of which the village is situated. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £233; patrons and impropiators, Heirs of A. Compton, Esq., of Carham Hall. The church, erected in 1791, is a very neat edifice; in 1832, a porch, and a vestry-room, which is now used for a Sunday school, were added; and, in 1839, the whole of the interior was newly arranged and repewed. A parochial school is supported by subscription.

CARHAMPTON (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of WILLITON, hundred of CARHAMPTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 1½ mile (S. E.) from Dunster; containing 682 inhabitants. This place, which gives name to the hundred, probably received its appellation from the British saint Carantacus, or Carantac, who was the son of Keredic, Prince of Cardigan, and who retired hither, built an oratory, and spent the remainder of his life in acts of devotion. In the grounds of the vicarage have been found numerous skeletons, and the foundation of an ancient building, supposed to be the remains of this chapel, which is stated to have been formerly used as the parochial church. The parish is situated on the road between Minehead and Bridgwater, and comprises by measurement 5193 acres: stone is quarried for the roads. The petty-sessions for the division are held here. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 8.; net income, £182; patron, impropiator, and incumbent, Rev. J. F. Luttrell, whose improper tithes have been commuted for £505. 10., and vicarial, for £280. 8.; the glebe consists of about 2 acres. There is a handsome screen in the church, separating the nave from the chancel. In addition to the parochial church, there is a chapel of ease at Rod-Huish, a hamlet about 2 miles distant. The Wesleyans have a place of worship. Twenty children are educated for £5 a year, the bequest of Richard Escott, in 1785; and an annuity of £3 has been left for the same purpose. Near Dunster Park is an old encampment, in excellent preservation; it is octagonal, with double ramparts and a ditch, and there are several outworks in connexion with it. In making a road through the parish, an ancient cairn was removed, when a perfect sepulchre, seven feet long, was discovered, containing a human skeleton.

CARISBROOKE (St. MARY), a parish, in the liberty of WEST MEDINA, Isle of Wight incorporation and division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 1 mile (W. S. W.)

from Newport; containing, with the hamlet of Bowcombe, and part of that of Chillerton, 5613 inhabitants. This place derives some importance from its castle, situated on a commanding conical eminence above the village, occupying about twenty acres. Its foundation is of very remote antiquity; and some writers ascribe its origin to the Romans, as a few of their coins have been discovered in the neighbourhood; but the style of its architecture, especially the keep, clearly shows that it is principally a Norman erection. The whole was greatly improved in the time of Elizabeth, and surrounded by an extensive fortification, with five bastions and a deep moat, around which is a terrace-walk of three-quarters of a mile in circuit: these works were raised by the inhabitants, and those who did not labour were obliged to contribute pecuniary aid. The castle was attacked and taken by Stephen, in 1136, when Baldwin, Earl of Devonshire, took refuge here, after declaring in favour of the Empress Maud; and, in the reign of Richard II., it successfully resisted an attack of the French, who plundered the island. Carisbrooke Castle is, however, most remarkable as the place in which Charles I. was confined for thirteen months, previously to his being delivered up to the parliamentary forces, after having made one or two unsuccessful attempts to escape: his children were also subsequently imprisoned in it. This ancient fortress, a rectangular parallelogram including the keep, an irregular polygon, occupies about an acre and a half of ground, the latter being raised on an artificial mound, to which there is an ascent of 72 steps, and from its summit an extensive and beautiful prospect, embracing a great portion of the island, and parts of the New Forest and Portsdown hills opposite. Within the castle, which is considered as the residence of the governor, are the ruins of an ancient guard-house, and the chapel of St. Nicholas, built in 1738, on the site of a more ancient one, in which the mayor and high constables of Newport are sworn into office annually: the appointment of a chaplain, whose stipend is £24, is in the Governor of the isle.

The parish, which is partly bounded on the east by the river Medina, is nearly 20 miles in circumference, and altogether irregular in its outline, encompassing the town of Newport on three sides, and containing about one-fourth part of it; the surface is undulated, and the scenery picturesque, and the soil consists of chalk, marl, and clay. The village is pleasantly situated at the foot of the Castle Hill, on the banks of a rivulet, on which are five corn-mills, and which falls into the Medina at Newport. It was of much more consequence formerly than it is at present, having been a market-town, and considered the capital of the island, until superseded by the town of Newport, on account of the more eligible situation of the latter, up to which the river Medina is navigable, and where the nearest wharf is situated. The LIVING is a vicarage, with Newport and Northwood annexed, valued in the king's books at £23. 8. 1½; net income, about £1000; patrons, Provost and Scholars of Queen's College, Oxford; impropriators, several Landowners. Opposite to the castle, on a rising ground, stands the church, an ancient structure, with an embattled tower, to which was formerly annexed a monastery of Cistercian monks, founded by William Fitz-Osborn, marshal to the Conqueror, who captured the island, at the same time that William conquered the kingdom; but the remains of the monastery have been converted into a farm-house, called the Priory. There is a small glebe, comprising, with the site of the vicarage-house and garden, nearly 2 acres. A district church, dedicated to St. John, was erected in that part of the parish which adjoins the town of Newport, at an expense of £4000, defrayed by the Rev. Dr. Worsley, of Finchley, and endowed with £1000 by Major-Gen. Sir H. Worsley; it was consecrated in 1837, since which period a district has been assigned to it, comprising a population of about 2500. The church is a handsome edifice of stone, in the early English style, containing 830 sittings, of which 230 are free; the tower, included in the original design, has not yet been added, for want of funds. There are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, Wesleyans, &c.; a national school for the island, and a school called "the Grey School," for girls, both supported by subscription; also a Lancasterian school.

CARKIN, a township, in the parish of FORCETT, union of RICHMOND, wapentake of GILLING-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 7½ miles (E. by N.) from Greta-Bridge; containing 55 inhabitants. It is set out in farms, and comprises by computation 770 acres of land.

CARLATTON, an extra-parochial liberty, in ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 9½ miles (E. S. E.) from Carlisle; containing 61 inhabitants, and comprising 1600 acres. Several coins, supposed to be Roman, have been discovered in ploughing a field forming part of the Low Hall estate; and at a farm called Saugh-tree-gate is a cairn.

CARLBY (St. STEPHEN), a parish, in the union of BOURNE, wapentake of NESS, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (N. by E.) from Stamford; containing 216 inhabitants, and comprising 1336*a. 9p.* The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 1. 10½; net income, £195; patrons, Marquess of Exeter, and Sir John Wyldbore Smith, Bart. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1804: there is a good glebe-house.

CARLEBURY, a hamlet, in the parish of CONISCLIFFE, union of DARLINGTON, S. E. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 5½ miles (W. by N.) from Darlington; containing 44 inhabitants. Tradition informs us that this and several neighbouring villages were burnt in one of the incursions of the Scots. At Carlebury hills, in the time of Charles I., a severe battle was fought between the royalists and a party of the parliamentary forces; and some human bones have since been dug up, presumed to have belonged to those who were slain. The hamlet is bounded on the south by the river Tees, and contains extensive quarries of limestone, and numerous limekilns.

CARLETON, a township, in the parish of DRIGG, union of BOOTLE, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 2 miles (N. N. W.) from Ravenglass; containing 143 inhabitants. It is on the road from Ravenglass to Whitehaven.

CARLETON, a township, in the parish of St. CUTHBERT, CARLISLE, union of CARLISLE, CUMBERLAND ward, E. division of the county of CUMBERLAND, 2½ miles (S. E.) from Carlisle; containing 175 inhabitants. At Newlands, in the township, is a quarry of excellent blue-freestone, in appearance like marble.

CARLETON, a hamlet, in the parish and union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND; containing 81 inhabitants.

CARLETON, a township, in the parish of RED-MARSHALL, union of STOCKTON, S. W. division of STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Stockton; containing 157 inhabitants. The families of Culley and Hertburne had long an interest in the property of this township, which, in the reign of Elizabeth passed, by female heirs, to the Forests and Baynbriggs; and among more recent owners of land, occur the families of Richardson and Davison, who came into possession of estates here at a very remote period. The place was restored to the see of Durham by royal charter, during the episcopacy of Bishop Flambard, the people of Northumberland having previously claimed it. The township comprises by measurement 1314 acres, of which 1013 are arable, 288 pasture, 7 woodland, and 6 common and roads. The village is situated on the road leading from Darlington to Wynyard, Wolviston, and Hartlepool: the Clarence railway passes through a part of the township. The tithes have been commuted for £187.

CARLETON, a township, in the parish of POULTON, union of the FYLDE, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (W. N. W.) from Poulton; containing 378 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £328, and the vicarial for £35. In 1697, Elizabeth Wilson endowed a school with £14. 9. 4., which has been increased by subsequent benefactions, the annual income amounting to about £23.

CARLETON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of LODDON and CLAVERING, hundred of LODDON, E. division of NORFOLK, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Norwich; containing 96 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Ashby united, valued in the king's books at £9; net income, £294; patrons, Sir W. B. Proctor and Sir C. H. Rich, Barts. The tithes have been commuted for £168. 15., and the glebe consists of 5 acres.

CARLETON, a chapelry, in the parish of SNAITH, union of SELBY, Lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. by E.) from Snaith; containing 802 inhabitants. It comprises 3788*a. 2r. 39p.* of rich fertile land, of a variety of soil, and produces all kinds of grain of excellent quality. An act was passed in 1800 for inclosing 380 acres of waste in the township. There is a wooden bridge across the Aire, on the road to Snaith, built by Thomas Stapleton, Esq., who also, in 1774, greatly improved Carleton Hall, the family seat, in which is a Roman Catholic chapel, and which is now occupied by Lady Throckmorton, lady of the manor, and sister to the late Miles Stapleton, Esq. The village, which is large and well built, is agreeably situated on the north side of the river Aire, and on the road from Snaith to Selby. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £168; patrons, Trustees of Messrs. J. Day and Cave. There is a small school, to which Mrs. E. Fisher, in 1726, left £4 per annum; and there are four almshouses.

CARLETON, a township, in the parish of PONTE-FRACT, Upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLD-CROSS, W. riding of YORK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. by E.) from Pontefract; containing 179 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 620 acres of land: the village is pleasantly situated in a fertile vale, to the west of the high road from Doncaster to Ferry-Bridge. The tithes were commuted for corn-rents, under an act of inclosure, in 1797.

CARLETON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 2 miles (S. W.) from Skipton; containing 1242 inhabitants. The parish comprises 5090*a. 3r. 24p.*, of which 173 acres are arable, about 85 wood, 3517 pasture, and 1250 common or moor; the soil of the lands under cultivation near the river, is fertile, but on the high hills poorer. The population is chiefly employed in the worsted and cotton manufactures. The village is pleasantly situated in a picturesque vale, near the confluence of a tributary stream with the river Aire; and in Lothersdale are various small houses, widely scattered through a deep and secluded valley. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 2. 1.; net income, £450; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. The tithes have been commuted for £300, and the glebe is valued at £150 per annum, with an excellent glebe-house. The church, rebuilt in the 16th century, is in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and contains 250 sittings, of which 70 are free: it was repaired, and a new gallery added, in 1841, by the Rev. Walter Levett, the vicar, and the principal landowners; and Mrs. Busfield presented a complete set of communion service. A church, dedicated to Christ, was erected in Lothersdale, in 1838, and was endowed by the Rev. Mr. Levett with the munificent sum of £1000, and £20 per annum from the tithes of Carleton: Mrs. Busfield also gave to this church a communion service. An hospital was founded for 12 widows of this parish and that of Market-Bosworth, by Ferrand Spence, Esq., who endowed it with property, now producing an income of £280. The free school was established by Francis Price and Elizabeth Wilkinson, in 1709, and endowed with 99 acres of land, at present worth £120 per annum, of which £55 are paid to a master for teaching boys. There is also a school supported by the Society of Friends.

CARLETON-FOREHOE (St. MARY), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of FOREHOE, E. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (N. N. W.) from Wymondham; containing 151 inhabitants. The distinguishing appellation is derived from four hills, supposed to have been artificially constructed, and on one of which the court for the hundred was formerly held. The parish comprises about 700 acres, of which 385 are arable, 180 pasture and meadow, and 35 woodland: the road from Norwich to Watton passes through it. The ancient manor-house, which was surrounded with a moat, has long been a ruin. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 17. 1.; net income, £120; patron, Lord Wodehouse. The tithes were commuted for land in 1766; the glebe contains 131 acres, of which 37 were obtained, by purchase, with £200, given in 1724, by the Rev. James Champion, and £200 from Queen Anne's Bounty. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower. A school, chiefly for girls, is supported by the Hon. Miss Wodehouse. Church and poor's land, left in 1391 by John Sayers, received an addition at the inclosure, in 1766, and now lets for £25. 11. per annum.

CARLETON-IN-CLEVELAND, a parish, in the union of STOKESLEY, W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Stokesley; containing 259 inhabitants. At the time of Domesday book this place belonged to Robert, Earl of Mortain, in Normandy, though it had some time before been in the possession of Gospatrick, Earl of Northumberland; and it was probably laid waste by the Conqueror when he committed the well-known devastations in the country between York and Durham. The most considerable families that have since that date been connected with the spot as landed proprietors, are those of Meinill, Boulton, Neville, and Bruce. The parish is about three miles in length from north to south, and two miles broad; the inclosed lands incline gently towards the north, and are in general fertile, and yield abundant crops; the fields are well fenced, and the appearance of the country is highly pleasing. Extensive alum-works were formerly carried on, but since the discovery of richer beds of that mineral on the coast near Whitby, they have been discontinued. The village is situated at the foot of a considerable eminence, about a quarter of a mile south-west of the road leading to Stokesley, Thirsk, and North-Allerton; the houses are scattered irregularly on the banks of a small mountain rivulet that runs through the village, and afterwards joins the Leven. The living was, perhaps, once endowed with rectorial rights, but having been given to Whitby monastery, to which it was made appropriate, it was reduced at the Dissolution to a perpetual curacy; it is in the patronage of C. Reeve, Esq., the impropiator, and has a net income of £56. The church is a small modern structure. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is supported by the lord of the manor. Various petrifications of shells and fishes have been found.

CARLISLE, an ancient city and inland port, having separate jurisdiction, and the head of a union, situated in the ward, and E. division of the county, of CUMBERLAND (of which it is the chief town), 302 miles (N. N. W.) from London, on the great western road to Edinburgh and Glasgow; containing 23,012 inhabitants. It was anciently called Caer-Luil, or Caer Leol, signifying "the city of Luil," a British potentate, who is reputed to have been its founder. The Romans, on selecting it for a station, changed the name to Lugovallum, which is probably derived from Lugus, or Lucu, a "tower" or "fort," in the Celtic tongue, and Vallum, in allusion to Adrian's vallum, which passed near it. From its earliest foundation till the union of the English and Scottish kingdoms, it suffered those shocks of incursive warfare to which, as a border town, it was peculiarly exposed, and by which it has been repeatedly overwhelmed. In the reign of Nero, it is stated, by the Scottish historians, to have been burned by the Caledonians, during the absence of the Romans, who, in the time of Agricola, repaired it and constructed fortifications, as a barrier against the future attacks of the invaders. Soon after the final departure of the Romans, it was probably again destroyed; for, in the seventh century, we find that it was rebuilt by Egfrid, King of Northumbria, in whose reign it rose into importance. About the year 875, it was demolished by the Danes, and lay in ruins till after the Norman Conquest, when it was restored by William Rufus, who, in 1092, built and garrisoned the castle, and sent a colony from the south of England to inhabit the city, and cultivate the circumjacent lands. The construction of the defensive works, however, advanced but slowly; as, when Henry I. was here, thirty years afterwards, he ordered more money to be disbursed for their completion. They were most probably finished by David, King of Scotland, who, in 1135, took possession of Carlisle for the Empress Matilda, and resided here for several years, the entire county having been subsequently ceded to him by Stephen: the Scottish historians attribute the building of the castle and the heightening of the walls to this monarch. After the disastrous battle of the Standard, in 1138, the city was the asylum of David, who occupied it with a strong garrison, and was here joined by his son; and in September of the same year, Alberic, the pope's legate, arrived here, and found him attended by the barons, bishops, and priors of Scotland. This envoy obtained from David a promise that all female captives should be brought to Carlisle and released before St. Martin's-day; and that in future the Scots should abstain from the violation of churches and the perpetration of unnecessary cruelties. In 1149, the city was the head-quarters of David, during the hostilities which he maintained against King Stephen; and, in the following year, a league was here entered into against the latter monarch, by David, Henry Plantagenet (afterwards Henry II. of England), and the Earl of Chester, on which occasion Henry was knighted by the king of Scotland, and swore that when he should ascend the throne he would confirm to him and his heirs the territories held by the Scots in England. In 1152, David and his son Henry, the latter of whom died this year, met John, the pope's legate, at Carlisle; and in the following year, or the next after, the Scottish monarch expired in the city, and was succeeded by his son, Malcolm IV.

The counties of Cumberland and Northumberland having been ceded to Henry II. by Malcolm, in 1157, Carlisle was besieged, in 1173, by William the Lion, brother and successor to Malcolm; but on hearing that William de Lucy, the justiciary and regent during the king's absence in France, was advancing with a large army, he abandoned the enterprise. In the following year he again invested the place, and after a siege of several months, the garrison, being reduced to extreme distress, agreed to surrender the castle at a fixed period, if not previously relieved, from which engagement they were released during the interval by the capture of William, at Alnwick. In 1186, King Henry stationed himself at the city, with a strong body of forces, to aid the Scottish king in subduing Roland, a rebellious chieftain of Galloway. In 1216, Carlisle was besieged by Alexander, William's successor, and surrendered to him by order of the barons in rebellion against John; but in the following year, after the accession of Henry III., it was surrendered to the English.

In 1292, a great part of it was destroyed by a conflagration, originating in the vindictive malice of an incendiary, who set fire to his father's house: the priory, the convent of the Grey friars, and the church, were all consumed, the convent of the Black friars alone escaping. The charters and public records being thus destroyed, the city was taken into the king's hands, and the government was vested in justices of assize. In 1296, Carlisle was besieged by the Scottish troops under the Earl of Buchan, who set fire to the suburbs, but, after remaining four days before its walls, were compelled, by the determined valour of the inhabitants of both sexes, to retreat; and in the following year it was summoned to surrender by William Wallace, who, unable to obtain possession, ravaged the surrounding country.

After the battle of Falkirk, in 1298, Edward I. marched with his army to Carlisle, where he held a parliament in September; and two years subsequently, he led his army through this city on a fresh expedition against Scotland. In 1306, that monarch appointed here a general rendezvous of his forces destined against Scotland, under Prince Edward: he arrived in person, attended by his queen, towards the end of August, and remained until September 10th. On March 12th, in the following year, the court was removed to Carlisle, where the parliament was then sitting. The king, though daily declining in health, did not relax in his efforts to subdue the Scots, but ordered all his vassals to assemble at Carlisle on the 8th of July. After celebrating his birth-day, he quitted the city on the 28th of June, being then so weak as to be unable to travel more than two miles a day, and died on the 7th of July, on reaching Burgh-on-the-Sands. An express having been sent to Prince Edward, the new monarch came hither on the 11th of July, and two days afterwards received the homage of nearly all the principal men of the kingdom: he then returned to prosecute his expedition against the Scots, but, relinquishing the vigorous plans proposed by his father, he arrived at this city in the month of September following. In 1315, Carlisle was besieged by Robert Bruce, but was resolutely and successfully defended by its governor, Andrew de Hercla, afterwards Earl of Carlisle. This nobleman, in 1322, being accused of holding a treasonable correspondence with the Scots, was arrested by Lord Lucy, in the castle of which he was governor, degraded from his honours, and executed. In this year also, the Scottish army, commanded by Bruce, encamped for five days near the city, and burned Rose Castle, the episcopal residence. In 1332, Edward Balliol, after having narrowly escaped assassination at Annan, fled to Carlisle, and was hospitably received by Lord Dacre, then governor.

When Edward III. was in Scotland, towards the close of 1334, he sent Balliol and the Earls of Oxford and Warwick to defend Carlisle against the Scots: being joined by large reinforcements from the adjacent counties, they made a successful incursion into Scotland, and returned in triumph to this city, which, in the following year, was visited by the monarch in person, who, on the 11th of July, quitted it with his army for Scotland. In 1337, Carlisle was invested by a Scottish army, which fired the suburbs, burned Rose Castle, and pillaged the surrounding country; and in 1345, the entire city was burned by them, under the command of Sir William Douglas. In 1352, Edward III., in consequence of the importance of Carlisle as a frontier town, and of the numerous calamities that it had suffered, renewed its charter, which had been destroyed in the conflagration of 1292. In 1380, an attempt was made on the city by some Scottish borderers, who fired one of the streets by discharging burning arrows, but were compelled to retreat by a report that a numerous army was approaching to its relief. In 1385, it was attacked without success by the united Scottish and French forces; and, two years afterwards, it was again attacked, but with the like want of success. In 1461, Carlisle was assailed by a Scottish army in the interest of Henry VI., which burned the suburbs; and this is the only event respecting it that occurred during the war between the houses of York and Lancaster. In 1537, during Aske's rebellion, it was besieged by an army of 8000 insurgents, under Nicholas Musgrave and others, who were repulsed by the inhabitants, and afterward defeated by the Duke of Norfolk, who commanded seventy-four of their officers to be executed on the city walls: Musgrave, however, escaped. In 1568, Mary, Queen of Scots, in the hope of finding an asylum from the hostility of her subjects, took fatal refuge in the castle. In the following year, Lord Scrope, the lord warden, held Carlisle against the Earls of Northumberland and Westmorland, then in open rebellion; and, in 1596, Sir William Scott, afterwards Earl of Buccleuch, attacking the castle before day-break, to rescue a noted borderer, celebrated in the ballads of those times as "Kinmont Willie," surprised the garrison, and triumphantly bore him away. In the following year, the city was visited by a pestilence, which destroyed more than one-third of the population, and occasioned great distress among the survivors.

On the union of the two kingdoms, and the accession of James to the English throne, the importance of Carlisle as a frontier town having ceased, the garrison was reduced. At the commencement of the CIVIL WAR in the 17th century, the citizens embraced the royal cause. In 1644, the city was threatened by a force which had assembled from the circumjacent country, but which, being pursued by the posse comitatús towards Abbey Holme, quickly dispersed and fled. At this period it afforded an asylum to the Marquess of Montrose and his army, who had retreated before the victorious arms of the Earl of Calendar. After the capture of York, in July of the same year, Sir Thomas Glenham, with the garrison of that city, retired to Carlisle, where he assumed the command; and about the end of September, Sir Philip Musgrave and Sir Henry Fletcher, with the remnant of their forces, which had been defeated by the Scots at Salkeld, reached this place with some difficulty, being hard pressed by Gen. Lesley, who, however, did not then stay to invest the city, thus enabling the citizens to make ample preparations for a siege. In October he returned with part of his forces, and besieged the place; but the garrison and inhabitants made a vigorous defence, suffering incredible hardship from the scarcity of provisions; having held out until all hopes of relief were destroyed by the fatal issue of the battle of Naseby, they surrendered on honourable terms, on the 25th of June, 1645. During this siege, a coinage of one-shilling and three-shilling pieces was issued from the castle, which, though very scarce, are still to be met with in the cabinets of the curious. In October, Lord Digby and Sir Marmaduke Langdale were defeated by Sir John Brown, governor of the city, at Carlisle Sands. On the general evacuation of fortified towns by the Scottish garrisons, this city was relinquished to the parliament, in 1647; but about the end of April, 1648, it was taken by surprise by a royalist force commanded by Sir Thomas Glenham and Sir Philip Musgrave; and soon afterwards, a considerable army was assembled for the king's service, under the command of Sir Marmaduke Langdale, on a heath, five miles from the city: this army retreating towards Carlisle, the citizens, dreading the recurrence of a famine, petitioned the governor, Sir Philip Musgrave, to refuse it admittance. The Duke of Hamilton, arriving with his Scottish army early in July, superseded Musgrave in the command, which he conferred on Sir William Levingston; and the duke's forces, which were quartered in the neighbourhood, having been joined at Rose Castle by those under Langdale, pursued their march southward. Sir Philip Musgrave, returning shortly after with his forces to Carlisle, was refused admittance by the new governor. Towards the close of the war, on the 1st of Oct., the city was surrendered by treaty to Cromwell, by whom it was garrisoned with 800 infantry and a regiment of cavalry. A garrison of 600 infantry and 1200 cavalry was afterwards established here, for the purpose of suppressing the insurrections of the moss-troopers. A dreadful famine, in 1650, caused by the consumption of the garrison, compelled the inhabitants to petition parliament for assistance. In 1653, the celebrated George Fox, founder of the Society of Friends, was imprisoned in the dungeons of the castle, on account of his religious tenets.

During the rebellion in 1745, the vanguard of the young Pretender's army encamped, on Nov. 9th, within four miles of Carlisle, which was garrisoned by the militia of Cumberland and Westmorland. Being joined on the following day by the main body, they summoned this place to surrender, but did not commence the siege till the 13th, which was conducted by a body of forces under the Duke of Perth, who compelled the place to surrender on the 15th, when the mayor and corporation, on their knees, presented to the young Pretender the keys of the city, and proclaimed his father king, and himself regent, with all due solemnity. The rebel army remained here for several days, during which much dissension prevailed among its leaders, and then resumed its march southward, leaving in the castle a garrison of 150 men. But they were compelled to retreat on the approach of the Duke of Cumberland, part of them retiring into the castle here, and the remainder pursuing their flight across the border; and the duke having laid siege to the city, forced the garrison to surrender at discretion. The officers of the rebel forces were sent to London, where having suffered death as traitors, their heads were sent down and exposed in the public places of the city. Cappock, whom the Pretender had created Bishop of Carlisle, was hanged, drawn, and quartered; and nine others concerned in the rebellion were executed in the city.

CARLISLE is pleasantly situated on a gradual eminence, at the confluence of the rivers Eden and Caldew, which, with the Petterel, almost environ it. The four principal streets diverge from the market-place, and have several minor ones branching from them; they are well paved, and lighted with gas by a company formed pursuant to an act obtained in 1819, who have erected works at the cost of £10,000. The houses in general are regular and well built. A very handsome bridge of white freestone was erected over the Eden, in 1812, from a design by R. Smirke, jun., at an expense to the county of about £70,000; it consists of five elliptical arches, and is connected with the town by an arched causeway. Two stone bridges, each of one arch, were built over the Caldew, on the west side of the city, in 1820; and a bridge of three arches over the Petterel, about a mile from the town, was erected a few years since. The Castle is situated at the north-west angle of the city, on the summit of a steep acclivity overlooking the Eden: it is of an irregular form, and consists of an outer and inner ward; the former, two sides of which are formed by part of the city wall, is quadrangular, and contains no buildings of importance, except an armoury, in which 10,000 stand of arms were formerly deposited, and which is now converted into barracks for the infantry of the garrison, the cavalry being quartered on the innkeepers. The inner ward is triangular, and contains the keep, or dungeon tower, into which the armoury has been lately removed; it is square, and of great strength, having a circular archway leading from the outer into the inner ward, and is, no doubt, that portion of the castle built by William Rufus. The other parts are evidently of later date, and correspond with the times of Richard III., Henry VIII., and Elizabeth, by all of whom it was repaired and partly rebuilt: a great part of the buildings erected by Elizabeth has been taken down. It is the head of the ancient royal manor of the soccage of Carlisle, now held by the Duke of Devonshire as grantee of the crown, and which includes part of the city, and 500 acres of land in its immediate vicinity. The environs abound with genteel residences: the view embraces the course of the river Eden, as it winds through a fertile and well cultivated tract of country. In 1818 and 1819, a subscription was begun for the relief of the poor, who by this means were employed in completing and forming various walks near the town, the most interesting of which are, the promenade on the slope and summit of the hill on which the castle stands, a terrace-walk on the opposite bank of the Eden, and a raised walk along the south margin of that river. A subscription library was established in 1768, and a news-room has been added to it; and in Jan. 1830, some ground was purchased opposite the Bush Inn, for the erection of a new subscription library and news-rooms, which have been since built. A commercial news-room was opened in 1825; and an academy of arts, for the encouragement of native and other artists in sculpture, painting, modelling, &c., was instituted in 1823; but the latter has been discontinued. A Mechanics' Institute was established in 1824; and a Literary and Philosophical Society has more recently been formed, for which an appropriate edifice has been erected by a proprietary company. The theatre, which was built about twenty-five years since, is constantly open during the races, and at other stated periods. Races were commenced about the middle of the last century, and the first King's plate was given in 1763; they continue to be held in the autumn upon a fine course called the Swifts, situated on the south side of the Eden, and are generally well attended, by persons from various parts, as well as by the citizens.

The TRADE principally consists in the manufacture of cotton goods and gingham for the West India market, in which upwards of 1000 looms are employed in the town, and a still greater number in the adjacent villages. There are ten gingham and check manufactories; nine cotton-spinning factories, employing 80,000 spindles; a small mill for weaving calicoes, a carpet manufactory, several hat-factories, three iron-foundries, four tan-yards, and four breweries: there are also several fisheries on the river Eden, for the regulation of which an act of parliament was passed in 1804. In 1819, a canal was begun from Carlisle to the Solway Firth, at Bowness, a distance of eleven miles, and finished in 1823, at an expense of about £90,000, by means of which vessels of 100 tons' burthen can come up to the town. The vessels belonging to the port are chiefly occupied in supplying the city and neighbourhood with iron, slate, salt, and other merchandise, and in conveying grain, oak-bark, alabaster, freestone, coal, lead, staves, &c., and other produce of the adjacent country, to different towns on the coast. The Newcastle and Carlisle railway, 60 miles long, and which cost nearly a million sterling, was opened June 18th, 1838; there is a railway from Maryport to Carlisle; and it is in contemplation to form a line to Penrith, to communicate with the proposed continuation of the London, Birmingham, and Preston railroads, through Carlisle, to Glasgow. The principal station and depôt of the Newcastle railway are situated about a quarter of a mile to the south of the city, and close to the London road; they are nearly contiguous, and occupy together an area of about six acres. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday; and fairs for cattle and horses are held on Aug. 26th and Sept. 19th, during the continuance of which all persons in the city are free from arrest. There are also fairs, or great markets, on the Saturday after Old Michaelmas-day, and on every Saturday following till Christmas; these are held on the sands, near the bridge across the Eden. In April there is a great show-fair for cattle, when prizes are distributed by the Agricultural Society. The Saturdays at Whitsuntide and Martinmas are hiring days for servants.

Corporation Seal.

Obverse.

Reverse.

The city is a BOROUGH by prescription: it received its first charter from Henry II., and others were subsequently granted previously to that bestowed in the 13th of Charles I., by which the corporation was regulated, till, by the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76, the government was vested in a mayor, ten aldermen, and thirty councillors, and the city was divided into five wards. The mayor is a justice of the peace ex officio for two years, and the total number of magistrates is eleven, who meet for business on four days in each week. The freedom of the city is inherited by birth, and acquired by an apprenticeship of seven years to a resident freeman. The citizens first exercised the elective franchise in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time they have regularly returned two members to parliament. The right of election was formerly in the free burgesses, previously admitted members of one of the eight fraternities, whether resident or not, in number about 1000; but, by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the non-resident voters, except within seven miles, were disfranchised, and the privilege was extended to the £10 householders: the limits of the city, also, were enlarged for elective purposes, from 80 to 1800 acres. The returning officer is the mayor. The mayor presides at a court of record every Monday, for the recovery of debts to any amount, and at a quarterly court for the recovery of debts under forty shillings; these courts are held in the town-hall, in the centre of the town, near which are the moot-hall and council-chamber. There are eight fraternities or companies, viz., Merchants, Tanners, Skinners, Butchers, Smiths, Weavers, Tailors, and Shoemakers, who hold a general meeting on Ascension-day. The assizes for the county, and the Christmas and Midsummer quarter-sessions, are held in the new court-houses, erected, in 1810, by act of parliament, at an expense of £100,000, from a design by Robert Smirke, jun., on the site of the ancient citadel that flanked the eastern gate, and consisting of two large circular towers, one on each side of the entrance into the city, in the decorated style of English architecture. From one of the court-rooms is a subterraneous passage, for conducting the prisoners to and from the county gaol and house of correction, a noble pile of building, completed, under the same act, in 1827, at a cost of £42,000, and surrounded by a stone wall 25 feet high; it occupies the site of the convent of the Black friars, and serves as a prison both for the city and county. Carlisle is the principal place of election for the eastern division of the county.

Arms of the Bishopric.

The DIOCESE of Carlisle originally formed part of that of Lindisfarn; but the see being removed from the latter place to Durham, and considerable inconvenience being felt on account of the distance of Carlisle from that city, Henry I., in 1133, constituted it a distinct bishopric, and appointed to the episcopal chair Athelwald, his confessor, who was prior of a monastery of Augustine canons, founded here in the reign of William Rufus, by Walter, a Norman priest, and completed and endowed by this monarch. By the act of the 6th and 7th of William IV., cap. 77, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners named therein are empowered to carry into effect the reports of two bodies of commissioners previously appointed by the crown, by which it is proposed that the diocese of Carlisle shall consist of the present diocese, of those parts of Cumberland and Westmorland which are now in the diocese of Chester, of the deanery of Furness and Cartmel, in the county of Lancaster, and of the parish of Alston, at present in the diocese of Durham. The bishop, or his chancellor, exercises sole ecclesiastical jurisdiction over 130 benefices, the powers of the archdeacon having been anciently resigned to him for an annual pension, in consequence of the smallness of the diocese rendering their concurrent jurisdiction inconvenient. The revenue of the priory above mentioned, in the 26th of Henry VIII., was estimated at £482. 8. 1. This monarch dissolved the monastic establishment in 1540, and instituted a dean and chapter, composed of a dean, four prebendaries, and eight minor canons, and endowed the body with the whole, or the greater part, of the possessions of the dissolved priory, constituting the bishop, by the same charter, visitor of the chapter: he also appointed a sub-deacon, four lay clerks, a grammar master, six choristers, a master of the choristers, and inferior officers. The advowson of the prebends has, since 1557, belonged to the bishop, who has also the patronage of the archdeaconry, chancellorship, and thirty-three benefices; his income is £3000. The dean and four canons compose the chapter, which has a net revenue of £3500, and the patronage of the five minor canonries and twenty-nine benefices; the deanery is in the gift of the Crown. The Cathedral, dedicated to St. Mary, is a venerable structure, exhibiting different styles: it was originally cruciform, but the western part was taken down, in 1641, to furnish materials for the erection of a guard-house; and during the interregnum, part of the nave and the conventual buildings was also pulled down, for repairing the walls and the citadel; it has a square embattled central tower, and the east end is decorated with pinnacles rising above the roof. It consists of a choir, north and south transepts, and two remaining arches of the nave, walled in at the west end, and used as a parish church. The choir is of decorated English architecture, with large clustered columns enriched by foliage, and pointed arches with a variety of mouldings; the clerestory windows, in the upper part, are filled with rich tracery, and the east end has a lofty window of nine lights, of exquisite workmanship, exhibiting great elegance of composition and harmony of arrangement, which render it superior to almost every other in the kingdom. The aisles are in the early English style, with sharply pointed windows and slender-shafted pillars; the remaining portion of the nave and the south transept are of Norman architecture, having large massive columns and circular arches, being evidently the part built in the reign of William Rufus. There are monuments to the memory of some of the bishops, and one recently erected to Archdeacon Paley, who wrote some of his works while resident in this city, and who, with his two wives, was buried in the cathedral.

Carlisle is comprised within the two parishes of St. Mary and St. Cuthbert, which respectively contain, including parts without the city, 13,576 and 10,965 inhabitants. The living of St. Mary's is a perpetual curacy; net income, £90; appropriators, the Bishop, and the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The church is part of the nave of the cathedral. The living of St. Cuthbert is a perpetual curacy; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter; net income, £157, with a glebe-house. The church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, Bishop of Lindisfarn, is a plain edifice, rebuilt in the year 1778, at the cost of the inhabitants, upon the site of the ancient structure. Two district churches, namely, Trinity, in the parish of St. Mary, and Christ-Church, in that of St. Cuthbert, were completed in Sept. 1830, at an expense of £13,212, of which £4030 were subscribed by the inhabitants, and the remainder granted by the Parliamentary Commissioners; the first stone of each was laid on Sept. 25th, 1828; they are in the early style of English architecture, each having a tower surmounted by a spire. The patrons of both are the Dean and Chapter. The living of Trinity was augmented, in 1841, with £90 per annum, by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners: the remaining part of the income, and the whole of that of Christ-Church, arise from the letting of seats and some small fees. There are meeting-houses for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyans, and Presbyterians, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The Grammar School was founded by Henry VIII., on instituting the dean and chapter, and has an endowment of £120 per annum, of which the dean and chapter contribute £20 per annum; the remainder arising from an estate in the parish of Addingham, purchased in 1702, with a gift of £500 by Dr. Smyth, a former bishop: the management is vested in the dean and chapter. Dr. Thomas, Bishop of Rochester, left £1000 stock, directing the dividends to be applied to the benefit of two sons of clergymen, instructed here, and sent to Queen's College, Oxford; if not claimed by clergymen's sons from this school, they are given to others from St. Bees. Dr. Thomas, Dr. Tully, and the Rev. J. D. Carlyle, a learned orientalist, received the rudiments of their education here; the last is interred in the church of St. Cuthbert. A general infirmary for the whole county has been recently erected; and there are various benevolent societies, schools for the poor, and charitable donations. The union of Carlisle comprises 19 parishes or places, and contains a population of 36,084. Near the city was formerly an hospital, dedicated to St. Nicholas, founded prior to the 21st of Edward I., for thirteen leprous persons, and which, at the Dissolution, was assigned towards the endowment of the dean and chapter. In the city walls, near the castle, an ancient vaulted chamber, having a recess at each end, and accessible only by an opening through the wall, has been lately discovered; it is supposed to have been a reservoir, or fountain, in the time of the Romans. In the reign of William III., a Roman Triclinium, with an arched roof, still existed, and from an inscription on its front which Camden read "Marti Victori," is supposed to have been a temple in honour of Mars. A large altar was lately found, inscribed Deo Marti Belatucardro; and, a few years since, a Præferculum, ten inches and a quarter high, having the handles ornamented in bas-relief with figures sacrificing. In the castle yard is a bas-relief of two figures hooded and mantled. Carlisle confers the title of Earl on the family of Howard.

CARLTON.—See CARLETON.

CARLTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the hundred of WILLEY, union and county of BEDFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.) from Harrold; containing 444 inhabitants. It was formerly much intermixed with the parish of Chellington, but, under an act of inclosure, in 1801, a distinct boundary has been established. The living is a rectory, with that of Chellington united in 1769, valued in the king's books at £15. 6. 8.; net income, £370; patron, Hon.

G. R. Trevor. The tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1805. The church contains a tablet, on which is recorded the long incumbency of the Rev. Thomas Wills, who was seventy years minister. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists.

CARLTON (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of LINTON, hundred of RADFIELD, county of CAMBRIDGE, 7 miles (S.) from Newmarket; containing, with the hamlet of Willingham, 424 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 2200 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9; net income, £237; patrons, Trustees of W. S. P. Wilder, Esq. The church is a plain edifice. Sir Thomas Elliott, author of a Latin Dictionary, and other works, resided here, and, dying in 1546, was buried in the church. A school is endowed with £3. 13. 6. per annum, and is further supported by the rector.

CARLTON, a chapelry, in the parish and union of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. by W.) from Market-Bosworth; containing 292 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. The Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal crosses the south-west angle of the chapelry.

CARLTON, a hamlet, in the parish of GEDLING, union of BASFORD, S. division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 3 miles (E. N. E.) from Nottingham; containing 2015 inhabitants. This is an extensive hamlet, the inhabitants of which are chiefly employed in making hosiery and lace. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CARLTON (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of BLYTHING, hundred of HOXNE, locally in that of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, $\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. by W.) from Saxmundham; containing 133 inhabitants, and comprising 450 acres. The living is a rectory, consolidated, in 1679, with that of Kelsale, and valued in the king's books at £3. 11. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$. A chantry was founded here, about 1330, by John Framlingham, rector of Kelsale, for three chaplains to pray for the soul of Alice of Hainault, Countess Marshal.

CARLTON, a chapelry, in the parish of HUSTHWAITE, union of EASINGWOULD, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Easingwold; containing 171 inhabitants. It comprises 765a. 3r. 37p. of fertile land: the village is pleasantly situated on the road between Husthwaite and Little Thirkleby. The chapel is an ancient structure, annexed to the curacy of Husthwaite. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for £214. 15., payable to Trinity College, Cambridge, and there is a glebe of above 4 acres.

CARLTON, a township, in the parish of COVERHAM, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Middleham; containing 303 inhabitants. This village, which was formerly of much greater extent than it is at present, and had a capital messuage called the Hall, is situated on the north-west of the river Cover; and the township, usually styled Carlton Town, to distinguish it from a neighbouring district of the same name, comprises about 3380 acres, chiefly in the high moors and fells, and contains within its limits the residences of Anthony Buckle, Esq., the Rev. G. C. Tomlinson, &c. The lordship is divided among several proprietors, but the principal portion belongs to Mrs. Simpson, of Ripon. A school-house was erected in 1835, by subscription, where divine service is performed, under a licence from the bishop of the diocese; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a close, designated Quaker Garth, where it is probable that sect had once a meeting-house and burial-ground.

CARLTON, with LOFTHOUSE, a township, in the parish of ROTHWELL, Lower division of the wapentake of AGRIBIGG, W. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Leeds; containing 1536 inhabitants. The township comprises 1810 acres, of which 96 were inclosed in 1836, and brought into cultivation; the substratum abounds with coal, of which some mines are in operation. There are extensive establishments for the manufacture of rope and twine. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for £90. 4. 7., and the vicarial for £68.—See LOFTHOUSE.

CARLTON, a township, in the parish of GUISELEY, Upper division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, 2 miles (S. E.) from Otley; containing 205 inhabitants, including the inmates of a workhouse, erected here, in 1818, for an incorporation, under Gilbert's act, comprising forty townships. It consists of about 1270 acres of land, and has a small scattered village, lying at the distance of 2 miles to the north of Guiseley. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an inclosure act, in 1772. Here was a school, with a lending library attached, but it was discontinued four years since.

CARLTON, a township, in the parish of ROYSTON, wapentake of STAINCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Barnsley; containing 411 inhabitants. The monastery of Bretton anciently had possessions here; and at St. Ellen's Well, in the township, was a house belonging to that establishment, which was used as a place of retirement by the prior: there was also a chapel, at which a priest said the morning mass; and a well "to which," says Dodsworth, "they used to come on pilgrimage." The township comprises by computation 2090 acres of fertile land, of which upwards of 200 are wood and plantations: Lord Wharnccliffe is lord of the manor, and principal owner of the soil. The village, which is small, is situated near the Barnsley canal, and the road from Barnsley to Wakefield passes on the west of it, at the distance of about two miles. In the neighbourhood are several handsome residences.

CARLTON, CASTLE (Holy Cross), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (S. E. by S.) from Louth; containing 52 inhabitants. This place, which was once a populous market-town, enjoying many privileges granted by Henry I., derives its distinguishing appellation from an ancient castle, the baronial residence of Sir Hugh Bardolph, occupying one of three artificial mounts, each surrounded by a moat still visible. The parish comprises by computation 443 acres, of which 336 are arable, about 77 pasture, and 30 wood. The living is a rectory not in charge; net income, £69; patron, John Forster, Esq. The church has been enlarged by the addition of a chancel, and has been repewed.

CARLTON-COLVILLE (St. Peter), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, E. division of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.)

from Lowestoft; containing 785 inhabitants. The parish has Mutford broad on the north, and the navigable river Waveney runs on the north-west; it comprises by measurement 2902 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 10. 7½., and in the gift of the Rev. George Anguish: the tithes have been commuted for £387, and the glebe comprises 17½ acres. The church is a handsome structure, in the early English style, with a square embattled tower; it has a curiously sculptured font, and displays some details of a later period.

CARLTON-CURLIEU (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BILLESDON, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 7½ miles (N. N. W.) from Market-Harborough; containing, with the chapelry of Ilston-on-the-Hill, 208 inhabitants, of whom 57 are in Carlton-Curlieu. The ancient manor-house affords a specimen of the Elizabethan style of architecture, though, from a date, it does not appear to have been finished until the time of Charles I.; it is chiefly built of fine stone from Ketton, in Rutlandshire, and was purchased, at the termination of the civil war, by Sir Geoffrey Palmer, the first baronet. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 15. 10.; net income, £242; patron, Sir J. H. Palmer. There is a chapel of ease at Ilston.

CARLTON, EAST, comprising the united parishes of St. Mary and St. Peter the Apostle, in the union of HENSTEAD, hundred of HUMBLEYARD, E. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Norwich; containing 310 inhabitants, and including 850 acres. The corporation of Norwich purchased the principal manor, and holds it upon condition of carrying yearly to the king's house, wherever he may be, provided he be in England, twenty-four herring-pies or pasties, containing a hundred herrings, which the town of Yarmouth is bound to supply. The living of St. Mary's is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4, and, till lately, in the patronage of the Corporation; net income, £176. St. Peter's is a discharged sinecure rectory, valued in the king's books at £6, and in the gift of the Crown; net income, £188. The two churches formerly stood within fifty yards of each other; that of St. Peter has fallen into ruins. St. Mary's is a small edifice, chiefly in the early English style, and has a low square tower, surmounted by a wooden spire. A school is supported by subscription.

CARLTON, EAST (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of KETTERING, hundred of CORBY, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 7 miles (E. by N.) from Market-Harborough; containing 68 inhabitants. The parish, bounded on the north by the river Welland, comprises 1600*a. 5p.*, of which about 1000 acres are meadow and pasture, 188 wood, and the rest arable: it is crossed by the road from Harborough to Rockingham. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 16. 3.; net income, £108; patron, Sir J. H. Palmer, Bart. The church and the family mansion were rebuilt by the late proprietor: attached to the latter is a small park, which has recently been much improved by the addition of some beautiful grounds in the adjoining township of Middleton. An hospital, now occupied by five women, was founded, in 1668, by Sir Geoffrey Palmer, who endowed it with forty-six acres of land in the forest of Leighfield; and Lady Mary Palmer, in 1711, bequeathed the principal part of a fund of £32 per annum for apprenticing children.

CARLTON, GREAT (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7½ miles (E. S. E.) from Louth; containing 352 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 2196 acres, of which about 1327 are arable, and the rest pasture. The living is a vicarage, not in charge, endowed with the rectorial tithes, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln; net income, £571, arising from 300 acres of land, and the tithes, which have been commuted for £61. 3. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school was erected by Sir Edward Smith, Bart., in 1716, which is endowed with £20 per annum; four acres of land, yielding a rent of £6, were added on inclosing the lordship of Carlton Castle.

CARLTON-HIGHDALE, a township, in the parish of COVERHAM, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANGWEST, N. riding of YORK; varying from 6½ to 16 miles (S. W. by W.) from Middleham, and containing 385 inhabitants. This district, which is co-extensive with the chapelry of Horsehouse, and comprises about 12,480 acres of land, consists chiefly of wild and romantic tracts, but a large portion occupying the sides of Coverdale; and includes the hamlets of Arkleside, Blackrake, Coverhead, Bradley, Gammersgill, Horsehouse, Swineside, Woodale, and Pickle, all on the banks of the river Cover. Lead-ore is found in some of the lofty moors. In 1714, William Swithenbank left a house in Arkleside and £2 per annum, for widows, and £5 for educating poor children and putting out apprentices, within the township.

CARLTON-IN-LINDRICK (St. John), a parish, in the union of WORKSOP, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 3¼ miles (N. by E.) from Worksop; containing, in the north and south divisions, 1047 inhabitants. This appears to have been a place of some importance before the Conquest, from the many vestiges of antiquity still visible. A considerable trade is carried on in malt, which is chiefly disposed of at Manchester and Stockport. The parish comprises 4073*a. 25p.*: the great road between Doncaster and Nottingham runs through the village, and the Chesterfield canal passes within three miles. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 13. 4.; net income, £576; patron, Archbishop of York. The tithes were commuted for 541 acres of land in 1767, and there is an excellent glebe-house. The church, which is a spacious edifice, chiefly in the Norman style, has a fine arch at the principal entrance; the tower and the nave are in a later style, and the north and south aisles have been erected within the last few years. Schools are supported by a private individual; and the rector maintains a school for children of both sexes.

CARLTON-ISLEBECK, or MINIOTT, a chapelry, in the parish and union of THIRSK, wapentake of BIRD-FORTH, N. riding of YORK, 2½ miles (W. by S.) from Thirsk; containing 313 inhabitants. It comprises 1533 acres, of which 25*a. 2r. 29p.* are roads and waste: the village is pleasantly situated on the road from Thirsk to Ripon, and about one mile west of the Great North of England railway. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £103, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York, who is appropriator, and whose tithes have been commuted for £247; those of the perpetual curate of the parish for £73, and those of the rector of Kirby-Knowle for £16. The chapel is a small ancient edifice. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CARLTON, LITTLE (St. EDITH), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (E. S. E.) from Louth; containing 136 inhabitants. It comprises 1006*a. 1r. 37p.*, of which about 621 acres are arable, and 383 pasture. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 16. 10½., and in the gift of John Forster, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £195. 5., and the glebe consists of 16 acres.

CARLTON-LE-MOORLANDS (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, Lower division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 10 miles (S. W. by W.) from Lincoln; containing 331 inhabitants. It is bounded on the east by the river Brant, and on the west by the Witham, and comprises by measurement 2060 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 0. 10.; net income, £90; patron and improprator, Lord Middleton. The church is a neat plain structure. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and a school is supported by subscription.

CARLTON, NORTH, a parish, in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, 4½ miles (N. N. W.) from Lincoln; containing 178 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £35; patron and appropriator, Prebendary of Carlton, in the Cathedral of Lincoln.

CARLTON-RODE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of DEPWADE, E. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (S. E. by E.) from Attleborough; containing 938 inhabitants. It is said to take its distinguishing appellation from its ancient lord, Walter de Rode, who lived in the reign of Henry III. The road from New Buckenham to Norwich runs through the parish, which comprises about 2600 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £16, and in the gift of Sir R. J. Buxton, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £921, and the glebe consists of about 49 acres, to which is attached an excellent glebe-house, which has been considerably improved by the Rev. Francis Bevan. The church is a handsome structure, chiefly in the later English style, and has a low square embattled tower; the nave is lighted by clerestory windows, and is separated from the chancel by the remains of a well-executed carved screen, on which are painted, with gilding, representations of the Twelve Apostles. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists; and a school has been erected by the incumbent, by whom also it is chiefly supported. A town estate of twenty-two acres, in the hands of feoffees, is applied to the repairing of the church, and another of forty acres, in the distribution of coals. Here are the ruins of a free chapel, dedicated to the Virgin Mary.

CARLTON-SCROOP (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of GRANTHAM, wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (N. N. E.) from Grantham; containing 219 inhabitants. It is on the road from Grantham to Lincoln, and comprises 1347*a. 27p.* The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 1. 5½.; patrons, Earl Brownlow, Sir Robert Bromley, Bart., and George White, Esq., who present in turn. The tithes have been commuted for £380, and the glebe comprises 39 acres, to which is attached a glebe-house. A national school has just been built.

CARLTON, SOUTH, a parish, in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, 3½ miles (N. N. W.) from Lincoln; containing 166 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £56; patron and improprator, Lord Monson. A school was endowed, in 1678, by Sir John Monson, who bequeathed £10 per annum for a master.

CARLTON-UPON-TRENT, a chapelry, in the union of SOUTHWELL, parish of NORWELL, N. division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 6¾ miles (N.) from Newark; containing 230 inhabitants. At the distance of a quarter of a mile east of the village, is a ferry over the Trent, which bounds the chapelry. The tithes were commuted for land in 1765.

CARNABY (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BRIDLINGTON, wapentake of DICKERING, E. riding of YORK, 3½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Bridlington; containing 185 inhabitants. This place, of which the village is situated on the road between Bridlington and Driffild, comprises about 2000 acres: good limestone is quarried. Sir George Strickland, Bart., is lord of the manor, and chief owner of the soil. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 8. 11½.; net income, £44; patron and improprator, Sir George Strickland: it has been lately united to Fraisthorpe and Auburn. The church is a small edifice, with an embattled tower. A school is supported by private donations.

CARNFORTH, a township, in the parish of WARTON, union of LANCASTER, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 6 miles (N. by E.) from Lancaster; containing 306 inhabitants.

CARPERBY, a township, in the parish of AYGARTH, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 9 miles (W. by N.), from Middleham; containing, with Thoresby, 354 inhabitants. It contains about 4000 acres; and its village, which is long, and of well-built houses, is pleasantly seated on the north side of Wensleydale, under lofty moorland hills. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £120, payable to Trinity College, Cambridge. Here was anciently a chapel of ease, of which some remains exist. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans.

CARRINGTON, a chapelry, in the parish of BOWDON, union of ALTRINCHAM, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 10 miles (S. W.) from Manchester; containing 559 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 1394 acres, of which 960 are arable, 424 meadow and pasture, and 10 woodland: the two villages of Carrington and Partington form the chapelry. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £375; patron, Earl of Stamford. The tithes have been commuted for £150, of which £130 are payable to the Bishop of Chester, and £20 to the vicar of the parish. The chapel, dedicated to St. George, is a plain brick building, erected in 1759, chiefly at the cost of Mary, Countess of Stamford. There is a school with a small endowment.

CARRINGTON, a parochial chapelry, in the union of BOSTON, E. division of the soke of BOLINGBROKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.) from New Bolingbroke; containing 229 inhabitants. It was formerly in the parish of Helpringham, but was constituted a parochial chapelry in 1812, by an act of parliament, on the occasion of a very extensive drainage of fen lands. The living is a perpetual curacy, with West-ville; net income, £86; patrons, certain Trustees. The tithes were commuted for land under the act of inclosure. The chapel was consecrated in 1818.

CARRINGTON, a village, in the parish and union of BASFORD, hundred of BROXTOW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Nottingham; containing 853 inhabitants. This village, which is of recent origin, consists partly of handsome villas, occupied by merchants and lace manufacturers, who have warehouses in Nottingham. A church was consecrated in 1841.

CARROCK, or CANNOCK, PASSAGE, a chapelry, in the parish of ST. VEEP, union of LISKEARD, hundred of WEST, E. division of CORNWALL, 1 mile (N. E.) from Fowey. The chapel, which was dedicated to St. Cannock, is now in ruins.

CARROW, a hamlet, in the parish of WARDEN, union of HEXHAM, N. W. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Hexham. This place is said to have been the Roman station Procolitia, garrisoned by the Cohors Prima Bataavorum, on the line of Severus' military way; vestiges of the works are visible on an elevated situation, where two altars, now in the Durham library, have been found. About half a mile south-westward are traces of a square fort, called Broomdykes.

CARSHALTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of EPSOM, Second division of the hundred of WALLINGTON, E. division of SURREY, 3 miles (W.) from Croydon; containing 2228 inhabitants. In Domesday book this place is styled Aulton, signifying Old Town, and it retained that appellation until the reign of John, when it was called Kersalton, of which the present name is a variation. The parish comprises 2015*a*. 1*r*. 19*p*. The village is pleasantly situated near Banstead Downs, on a dry and chalky soil: the river Wandle runs through the parish, and, being joined in its course by other streams, forms in the centre of the village a broad sheet of water: a bridge was erected in 1828, which cost £500. The environs are pleasingly diversified, and contain numerous mansions, inhabited principally by London merchants. Carshalton House, a handsome mansion, occupies the site of an ancient edifice, in which Dr. Radcliffe, the munificent benefactor to the University of Oxford, resided during the time of the plague, in 1665. Near the churchyard is a fine spring, called Queen Ann Boleyn's Well; it is arched over with stone, and kept in good repair. A calico-printing establishment, formerly carried on, has been discontinued; but there are bleaching-grounds, and, on the banks of the river, within the limits of the parish, are several mills for the manufacture of snuff, paper, flocks, and leather, besides three large flour-mills: there are also some lime-kilns. A branch from the Wandsworth and Croydon railway extends to Hack Bridge, in the parish. The market, granted in the reign of Henry III., has long been discontinued; but a pleasure-fair is held on the 1st and 2nd of July. Carshalton is within the jurisdiction of a court of requests held at Croydon, for the recovery of debts under £5.

The LIVING is a vicarage, endowed since 1726 with the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £11. 12. 6.; net income, £600; patron, John Cator, Esq. The church is an ancient structure of brick, containing portions in the early and decorated styles of English architecture; the chancel, which is built of flint, appears to be the oldest part. The interior is neat, and contains some interesting monuments to the families of Fellowes and Scawen; and there are two brasses, representing Sir Nicholas Gaynesford and his lady, with a group of children: it has recently been repaired, and the galleries enlarged by subscription. A small place of worship for Wesleyans was erected in 1834; and a parochial school, and an infants' school, are supported by subscription. Christopher Muschamp, Esq., in 1660, bequeathed £200, to be invested in land, which now produces £25 per annum, for apprenticing children; and in 1726, Edward Fellowes, Esq., gave an annuity of £20, directing that half of it should be appropriated to the same purpose, and the remainder given to the poor, for whose benefit there are also some smaller bequests. A bronze figure of Cupid, about three inches and a half in height, and a brass bust of a man, both found in the river, were, in 1794, exhibited to the Society of Antiquaries. The Roman Stane-street passed through the parish.

CARSINGTON (ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, S. division of the county of DERBY, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Wirksworth; containing 235 inhabitants. The village is situated in a valley surrounded by hills, in which are quarries of limestone and lead-mines; and the Peak Forest railway passes through the parish. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 1. 10., and in the patronage of the Dean of Lincoln: the tithes have been commuted for £109, and the glebe comprises 46 acres. The church is a small ancient building, without a steeple, and scarcely distinguishable from the cliffs that overhang it. A school, founded by Mrs. Temperance Gill, in 1726, has an endowment of £60 per annum, arising from land. John Oldfield, an eminent nonconformist divine, was ejected from the benefice of the parish, in 1662; his son, Dr. Joshua Oldfield, of some literary celebrity, was born here in 1656. The Rev. Ellis Farneworth, an able translator from the Italian, was presented to the rectory in 1762.

CARSWELL, a hamlet, in the parish of BUCKLAND, union of FARRINGTON, hundred of GANFIELD, county of BERKS; containing 93 inhabitants.

CARSWELL, ABBOT'S.—See KERSWELL, ABBOT'S.

CARTER-MOOR, a hamlet, in the township of KIRKLEY, parish of PONTELAND, union, and W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 18 inhabitants. This place was formerly a separate township, but has been annexed, with Benridge, to the township of Kirkley: it is situated on the south side of the Blyth, and near the junction of the Pont with that river.

CARTHORPE, a township, in the parish of BURNESTON, union of THIRSK, wapentake of HALLIKELD, N. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Bedale; containing 314 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Kirklington to Burneston, and comprises 2055a. 3r. 19p. of land: the Marquess of Ailesbury is lord of the manor, and part proprietor of the soil. Camp Hill, a handsome modern mansion, stands on an eminence about half a mile to the south of the village. The tithes have been commuted for £369. 16. 6., of which £201 are payable to the impropiators, and £168. 16. 6. to the vicar of the parish. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Vestiges of a Roman camp are discernible in the township.

CARTINGTON, a township, in the parish and union of ROTHBURY, W. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Rothbury; containing, with Bankland, 66 inhabitants. The castle of this place, which is now in ruins, and the surrounding lands, belonged to a branch of the Widdrington family; they are now the property of Mr. Beck. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £5. 2. 2. An almshouse for Roman Catholic widows was founded by Lady Mary Charlton, who endowed it with about £6 per annum.

CARTMEL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, containing 4927 inhabitants: the town of Cartmel stands in the townships of Lower Allithwaite and Upper Holker, 14 miles (N. W. by N.) from Lancaster, and 254 (N. N. W.) from London. This place, supposed to have derived its name from the British words Kert, a camp, and mell, a fell, or small mountain, according to Camden, was given to St. Cuthbert, in 677, by Egfrid, King of Northumbria, with all the Britons inhabiting it. In 782, Ethelred, upon his restoration to the throne of that kingdom, allured from their sanctuary at York the sons of Alfwold, who had been advanced to the crown upon his expulsion, and put them to death at this place. In 1188, William Mareschall, Earl of Pembroke, founded a priory for regular canons of the order of St. Augustine, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and endowed it with all his lands at "Kertmell," and with other possessions, besides many privileges, among which was the exclusive right of appointing guides to conduct travellers over the extensive sands that bound this parish on the south: the establishment, at the Dissolution, consisted of ten religious, and forty-eight servants, and the revenue was estimated at £212. 11. 10.: the conventual church, which was also parochial, was purchased by the parishioners. The town is situated in a vale surrounded by lofty hills of varied aspect, behind which the vast fells of Coniston rise majestically to the north; the houses, with the exception of a row lately erected on the north side of the town, of modern and handsome appearance, are in general built of stone, rough-cast and white-washed: the environs abound with scenery strikingly diversified by richly-wooded eminences and barren hills. The parish is bounded on the south by the bay of MORCAME, into which it extends for a considerable distance, and where, at low water, there is a passage over the sands to Bolton: the longer course over the sands is nine miles; the shorter, over that part called the Leven sands, is four: guides are usually waiting to conduct over both. Between lake Windermere and the river is Furness Point, separated from Walney Island by a narrow channel, the entrance of which is defended by the Pile of Fouldrey, built by one of the abbots, on a rock in the sea. The district abounds with rocks of limestone and marble, but very little trade is carried on; there are cotton-mills at Upper Holker. The market is on Tuesday; the fairs are on Whit-Monday and the Monday after Oct. 23rd; and cattle-fairs are held on the Wednesday before Easter and November 5th.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Earl of Burlington, with a net income of £113: the tithes were commuted for land in 1796. The church is a spacious cruciform structure, in the early English style, with a curious tower. After having been suffered to remain in a state of neglect for nearly a century from the dissolution of the priory, during which time the conventual buildings had been removed, it was substantially repaired, in 1640, by George Preston, Esq., of Holker. The chancel contains some richly carved stalls and fine tabernacle work; on the north side of the altar is the tomb of William de Walton, one of the priors, and on the opposite side is a magnificent altar-tomb with recumbent figures of one of the Harringtons and his lady, supposed to be Sir John Harrington, who accompanied Edward I. into Scotland, besides many other sepulchral monuments. The free grammar school, built in 1790, in Upper Holker township, is supported by an endowment of £125 per annum, arising from donations and legacies. Dr. Edmund Law, Bishop of Carlisle, whose father was curate of one of the chapels in the parish for forty-nine years, received the rudiments of his education in the school. In a wood in the vicinity, about thirty years ago, 680 Roman coins were dug up, dated from 193 to 253, which are now in the possession of Lord George Cavendish; and at Broughton, a coin of the Emperor Adrian was discovered. Three miles to the south of the town is a spring, called Holy Well, the water of which is efficacious in gout, and in nephritic and cutaneous diseases; and at Pit Farm, in the parish, is an intermitting spring.

CARTMEL-FELL, a chapelry, in the parish of CARTMEL, union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 8 miles (W. S. W.) from Kendal; containing 356 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £67; patron, Earl of Burlington, as lessee under the Bishop of Chester. The chapel is dedicated to St. Anthony. There is a small school, with an endowment of £8 per annum.

CARTWORTH, a township, in the parish of KIRKBURTON, union of HUDDERSFIELD, Upper division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, W. riding of YORK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Huddersfield; containing 2247 inhabitants. This place, which comprises about 2820 acres, includes in its township part of the villages of Hinchliffe-Mill and Holmfirth, and extends upwards of two miles northward from the latter place, along the romantic dale of the Holme stream: much of the land is high moor, inclosed under an act, in 1827. The manufacture of woollen-cloth is carried on to a considerable extent. The head of a brass Roman spear was dug up in the bog on the moor, in 1820.

CARWOOD.—See SIDDON-CARWOOD.

CARY-COATS, a township, in the parish of THOCKINGTON, union of BELLINGHAM, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 12 miles (N.) from Hexham; containing 51 inhabitants. It adjoins the Bavington estate, on the north-west, and was probably at some period the appanage of a younger branch of the ancient house of Shafto: at the close of the last century it was the estate and residence of one of that family.

CASHIO, or CASHIOBURY, a hamlet, in the parish and union of WATFORD, hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of ST. ALBAN'S, county of HERTFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W.) from Watford; containing, with the hamlet of Leavesden, 1548 inhabitants. In the time of the early Britons this was a place of importance, having been the seat of Cassibelauus, King of the Cassii, from which it derived its name; the Saxon kings of Mercia also made it their residence, and Offa included it in the possessions that he gave to the monastery of St. Alban's, and called it Albaneston, which was again changed by the Normans into Caisho, since converted into Cashio. Edward IV. constituted it a liberty, and it continued annexed to the crown from the period of the Dissolution until James I. granted the whole liberty of the monastery of St. Alban's to Robert Whitmore, Esq., and John Eldred, Gent.

CASSINGTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of WOODSTOCK, hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Oxford; containing, with the hamlet of Worton, 381 inhabitants. The manor formerly belonged to the Montacutes, one of whom, in the reign of Henry II., obtained leave to convert the mansion into a castle, of which some remains existed till within the last 50 years, when the materials were used in building the parsonage-house. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. The tithes have been commuted for £210, and the glebe consists of 55 acres. The church, which is in the Norman style, was originally built in the reign of Henry II., by Geoffrey Clinton, chamberlain to that monarch: the arch supporting the tower, and the groined roof of the chancel, of Norman character, are the chief remains of the ancient building. Ten boys are educated from the produce of an estate bequeathed by Henry Alnutt; from which fund is likewise maintained an almshouse at Goring Heath, to which two almsmen from this parish are eligible. There are also bequests of bread and fuel to the poor; the income, which arises from land purchased at various times, is £37. 8.

CASSOP, a township, in the parish of KELLOE, S. division of EASINGTON ward, union and N. division of the county of DURHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Durham; containing 1076 inhabitants. This place, anciently called Cazhope, and included within the limits of Queringdonshire, was formerly the residence of the family of Reed, and of that of Busby, and is at present held under the see of Durham. The village lies, with a northern aspect, on a high swell of limestone hills, separated from Quarrington on the south by a broad hollow vale, and commanding an extensive prospect of a variegated tract in the north-western direction. The produce of Cassop and Cassop-moor collieries is shipped at Hartlepool. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for £104. 18. 8., payable to Christ's Hospital, Sherburn, and the vicarial for £17. 4.

CASTERN, a hamlet, in the parish of ILAM, N. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Ashbourn; containing 45 inhabitants.

CASTERTON, a township, in the parish of KIRKBY-LONSDALE, union of KENDAL, LONSDALE ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 2 miles (N. E.) from Kirkby-Lonsdale; containing 623 inhabitants. It is supposed to have received its name from an ancient castle, every vestige of which has been removed. A church was erected in 1833. A chapel formerly stood at Chapel-Head Close, near which is a well, called St. Coume's, probably a contraction of St. Columbe, the tutelar saint of the chapel.

CASTERTON, GREAT (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of STAMFORD, hundred of EAST, county of RUTLAND, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Stamford; containing 376 inhabitants. This was anciently a Roman station, and several coins and the remains of an encampment have been discovered; it was subsequently demolished by the Piets and Scots, who ravaged the island as far as Stamford, whence they were driven back to their own territories by the Saxons under Hengist. Its former name was Brig-Casterton, from a bridge over the Gwash, or Wash, here. The barony was held by various lords, until it reverted to the crown in the reign of Henry VIII., in consequence of its possessor, John, Lord Hussey, being attainted of high treason, and beheaded at Lincoln, for joining a commotion raised in Lincolnshire; it is now the property of the Marquess of Exeter. The parish comprises by measurement 2258 acres, of which 2088 are arable and pasture, and 170 woodland. The great road from London to Edinburgh passes through the village; and great improvement has been made by lowering a steep hill and constructing a viaduct, at an expense of £5000. The living is a rectory, with that of Pickworth annexed, valued in the king's books at £11. 2. 11.; net income, £686; patron, the Marquess. The tithes were commuted for corn-rents, under an act of inclosure, in 1795; and the glebe consists of about 64 acres, to which is attached an excellent glebe-house.

CASTERTON, LITTLE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of STAMFORD, hundred of EAST, county of RUTLAND, 2 miles (N. W. by N.) from Stamford; containing 132 inhabitants. This parish includes the ancient hamlet of Tolethorpe, where was formerly a college of priests or a chantry, refounded, and endowed with ten marks per annum, in the 36th of Edward III., by William de Burton, to whom, in 1413, Edward, Duke of York, granted the lordship. The estate was purchased from his descendant, Thomas de Burton, about 1504, by Christopher Brown, Esq., ancestor of the Countess Dowager of Pomfret, after whose decease, the reversion of the property, together with the advowson of the living, was purchased by the Earl of Burlington. The parish comprises about 1287 acres, which, with the exception of about 279 acres, subject to a corn-rent, are tithe-free. The great north road runs about a mile from the village. Good freestone is quarried. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 15. 5.; net income, £254; patron, Hon. C. C. Cavendish. The tithes were commuted for land and a corn-rent in 1796; the glebe comprises about 53 acres. The church is a small edifice, partly of later Norman architecture, and partly in the early, decorated, and later English styles; the chancel has been recently rebuilt. A parochial school is supported chiefly by endowment, and a small school is partly maintained by the rector. At the western extremity of the parish, but now filled up by the formation of a new road, was a deep fosse, part of the Roman camp at Great Casterton; and not far from the manor-house at Toleshorpe, is a spring of carbonated chalybeate water, without any mixture of sulphuric acid, similar to the water of Tonbridge Wells, but less powerful.

CASTHORPE, a hamlet, in the parish of BARROWBY, union of GRANTHAM, wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREE, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN; containing 51 inhabitants.

CASTLE-ACRE (St. James), a parish, in the union and hundred of FREEBRIDGE-LYNN, W. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (N.) from Swaffham; containing 1495 inhabitants. This place, called Acre at the time of the Domesday survey, is noted chiefly for the remains of its ancient castle and priory, from the former of which it takes the prefix to its name; and it appears, from the vestiges of a Roman road leading from Thetford to Brancaster, the discovery of a tessellated pavement, and, lately, of several coins (among which were some of Vespasian and Constantine), to have been a Roman station, on the site of which the castle was probably erected. This fortress was built by William Warren, first Earl of Surrey, to whom the manor, with 149 others, was given by the Conqueror, and who made it the head of all his lordships; it was probably enlarged by his descendant, who, in 1297, entertained Edward I. as his guest. The parish comprises 3249 acres, of which about 2639 acres are arable, 461 meadow and pasture, 13 wood, and 79 common; the land is in general rich, and the surface boldly undulated. The village consists of two good streets, on the north bank of the river Nar. Fairs for toys and pedlery are held on St. James's-day and August 5th; and petty-sessions are held once a fortnight. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.; patron and impropiator, the Earl of Leicester: the great tithes have been commuted for £610, and the vicarial for £168, and the glebe comprises 3½ acres. The church, situated on the crown of the acclivity above the priory, is a spacious and ancient structure, in the decorated and later English styles, with a lofty square embattled tower, and exhibits, in many of its details, fine specimens of ancient architecture; the font, which is said to have been removed from the ancient priory, is surmounted by a beautiful piece of tabernacle work. There are places of worship for Baptists, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans; and a national school for 200 children was built in 1839, and is supported by subscription. Sufficient remains exist to indicate the extent of the castle, which, with its appendages, comprises an area of more than eighteen acres, surrounded by an embattled wall seven feet in thickness, and strengthened by three lofty buttresses built over the broad and deep moat by which the castle was surrounded; the buildings were of a circular form, and erected on the slope of a gentle eminence. To the east of the castle are the ruins of the priory, established by Earl Warren, in 1085, for monks of the Cluniac order, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and subordinate to a similar establishment, by the same founder, in Lewes, in the county of Sussex, in the 24th of Edward I. The revenues, which had become very considerable by successive augmentations, were seized under pretence of its being an alien priory, but were subsequently restored; and in the reign of Edward II., it was secured against further molestation by a royal order, as coming within the class of indigenous establishments: its revenue, at the Dissolution, was £324. 17. 5., and, with the site, was granted to Thomas, Duke of Norfolk; it is now the property of the Earl of Leicester. The priory church was a spacious cruciform structure, with two towers at the west end, and a massive central tower; the greater portion of the west front is still remaining, and, with the exception of a large window of later insertion over the entrance, is an elegant specimen of the most enriched style of Norman architecture. The conventual buildings are at present a farm-house and offices: a large room, called the prior's dining-room, and now a granary, has a fine oriel window. On making excavations within the walls of the chapter-house, in 1841, were found some beautifully embossed tiles, with heraldic devices, and some bulls of the Popes Honorius and Innocent.

CASTLE-ASHBY, county of NORTHAMPTON.—See ASHBY, CASTLE.—And other places having a similar distinguishing prefix will be found under the proper name.

CASTLE-CAMPS (All Saints), a parish, in the union of LINTON, hundred of CHILFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, 5¼ miles (S. E. by E.) from Linton; containing 854 inhabitants. This place was formerly the seat of the Veres, earls of Oxford, one of whom received it by grant from Henry I., as lord high chamberlain of England; the site of their once magnificent castle is now occupied by a farm-house, but the moat and some slight vestiges are still visible. The estate was subsequently purchased by Thomas Sutton, the founder of the Charter-house in London, who made it a portion of the endowment of that institution. The parish, which is situated near the road from Cambridge to Colchester, comprises by computation 2800 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 4. 2., and in the gift of the Governors of the Charter-house: the tithes have been commuted for £630, and the glebe comprises 71 acres. The church is a handsome structure, in the later English style. There is a place of worship for Baptists. A school for girls is supported by Benjamin Keene, Esq.; and the rector contributes to the maintenance of another. A national school for boys is supported by donations.

CASTLE-CARROCK (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of BRAMPTON, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 4½ miles (S. by E.) from Brampton; containing 351 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 5500 acres, the soil of which on the west is dry, gravelly, and very stony; and on the east, which is rugged and mountainous, good for grazing, resting on extensive beds of limestone and freestone. It is bounded on the east and north by the small river Gelt, which rises in the royal forest of Geltsdale, a hilly tract of moorland, forming the south-eastern part of it, and held on lease by the Earl of Carlisle. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 12. 11.; net income, £159; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Carlisle.

The tithes were commuted for land, in 1801. The church is a neat structure, rebuilt of freestone in 1828. The former edifice is supposed to have been built out of the ruins of an ancient castle that stood within an intrenchment near the village, the lines of which are distinctly visible: there is another intrenchment at a short distance. On the inclosure, an allotment of twenty acres, producing about £12 per annum, was assigned for the endowment of a school, now conducted on the national system. Upon the summit of a long and lofty fell, forming the northern point of the range of mountains extending from Crossfell, near Alston, are two cairns, one of which, called Hesseckraise, is of considerable magnitude; and on the removal of another cairn near Gelt Bridge, about 1775, a human skeleton was discovered in a species of coffin made of rude stones. Near the church is a mineral spring, the water of which is of the same quality as that of the Gilsland Spa.

CASTLE-CARY (ALL SAINTS), a market-town and parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of CARSASH, E. division of SOMERSET, 11 miles (E. N. E.) from Somerton, and 113 (W. S. W.) from London; containing, with the hamlets of Clanville, Cockhill, and Dimmer, 1942 inhabitants. This place probably derived its name from an ancient castle, originally belonging to a lord of the name of Carey, which was defended against King Stephen by its owner, Lord Lovell, one of whose descendants having embraced the cause of the deposed monarch, Richard II., it became forfeited to the crown: the site is still called the Camp, and weapons of iron have been found in it occasionally: the only remains are some slight traces of the intrenchments. Charles II., after the battle of Worcester, took refuge in the manor-house. The town is pleasantly situated, and consists of two parts, extending together nearly a mile: the houses are neatly built and amply supplied with water; the air is salubrious, and the environs abound with pleasing scenery. The market, which is on every alternate Tuesday, is well attended, and supplied with sheep and cattle of all kinds, from October till the spring fairs, which are on the Tuesday before Palm-Sunday, May 1st, and Whit-Tuesday; besides which, a fair is held on the first Tuesday after the 19th of September, for cattle, broad-cloth, and other merchandise. The parish comprises by admeasurement 2572 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 16. 3.; patron, Bishop of Bath and Wells; impropiator, Sir H. R. Hoare, Bart. The great tithes have been commuted for £301. 10., and the vicarial for £378; the impropriate glebe consists of 65 acres, and the vicarial of 10 acres. The church is a handsome structure, occupying an elevated situation; the archdeacon holds his visitations in it. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans.

CASTLE-CHURCH (ST. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the E. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, union, and S. division of the county, of STAFFORD, 1 mile (S. W.) from Stafford; containing, with the townships of Forebridge and Rickerscote, 1484 inhabitants. It derives its name from the ancient baronial castle of Stafford, to which its church was originally an appendage, and comprehends a portion of the town of Stafford. The Grand Junction railway passes through the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £120; it is in the patronage of the Crown, and Lord

Stafford and others are impropiators. Near the town is a Roman Catholic chapel, built, in 1822, by the late Edward Jerningham, Esq.; it is a small, but elegant, structure, containing seventeen of the old stalls taken from Lichfield cathedral, and has a noble organ. There are national and infants' schools, aided by private charity; and adjoining the Roman Catholic chapel is a school, supported by Lord Stafford.

CASTLE-COMBE (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHIPPENHAM, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, 6½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Chippenham; containing 600 inhabitants. The village, which is very considerable, was anciently celebrated for a castle, built in the early part of the thirteenth century, by Walter de Dunstanville, son-in-law of Reginald, Earl of Cornwall, which was dismantled before the close of the fourteenth; it stood on a hill north of the village, where the remains of its intrenchments are still discernible. A market was obtained by Bartholomew, Lord Badlesmere, which has been discontinued; but the market-cross remains in the centre of the village. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9; patron, William Scroop, Esq. The church appears to be of very ancient date, and consists of a nave, north and south aisles, and a chancel, with a tower at the west end, about eighty feet high, supported by angular buttresses with pinnacles. A national school has been established.

CASTLE-DYKINGS, an extra-parochial place, extending into the parishes of ST. MARY MAGDALEN and ST. PAUL-IN-THE-BAIL, wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 139 inhabitants.

CASTLE-EATON (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of HIGHWORTH and SWINDON, hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, Cricklade and N. divisions of WILTS, 3½ miles (S. by E.) from Fairford; containing 312 inhabitants. The parish is bounded by the river Isis. Some vestiges of the ancient castle from which it takes its name, may still be traced, whereof the chief is the moat by which it was surrounded. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19, and in the patronage of the family of Goddard: the tithes have been commuted for £667, and the glebe comprises 79½ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. A national school was erected in 1839.

CASTLE-MORTON (ST. GREGORY), a parish, in the union of UPTON-UPON-SEVERN, Lower division of the hundred of PERSHORE, Upton and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Upton; containing 855 inhabitants. The living is a discharged perpetual curacy; annexed to the vicarage of Longdon, and valued in the king's books at £5. 8. 6½. The great tithes are appropriate to the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, and have been commuted for £350, and the small tithes for £155; the glebe consists of 3 acres. The church is a very ancient structure, with a fine old tower and steeple: opposite to it is an artificial mound fifty feet high, surrounded by a moat, and supposed to have been thrown up to protect the church during the civil war in the reign of Charles I. There are charitable bequests for the poor, amounting to about £30 per annum.

CASTLE-NORTHWICH, a township, in the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH, union of NORTHWICH, Second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, S. division of the county of CHESTER; containing 746 inhabitants.

Seal and Arms.

Sussex, on a hill to the south of the town, and, according to the author of the Munimenta Antiqua, on the site of one of King Alfred's great castles, of which some arches, included within the subsequent buildings, are supposed to be remains. In this castle, Isabel of France, queen of Edward II., after the death of Mortimer, was detained in confinement, from the year 1330, until her decease, in 1358. It passed from the family of Albini to the barons of Montalt, the last of whom died without issue, when his widow surrendered the lordship for £400 per annum, to Queen Isabella, at that time regent, who was visited here, in 1340, by her son, Edward III., and his queen. Edward III., on the death of his mother, settled Castle-Rising on his son Edward; it afterwards passed to the Howards, dukes of Norfolk, and subsequently to the Berkshire branch, who, in 1745, succeeded to the title of Earl of Suffolk; it came to the present proprietor by marriage. The principal remains are the shell of the keep, a square tower, the walls of which are three yards in thickness, with some ornamented doorways and windows in the Norman style of architecture, though greatly dilapidated; the site of the great hall, and some vestiges of the state apartments, may be traced; the principal entrance is over a ruined bridge of one circular arch, defended by a tower gateway.

This was once a considerable sea-port, inferior only to those of Lynn and Yarmouth, in this county; but the harbour becoming choked up with sand, its trade declined, and from the consequent decrease of its population, the market, which was held twice a week, has been discontinued for many years: the vicinity was formerly subject to inundations of the sea, to prevent which an embankment has been constructed, and is kept in an effective state. The government was originally vested in a mayor, twelve aldermen, and an indefinite number of burgesses, aided by a recorder, high steward, &c.; but the corporation has gradually fallen into decay. Of the rank which the place held, as an ancient borough, it still retains a memorial, in the precedence given to the name of the mayor in the commission of the peace for the county. The elective franchise was conferred in the last year of the reign of Philip and Mary, from which time the borough returned two members to parliament, till disfranchised by the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45: the right of election was vested in the free burgesses, the number of whom had been reduced to two or three; and the mayor was returning officer. The parish is situated on the road from Lynn to Wells, and comprises 2096*a.* 2*r.* 21*p.*, of which 1008 acres are arable, 865 meadow and pasture, and 223 woodland; the soil is of a sandy and clayey nature. A trout stream runs through the parish, called the Rising river. The LIVING is a discharged rectory, with that of Roydon consolidated, valued in the king's books at £8; patron, F. G. Howard, Esq. The tithes have been commuted for £320, and the glebe comprises 23 acres, to which is attached a glebe-house. The church is an ancient structure, with a square tower rising from the line of union between the nave and chancel; it exhibits fine specimens of the Norman style, and has an eastern window in the decorated English style; the entrance is enriched with varied mouldings, and on each side of the large window above it are series of intersecting arches; the font is very ancient and highly ornamented. A national school is supported chiefly by the family of Howard; and near the church is an hospital, containing thirteen apartments, a large hall, and a chapel, built in 1613, by Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton, who endowed it with a rent-charge of £100 for twelve aged women and a governess. To the west of the castle is a square mount, one acre in extent, and to the east of it a circular mount surrounded by a ditch; the former is by some supposed to have been a Roman camp, though by others both are thought to have been thrown up by the people of Lynn, when they besieged the castle, and compelled the Earl of Arundel to relinquish his claim to one-third of the customs of his port. There are some chalybeate springs in the parish.

CASTLE-THORPE (St. SIMON AND St. JUDE), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Stony-Stratford; containing 365 inhabitants. This place derives its name from the ancient castle of the barony of Hanslope, the site of which exhibits traces of very extensive buildings: it was taken and demolished, in 1217, by Fulke de Brent, when it was garrisoned by its owner, William Manduit, one of the barons who were in arms against Henry III. The London and Birmingham railway passes within a short distance. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Hanslope. Thomas Tyrell, one of the judges in the court of common pleas in the reign of Charles II., resided here, and was interred in the chancel of the church, where a handsome monument was erected by his widow.

CASTLE-THORPE, a township, in the parish of BROUGHTON, union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, E. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 346 inhabitants.

CASTLEFORD (All SAINTS), a parish, in the Upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, W. riding of YORK; containing 1850 inhabitants, of whom 1414 are in the township of Castleford, 3 miles (N. W.) from Pontefract. This place is by some writers supposed to have been the site of the Roman station Legionium, or Lagetium, described in Antonine's Itinerary as being situated on the river Aire, where it was crossed by a ford, on the line of the ancient Hermanstreet which passes between Doncaster and York: various Roman antiquities have been frequently discovered, among which was a scarce denarius of Caracalla, with a lion on the reverse. It is related, that the citizens of York, being pursued by Ethelred's army, in 750, turned at this place, and committed great slaughter on their pursuers. After the Norman Conquest, the parish was given to Ilbert de Laci, the heiress of whose family conveyed it by marriage, with the whole honour of Pontefract, to John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster. The village is situated on the south bank of the river Aire, at a short distance from its junction with the Calder, the latter of which, in 1698, was made navigable to Wakefield, and the Aire to Leeds. The united rivers are crossed by a handsome stone bridge of three arches, which was rebuilt in 1808, and connects Castleford with the village of Allerton-Bywater on the north side of the river. The parish comprises the townships of Castleford and Glass-Houghton, and contains 1534*a.* 2*r.* 18*p.*, of which 517 acres are in the township of Castleford; 300 of these are arable, and 213 meadow and pasture. The township of Glass-Houghton is celebrated for its building-lime, and for its abundance of fine sand, used by iron-founders and glass-manufacturers, the latter of whom having, as is supposed, formerly had a manufactory here, caused the prefix to be given to the name of the township. The neighbourhood shares a considerable traffic, being, through the junction of the two rivers, an important station in the chain of inland navigation, extending from the Ouse and Humber to nearly all the parts of Yorkshire west of Castleford, and Lancashire; it is also an intermediate station for the York and North-Midland railway. There is a dock-yard for building sloops, and a dry-dock for repairs; many owners of small craft reside here; and among the manufactories and branches of trade, are a timber-yard, oil and corn-mills, several granaries, a pottery of black and stone-ware, a whiting-mill, and glass-bottle works. A court leet, baron, and view of frankpledge, is held in May and October. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 13. 1½, and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Lancaster; net income, £555: the tithes were commuted for corn-rents, under an inclosure act, in 1816. The church is thought to stand on part of the Roman camp above mentioned; it is a cruciform structure, with a tower rising at the intersection. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans in each of the townships. Three schools, in connexion with the National Society, are supported by subscription; one is an infants' school; a residence for the master was built in 1843.

CASTLETON (St. EDMUND), a parish, in the union of CHAPEL-EN-LE-FRITH, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 4½ miles (N.) from Tideswell; containing 1500 inhabitants, of whom 941 are in the township of Castleton. This parish consists of the townships of Castleton and Edale, the former of which is said to have taken its name from a castle built by William Peverell, natural son of the Conqueror, which, from its situation upon a steep and high peak, was called the Castle of the Peak, or Peak Castle; but from various records it appears that a castle existed previously, supposed to have been erected by Edward the Elder, or his heroic sister Ethelfleda, and which, in the reign of Edward the Confessor, was the property of Earl Gundeburne. The castle remained with the Peverells until the attainder of the third William, when it was granted by Henry II. to his son John, Earl of Montaigne, afterwards King John; and during the absence of his brother, Richard I., Hugh Nonant, Bishop of Coventry, held it. In 1204, King John appointed Hugh Neville governor; but the disaffected barons seized it and kept possession until the reign of Henry III., from which period it had various occupiers, until settled by Edward III. upon his son, the Earl of Richmond, commonly called John of Gaunt, who was created Duke of Lancaster, in 1362, when the castle became part of the duchy of Lancaster. The Duke of Devonshire now possesses it, as lessee under the crown. The extent of the ruins evinces the former magnitude of the building; the castle yard, the walls of which are in some places twenty feet high and nine feet thick, occupying almost the entire summit of the hill; the keep, consisting of two stories, almost entire, and standing at the south-western point of this high and precipitous limestone rock, towering above the mouth of the great cavern of the Peak, is fifty feet in height, the whole being nearly isolated, and only to be approached with difficulty from the north.

The PARISH, exclusively of Edale, comprises about 2900 acres, exhibiting a very hilly surface, and several varieties of soil: the township of Castleton occupies the western extremity of the large and deep valley which commences at Mam Tor, and runs eastward to join the valley of the Derwent. The great limestone district of Derbyshire has its northern termination at Castleton, the hills to the north being upon gritstone, and those to the south on limestone: the soil on the south side is very superior. The village, which is situated at the foot of the Castle-hill, was fortified by a rampart, whereof the ditch is still visible, extending from the ravines at the base of the rock, to the outworks connected with the castle. The inhabitants principally derive their support from the mining district by which it is surrounded. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 7. 6.; net income, £186; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Chester. The great tithes have been commuted for £100, and the vicarial for £50: the appropriate glebe consists of 87½ acres, and the vicarial of 22 acres. The church is a small ancient edifice: the arch, with its mouldings entire, separating the nave from the chancel, is a fine specimen of early English architecture: the pews are of oak curiously carved; but the exterior has been greatly modernised. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school has been endowed with about £23 per annum, arising from land, by Richard Bagshaw and others.

The whole of the district abounds with greater NATURAL CURIOSITIES than almost any other portion of the empire. Immediately under the walls of the castle is Peak Cavern, or the Devil's Cave, a succession of vast and magnificent excavations, formed in the interior of a stupendous rock. The approach to it is by the side of a clear stream, flowing from limestone rocks, that here rise to the height of 260 feet on each side, and form the entrance to the cave, which is in a dark and gloomy recess, consisting of a tolerably well-formed arch, 46 feet high and 120 feet wide, and exhibiting a chequered diversity of coloured stones, from which a fluid that soon petrifies is continually dropping. Immediately within the arch is a cavern of nearly the same extent, and in depth about 90 feet, where some twine-makers have established a manufactory. Here the light disappears, and the rest of the cavern must be explored by the aid of a torch. The arch leading to the next chamber is narrow and low, until arriving at a spacious opening, called the Bell-house: at the end is a stream of water 42 feet broad, over which it is necessary that visitors should be ferried. On landing, another vast vault, 200 feet square and 140 feet high, presents itself; at the end of which is another stream generally crossed on foot: here the passage leads to what is termed Roger Rain's House, a projecting pile of rocks on which water is incessantly dropping. The next excavation is called the Chancel, which leads to what has been denominated the Devil's Cellar, and then follow numerous other immense cavities, that have received various appellations; such as Half-way House, Great Tom of Lincoln, &c.; the whole extending 2300 feet from the entrance, and supposed to be 645 feet in depth from the summit of the mountain. About a mile from this is the Speedwell mine, situated at the foot of what is called "the Winnets," from the gusts of wind that constantly prevail here, in consequence of the formation of this mountainous range: the mine was formerly worked for lead. • The descent is by about 100 steps, beneath an arched vault, leading to the sough, or level, where a boat conveys the explorer over a very broad stream, bounded by an immense gulf, the depth of which has never been accurately ascertained, though sounded by a line of 350 feet; and above, the roof of the cavern is invisible, even with the aid of rockets and Bengal lights. The rushing of the superfluous water through an artificial gate into this profound chasm, which has already swallowed more than 40,000 tons of rubbish, arising from the blasting of the rocks, without the least apparent diminution of its depth, produces an appalling effect. A little further west is the Odin lead-mine, said to have been worked by the Saxons, who honoured it with the name of one of their deities, and than which, although it has been in operation for so many centuries, few mines in the county are more productive. At some distance beyond this, raising its majestic head 1300 feet above the vale of Castleton, is the Mam Tor, or Mother-hill, having also received the name of the Shivering Mountain, from the fragments of shale and gritstone almost continually falling from its south side, and which have formed an elevated mount in the valley, called Little Mam Tor. On its summit are the remains of a camp, supposed to be Saxon, with the greater part of the rampart entire; and on the south-west side are two barrows, in one of which, when opened a few years since, were found a brass celt and fragments of an unbaked urn. Near this mountain is the Water Hull Mine, where is procured the beautiful and peculiar fluor spar, the most esteemed of which are the violet-blue and rose-coloured, which are worked into elegant vases, urns, &c.: here is also found, between the schistus and limestone, a species of elastic bitumen, that burns with a bright flame; another variety, less elastic, is formed of filaments, and is called wood bitumen. About half a mile midway in this mountainous ravine, which exhibits in many places proofs of volcanic origin, is a place called the Cove, where large masses of basaltic rocks are conspicuous, in which are imbedded quartz, crystals, &c. Such an assemblage of natural curiosities renders the neighbourhood of Castleton very attractive to visitors, being one of the most interesting districts in the kingdom.

CASTLETON (St. Mary Magdalene), a parish, in the union and hundred of Sherborne, Sherborne division of the county of Dorset, 1 mile (E. N. E.)

from Sherborne; containing 113 inhabitants. It comprises 50 acres, chiefly pasture, and lies contiguous to the park and residence of Earl Digby, lord lieutenant of the county. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £81; patron, Earl Digby.

CASTLETON, a township, in the parish and union of Rochdale, hundred of Salford, S. division of the county of Lancaster, 2 miles (S. E. by S.) from Rochdale; containing 14,279 inhabitants, many of whom are employed in the woollen and cotton manufactures. This place derives its name from an ancient castle, one of the twelve Saxon castles in the county, the keep of which still remains. Part of Rochdale is situated within the township, where are cisterns for supplying that town with water, and gas-works for lighting it. Two schools are supported by endowment, and there are also numerous Sunday schools.

CASTLETON, a hamlet, in the parish of Marshfield, union of Newport, Upper division of the hundred of Wentllog, county of Monmouth, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Newport. Here anciently stood a castle, occupied, if not built, by the Normans, to protect their conquest of Wentllog: the only remains are some small ruins of the citadel, and the chapel, converted into a barn: near the site is a barrow. On the level summit of an adjoining hill is a circular encampment, called Pen-y-Park-Newydd.

CASTLE-VIEW, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union, and adjoining the borough of Leicester, hundred of Guthlaxton, S. division of the county of Leicester; containing 120 inhabitants.

CASTLEY, a township, in the parish of Leathley, Upper division of the wapentake of Claro, W. riding of York, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Otley; containing 110 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 480 acres, and is bounded on the south, and partly on the east and west, by the river Wharfe.

CASTON (Holy Cross), a parish, in the union and hundred of Wayland, W. division of Norfolk, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Watton; containing 513 inhabitants, and comprising about 1600 acres. The living is a rectory, united with those of Rockland All Saints and St. Andrew, and valued in the king's books at £11. 19. 2.: the glebe comprises 59 acres, with a house. The church is a spacious edifice in the decorated and later English styles, with a square tower; the interior contains a monument of the founder, supposed to be one of the Castons. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. At the inclosure, in 1813, $2\frac{1}{2}$ acres were allotted to the poor, and 25 acres to the occupiers of 34 cottages, having common rights.

CASTOR, county of Lincoln.—See Caistor.

CASTOR (St. Keneburgha), a parish, in the union and soke of Peterborough, N. division of the county of Northampton, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Peterborough; containing 1313 inhabitants. This village, and the opposite one of Chesterton, occupy the site of the Roman station Durobriva, by the Saxons called Dormancester; and a great quantity of coins, from Trajan to Valens, fragments of urns, tiles, &c., have been discovered. The Roman Ermin-street commenced here, and, proceeding some distance, branched off into two divisions, the remains of which are still visible, one leading to Stamford, and the other, by Lolham-Bridges, through West Deeping, into Lincolnshire. Lady Keneburgha's way is supposed to have been an ancient paved way from a fortress on the Nene, which runs through the parish, to a castle on the hill, where the Roman governor resided: the place was destroyed by the Danes. The parish comprises about 3600 acres, and is considerably diversified in its surface, some parts being flat, and others very much elevated. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £52. 12. 8½., and formerly held in commendam with the see of Peterborough. The church, dedicated in 1124 to St. Keneburgha, who founded a nunnery here, is a spacious cruciform edifice, with a beautiful Norman tower of two stages, rising from the intersection, and surmounted by a spire. There are chapels of ease at Sutton and Upton, in the parish; and a school is supported by subscription. John Landen, an eminent mathematician, was born here in 1719.

CASWELL, a tything, in the parish of PORTBURY, union of BEDMINSTER, hundred of PORTBURY, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 74 inhabitants.

CATCHBURN, a township, in the parish and union of MORPETH, E. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 1½ mile (S. by E.) from Morpeth; containing, with Morpeth Castle, Park-House, and Stobhill, 145 inhabitants. At this place, which is situated on the east of the great road, Roger de Merlay, the second, built an hospital dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, probably for the use of wayfaring people, and which is mentioned in a deed of the year 1282: an inquest taken after the death of Ralph, Lord Greystock, in the 17th of Edward II., enumerates its advowson among his possessions; and John, Lord Greystock, in 1346, ordained by will that it should be given, with all its goods and ornaments, to a chaplain. There are no remains.

CATCHERSIDE, a township, in the parish of KIRK-WHELPINGTON, union of BELLINGHAM, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 15 miles (W.) from Morpeth; containing 12 inhabitants. This place, anciently written Calcherside, has been the property of the Fenwicks, Blacketts, and Trevelyans; and, though now still and lonely, appears to have been once of some little importance; and tradition says that there was a mill here: the "Scotch street" ran through the place; and in the last century it had an ale-house where carriers stopped, and where villagers assembled for rural sports. It is situated about two miles north of Kirk-Whelpington: some slight remains of the hamlet exist. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £1. 2. 4., and the impropriate for 10s. On Camp Hill were traces of a British camp, which were removed a few years since.

CATCLIFFE, a township, in the parish and union of ROTHERHAM, S. division of the wapentake of STRAF-FORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (S.) from Rotherham; containing 252 inhabitants. This place comprises by computation 930 acres: the village is on a gentle eminence above the river Rother, on its western side. Here is a manufactory for glass, established about the year 1780. In 1702 George Beardsall devised £10 per annum for teaching poor children.

CATCOMB, a tything, in the parish of HILLMARTON, union of CALNE, hundred of KINGSBRIDGE, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 68 inhabitants.

CATCOTT, a chapelry, in the parish of MOORLINC, union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of WHITLEY, W. division of SOMERSET, 7 miles (E. N. E.) from Bridgwater; containing 750 inhabitants. This place is situated on the north side of the Polden hills, within two miles of the Glastonbury and Bridgwater canal: very fine blue lias for building is quarried. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Aldborough Henniker, Esq.: the chapel is a plain edifice, in the later English style, and has a very fine old font. There is a place of worship for dissenters. A national schoolroom has recently been erected, and a bequest of £20 per annum is distributed among poor widows.

CATEBY, county of YORK.—See CADEBY.

CATERHAM, or KATERHAM (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of GODSTONE, Second division of the hundred of TANDRIDGE, E. division of SURREY, 3¼ miles (N. by W.) from Godstone; containing 477 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Croydon to Godstone, and intersected by the London and Brighton railway, and comprises by admeasurement 2386 acres, of which 1462 are arable, 269 meadow and pasture, 175 woodland, and 468 uninclosed common: the surface is hilly, and the soil has several varieties, consisting of chalk, clay, and black mould. Building-stone is quarried extensively. A fair for toys is held in July. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 0. 1½.; patron and incumbent, Rev. James Legrew, whose tithes have been commuted for £400, and who has a glebe of 5 acres. The church was repaired in 1832, and a beautiful monument erected on the north side of the chancel to the memory of Mrs. Elizabeth Legrew. Two schools are supported by subscription. There is an encampment on the top of Whitehill, called the Cardinal's Cap, said to have been formed by the ancient Britons.

CATESBY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DAVENTRY, hundred of FAWSLEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 3¾ miles (S. W. by W.) from Daventry; containing, with the hamlet of Newbold-Grounds, 105 inhabitants. Situated on the border of Warwickshire, from which the parish is separated by the river Leam, that bounds it partly on the north, west, and south, it presents some pleasing scenery, and consists of 1967 acres. Catesby House is the seat of the family of that name, of whom one was beheaded after the death of his master, Richard III., and another suffered for being concerned in the gunpowder plot in the reign of James I. The mansion occupies the site of an ancient priory, founded in the reign of Richard I. by Robert de Esseby, for nuns of the Benedictine order, and dedicated to St. Mary and St. Edmund: its revenue, at the Dissolution, was estimated at £145. The dormitory is still carefully preserved in its original style. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10; patrons, T. and M. Scrafton, Esqrs., who appoint without episcopal institution. The church is in ruins, and the parochial duty is performed at Catesby House. The Rev. John Parkhurst, the celebrated lexicographer, was born here.

CATFIELD (All Saints), a parish, in the hundred of HAPPING, E. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Stalham; containing 655 inhabitants. It is bounded on the west by the river Ant, and comprises by admeasurement 2380 acres, of which about 1500 are arable, 500 pasture, meadow, and marsh, and 300 water, forming a lake. The living consists of a discharged rectory and vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 10., and in the gift alternately of the Bishop of Norwich and G. Cubitt, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £600, and the glebe comprises about 20 acres; to which there is a glebe-house. The church is in the later style; and consists of a nave, a handsome chancel, and side aisles, with a square embattled tower; the nave is separated from the chancel by a carved screen, and on the floor is the lid of a coffin, curiously sculptured, removed from Hickling Priory in 1826. Several large paintings in fresco, of the Romish sacraments, martyrs, and other subjects, have lately been discovered in the nave, by removing the plaster-work from the upper part of the walls. The Primitive Methodists have a place of worship. At the inclosure, in 1802, 60 acres of heath were allotted to the poor for fuel and pasturage, and there are also 4 acres, producing a sum of £8 per annum, which is applied to the distribution of coal. Cowper, the poet, spent much of his time at the rectory-house, on visits to his uncle, who was incumbent.

CATFOSS, a township, in the parish of SIGGLES-THORNE, union of SKIRLAUGH, N. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Beverley; containing 45 inhabitants. This place, in Domesday book Catefoss, derives its name, of British origin, from "coit," a wood, and "foss," a dyke. At an early period it belonged to the family of de Fauconberg, and came by marriage, in the reign of Edward III., to the Constables, from whom it has descended to the Bethell family. The township comprises about 1053 acres of land. Catfoss House, built early in the 17th century, was pulled down about thirty years since.

CATHANGER, with STOWEY, a tything, in the parish of FIVEHEAD, union of LANGPORT, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 20 inhabitants.

CATHERINE, ST., a parish, in the union of BATH, hundred of BATH-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Bath; containing 159 inhabitants. This place is situated in a retired valley, enriched with much picturesque scenery, and comprises by computation 1000 acres. Catherine Court, adjoining the church, was the residence of the abbots of Bath till the dissolution of monasteries, when the manor was granted by Henry VIII. to the Harringtons. A paper-mill is in operation, giving employment to a few hands. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Bath-Easton: the tithes have been commuted for £96, of which £50 are payable to the incumbent, £31 to the impropiator, and £15 to the Dean and Chapter of Christ-Church, Oxford. In the chancel is a handsome monument to the memory of some of the Blanchard family.

CATHERINGTON (St. CATHERINE), a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of FINCH-DEAN, Petersfield and N. divisions of the county of SOUTH-AMPTON, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Petersfield; containing 1003 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasure-ment 5035 acres, of which 2800 are arable, 1400 pasture, and 615 woodland. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 5. 10., and in the gift of J. Hayward, Esq.: the great tithes belonging to Sir L. Curtis, Bart., have been commuted for £614, and those of the incumbent for £280: there is a glebe of 2 acres. The church, situated on an eminence, has some rich Norman arches, and contains a monument to Nicholas Hyde, chief justice of the court of queen's bench: a gallery was erected in 1834, by which 60 additional sittings have been provided, all free. William Appleford, porter of St. Mary's College, Winchester, in 1695, bequeathed lands at Drayton, in the parish of Barton-Stacey, producing at present £15 per annum, for which children were instructed; and a school for the parishes of Blendworth and Catherington, and the chapelry of Idsworth, was erected, in 1827, at Horndean, a neat village in the parish, in which 70 boys are educated on the national plan. The poor law union of Catherington comprises 5 parishes or places, and contains a population of 2356.

CATHERSTON-LEWSTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BRIDPORT, hundred of WHITCHURCH-CANONICORUM, Bridport division of DORSET, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Lyme-Regis; containing 36 inhabitants. This place was the residence of a branch of the Wadhams, by one of whom, Nicholas Wadham, Esq., and Dorothy his wife, Wadham College, Oxford, was founded. The parish, which is situated on the great western road from London to Plymouth, and adjoining the post-town of Charmouth, comprises by measurement 248 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £2. 16. $10\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £67; patrons, Executors of Jones Ross, Esq. The church, rebuilt recently by subscription of the rector and his friends, is a neat small edifice.

CATHORPE (St. MARY AND ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of LUTTERWORTH, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Lutterworth; containing 167 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Avon, and on the road from Rugby to Market-Harborough, and comprises 625*a.* 10*r.*, of which about 462 acres are pasture, and the rest arable: the surface is varied, some parts of the land being flat, and others rising to a considerable elevation; and the soil is chiefly gravel, with a little clay. The Roman Watling-street crosses its south-western extremity. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 5. $2\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £226; patron and incumbent, Rev. L. Harper. The church is an ancient structure, in the later English style. A small school is partly supported by subscription. Dyer, the poet, was for some time incumbent of the parish.

CATMORE (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of WANTAGE, hundred of COMPTON, county of BERKS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from East Ilsley; containing, with the tything of Lilley, 96 inhabitants. It comprises about 720 acres, the surface of which is elevated, and the soil various, being in some parts chalk, and in others clay. Here was formerly a market on Monday, granted in 1306, by Edward I., together with a fair on the festival of St. Margaret. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 5. $7\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £180; patron, C. Eyre, Esq.: the glebe consists of about 14 acres.

CATON, a chapelry, in the parish of LANCASTER, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Lancaster; containing 1195 inhabitants. This chapelry lies on the southern bank of the Lune, and comprises by admeasurement 5420 acres: the beauty of its diversified scenery elicited a warm eulogium from the poet Gray, in a letter to Dr. Warton. Freestone and flagstone are quarried, and coal and slate are found. From 300 to 400 persons are employed in the manufacture of cotton and silk. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £100; patron, the Vicar of Lancaster. The chapel was built about the year 1245. There is a small chapel at Littledale, one of the four districts of the township, which was built about the middle of the last century, and is in the patronage of the Vicar of Lancaster. The Wesleyans and Independents have each a place of worship. A parochial school is partly supported by subscription. Four almshouses are let to the poor by the churchwardens, who also distribute £4 annually, the produce of land. Some Roman relics have been discovered, especially an ancient stone pillar with an inscription to the emperor Adrian, found in the bed of the Fisherbeck, in 1803, besides a milliarium six feet in height, on the course of a Roman way that passed near the place.

CATSFIELD (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of BATTLE, hundred of NINFIELD, rape of HASTINGS, E. division of SUSSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Battle; containing 589 inhabitants. It is intersected by the road from Lewes to Hastings, and comprises 2938 acres, of which 875 are arable, 1447 meadow and pasture, 520 woodland, and 50 hops: the surface is alternated with hill and dale, and the scenery enriched with woods and plantations. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Earl of Ashburnham: the tithes have been commuted for £370, and the glebe comprises 34 acres, to which is attached a glebe-house. The church is a handsome structure, partly in the early and partly in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower, surmounted by a low shingled spire: in the chancel is an elegant monument to the memory of J. Fuller, Esq., finely sculptured by Nollekens. At the gate of the churchyard is a remarkably fine oak, more than 40 feet in girth at a few feet from the ground. A national school is partly supported by subscription.

CATTAL, a township, in the parish of HUNSGORE, Upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Wetherby; containing 193 inhabitants. This place, which is situated on the north of the river Nidd, whose course here is very devious, comprises by computation 950 acres: the road from York to Knaresborough passes on the north, about two miles distant from the village, which is small and scattered.

CATTERAL, a township, in the parish and union of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. S. W.) from Garstang; containing 1102 inhabitants. The village contains one of the oldest and most extensive printworks in the county, situated at the confluence of the West Calder with the river Wyre.

CATTERHAM.—See CATERHAM.

CATTERICK (St. ANNE), a parish, in the unions of BEDALE, RICHMOND, and NORTH-ALLERTON, comprising, in the wapentake of GILLING-EAST, the townships of Bolton-upon-Swale, Ellerton-upon-Swale, Kiplin, Scorton, Uckerby, and Whitwell; in the wapentake of HANG-EAST, those of East and West Appleton, Brough, Catterick, Colbourne, Hipswell, Killerby, Scotton, and Tunstall; and in that of HANG-WEST the township of Hudswell, N. riding of YORK; containing 2965 inhabitants, of whom 600 are in the township of Catterick, 5 miles (S. E.) from Richmond. This is a place of great antiquity, having been the site of the great Roman city, called Cataractonium, where the Ermin-street branches off in two directions, and in the vicinity of which numerous Roman relics have been dug up at different periods. It also flourished during the Saxon times; but in the devastations of the Danes was utterly destroyed, and is at present of little importance. A large brazen caldron full of Roman coins was discovered about a century ago, and not many years since, a splendid armilla of gold was found in a field near the village: the former is preserved at Brough Hall, and the latter is in the possession of Lady Tyrconnel, of Kiplin. The parish comprises about 21,680 acres, of which 1561*a. 6p.* are in the township of Catterick: of these latter 917 are arable, 586 meadow and pasture, and the rest wood, roads, &c. At the distance of a mile to the north is Catterick bridge, over the river Swale, on which was formerly a chapel; and opposite is a race-course. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £25. 2. 1., and has a net income of £678: it is in the patronage of the Crown, and the impropriation belongs to divers persons. The small tithes for the townships of Hipswell and Hudswell were commuted for land in 1807. The church is partly in the early style of English architecture, but chiefly of a later date, and consists of a nave, chancel, side aisles, and a tower: the contract for its erection, dated in 1412, has been published by the Rev. J. Raine. In addition to the mother church, there are three chapels in the parish, in the patronage of the Vicar. A school and an hospital for six poor widows were founded, in 1658, by the Rev. Michael Syddall, vicar, and have an endowment, now amounting to about £80 per annum. Admiral Lord Nelson died in the arms of the Rev. Dr. Scott, vicar of the parish, who was his lordship's chaplain at the battle of Trafalgar, in 1805.

CATTERLIN, a township, in the parish of NEWTON-RIGNEY, union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 3 miles (N. W. by N.) from Penrith; containing 147 inhabitants.

CATTERTON, a township, in the parish of TADCASTER, W. division of AINSTY wapentake, W. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Tadcaster; containing 58 inhabitants.

CATTESHILL, anciently GATES-HILL, a tything, in the parish, and First division of the hundred, of GODALMING, W. division of SURREY, 1 mile (N. E.) from Godalming. At this place, which is situated on the navigable river Wey, is an extensive and long-established paper-mill, employing about 100 persons in manufacturing the finest writing and printing paper. A pleasure fair is held on Holy-Thursday.

CATTISTOCKE (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of CERNE, hundred of CERNE, TOTCOMBE, and MODBURY, Cerne division of DORSET, 9 miles (N. W.) from Dorchester; containing 549 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Dorchester to Yeovil, and comprises 2938*a. 1r. 6p.* The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 13. 9., and in the patronage of Mrs. Still: the tithes have been commuted for £510, and there is a glebe-house, with about 28 acres of land. A national school is supported by subscription. On a hill in the eastern part of the parish is an ancient circular fortification of about four acres, called the Castle, surrounded by a double rampart, with entrances at the north-east and west: towards the middle of the area the ground rises into a long barrow; and near the north entrance is a round tumulus, the top of which consists of flint stones.

CATTO, with LANDMOTH, a township, in the parish of LEAKE, union of NORTH-ALLERTON, wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, N. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Thirsk; containing 56 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 600 acres, including Cotcliffe Wood, a long precipitous cliff and boldly rising acclivity on the east-side of the small river Codbeck.

CATTON, a chapelry, in the parish of CROXALL, union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERBY, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Burton; containing 47 inhabitants. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £91. 15.

CATTON (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of ST. FAITH'S, hundred of TAVERHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (N.) from Norwich; containing 650 inhabitants. It comprises 904*a.* 2*r.* 35*p.*, a considerable part of which consists of woodlands, and garden and pleasure-grounds, interspersed with numerous mansions and villas, forming together a picturesque and beautiful suburban village. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 3. 9.; net income, £142; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Norwich. The landowners have purchased the inappropriate tithes of the Dean and Chapter: the glebe contains 13 acres. The church, of which the most ancient part is in the later English style, consists of a nave, chancel, and north aisle, with a circular tower, the upper part octagonal; in the interior are several neat memorials. The Wesleyans have a place of worship. In the year 1724, John Norman bequeathed land for teaching some of his relations, and, after 60 years, as his estate increased, to be applied to the erection and endowment of an hospital for boys. A school for girls is supported by subscription; and the poor receive £6 per annum from Wall's bequest of 3 acres of land, and £2 from other benefactors.

CATTON, a grieveship, in the parish of ALLENDALE, union of HEXHAM, S. division of TINDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing 535 inhabitants.

CATTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of POCKLINGTON, partly in the wapentake of OUSE and DERWENT, and partly in the Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK; containing, with the townships of East and West Stamford-Bridge, and Kexby, 1078 inhabitants, of whom 185 are in the township of High Catton, and 186 in that of Low Catton, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from York. The surface of the parish, in which is some good land, is generally level, and there are some fine plantations. A large fair for cattle is held on the 1st of December, at Stamford-Bridge. The village of Low Catton is pleasantly situated in the vale of the Derwent, and that of High Catton is on a gentle acclivity, at the distance of a mile from the former. Col. George Wyndham is lord of the manor. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 12. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £410; patron, Col. Wyndham: the tithes were commuted for land in 1760. The church is an ancient edifice with a square tower. There are places of worship for Wesleyans at High Catton and East Stamford-Bridge, at which latter place is a school endowed with £630 in the 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cents., producing £22 per annum, the bequest of Christopher Wharton; the school-house was built in 1795.

CATTON, a township, in the parish of TOPCLIFFE, union of THIRSK, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, 5 miles (S. W.) from Thirsk; containing 136 inhabitants. It is on the east bank of the river Swale, and comprises by computation 770 acres of land: the Leeming-Lane road passes at the distance of about a mile and a half to the west of the village. The tithes have been commuted for £186. 15., of which £160 are payable to the Dean and Chapter of York, and £26. 15. to the vicar of the parish.

CATWICK (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of SKIRLAUGH, N. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, 8 miles (N. E. by E.) from Beverley; containing 191 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1493 acres: the soil is various, but chiefly clay and gravel; the surface is undulated, and the scenery diversified, and in some situations of pleasing character. Tiles, chimney-pots, and bricks are manufactured to some extent. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 5., and is in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £149: the tithes were commuted for a money payment on the inclosure of the parish. The church is an ancient edifice, in the later style of English architecture, and was repaired in 1842. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CATWORTH, GREAT (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of St. NEOT'S, hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Kimbolton; containing 637 inhabitants. It is situated on the London and Oundle road, and comprises about 2000 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 16. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £337; patrons, Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. The tithes were commuted for corn-rents, under an inclosure act, in 1795; the glebe contains 60 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is in the early English style, and ornamented with a spire. The Baptists and Wesleyans have places of worship. A fund of about £18 per annum is appropriated to the apprenticing of children, arising chiefly from bequests by Mrs. Ann Banks, in 1719, and the Rev. Matthew Maddock, rector. Sir Wolstan Dixie, lord mayor of London in 1585, was born here.

CATWORTH, LITTLE, a chapelry, in the parish of LONGSTOW, union of St. NEOT'S, hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, 3 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Kimbolton; containing 75 inhabitants.

CAUDERY, with RUDYARD, a township, in the parish and union of LEEK, S. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, N. division of the county of STAFFORD.

CAULDON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CHEADLE, N. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 6 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Ashbourn; containing 326 inhabitants. The parish is separated from that of Waterfall by the small river Hamp, which in its course enters the ground at Waterhouses, continuing a subterraneous progress for upwards of five miles. At Cauldon-Low are lime-works, from which the greater part of the surrounding country is supplied. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £57; the patronage and impropriation belong to Mrs. J. Wilmot.

CAULDWELL, a chapelry, in the parish of STAPENHILL, union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERBY, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Burton; containing 153 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £257, and the vicarial for £146. 10. The chapel is dedicated to St. Giles.

CAULK (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Ashby; containing 55 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 900 acres: there are quarries of limestone extensively wrought, and burnt into lime, for the conveyance of which facility is afforded, by the Swannington railway, to Ashby and Leicester. The living is a curacy; net income, £34; patron and impropriator, Sir George Crewe, Bart. The church is a neat edifice, in the later English style, rebuilt on the old site, about the year 1830. A convent of Augustine friars, in honour of St. Mary and St. Giles, was founded here before 1161, and afterwards removed to Repindon; the remains have been converted into a mansion, called the Old Abbey. The poor are eligible to the hospital at Ticknall, founded by Charles Harper, Esq., in 1770.

CAUNDLE, BISHOP, a parish, in the union of SHERBORNE, partly in the hundred of BROWNSHALL, Sturminster division, and partly in that of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division, of DORSET, 5 miles (S. E. by E.) from Sherborne; containing 365 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1304 acres, of which 200 are arable, 961 meadow and pasture, and about 22 wood. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 10.; net income, £226; patron, Earl Digby. The glebe contains 21 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. A school is conducted on the national system.

CAUNDLE-MARSH (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union and hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of DORSET, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Sherborne, containing 77 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the road from Sherborne to Sturminster, comprises by measurement 700 acres: stone of inferior quality is quarried. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 16. 3., and in the gift of Sir H. R. Hoare, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £96, and the glebe comprises 35 acres. The church is a neat edifice.

CAUNDLE-PURSE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union and hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of DORSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. S. E.) from Milborne-Port; containing 183 inhabitants. It is intersected in the eastern portion by the road from London to Sherborne, and comprises 1470a. 2r. 16p., of which, with the exception of about 100 acres of woodland and copse, the whole is arable, meadow, and pasture: the surface is generally level, but rises towards the south, and terminates in a long ridge; the soil is a strong clay, alternated in some parts with a stone brash. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 8. 8., and in the gift of Sir H. R. Hoare, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £162, and the glebe comprises 23 acres. In the chancel of the church, under a plain marble tombstone, are interred the remains of Dr. Highmore, a distinguished writer on medical and anatomical subjects; Dr. Mew, Bishop of Winchester, was born here in 1618: he was commanded by the king to proceed against Monmouth, in the rebellion, and had the management of the artillery at the battle of Sedgmoor, where he rendered considerable service.

CAUNDLE-STOURTON, a parish, in the union of STURMINSTER, hundred of BROWNSHALL, Sturminster division of DORSET, 2 miles (S. W.) from Stalbridge; containing 394 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1962 acres: stone of good quality for building is quarried. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £50; patron and impropriator, Sir H. R. Hoare, Bart., whose tithes have been commuted for £21. 2.

CAUNDLE-WAKE, a tything, in the parish of BISHOP-CAUNDLE, union of SHERBORNE, hundred of BROWNSHALL, Sturminster division of DORSET; containing 36 inhabitants. It takes its adjunct from a noble family which anciently possessed the manor of the place.

CAUNTON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of SOUTHWELL, N. division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Newark; containing 539 inhabitants. It is situated on the Worksop road, and comprises by measurement 2900 acres, of which 1600 are in the manor of Caunton, 800 in that of Beesthorpe, and 500 in the manor of Knapthorpe: coal is supposed to exist, and various attempts have been made to discover it, but without success. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Beesthorpe, in the patronage of the Chapter of the Collegiate Church of Southwell, valued in the king's books at £4. 2. 1.; net income, £171; impropriator, Lord Middleton. The tithes were commuted for land and money payments, under an inclosure act, in 1795. The church is a neat structure of stone. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists; and a school has been recently built by subscription.

CAUSEY-PARK, a township, in the parochial chapelry of HEBBURN, union of MORPETH, W. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Morpeth; containing 116 inhabitants. This place, which has its name from an ancient paved way that led along its eastern boundary, and on the line of the present great north road, was formerly in the parish of Felton, and comprises 1030 acres of land, exempt from tithes, paying only a modus of £3 per annum: the House here was built in 1589 by James Ogle, Esq., and has some gardens which are very productive, and well stocked with fruit-trees. A little to the west of the house is a fine broad dyke, of compact whinstone, which has been much quarried for the roads: it has the millstone grit on its north cheek, and beds of slaty sandstone, bituminous shale, &c. on the south. There was once a chapel, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, with which the place was probably honoured, on account of the monks of Durham having rested here in their flight from that city, with the body of St. Cuthbert, to Holy Island, in 1069. Henry Ogle, in 1760, bequeathed a rent-charge of £15 for a school.

CAVE, NORTH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, partly in the union of HOWDEN, and partly in that of POCKLINGTON, Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 10 miles (E. N. E.) from Howden; containing 1217 inhabitants, and comprising the chapelry of South Cliffe, and townships of North Cave, and Drewton with Everthorpe. This parish is situated on the main road from Hull and Beverley to Wakefield and the West riding, about 4 miles from the Hull and Selby railway, and 2 from the Market-Weighton canal. It comprises 6913*a. 1r. 8p.*, of which 2025 are in the chapelry of South Cliffe: about 4702 acres are arable, 1006 pasture and meadow, 230 wood, 935 warren, and 13 common; and the soil is various, being chalky in the high, blue lias in the lower, and oolite in the intervening lands. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 7. 6.; net income, £247; patrons and improPRIATORS, Henry Burton, Esq., and Mrs. Sarah Burton, of Hotham Hall. The great tithes for part of the township of North Cave were commuted for land in 1764. The church is a commodious edifice, with a handsome tower, and contains a full-length figure of a knight in armour, supposed to represent Sir Thomas Matham, whose family were formerly seated here, but of whose mansion there are no remains. At South Cliffe is a chapel of ease; and there are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans. There is a handsome schoolroom near the church, for girls, erected within the last few years by Mr. Burton; and there is another school for boys, which has a small endowment: both are supported by subscription, towards which Mr. and Mrs. Burton are the chief contributors.

CAVE, SOUTH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the unions of HOWDEN and BEVERLEY, Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK; containing 1852 inhabitants, of whom 1288 are in the market-town of South Cave, 27 miles (S. E.) from York, and 183 (N. by W.) from London. This parish comprises 7103*a. 2r. 30p.*, and includes the townships of Broomfleet and Faxfleet: it is situated at the western extremity of the wolds, and on the river Humber, which forms its boundary for three miles: the township of South Cave comprises 4323*a. 1r. 20p.* The surrounding country is very pleasing, the eminences affording many delightful views of Lincolnshire, and of the river, with the scenery on its banks. At the market, which is held on Monday, considerable quantities of corn are sold for the supply of many of the manufacturing towns in the West riding: it is shipped on the Humber, and the return cargoes consist of coal, freestone, lime, flags, and a variety of other necessary commodities. There is a fair on Trinity-Monday. The petty-sessions for the wapentake of Howdenshire take place here; and a manorial court is held in Oct., at which a constable is appointed. The town consists principally of three long streets, of which the longest is on the northern acclivity of a valley, and having been anciently washed by the tides of the Humber, it obtained the name of Cove, afterwards corrupted to Cave. In the vicinity is Cave Castle, the seat of H. G. Barnard, Esq., a large and splendid embattled structure, with numerous turrets; the interior exhibits a corresponding style of magnificence, and is enriched with a noble collection of paintings, by the first artists, including a fine portrait of the celebrated American general, Washington, whose ancestors possessed a portion of the estate, and resided here prior to their emigration to Virginia, in the middle of the seventeenth century. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £168; patron and improPRIATOR, Mr. Barnard: the great tithes have been commuted for £465, and the vicarial for £95. The church is a neat edifice, erected in 1601, and consists of a nave, north aisle, south transept, and chancel, and a fine tower. There are three places of worship belonging to Methodists, and a Roman Catholic chapel at Cave Castle; and a school, on the national system, is partly supported by an endowment of £7 per annum.

CAVENDISH (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of BABERGH, W. division of SUFFOLK, 2½ miles (E. N. E.) from Clare; containing 1353 inhabitants. This parish, at a very early period, was the property of the Cavendish family, of whom John Cavendish, Esq., being in attendance on Richard II., despatched the rebel, Wat Tyler, whom William Walworth, lord mayor of London, had stunned with a blow of his mace. The populace of this neighbourhood, in retaliation, seized Sir John Cavendish, uncle of the former, and lord chief justice of the king's bench, whom, together with the prior of Bury, they beheaded at the market-cross in that town. The parish comprises 3351*a. 1r. 24p.*: the village is situated on the river Stour. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26; net income, £547; patrons, Master and Fellows of Jesus' College, Cambridge. Thomas Grey, in 1696, gave 78 acres of land for teaching poor children. The noble family of Cavendish, of which the Duke of Devonshire is the present representative, derives its name from this place.

CAVENHAM (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of MILDENHALL, hundred of LACKFORD, W. division of SUFFOLK, 4½ miles (S. E.) from Mildenhall; containing 277 inhabitants. The river Lark is navigable on the north of this parish, where it is crossed by Temple bridge. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £113; improPRIATOR, H. S. Waddington, Esq. The vicarial tithes were commuted for land in 1801. The sum of about £22 per annum, the rental of 80 acres of land under an inclosure act, is applied to the purchase of coal for the poor.

CAVERSFIELD (ST. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of BICESTER, partly in the hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, but chiefly in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, 2 miles (N.) from Bicester; containing 178 inhabitants. It comprises 1438*a. 2r. 3p.*, the soil of which is light and stony. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6; net income, £69; patrons and improPRIATORS, Trustees of the late Joseph Bullock, Esq. The glebe contains about 60 acres. Some suppose this to have been the place where Carausius, the Roman commander, assumed the purple in 287, and where he was afterwards slain by Caius Alectus: on Bayard's Green, about a mile from the church, are faint traces of Carausius's camp.

CAVERSHAM (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of HENLEY, hundred of BINFIELD, county of OXFORD, 1 mile (N.) from Reading; containing 1642 inhabitants. This place, during the civil wars, was the scene of a sharp skirmish between the royalist and parliamentarian forces; and Charles I., who had fallen into the hands of his enemies, was, for a short time, kept in confinement here. The parish comprises 4490a. 1r. 5p., of which about 3191 acres are arable, 702 meadow, 361 wood, and 200 common. The village is pleasantly situated on the northern bank of the Thames, the high grounds commanding a fine view of the town of Reading, and within a short distance of the Great Western railway, which passes on the opposite bank of the river. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £116; patrons, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford; impropiator, Blackall Simonds, Esq. The church was part of the first endowment of Nutley Abbey, in Buckinghamshire, the society of which here founded a cell, in which was a chapel, where, at the time of the Dissolution, was preserved a spear-head, said to be that where-with our Saviour was pierced on the cross. A national school is supported by voluntary contributions. There is a chalybeate spring at Caversham Hill; and in the grounds of Shatesgrove House, another of similar quality. Caversham gives the inferior title of Viscount to Earl Cadogan.

CAVERSWALL (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of CHEADLE, N. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, and of the county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (E.) from Lane-End; containing, with the township of Weston-Coyney with Hulme, 1505 inhabitants. The parish comprises 5346a. 2r. 11p., of which nearly 3300 acres are meadow and pasture, 1384 arable, and a considerable part woods and plantations. A castle here, originally founded by Sir William de Caverswall, in the time of Edward II., and rebuilt in that of Elizabeth or James I., was garrisoned for the parliament in 1645, and at the commencement of the French Revolution, in 1789, was purchased for the English Benedictine nuns of Ghent, who had been driven from their possessions in Belgium. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 5. 3.; net income, £217; patron and impropiator, T. H. Parker, Esq. The church contains several old monuments, and one to the lady of the late Earl St. Vincent. There are a place of worship for Wesleyans, and a Roman Catholic chapel at Caverswall Castle; and a school has been established on the national plan.

CAVIL, with PORTINGTEN, a township, in the parish of EASTRINGTON, union of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, E. riding of YORK, 2 miles (N. N. E.) from Howden; containing 123 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1490 acres of land, chiefly set out in farms, and partly the property of Viscount Galway. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £46. 10. 8.

CAWKWELL or CALKWELL (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of HORNCastle, N. division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (S. W. by S.) from Louth; containing 47 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the road from Horn-castle to Louth, consists only of one farm, the produce whereof is chiefly butter and cheese. There are several pits of calx, which is converted into lime for manure. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 8. 6½.; net income, £46, arising from land; patron and impropiator, Lord Yarborough. The church is a small neat edifice.

CAWOOD, a hamlet, in the chapelry of ARKHOLME, parish of MELLING, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3½ miles (N. E.) from Hornby; containing, with Arkholme, 402 inhabitants.

CAWOOD (All Saints), a parish, in the union of SELBY, Lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK, 9½ miles (S. by W.) from York, and 187 (N. by W.) from London; containing 1108 inhabitants. This place was given by King Athelstan to the see of York, about 935, in the time of Archbishop Wulstan. The magnificent palace or castle was built in the reign of Henry IV., by Archbishop Bennet; several of the prelates lived in it, and here Cardinal Wolsey resided nearly a year previous to his arrest on a charge of high treason, by the Earl of Northumberland. The castle was dismantled, and in part demolished, at the conclusion of the parliamentary war; since which time, being abandoned by the archbishops, it has remained in a state of gradual dilapidation, and has nearly fallen into ruin: the remains of the great gateway, and some few fragments, are now the only vestiges. The TOWN is pleasantly situated near the western bank of the river Ouse, over which is a ferry: the houses are neatly built, and the inhabitants amply supplied with water. The market, which was on Wednesday, has been discontinued for many years; fairs for cattle are held on May 12th and December 19th. The quarter-sessions for the liberty of Cawood, Wistow, and Otley, are held here; the Archbishop of York, and the magistrates for the division, hold a court of session twice a year for the trial of felonies; and a manorial court is held, under the archbishop. The parish comprises 2000 acres: the surface is flat, and subject to inundation from the river: the soil is chiefly a fertile loam, and the lands are generally in a good state of cultivation. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £118; patron and appropriator, the Prebendary of Wistow in the Cathedral of York. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1776. The church, situated near the Ouse, is a neat structure, with a tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school for girls was founded, in 1731, by the Rev. Samuel Duffield, who endowed it with land now yielding a considerable annual income; and £20 per annum are paid for the instruction of children, out of an estate producing £213. 9. per annum, vested in trustees for the repair of the highways, and the preservation of the embankments. Dr. Harsnett, Archbishop of York, who died in 1631, gave land for teaching poor boys. An almshouse was founded, about 1723, by William James, Esq., who endowed it with land worth £76 per annum, for aged persons; and an almshouse for six aged persons of Wistow and Cawood not having received parochial relief, was founded, in 1819, by James Waterhouse Smith, Esq.

CAWSTON (St. Agnes), a parish, in the union of AYLSHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 3¼ miles (E. by N.) from Reepham, on the road from Norwich to Holt; containing 1130 inhabitants. The manor is held in free socage of the crown, in right of the duchy of Lancaster, in token of which two maces are carried before the lord, or his steward, one bearing a brazen hand surmounted by a ploughshare, and the other a bearded arrow. Fairs are held on Feb. 1st, and the last Wednesdays in April and August; that in August being a large sheep fair. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 13. 11½.; net income, £808; patrons, Master and Fellows of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge; the glebe contains 14 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a handsome cruciform structure, in the later English style, with a lofty square tower, built by Michael de la Pole, Earl of Suffolk: there is a chapel on its north side, the interior of which is elaborately ornamented. The Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship. A school is chiefly supported by the rector; and a Sunday school is endowed with the interest of £100, bequeathed by Dr. Baker, in 1818. At the inclosure, in 1802, an allotment of 100 acres was awarded to the poor for fuel.

CAWTHORNE, a chapelry, in the parish of SILKSTONE, wapentake of STAINCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 5 miles (W.) from Barnsley; containing 1437 inhabitants. This parish, which is chiefly the property of John Spencer Stanhope, Esq., and partly of Thos. Wentworth Beaumont, Esq., lord of the manor, comprises by computation 3440 acres, whereof the soil is in general fertile: coal is abundant; sandstone and gritstone are quarried, and great quantities of limestone, brought up the Barnsley canal, are burnt into lime; there are also some seams of iron-stone of excellent quality. The surface is varied, and the lower grounds are watered by several brooks that flow through the parish into the river Dearne. Cannon Hall, the seat of Mr. Stanhope, is a spacious mansion, situated in a park, through which a branch of the river Dearne winds its picturesque course, and which abounds with timber and with beautiful scenery. The village is pleasantly seated on a gentle acclivity, forming the southern boundary of a picturesque valley. At Barnby bridge the Barnsley canal terminates in a spacious basin, on the banks of which are wharfs, warehouses, and a wet dock, with conveniencies for boat-building and lime-burning; and from the basin is a railway to the several collieries, and to those in other parts of the parish of Silkstone. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the proprietors of certain estates, upon which there is a rent-charge in lieu of corn tithes, being part of the revenues of the duchy of Lancaster, and of which Messrs. Stanhope and Beaumont are the owners. The small tithes have been commuted for land by the incumbent; the glebe contains about 35 acres, purchased in the last century, by a grant from Queen Anne's Bounty, and a donation from Sir William Wentworth, of Bretton Park; and several other grants have since been obtained in augmentation of the living, which is now worth £150 per annum. The chapel, dedicated to All Saints, is a neat edifice, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower; a south aisle was added to it in 1828, when 276 additional sittings were obtained, of which 216 are free. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school, which has a small endowment, is partly supported by subscription. There is a mineral spring, the water of which is slightly impregnated with sulphureted hydrogen.

CAWTHORPE, a hamlet, in the parish and union of BOURNE, wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N. by W.) from Bourne; containing 94 inhabitants.

CAWTHORPE, near LOUTH, county of LINCOLN.— See COVENHAM (ST. BARTHOLOMEW).

CAWTHORPE, LITTLE (ST. HELEN), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, locally in that of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Louth; containing 196 inhabitants. It comprises 468a. 20p., chiefly arable land. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £3. 4. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$.; the rectorial tithes have been commuted for £68. 3. 6., and the rectorial glebe comprises 13 acres. A school is supported by the parishioners.

CAWTON, a township, in the parish of GILLING, union of HELMSLEY, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Helmsley; containing 101 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1020 acres of land, and contains some beds of excellent limestone. The tithes have been commuted for £190.

CAXTON (ST. ANDREW), a market-town and parish, in the union of CAXTON and ARRINGTON, hundred of LONGSTOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Cambridge, and 49 (N. N. W.) from London; containing 558 inhabitants. This place, one of the oldest post-towns in the county, is situated on the Roman Ermin-street, which passes through the town from Holme to Papworth: the buildings are in general irregular and of mean appearance, consisting principally of poor cottages and decayed inns, though there are a few good houses of the latter description. The market, granted to Baldwin Freville, in 1247, is on Tuesday; and fairs, principally for pedlery, are held on May 5th, and October 18th. The parish comprises about 2300 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 12. 4.; net income, £80; patrons, Dean and Canons of Windsor, who own the entire tithes of the parish, and to whom an allotment of land and a money payment were assigned, in lieu of tithes, by an inclosure act, in 1830: the glebe contains about 9 acres. The living was a rectory previously to 1353, at which time it was appropriated to the chapel royal of St. George, Windsor. The church has a piscina in tolerable preservation. There is a place of worship for dissenters; and a Sunday school is endowed with about £5 per annum. Robert Langwith, in 1581, bequeathed £31. 10. per annum for the benefit of poor housekeepers, and for sermons to be preached quarterly in the church. The union comprises 26 parishes or places, and contains a population of 10,080. Matthew Paris, a Benedictine monk, who flourished in the reign of Henry III., and who wrote a history of the world from the creation to the year of his death, which happened in 1259, was a native of the place. It has been stated that Caxton, who introduced the art of printing into England, was born in the parish; but his own memoirs refer his birth and education to the county of Kent.

CAYTHORPE (ST. VINCENT), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 9 miles (N. by E.) from Grantham; containing, with the hamlet of Friston, 821 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the east by the Roman Ermin-street, comprises 4207a. 1r. 35p.: the land is in general well wooded, and the scenery interesting, and fine views may be obtained of Belvoir Castle, Newark, and Lincoln Cathedral, from the Beacon, an eminence near the road from Grantham to Lincoln, on which the village is situated. There are several beds of limestone, and stones are quarried for the roads. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 11. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £976; patrons, Devises of the late Mary Pochin. The church is a curious cruciform structure, principally in the decorated English style, and has a very lofty spire rising from the centre, supported by four magnificent arches, rendering it a striking and commanding object; the interior contains two large and handsome monuments to the Hussey family, and at the east end is a large and curious painting, on the plaster, in fresco, representing the Last Judgment, and which was discovered by scraping the wall a few years ago. There are a chapel of ease at Friston, and a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CAYTHORPE, a township, in the parish of LOWDHAM, union of SOUTHWELL, S. division of the wapentake of THURGARTON and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Nottingham; containing 315 inhabitants.

CAYTON (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of SCARBOROUGH, PICKERING lythe, N. riding of YORK, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Scarborough; containing, with the townships of Cayton and Osgodby, 572 inhabitants, of whom 503 are in the township of Cayton. The parish is situated on the road from Scarborough to Bridlington, and is bounded on the north-east by the German Ocean: the soil is chiefly clay, and suited to the growth of wheat, and the scenery, which is diversified by a range of lofty hills, is very picturesque. Stone is extensively quarried for building purposes, and burning into lime. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Seamer: the church is an ancient edifice with a square tower. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists; and a school is partly supported by subscription.

CERNE, or CERNE-ABBAS (St. MARY), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of CERNE, TOTCOMBE, and MODBURY, Cerne division of DORSET, 8 miles (N. N. W.) from Dorchester, and 120 (S. W. by W.) from London; containing 1342 inhabitants. The name of this place is derived from its situation on the river Cerne, and the adjunct from its ancient abbey. Eadwald, brother of King Edward the Martyr, became a hermit at this place; and in the reign of Edgar, Ailmer, Earl of Cornwall, began to erect a noble abbey, which he completed in 987, for Benedictine monks, and dedicated to St. Mary, St. Peter, and St. Benedict: it was plundered, or, as some say, destroyed, by King Canute, but was soon restored, and flourished till the Dissolution, when its revenue was estimated at £623. 13. 2. The remains consist principally of the gate-house, a stately square embattled tower of three stages, having two fine oriel windows above the arch, and in front various shields of armorial bearings; also a large stone barn, and a moat with a double intrenchment. In 1644, the Irish troops in the service of Charles I. burnt several houses in the town; and in the following year, Cromwell, having been joined by Col. Holberne and the inhabitants, marched to oppose the king's forces that had advanced within three miles of Cerne, but retired on finding that he had been reinforced by the regiments of Colonels Norton and Coke. The town is pleasantly situated in a valley surrounded by lofty hills, and consists of four or five streets, partially paved: the houses are in general ancient, and possess little architectural beauty: the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from a spring, called Augustine's Well, which, as the legend asserts, burst out to provide that saint with water for baptizing his Christian converts. Considerable improvement has lately taken place, including the erection of some handsome modern buildings, and the formation of a new road through the town from Dorchester to Sherborne. There are manufactories for dowlas, coarse linen, gloves, and parchment: the tanning trade is carried on to a considerable extent, and many women and children are employed in winding silk. The market, granted in the 15th year of the reign of John, is on Wednesday; the fairs are on Whit-Monday, April 28th, and October 2nd, for cattle. The petty-sessions for the Cerne division of the county are held here.

The parish comprises 2812*a. 4p.* The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 16.; net income, £81; patron and impropiator, Lord Rivers. The church, supposed to have been erected on the site of the ancient hermitage, by one of the abbots of the monastery, in the fifteenth century, is a fine spacious structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower ornamented by octagonal turrets at the angles; it was repewed in 1819. There is a place of worship for Independents. Sir Robert Miller and Dame Margaret gave a rent-charge of £10 for apprenticing children. The poor law union of Dorchester and Cerne comprises fifty-nine parishes or places, and contains a population of 23,380. On the southern declivity of a steep chalk hill, called Trendle Hill, to the north of the town, a gigantic figure has been traced, representing a man holding a knotted club in his hand, and extending his left arm; it is 180 feet high, and well executed; the outlines are two feet broad, and two feet deep; between the legs is an illegible inscription, and above, the date 748. It is by some antiquaries referred to the Saxon times, and supposed to represent one of their deities; by others it is thought to be a memorial of Cenric, son of Cuthred, King of the West Saxons, who was slain in battle; and according to vulgar tradition, it was cut to commemorate the destruction of a giant who ravaged this part of the country, and was killed by the peasants. The figure is occasionally repaired by the inhabitants of the town.

CERNE, NETHER, a parish, in the union of DORCHESTER and CERNE, hundred of CERNE, TOTCOMBE, and MODBURY, Cerne division of DORSET, $15\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Dorchester; containing 71 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £60; patron and impropiator, F. J. Browne, Esq.

CERNE, UPPER, a parish, in the union of DORCHESTER and CERNE, hundred of SHERBURNE, Sherburne division of DORSET, 9 miles (N. N. W.) from Dorchester; containing 107 inhabitants. This place was for some time the property of Sir Walter Raleigh, and there are still remains of the ancient manor-house. The parish is watered by a branch of the river Cerne, and comprises by computation 1200 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 18. 4., and in the patronage of John White, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £160, and the glebe comprises 15 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a very old structure, and contains an ancient font of large dimensions. A parochial school is supported by subscription; and a bequest of £10 per annum, by Sir Robert Miller, in 1620, is appropriated for apprenticing children, and the relief of the poor of the parish.

CERNEY, NORTH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER; hundred of RAPSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (N.) from Cirencester; containing, with the tythings of Calmsden and Woodmancote, 668 inhabitants. It comprises 3931a. 2r. 24p., the principal part of which is arable. Races are annually held. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 10. 7½, and in the patronage of University College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £730, and the glebe comprises 104 acres, to which is attached a glebe-house. The Roman Fosse-way traces the eastern boundary of the parish, in which may also be seen vestiges of a Roman fortress, with circumvallations.

CERNEY, SOUTH (ALL HALLOWS), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3¼ miles (S. E. by S.) from Cirencester; containing 1077 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2924 acres; limestone abounds, and is quarried for manure; the Thames and Severn canal passes through the parish, and the Cheltenham branch of the Great Western railway through a parish adjoining. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 16. 8s; net income, £231; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1808. The church, which is a fine specimen of Norman architecture, with later additions, consists of a nave, chancel, north aisle, and north transept, with a low central tower and spire: at the south porch is a beautifully enriched arch ornamented with grotesque heads, terminating the mouldings; between the nave and the chancel is a pointed arch rising from slender columns, the capitals of which are decorated with rich foliage; the chancel, with a fine east window of three lights, is of later date than the other parts of the edifice. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists; and a national school has been established, chiefly through the munificence of Mrs. Ann Edwards, who gave £1500 for its foundation, and endowment, and £1000 more for building houses for the master and mistress. Mrs. Edwards, in 1834, bequeathed the residue of her property in trust to the charity for the support of widows and orphans of clergymen of the diocese; in 1837, one-half of the bequest was appropriated to the erection of an asylum, and a very handsome edifice has been built, called Edwards' College, on a site of land given for the purpose by a near relative of the deceased, for the reception of distressed families of clergymen.

CHACEWATER, an ecclesiastical district, partly in the parish of KENWYN, and partly in that of ST. KEA, in the union of TRURO, W. division of the hundred of POWDER and of the county of CORNWALL, 5 miles (W. by S.) from Truro. This place is situated on the road from Truro to Penzance, and in the heart of a district abounding with mineral wealth. In the neighbourhood are several rich tin and copper-mines, from the workings of the latter of which near the surface, silver has been extracted in quantities greater than was anticipated. A considerable customary market for provisions is held on Saturday. The living is a perpetual curacy; patron, Vicar of Kenwyn; net income, £135. The church, a handsome edifice, dedicated to St. Paul, in the later English style, with a lofty tower, was erected in 1823; towards defraying the expense of which the Parliamentary Commissioners granted £2000. There are places of worship for Baptists, Bryanites, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists.

CHACKMORE, a hamlet, in the parish of RADCLIVE, union, hundred, and county of BUCKINGHAM, 1½ mile (N. N. W.) from Buckingham; containing 238 inhabitants. The tithes were commuted for land in 1773. Here was formerly a chapel of ease, now in ruins.

CHACOMBE.—See CHALCOMBE.

CHAD-KIRK, a chapelry, in the parish and union of STOCKPORT, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 3½ miles (E. by S.) from Stockport; containing 1465 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Rector of Stockport, with a net income of £120: the chapel is dedicated to St. Chad.

CHADBURY, a tything, in the parish of NORTON, union of EVESHAM, Lower division of the hundred of BLACKENHURST, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER; containing 28 inhabitants.

CHADD, ST., a chapelry, in the parish of MALPAS, union of WREXHAM, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 2¾ miles (E. by S.) from Malpas. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £144; patron, Rector of Malpas.

CHADDENWICKE, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of MERE, Hindon and S. divisions of WILTS, 1¾ mile (E.) from Mere; containing 16 inhabitants.

CHADDERTON, a township, in the parish of OLDHAM cum PRESTWICH, union of OLDHAM, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 7 miles (N. E. by N.) from Manchester; containing 5397 inhabitants. There are establishments for the spinning of cotton, the weaving of silk, and the manufacture of hats; and the chapelry abounds with coal, which, by means of a branch of the Ashton canal, is conveyed to Manchester, Stockport, and other manufacturing towns in the vicinity. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £129; patron, Rector of Prestwich. The tithes have been commuted for £120. The chapel, dedicated to St. Margaret, is situated in the hamlet of Hollinwood. Here is a national school. This was the birthplace of Dr. Lawrence Chadderton, an eminent divine at the period of the Reformation, of which he was a zealous promoter. On the lawn in front of Chadderton Hall is a tumulus, on lowering which, at different periods, several relics of antiquity have been discovered.

CHADDESSEN (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of SHARDLOW, hundred of APPLETREE, locally in that of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 2½ miles (E.) from Derby; containing 472 inhabitants. The Derby canal passes through the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £89; patrons, Representatives of the late Sir Robert Wilmot, Bart.; impropiator, Duke of Devonshire. In 1638 an almshouse for six persons was founded and endowed by Edward Wilmot, Esq.; and in 1813 John Berrysford left property, now producing £16. 4. per annum, to be distributed amongst widows and orphans.

CHADDESLEY-CORBETT (ST. CASSYON), a parish, in the union of KIDDERMINSTER, Lower division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, Kidderminster and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Kidderminster; containing 1434 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 5909 acres, of which 252 are woodland, and is intersected by the roads from Stourbridge to Stourport and from Kidderminster to Bromsgrove, which cross each other at the western extremity of the parish. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17. 3. 4.; patron, the Crown; impropiators, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of Warwick. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1797; and under the late act, the impropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £760: the impropriate glebe contains 36*a.* 2*r.* 21*p.*, and the vicarial 70*a.* 1*r.* 23*p.*, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a spacious edifice of red freestone, combining different styles of English architecture, with some Norman portions, of which latter the font is a fine specimen. Here is a free school, endowed with land, out of the annual produce of which about £170 are applied towards the support of the poor. An almshouse for five aged widows was erected by Mrs. Margaret Delabere, and, in compliance with her will, endowed by her subsequent husband, Sir Neville Pool, in 1637, with £200, which sum was invested in land, now let for £312 per annum, of which part is distributed among poor families. At the hamlet of Harvington, in the parish, is a Roman Catholic chapel, the rebuilding of which was completed in 1825, by subscription, the late Sir George Throgmorton, Bart., being the chief contributor. Sir George also founded a school, and endowed it with a rent-charge upon the Harvington estate.

CHADDLEWORTH (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of WANTAGE, hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from East Ilsley; containing, with the tything of Woolley, 481 inhabitants, and comprising 3306*a.* 33*p.* The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 4. 7.; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Westminster, whose tithes have been commuted for £547, and those of the vicar for £268. 3.; there are $23\frac{1}{2}$ acres of glebe, of which nearly 4 belong to the Dean and Chapter. In 1720, a school was founded and endowed by Mr. William Saunders, of which the income is £40 per annum: Mrs. Susannah Wynne gave an annuity of £10 for teaching children, and others are paid for by private individuals. In 1160, a priory for regular canons of the order of St. Augustine was founded at Poughley, which was dissolved by Wolsey, when its revenue amounted to £71. 10. 7.; it is now the property of J. T. Wasey, Esq.

CHADLINGTON, EAST, a chapelry, in the parish of CHARLBURY, union of CHIPPING-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (S. E. E.) from Chipping-Norton; containing 206 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, is a beautiful structure, in the early English style.

CHADLINGTON, WEST, a tything, in the parish of CHARLBURY, union of CHIPPING-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Chipping-Norton; containing 448 inhabitants.

CHADSHUNT, a chapelry, in the parish of BISHOP'S-ITCHINGTON, union of SOUTHAM, Kington division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Kington; containing 36 inhabitants. This place comprises by computation 1335 acres, the surface of which is in general uneven, and the soil a strong clay: a part of the hamlet is detached, and situated about three miles distant, in the parish of Radway. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Bishop's-Itchington: the great tithes have been commuted for £183, and the vicarial for £115. 10. The chapel is dedicated to All Saints. The inhabitants of Gaydon marry and bury at Chadshunt, which obtained a separate register in 1813, having previously been included in Bishop's-Itchington. In the burial-ground of the chapel was anciently an oratory, containing an image of St. Chad, to which numerous pilgrimages and offerings were made.

CHADWELL (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of ORSETT, hundred of BARSTABLE, S. division of ESSEX, 2 miles (E. by N.) from Grays; containing 236 inhabitants. It comprises about 1700 acres, chiefly arable, and is bounded on the south by the river Thames: the soil is generally deep and heavy, the surface is considerably elevated above the marshes, and the surrounding lands abound with chalk. At the time of the Norman survey, the parish belonged chiefly to the Bishop of London, and some portions to Odo, Bishop of Bayeux, and others. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 13. 4.; patron and incumbent, Rev. J. P. Herringham, whose tithes have been commuted for £480: the glebe contains 40 acres. The church, pleasantly situated on the brow of a hill, is a small ancient edifice. In a wood, near the highway leading to Stifford, are several ancient excavations, termed Danes' Holes.

CHADWELL, a ward, in the parish of BARKING, union of ROMFORD, hundred of BEACONTREE, S. division of ESSEX, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from London; containing 758 inhabitants.

CHADWELL, a chapelry, in the parish of ROTHLEY, union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing, with the hamlet of Wycombe, 118 inhabitants, of whom 60 are in Chadwell. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary.

CHADWICK, a hamlet, in the parish and union of BROMSGROVE, Upper division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, Droitwich and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Bromsgrove. Here was formerly a chapel.

CHAFFCOMBE (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of CHARD, hundred of SOUTH PETHERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Ilminster; containing 288 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Earl Poulett: the tithes have been commuted for £155, and the glebe consists of 28 acres.

CHAGFORD (St. Michael), a market-town and parish, in the union of OAKHAMPTON, hundred of WONFORD, Crockernwell and S. divisions of DEVON, 15 miles (S. W. by W.) from Exeter, and 186 (S. W.) from London; containing 1836 inhabitants. This place, originally held by Dodo, a Saxon, was given by William the Conqueror to the Bishop of Constance, and in 1328 was made one of the stannary towns by Edward III., who invested the lords of the manor with the power of inflicting capital punishment. In 1643, an action took place between the royalists and the parliamentarians, in which Sidney Godolphin was killed; and in the same century a fire occurred, when the charter for holding the market, and other records, were destroyed. The town is pleasantly situated near the river Teign, and sheltered by hills of romantic form; the houses are irregularly built, but the environs abound with pleasing and picturesque scenery. On the banks of the Teign is a large woollen-manufactory. The market is on Thursday; and there are fairs on the last Thursday in March, the first Thursday in May, and the last Thursday in September and October. The stannary court, in which the principal business of the mines is transacted, is held here. The parish comprises 8000 acres by measurement, of which 1200 are commons; two-thirds of the remainder are arable, and the rest pasture and woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £39. 0. 10., and in the patronage of Mrs. Grace Hames; net income, £442. The church is a handsome structure, and contains a richly-executed monument to the memory of Sir John Widdon, chief justice of the court of king's bench in the reign of Mary. About £12 are annually paid for teaching poor boys; and £7 per annum, arising from a benefaction by John Weekes, about 1790, for instructing girls. At the hamlets of Great Weeke and Teigncombe, in the parish, are the remains of ancient chapels, and there was a chapel also at Rushford.

CHAIGLEY, with AIGHTON, and BAILEY, a township, in the parish of MITTON, union of CLITHEROE, Lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Clitheroe; containing 1798 inhabitants, of whom 266 are in the hamlet of Chaigley.

CHAILEY (ST. PETER), a parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of STREET, rape of LEWES, E. division of SUSSEX, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Lewes; containing 1064 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from London to Lewes, and comprises by admeasurement 5889 acres; sandstone of good quality is found, and quarried for building purposes; the soil is generally fertile, and about 20 acres of land are under cultivation for hops. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 4. 2., and in the patronage of Mrs. Hepburn and Mrs. R. W. Blencowe: the tithes have been commuted for £682. 10., and the glebe comprises 5 acres. The church is a neat edifice, chiefly in the early English style, with a square embattled tower, surmounted by a spire; the rectory-house is a very ancient building, surrounded by a moat. A national school has been established, for which appropriate buildings were erected in 1813. There are several chalybeate springs.

CHALBURY, a parish, in the union of WIMBORNE and CRANBORNE, hundred of BADBURY, Wimborne division of DORSET, 5 miles (N. by E.) from Wimborne-Minster; containing, with the tything of Didlington, 152 inhabitants. This place comprises by measurement 1355 acres, of which about 584 are arable, 274 down, pasture, and meadow, 176 woodland, and 279 common. The village is situated on rising ground, commanding a fine view of the Needles and the British Channel. A particular sort of fine sand, used by founders, is obtained. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Earl of Pembroke: the tithes have been commuted for £180, and the glebe contains about 30 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. A school, conducted on the national system, is supported by the Earl of Shaftesbury and H. C. Sturt, Esq. At Didlington was anciently a chapel, now a farm-house, near which foundations of houses are often discovered in turning up the ground. There is a chalybeate spring.

CHALCOMBE (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a parish, in the union of BANBURY, hundred of KING'S SUTTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Banbury; containing 488 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the north and west by a portion of Oxfordshire, comprises 1641*a.* 1*r.* 9*p.*; the arable and pasture lands are rich, the dairy farms are well managed, and butter is sent in considerable quantities to the London market. The manufacture of lace, silk-stockings, and the weaving of shag, are carried on; but the trade is gradually declining. Freestone of tolerable quality is found, and the quarries have furnished materials for most of the houses in the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 17.; patron, C. W. Martin, Esq.: impropiators, the Landowners. The great tithes have been commuted for £199. 16., and the vicarial for £240; the glebe comprises $7\frac{1}{4}$ acres. The church is a handsome structure, in the decorated English style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is partly supported by subscription.

CHALDON (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a parish, in the union of REIGATE, First division of the hundred of WALLINGTON, E. division of SURREY, 5 miles (N. E. by E.) from Reigate; containing 197 inhabitants. It comprises 1653*a.* 1*r.* 10*p.*, of which upwards of 1000 acres are arable, 104 meadow, 347 wood, and 84 common; the surface is diversified throughout by depressions and elevations, and the leading soil is chalk, with occasional admixtures of gravel, resting upon a substratum of chalk. Here are some quarries of a soft species of stone, not much used. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 10. $7\frac{1}{2}$.; patron and incumbent, Rev. James Legrew, whose tithes have been commuted for £335. 11. 3., and who has a glebe of 31 acres, to which is attached a glebe-house. A small school is supported by the rector.

CHALDON-HERRING (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of WAREHAM and PURBECK, liberty of BINDON, Wareham division of DORSET, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Dorchester; containing 285 inhabitants. It is bounded by the English Channel on the south, and consists of 3012*a.* 3*r.* 23*p.*, the greater part of which is pasture land. A coast-guard station has lately been established. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 0. 10.; patron and impropiator, Joseph Weld, Esq.; net income, £62: the great tithes have been commuted for £5, and the vicarial for £9. The village called Chaldon-Boys, or West Chaldon, now comprising only one farm, with four or five cottages, was formerly a manor and a distinct parish; the church having become a ruin, the living, a rectory, was consolidated with Chaldon-Herring, in 1446.

CHALE (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the liberty of WEST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Newport; containing 610 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the coast, and at the head of a bay to which it gives name; the surface is strikingly varied, rising into hills of great elevation, of which St. Catherine's Hill, the loftiest in the island, is 850 feet above the level of the sea; a chapel was erected on its summit, in 1323, and dedicated to that saint, and the lower part of the building still serves as a land-mark to mariners. The land and sea views from this eminence are remarkably fine, and on its south-western declivity is a rugged chasm, called Black Gang Chine, which, viewed from the shore, has a very striking effect. The district abounds with stone of excellent quality for building, which is extensively quarried; and a vein of white sand, admirably adapted for the making of glass, has been recently discovered. The village is neatly built, and pleasantly situated, and on Chale Common several handsome mansions and some pleasing villas have been erected. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 3. 11½.; net income, £334; patrons, the Trustees of the late Rev. C. Richards. The church is situated at the base of St. Catherine's Hill. A parochial school is endowed with a rent-charge of £16. 14. 6., purchased with the sum of £150, bequeathed, in 1784, by Robert Weeks, Esq., and others. About half-way between the village and Niton, at Sand Rocks, is an aluminous chalybeate spring, discovered in 1809.

CHALFIELD, GREAT (St. CATHERINE), a parish, in the union and hundred of BRADFORD, Westbury and N. divisions, and Trowbridge and Bradford subdivisions, of WILTS, 3½ miles (W.) from Melksham; containing 18 inhabitants. It comprises 698a. 1r., of which 376 acres are meadow and pasture, 321 arable, and 1 woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of Lady Neale: the tithes have been commuted for £164. A building, now converted into a farm-house, is supposed to have been an ancient monastery.

CHALFIELD, LITTLE, an extra-parochial liberty, locally in the parish of GREAT CHALFIELD, union and hundred of BRADFORD, Westbury and N. divisions, and Trowbridge and Bradford subdivisions, of WILTS, 3¼ miles (W.) from Melksham; containing, with Cottles, 41 inhabitants.

CHALFONT (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of AMERSHAM, hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3¾ miles (S. E.) from Amersham; containing 1228 inhabitants. The ancient manor of Vach, in this parish, is said to have been King John's dairy-farm, which he made a resting-place on some occasions, on his journey to meet the refractory barons. The parish comprises about 3600 acres, the surface of which is undulated, and the soil, consisting of chalk, gravel, and clay, is considered poor. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 9. 4½., and in the gift of the Bishop of Lincoln: the tithes have been commuted for £790, and the glebe comprises 54½ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is of very great antiquity. Here are places of worship for the Society of Friends and Independents, in the cemetery attached to the former of which lie the remains of William Penn, founder of the colony of Pennsylvania. A school, now conducted on the national system, has been endowed by Sir Hugh Palliser with £30 per annum, and by Mrs. Molloy with £20 per annum; and there are eight almshouses. During the plague that raged in London in 1665, Milton resided at this place, where he completed his celebrated poem of Paradise Lost; the house in which he lived is now occupied by a poor family. Here are the remains of an ancient monastery, the chapel whereof is attached to the mansion of Vach, which appears to have been so named from the manor, shortly after the Conquest; and in the park is a monument erected by the late Sir Hugh Palliser to the memory of Capt. Cook, the circumnavigator, upon which is a long inscription composed by Admiral Forbes.

CHALFONT (St. PETER'S), a parish, in the union of AMERSHAM, hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 1½ mile (N. N. E.) from Gerrard's Cross; containing 1483 inhabitants. In the reign of Henry VIII., the rectory, manor, and 1147 acres of land belonged to Missenden Abbey, except about 18 acres, held by the abbot of St. Alban's; and these possessions were sold, at the Dissolution, to Sir Robert Drury and others, from whom they passed into the Bulstrode family. The parish is intersected by a tributary stream of the Colne, called Missbourne, upon which there is a silk-mill, affording employment to about fifty women. It comprises about 4564 acres, of which 4100 are arable, 292 wood, and 178 uninclosed common; the surface is irregular; the soil on the higher grounds is gravel, with a clayey, tenacious subsoil, and the lower grounds are covered with a thin coat of alluvial bog earth. The petty-sessions for the division are holden here. The living is a vicarage, endowed with part of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £15. 17. 1.; net income, £600; patrons, President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The remainder of the great tithes belongs to three proprietors of land. The church, rebuilt in 1726, is a plain brick edifice, with an embattled tower, seventy feet high, containing a peal of six well-toned bells; the quoins and window and door-cases, of stone, were brought from the ruins of the Roman station of Verulam, now St. Alban's. At Gerrard's-Cross the Earl of Portland built a school, which is supported by his descendant.

CHALFORD, a hamlet, in the union of STROUD, partly in the parish and hundred of BISLEY, and partly in the parish of MINCHIN-HAMPTON, hundred of LONGTREE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Stroud. This populous and thriving place is situated in a rich and fertile vale, abounding with pleasing and picturesque scenery, and is intersected by the river Froome, which pursues a beautifully winding course through luxuriant meadows, and here separates the two parishes in which Chalford is situated. The manufacture of woollen-cloth, still carried on to a great extent, was introduced at an early period; and in the reign of Anne there were three mills in the hamlet; that retained exclusively the use of some advantageous discovery in the process of the manufacture. The road from Stroud to Cirencester, and the Thames and Severn canal, pass through the village; and the vicinity is thickly studded with the numerous dwellings of the persons employed in the factories. An episcopal chapel was erected in the village, within the parish of Bisley, in 1725, and endowed by Mrs. Hester Taylor and others; the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Trustees; net income, £90. A district church, situated in the vale, and dedicated to Christ, was consecrated in September, 1841; net income of the incumbent, £150. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans. At St. Mary's Mill, in the hamlet, was anciently a chapel, or religious house, in which, according to Camden, Friar Bacon was educated; it has lately given place to a more modern building, but a room in the present house, called Bacon's room, is supposed to have been the study of that learned monk.

CHALFORD, a township, in the parish of ASTON-ROWANT, union of THAME, hundred of LEWKNOR, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (E. S. E.) from Tetsworth; containing 58 inhabitants. This place formed part of the possessions of the monastery of St. Alban's, and on the Dissolution was granted by Henry VIII., for the sum of £413. 17. 6., to Bartholomew Piggot, from whom it passed to various families.

CHALGRAVE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WOBURN, hundred of MANSHEAD, county of BEDFORD, 3½ miles (N. by W.) from Dunstable; containing, with the hamlets of Tebworth and Wingfield, 818 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united in 1772 to the rectory of Hockliffe, and valued in the king's books at £12; the impropriation belongs to Trinity Hall, Cambridge. The church is a venerable edifice, in the ancient English style, and contains two antique tombs with statues of knights in armour. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans at Tebworth, where was formerly a chapel, endowed with 36 acres of land. There are endowed almshouses for six maidens, and two for six widows.

CHALGROVE (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of THAME, hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Bensington; containing, with Rufford liberty, 691 inhabitants. This place was distinguished in the civil war, as the scene of a battle that occurred at Chalgrove Field, in June, 1643, between the royalists under Prince Rupert, and a detachment of the parliamentary army under the Earl of Essex, in which the latter were defeated, several officers killed, and the celebrated Hampden mortally wounded. In 1843, precisely two centuries afterwards, a monument was erected to the memory of the patriot, on the spot where he received his death-wound. An act for inclosing lands in the parish was passed in 1843. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 5. 5.; net income, £276; patrons, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. Tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1797, and under the recent act, the tithes belonging to the Dean and Canons of Christ-Church have been commuted for £435. 2., those belonging to the Dean and Canons of St. George's, Windsor, for £164. 6., and the vicarial tithes for £158. 1.; the appropriate glebe contains 65½ acres, and the vicarial 3½ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church, of which the steeple was struck down by lightning, in 1727, contains some interesting monuments, and a curious ancient font. There are a chapel of ease at Berrick Salome, in the parish, and a place of worship for Baptists.

CHALK (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of NORTH AYLESFORD, hundred of SHAMWELL, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 1¼ mile (E. S. E.) from Gravesend; containing 385 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the north by the Thames, and intersected by the Thames and Medway canal, comprises about 1800 acres; the soil is chalk, with a little gravel. There was formerly a considerable manufactory for gun-flints, esteemed the best in Europe. A fair is held on Whit-Monday. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 3. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown; impropriator, Earl of Darnley. The great tithes have been commuted for £481. 10. 10., and the vicarial for £198. 10.; the impropriate glebe contains upwards of 30 acres. The church is very ancient, and has various figures carved over the entrance, the origin and meaning of which have caused much controversy.

CHALLACOMBE (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of BARNSTAPLE, hundred of SHERWILL, Braunton and N. divisions of DEVON, 10 miles (N. E. by E.) from Barnstaple; containing 305 inhabitants. The parish comprises 5342a. 1r. 22p., nearly one-half of which is common: the South-Molton and Combmartin road passes through its western extremity. Slate and stone are quarried, the former of inferior quality. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 9. 2.; and in the patronage of Earl Fortescue: the tithes have been commuted for £189, and the glebe contains nearly 60 acres, with a glebe-house. The church is a small edifice, in the later English style, and has a fine ancient stone font, of curious workmanship. There is a parochial school, which has a trifling endowment. About a mile and a half south-east of the church, is an encampment, called Showlsborough, or Shrewsbury, Castle, of an oblong square form, containing about two acres, surrounded by a mound of earth.

CHALLOCK (ST. COSMUS AND ST. DAMIEN), a parish, in the union of EAST ASHFORD, hundred of FELBOROUGH, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 6 miles (S.) from Faversham; containing 429 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2739 acres, of which upwards of 1000 are arable, 694 wood, and 970 meadow and pasture, the larger part of the last being park land. A fair is held on the 8th of October, for horses, cattle, and pedlery; a grant for which, and for a market, now disused, was obtained in the 38th of Henry III., by Henry de Apulderfield, then lord of the manor, whose mansion is said to have stood upon a spot called Apulderfield's Garden, in the Earl of Winchilsea's park. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Godmersham: the church is a spacious edifice, in the early English style, with an embattled tower, steeple, and beacon turret. A school for children of both sexes, in connexion with the National Society has been established.

CHALLOW, EAST, a chapelry, in the parish of LETCOMB-REGIS, union of WANTAGE, hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, 1¼ mile (W.) from Wantage; containing 336 inhabitants. It comprises 1293a. 14p., and is crossed by the Wilts and Berks canal; and the Great Western railway approaches within 1¼ mile of the chapel, which is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

CHALLOW, WEST, a chapelry, in the parish of LETCOMB-REGIS, union of WANTAGE, hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, 2 miles (W. N. W.) from Wantage; containing 248 inhabitants. The chapelry comprises 666 acres; the Wilts and Berks canal intersects it, and the Great Western railway passes within a mile. The chapel is dedicated to St. Lawrence: the living is a donative, in the gift of Miss Ferard.

CHALTON, a hamlet, in the parish of TODDINGTON, union of WOBURN, hundred of MANSHEAD, county of BEDFORD; containing 224 inhabitants.

CHALTON, or CHALKTON, (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of CATHERINGTON, hundred of FINCH-DEAN, Petersfield and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (N. E.) from Horndean; containing, with the chapelry of Idsworth, 659 inhabitants. The parish is situated chiefly on the downs; the soil is unfavourable, and the land unproductive. There is a small iron-foundry at Idsworth. The living is a rectory, with that of Clanfield united, valued in the king's books at £20. 0. 10., and in the patronage of King's College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for £218, and the glebe contains 77 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The Independents have a place of worship; and two schools are partly supported by subscription, and a school for girls by endowment.

CHALVEY, a hamlet, in the parish of UPTON, union of ETON, hundred of STOKE, county of BUCKINGHAM, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N.) from Eton; containing 674 inhabitants. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1808. Here is a place of worship for Independents.

CHALVINGTON (St. Bartholomew), a parish, in the union of WEST FIRLE, hundred of SHIPLAKE, rape of PEVENSEY, E. division of SUSSEX, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Uckfield; containing 192 inhabitants. It comprises about 730 acres, of which 446 are arable, 259 meadow, and about 15 wood; the surface is altogether flat, and the soil has several varieties. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the gift of Augustus Elliott Fuller, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £190, and the glebe comprises 29 acres. The church is principally in the decorated English style.

CHANDLINGS, an extra-parochial district, in the union of ABINGDON, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS; containing 11 inhabitants.

CHAPEL, ESSEX.—See PONTISBRIGHT.

CHAPEL-ALLERTON, or CHAPELTOWN, a chapelry, in the parish of ST PETER, liberty of LEEDS, W. riding of YORK, 2 miles (N. by E.) from Leeds, on the road to Harrogate; comprehending the villages of Chapeltown, Meanwood, Gledhow, and Moor-Allerton, and containing 2580 inhabitants. It abounds with pleasing and picturesque scenery, and is noted for the salubrity of its air. The lands, which comprise by admeasurement 2763 acres, are in a high state of cultivation, and from the gentle undulation of the surface, rising in some parts into graceful elevation, and embellished with villas and plantations, the district has a strikingly beautiful aspect; stone of good quality abounds, and the quarries have afforded materials for the erection of the church, and several of the principal residences. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £361; patron, Vicar of Leeds. The church, which is in the Grecian style, was enlarged and repaired in 1840, at a cost of £1200, raised by subscription. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. In the village of Chapeltown is a spacious parochial school, which was rebuilt by subscription in 1836; and another, also on a large scale, was built at Meanwood, in 1841, at the expense of Christopher Beckett, Esq., lord of the manor, where divine service is performed by license from the bishop.

CHAPEL-EN-LE-FRITH (St. Thomas à Becket), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 41 miles (N. W. by N.) from Derby, and 167 (N. W. by N.) from London, on the road from Sheffield to Manchester; containing 3199 inhabitants, and comprising the townships of Bowden-Edge, Bradshaw-Edge, and Coombs-Edge. The town is pleasantly situated on the acclivity of a hill rising from a vale embosomed in the mountains that bound this extremity of the county; it is partially paved, and amply supplied with water. A small subscription library was established a few years since. The principal branch of manufacture is that of cotton, in which more than 300 people are employed; about 100 persons are engaged in the manufacture of paper, chiefly for the London newspapers; and there are a rope-walk and an iron-forge near the town; also several coal-mines in the parish. The Peak Forest canal passes three miles to the north-west, and, by means of a railway, communicates with the Peak Forest limeworks, about three miles to the east of the town: there is a reservoir in the parish that occasionally supplies the canal with water. The market, which is on Thursday, has greatly declined: the fairs, most of which are insignificant, are on the Thursday before February 13th, March 24th and 29th, the Thursday before Easter, April 30th, Holy-Thursday, and the third Thursday after, for cattle; July 7th, for wool; the Thursday preceding August 24th, for sheep and cheese; the Thursday after September 29th, and the Thursday before November 11th, for cattle. The High Peak court, for the recovery of debts under £5, at which the steward of the Duke of Devonshire presides, is held every third week.

The parish comprises about 8370 acres, the surface of which is in general hilly. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the resident freeholders, of whom a committee of 27, chosen in equal numbers from the three "edges," or hamlets, into which the parish is divided, elect the minister by a majority; net income, £145; the glebe contains about 60 or 70 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a neat edifice, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, which, with the south front, was rebuilt in the beginning of the last century, at the expense of the parishioners. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school was founded, in 1696, by Mrs. Mary Dixon, who assigned to it a house and land producing £18 per annum; and there is a school at Bowden's Edge, established by Mrs. Mary Bagshaw, who endowed it with £5 a year. A fund, amounting to £13. 7. 6. per annum, arising from various benefactions, is applied to the apprenticing of children; and there are various bequests for distribution in bread and clothing to the poor. The union, of which the town is the head, comprises 16 parishes or places, and contains a population of 11,349. At Bar-moor-Clough, about two miles to the east, is an ebbing and flowing well; and on a hill two miles to the south, are the vestiges of a Roman encampment, from which a Roman road leads to Brough, about eight miles distant.

CHAPEL-HILL, a chapelry, in the parish of SWINES-HEAD, wapentake of KIRTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN; containing 213 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £47; patron, Vicar of Swineshead. The chapel was erected by subscription, in the year 1826.

CHAPEL-HILL, a parish, in the union and division of CHEPSTOW, hundred of RAGLAN, county of MONMOUTH, 5 miles (N.) from Chepstow; containing 521 inhabitants, several of whom are employed in the manufacture of iron wire. This parish, consisting of 820 acres, is romantically situated on the right bank of the Wye, in a district abounding with richly varied and beautiful scenery. It contains the venerable and stately remains of Tintern Abbey, founded for Cistercian monks by Walter de Clare, in 1141, and dedicated to St. Mary: at the Dissolution, its revenue was estimated at £256. 11. 6., and the site was granted to the Earl of Worcester, from whom it has descended to the Duke of Beaufort. The remains consist principally of the walls of the abbey church, which are almost entire, and richly mantled with ivy; and the exterior of the building, though defaced by mean cottages, which have been built with the materials of the abbey, forms a strikingly picturesque object, as seen from the opposite bank of the river. The clustered columns, of light and graceful proportion, which separated the south aisle from the nave, and the sharply pointed arches that supported the roof, are yet entire; and those of loftier elevation which sustained the central tower, though dilapidated, still retain their grandeur of effect. The ranges of pillars and arches in the transepts are also in good preservation. The east window, which occupies nearly the whole of the east end of the choir, is beautifully enriched with tracery; and the whole of the interior, from the beauty of the style (the early English in its richest state, merging into the decorated), the symmetry of its parts, the harmony of its arrangement, and the richness and elegance of its details, is unsurpassed by any specimen in the kingdom. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £60; patron and impropiator, Duke of Beaufort. A school is partly supported by subscription.

CHAPEL-LE-DALE, a hamlet, in the township of INGLETON, parish of BENTHAM, wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWXCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (N.) from Ingleton. This place, which is situated in a deeply sequestered spot, is much celebrated for the beauty of its scenery, abounding with features of varying interest, and distinguished by an air of calm serenity and retirement. The chapel is a small edifice, of simple character, harmonising with the surrounding landscape: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £82. 10.; patron, the Rector of Bentham.

CHAPEL-POINT, or PORT-EAST, a sea-port and chapelry, in the parish of GORRAN, union of ST. AUSTELL, E. division of the hundred of POWDER and of the county of CORNWALL, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Tregony. A great quantity of pilchards is taken and cured; some coal is imported. The chapel is in ruins.

CHAPEL-SUCKEN, a township, in the parish of MILLOM, union of BOOTLE, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 12 miles (S. E. by S.) from Ravenglass; containing 214 inhabitants.

CHAPEL-THORPE, a district chapelry, in the parish of GREAT SANDALL, union of WAKEFIELD, Lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Wakefield; containing 1479 inhabitants. It comprises the township of Crigglestone, and is separated from Horbury by the river Calder; the number of acres is 3000, and the district is rich in coal and freestone. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £200; patron, Vicar of Great Sandall; impropiator, R. Allatt, Esq. The chapel, dedicated to St. James, is a neat plain edifice, rebuilt 75 years since, by parochial rate. A school is supported by subscription; and at New Millerdam is a school in connexion with the National Society, established in 1830, by Lady Pilkington and the incumbent of the chapelry.

CHAPELTOWN, a hamlet, in the parish of ECCLESFIELD, union of WORTLEY, wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL (N. division), W. riding of YORK, 6 miles (N.) from Sheffield; containing 1300 inhabitants. This place is situated on the road from Sheffield to Barnsley, in the valley below Ecclesfield. Coal and iron-stone of excellent quality are obtained, the working of which employs several hundred hands; good stone is quarried for building, and there are extensive iron-works, belonging to Messrs. D. Nisbett and Co. At a short distance from the village is Howsley Hall, in the garden of which is a fine old cork-tree in full growth, supposed to be the only one in England, with the exception of that at Windsor Castle. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CHAPELWICK, a chapelry, in the parish of ASHBURY, union of FARRINGDON, hundred of SHRIVENHAM, county of BERKS. It is situated near the border of the county of Wilts.

CHARBOROUGH (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BLANDFORD, hundred of LOOSEBARROW, Wimborne division of DORSET, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Blandford-Forum. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to the vicarage of Morden, and valued in the king's books at £7. 3. $6\frac{1}{2}$. The church, a handsome and interesting edifice, is used only as the burial-place of the Drax family. Over the door of a small arched building in the grounds of Charborough House is a tablet put up by Thomas Erle Drax, Esq., in 1790, with an inscription commemorating the meeting, in 1686, of some patriotic individuals, who here concerted the plan of the Revolution.

CHARCOMBE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of KILMERSDON, county of SOMERSET; containing 30 inhabitants.

CHARD (St. Mary), a very ancient borough, market-town, and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of KINGSBURY-EAST, W. division of SOMERSET, 12 miles (S. E. by S.) from Taunton, and 139 (W. S. W.) from London; comprising the tythings of Old, South, and Crim, Chard, the tything of Forton, and the tything of Tatworth; and containing 5788 inhabitants, of whom 2877 are in the borough, 1331 in Old Chard, 517 in Crim-Chard, and 471 in South Chard. This was a place of considerable importance during the heptarchy, and was by the Saxons called Cerde (subsequently Cherde, or Cerde), a name supposed to be derived from Cerdic, the founder of the kingdom of Wessex. In the 14th of Edward I. it was incorporated by Bishop Joslin, who set apart fifty-two acres out of his manor of Cherde, which he constituted the borough, and gave leave for any person to settle here except Turk or Jew. It made eight returns of members to parliament, having exercised the franchise until the 2nd of Edward III., when the privilege was discontinued. In the civil war of the seventeenth century a battle took place, in which a party of royalists, under the command of Colonel Penruddock, was defeated. The town is situated at the southern extremity of the county, and upon the highest ground between the Bristol and English Channels, both of which are visible from Windwhistle Hill, about three miles to the east. It is in a flourishing state, and consists principally of two streets, intersecting each other, and lighted with gas; the houses are in general well built, and the inhabitants are supplied with water conveyed by leaden pipes into four conduits, from a spring at its western extremity, which furnishes a clear stream of water running through it. A handsome and commodious hotel, called the Chard Arms, has been lately erected in the Fore-street, at an expense of £5000. The clothing trade was formerly the staple trade of the town, but has been almost superseded by the manufacture of lace, for which several large works have been built within a few years, and which at one time employed 1500 of the inhabitants; it is now on the decrease. Two attempts to find coal have been made in the vicinity, one in 1793, the other in 1827, when, after boring to the depth of 378 feet, without penetrating through the lias formation, the operations were discontinued: the stone found is chiefly flint, which is used for building. A branch canal to the town from the Taunton and Bridgwater canal, near Creech-St. Michael, has been completed at a cost of about £70,000. The market is on Monday, and is noted for the sale of corn, potatoes, and various other commodities: the fairs are on the first Wednesdays in May, August, and November; and there are four great cattle markets, namely, the first Monday in December, the second Mondays in January and February, and the third Monday in March. The ancient assize-hall, used as a market-house, the shambles, and the town-hall (formerly a chapel, dedicated to St. Stephen), which stood in the centre of the Fore-street, were lately removed; and an elegant structure, comprising a town-hall, market-house, and butchery, has been erected on the south side of the same street, at an expense of more than £3000, from a design by Mr. R. Carver, architect of Taunton. The town was formerly governed by a portreeve and twelve burgesses, assisted by a town-clerk, two bailiffs, and a constable; but by the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76, the corporation now consists of a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors; the mayor and late mayor are justices of the peace. A petty-session is held monthly at the Chard Arms hotel.

The parish comprises about 5400 acres, nearly equally divided between arable and pasture land. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £36. 18. 9.; patron, Bishop of Bath and Wells; appropriator, Dean of Wells: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £520, and those of the Dean for £322; there are 4 acres of glebe, of which one belongs to the vicar, who has also a house in good repair. The church is a handsome cruciform structure, with a lower tower at the west end: in the north-east corner of the south transept is a splendid monument, having the effigies of William Brewer, M.D., and his wife, kneeling before an altar, with their family of eleven children behind them; and in the south corner of the same transept, and various parts of the church, are other handsome monuments. The edifice was repaired and enlarged in 1830. A church has been erected at Tatworth containing 300 sittings, of which 256 are free, the Incorporated Society having granted, in 1841, £120 in aid of the expense. there are places of worship for Particular Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans. A school was established by the portreeve and burgesses, to whom a house and field were devised, by William Symes, of Pounsford, in 1671; and there are also parochial schools. An almshouse for poor people, which has lately been rebuilt, was founded in 1668, by Richard Harvey, Esq., who endowed it with estates producing about £300 per annum. The union of Chard comprises thirty-four parishes or places, of which thirty-two are in Somerset, and one in each of the counties of Devon and Dorset, and contains a population of 26,609: the newly-erected union-house forms a striking object at the eastern entrance into the town, on the London road, and was built for the reception of 300 paupers. A few years since, a beautiful tessellated pavement was discovered on the road to Taunton, leading to a Roman encampment, called the castle of Neroche, about six miles from the town; and, in 1831, the gardener of Henry Host Henley, Esq., of Leigh House, in the vicinity, dug up in the garden a Roman urn, containing a great number of gold coins of the Emperor Claudius, very fresh and bright.

CHARDSTOCK (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of AXMINSTER, hundred of BEAMINSTER, Bridport division of DORSET, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from Chard; containing 1405 inhabitants. It is intersected by the road from Bristol to Lyme-Regis, and by that from Chard to Honiton, and is bounded on the south-east by the river Axe: limestone is quarried, and burnt chiefly for manure. Great quantities of cider are made. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the patronage of the Bishop of Salisbury, and valued in the king's books at £14. 2. 6.; impropiator, and lord of the manor, Lord Henley. The great tithes have been commuted for £490, and the vicarial for £490; the impropriate glebe consists of 65 acres, and the vicarial contains about an acre, to which there is a glebe-house. The parochial church, rebuilt in 1839, is a handsome structure in the later English style; the pulpit is of stone, and the altar-screen, also of stone, is richly carved and embellished with canopied niches; the windows of the chancel are of painted glass. A district chapelry, called All Saints, was formed in 1841, and attached to a chapel lately built at the southern extremity of the parish; it comprises a population of about 400 persons, half of whom reside in this parish, and half in that of Axminster. The chapel was consecrated by the Bishop of Salisbury, April 23, 1840: Robert Williams, Esq., presented an elegant service of communion plate. The income of the living, which is a perpetual curacy, was augmented in 1842, with £15 per annum by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a national school.

CHARFIELD (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of THORNBURY, Upper division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S-ASH, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 2½ miles (N. by W.) from Wickwar; containing 471 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 1. 3.; patron and incumbent, Rev. R. P. Jones. The tithes have been commuted for £304, and the glebe contains 36 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is principally in the later English style, with a low tower.

CHARFORD, NORTH (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union and hundred of FORDINGBRIDGE, Ringwood and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3½ miles (N. by E.) from Fordingbridge; containing, with the tything of South Charford, 116 inhabitants. In the Saxon annals this place is called Cerdickford, from Cerdic, who defeated the Britons near a ford on the Avon, and subsequently became the founder of the West Saxon kingdom. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £5. 13. 4.: the church is in ruins.

CHARFORD, SOUTH, a tything, in the parish of NORTH CHARFORD, union and hundred of FORDING-BRIDGE, Ringwood and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 62 inhabitants.

CHARING (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a parish, in the union of WEST ASHFORD, hundred of CALEHILL, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 12½ miles (E. S. E.) from Maidstone, on the road from London to Folkestone; containing 1241 inhabitants. On the division of the possessions of the monastery of Christ-Church, Canterbury, in the time of Archbishop Lanfranc, Charing was allotted to the archbishop, who had a palace here, the ruins of which are still standing near the churchyard. It is uncertain when and by whom the palace was built, but it is of great antiquity, and must have been extensive: it is reported to have been the residence of King John. Archbishop Morton rebuilt it in the reign of Henry VII., and, in March, 1507, lodged and entertained that monarch there; and Henry VIII. slept in it on the 23rd of May, 1520, when on his way to the continent to have his celebrated interview with Francis I. of France, in the Field of Gold Cloth. The parish is in the bailiwick of Chart and Longbridge, and comprises 4551*a.* 19*p.*, of which about 2414 acres are arable, 1229 pasture, 60 hop-grounds, 684 wood, and 72 common. The Hill of Charing contains an inexhaustible supply of chalk, immense quantities of which are yearly converted into lime, principally consumed in the Weald of Kent. It also abounds with fossil exuviae of marine production; and some beautiful specimens of palatal and other teeth of Ptychodus, Polygyrus, and other varieties of extinct species of fossil sharks, with spongia, oysters, echinites, vertebræ, ammonites, plagiostoma, spinosum, &c., have been procured from the chalk. In the gale below the hill, ammonites, belemnites, hamites, and other chambered shells, enamelled scales and various bivalve shells are plentiful. Its summit affords a beautiful, varied, and extensive prospect of the surrounding country, with the British Channel in perspective. Fairs are held at the village on April 29th and Oct. 29th, for cattle (mostly Welsh) and pedlery.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London. The rectory, with the annexed chapel of Egerton, is valued in the king's books at £47. 5. 4., and is held on lease under the Dean and Chapter by the executors of Mrs. Cassandra Marshall: the appropriate tithes have been commuted for £735, and the vicarial for £480; the glebe, to which there is a house, contains 29 acres. The church consists of an aisle, transept, and lofty chancel, with a chapel on the south side of it (built by Amy Brent in the reign of Richard II.); and a square tower with a turret at the south-eastern angle; it is chiefly in the later style of English architecture, and has twice sustained injury by fire. The arms of Hugh Brent, Esq., and a rose, the badge of Edward IV., are still visible in the belfry.

There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A free-school, founded by a bequest of Elizabeth Ludwell, who died in 1765, is endowed with £25 per annum, and has two exhibitions to Oriel College, Oxford. Urns, coins, and other evidences of a Roman station have been found in the parish.

CHARLBURY (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of CHIPPING-NORTON, partly in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, and partly in that of BANBURY, county of OXFORD, 6¾ miles (W. N. W.) from Woodstock; containing 2982 inhabitants, and comprising the chapelries of East Chadlington and Shorthampton, the tything of West Chadlington, and the hamlets of Fawler, Finstock, and Walcott. This parish, in old records called Ceorlebury, signifying, in the Saxon language, "the settlement of free labourers," anciently belonged to the bishops of Lincoln, whose seat was at Dorchester, in this county, and was afterwards given in exchange for other lands, to the monastery of Eynsham, founded by King Ethelred. It continued to form part of the endowment of Eynsham till the Dissolution, when the manor, and subsequently the vicarage, were purchased by St. John's College, Oxford, who are the present proprietors, and hold annually their courts leet and baron. Canbury Park, adjoining this place, was once part of the demesne forest of the king, and extended for nine miles, both in length and breadth; it afterwards became the property of Jasper, Duke of Bedford, from whom it passed to the Duke of Northumberland, and subsequently to Henry, Lord Danvers, who built the present mansion, a spacious and handsome edifice, with an adjoining chapel, in which are some elegant specimens of carved oak. The estate, after the Restoration, came to the Earl of Clarendon, who took his title of viscount from this place; it was subsequently sold to the trustees of John, Duke of Marlborough, and is now the property of Lord Churchill. The village was formerly a market-town of note, but the market has been for some time discontinued; fairs are still held on the 1st of Jan., the second Friday in Lent, and the second Friday after the 12th of May, for live stock, and also on the 10th of Oct. for cattle and cheese. The living is a vicarage, with the chapels of Chadlington and Shorthampton annexed, valued in the king's books at £25. 5. 10.; net income, £800; patrons, the President and Fellows of St. John's College, who are also impropiators of Chadlington; impropiators of Charlbury, the Duke of Marlborough and Lord Churchill. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1811. The church is an ancient and venerable structure, with a square embattled tower; it is partly in the Norman and partly in the early English style, and contains some memorials of the Jenkinsons, ancestors of the Earl of Liverpool, and a mural monument to Elizabeth, Viscountess Dowager of Hereford, and her grandson, Lord George Henry Somerset. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The free grammar school was endowed by Mrs. Ann Walker, with £40 per annum, payable out of an estate that produces £200 per annum, from which also are paid two exhibitions of £5 each for scholars from this school, which is under the visitation of Brasenose College, Oxford; a school-house has been erected at an expense of £600. A Lancasterian school is partly supported by the interest of a bequest of £100, and by voluntary contribution.

CHARLCOMBE (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BATH, hundred of HAMPTON and CLAVERTON, locally in that of BATH-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET, 1 mile (N.) from Bath; containing 84 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 523 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 15. 10., and annexed to the mastership of the free grammar school at Bath, in the patronage of the Trustees: the tithes have been commuted for £134, and the glebe consists of 14 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a very small ancient edifice, and, according to tradition, was formerly the mother church of Bath, and received an annual acknowledgment of a pound of pepper from the abbey there.

CHARLCOTE (St. Leonard), a parish, in the union of STRATFORD-ON-AVON, Warwick division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Stratford; containing 267 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the west by the river Avon, which on the south receives the waters of a tributary stream, called the Huile; it comprises about 1949 acres, of which 1495 are arable, and 450 pasture; the surface is in general level, and the soil a sandy loam. The grounds of Charlcote Park, the seat of the ancient family of Lucy, abounding with elms of stately growth, and well stocked with deer, add greatly to the beauty of the scenery: the mansion-house, a noble structure of brick and stone, was built by Sir Thomas Lucy, Knight, in the reign of Elizabeth, and forms an interesting specimen of domestic architecture. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6; net income, £183; patron and impropriator, George Lucy, Esq. A few acres of glebe are in this parish, and a small portion in that of Willington. The church contains some monuments of the Lucy family, of which one, of statuary marble, to the memory of Sir Thomas and Lady Lucy, is a celebrated work of art by Bernini of Rome. At Thelesford, in the parish, a small priory, for monks of the order of the Holy Trinity, was founded in the reign of John, by Sir William Lucy, Knt., for the redemption of captives.

CHARLCOTT, a tything, in the parish and union of WHITCHURCH, hundred of EVINGAR, Kingsclere, and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (S. by E.) from Whitchurch; containing 22 inhabitants.

CHARLES (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of SOUTH MOLTON, hundred of SHERWILL, Braunton and N. divisions of DEVON, 9 miles (E.) from Barnstaple; containing 362 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 10.; net income, £160; patron, Rev. Richard Blackmore. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans.

CHARLESTOWN, a sea-port, in the parish and union of ST. AUSTELL, E. division of the hundred of POWDER, and of the county of CORNWALL, 1 mile (E. S. E.) from St. Austell. This place is situated on the western side of St. Austell bay, and, in 1790, when known by the name of Porthmear, contained only nine inhabitants; but since that period, owing to the spirited exertions of Charles Rashleigh, Esq., from whom it derives its modern appellation, it has become a thriving port, and is still increasing in extent and importance. The harbour is secured by a commodious pier, and defended by a battery of heavy ordnance on Crinnis Cliff;

it contains an outer and an inner basin, the latter being capacious enough to admit vessels of 500 tons' burthen. Here are yards and dry docks for building and repairing large ships, and a rope and twine manufactory; and a great quantity of lime is burnt; but the chief trade of the place consists in its extensive pilchard fishery, for which several seans have been put on, and receiving-houses erected. Most of the china clay brought from St. Stephen's is shipped at this port. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school has been erected.

CHARLESWORTH, a chapelry, in the parish and union of GLOSSOP, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Chapel-en-le-Frith; containing 1732 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

CHARLETON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of KINGSBRIDGE, hundred of COLERIDGE, Stanborough and Coleridge, and S. divisions of DEVON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Kingsbridge; containing 703 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £31. 8. 4., and in the patronage of Lord Ashburton: the tithes have been commuted for £550, and the glebe comprises 30 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church contains, over the altar, a good painting of Our Saviour and the Twelve Apostles, by Mr. Lethbridge, a native of the parish.

CHARLETON, QUEEN (St. Margaret), a parish, in the union and hundred of KEYNSHAM, E. division of SOMERSET, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Pensford; containing 190 inhabitants. This place obtained its distinguishing appellation from having been settled on Catherine Parr, Queen of Henry VIII. The salubrity of the air made it a place of considerable resort, particularly in 1574, when the plague swept away 2000 persons at Bristol. The parish comprises 952 acres: the road to Bath formerly intersected the village. A fair, granted by Elizabeth, on her progress through the place, in 1573, is held on the 20th of July. The living is a vicarage not in charge, in the patronage of Miss Dickenson, to whom also the impropriation belongs; net income, £48. In 1760, Mary Freeman left £500, producing £25 per annum, for clothing and teaching twenty boys.

CHARLEY, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of LOUGHBOROUGH, hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Loughborough; containing 53 inhabitants. The ancient forest of Charley, or Charnwood, twenty miles in circuit, was disafforested soon after the Conquest; its privileges were restored by Henry II., but finally abolished by Henry III. A society of eremites, of the order of St. Augustine, settled here in the reign of Henry II., by the favour of Robert Blanchmains, Earl of Leicester; but in the time of Edward II. it was united to one at Ulvescroft, where a priory of regular canons, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, continued until the Dissolution, when its revenue was estimated at £101. 3. 10.

CHARLEY, a hamlet, in the parish of FAREWELL, union of LICHFIELD, S. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Lichfield; containing 158 inhabitants.

CHARLINCH (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of CANNINGTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Bridgwater; containing 215 inhabitants. This place stands partly on a high ridge of land, and partly in a valley, and comprises 1432a. 2r. 7p., of which about 844 are arable, 491 meadow and pasture, 45 woodland, and 18 common; the soil in the lower part is chiefly clay, and in the upper the earth rests upon grey-wacke and sandstone. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 15. 5., and in the patronage of the Representative of the late Rev. Dr. T. Starkey: the tithes have been commuted for £268. 3. 8., and the glebe comprises 82 acres. Gotherney House, an old building of the fifteenth or sixteenth century, is now occupied as a farmhouse.

CHARLTON, a hamlet, in the parish, union, and hundred of WANTAGE, county of BERKS, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. E.) from Wantage; containing 329 inhabitants, and comprising 1368a. 8p.

CHARLTON, a tything, in the parish, and Upper division of the hundred, of HENBURY, union of CLIFTON, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Bristol; containing 319 inhabitants.

CHARLTON (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of DOVOR, partly in the hundred of BEWSBOROUGH, but chiefly within the liberty of the cinqueport of DOVOR (of which it is a member), lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, 1 mile (N. N. E.) from Dovor; containing 2513 inhabitants. This place, it is conjectured, was the Portus Dubris of the Romans, several anchors and fragments of wreck having been discovered at various times. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £32; net income, £99; patron, Rev. John Monins. The church has been enlarged by the addition of 258 free sittings, the Incorporated Society having, in 1827, granted £200 towards defraying the expense.

CHARLTON (St. LUKE), a parish, in the union of LEWISHAM, hundred of BLACKHEATH, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from London; containing 2655 inhabitants. This place, in ancient records called Cerletone and Ceorletone, is supposed to have derived that name from Ceorle, the Saxon term for husbandman. The manor appears to have belonged, from the close of the eleventh century till the Dissolution, to the monks of Bermondsey, to whom Henry III. granted a charter for a weekly market and an annual fair on the eve of the Holy Trinity, to be held here. In 1665, the town, which at that time was a place of considerable importance, suffered severely from the ravages of the plague, and, together with the surrounding neighbourhood, sustained much injury from a violent tempest. The parish comprises by admeasurement 1400 acres, of which 528 are arable, 460 pasture, 165 marsh, and 30 woodland; and is delightfully situated in the heart of a fertile district, abounding with picturesque scenery, interspersed with elegant villas, and commanding from the higher parts extensive prospects. The village, which is situated on rising ground, retains much of its rural character; nearly opposite to the church is the ancient manor-house, erected in 1612, a spacious and stately building, in front of which is a row of cypress-trees, said to have been the first planted in England. The market has long been discontinued; the fair, now held on St. Luke's-day, is called Horn fair, from the numerous articles of that material brought for sale. The jurisdiction of the court of requests for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5, which is held in rotation at Bromley, Greenwich, Woolwich, and Croydon, extends over this parish. The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 7. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Sir T. M. Wilson, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £600, and the glebe comprises 13 acres. The church, rebuilt of brick in 1640, and enlarged in 1839, is a neat edifice, with a square embattled tower; the windows are embellished with numerous armorial bearings in stained glass, and the interior contains various pieces of ancient armour, and numerous handsome monuments, among which are one to Lady Catherine Puckeridge; one to Brigadier-General Richards, surveyor of the ordnance in the reign of George II.; and one to the Right Hon. Spencer Perceval, who was interred in the church. There is a proprietary chapel on the north side of the heath; and the church of St. Peter, in Blackheath Park, and Morden College, are both in the parish. A parochial school was built by Sir William Langhorne, who, in 1714, endowed it with £300, now producing £8 per annum; it is conducted on the national plan. Sir William also bequeathed £1000 to augment the rector's income. An infants' school is supported by subscription. A national school for boys has been built, and one for girls, adjoining the almshouses, has been repaired and enlarged at an expense of £400.

CHARLTON, a hamlet, partly in the parish of NEWBOTTLE, and partly in that of KING'S-SUTTON, union of BRACKLEY, hundred of KING'S-SUTTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Brackley; containing 446 inhabitants. On a neighbouring hill, called Rainsborough, is an oval camp, with a double intrenchment, about half a mile in circumference, having two entrances on the north, and two on the south: urns, glass vessels, and other relics, have been discovered; and a little to the eastward, near a smaller intrenchment, a gold coin of Vespasian, and several coins of Constantine, have been found.

CHARLTON, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of KILMERSDON, union of FROME, E. division of SOMERSET, 7 miles (N. W. by W.) from Frome. Here was formerly a chapel.

CHARLTON, a hamlet, in the parish, union, and hundred of ANDOVER, Andover and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 323 inhabitants.

CHARLTON, a hamlet, in the parish of SINGLETON, union of WESTHAMNETT, hundred of WESTBOURN and SINGLETON, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX; containing 223 inhabitants.

CHARLTON, a tything, in the parish of DONHEAD St. MARY, union of TISBURY, hundred of DUNWORTH, Hindon and S. divisions of WILTS, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Shaftesbury. Here was formerly a chapel.

CHARLTON, a tything, in the parish and hundred of DOWNTON, union of ALDERBURY, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS; containing 300 inhabitants.

CHARLTON (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union and hundred of MALMESBURY, Malmesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Malmesbury; containing 683 inhabitants. It comprises about 5000 acres, of which the surface is in general flat, and the soil clayey, and in some parts stony; there is a lake at Braden, of the extent of 60 acres, forming a fine piece of water. The living is annexed, with that of Brokenborough, to the vicarage of Westport-St. Mary. A school is chiefly supported by the Earl of Suffolk, who has a magnificent seat in the parish, and is lord of the manor.

CHARLTON (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of PEWSEY, hundred of SWANBOROUGH, Devizes and N. divisions of WILTS, 4 miles (S. W.) from Pewsey; containing 201 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Pewsey to Devizes, and comprises by measurement 1700 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 15. 6., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £132, and £10 per annum are paid to the vicar, under the will of the late Dr. Robert South, of Christ-Church, Oxford. The church is a very ancient structure, with a tower on the north side. Here was an alien priory, founded in 1187, as a cell to the abbey of L'Isle Dieu, and granted at the suppression of alien houses to St. Katherine's Hospital, London. About a mile to the westward are the remains of an intrenched camp, with a spacious prætorium, called Casterley, the area of which, comprising 60 acres, is intersected by a broad fosse.

CHARLTON, a hamlet, in the parish of CROPTHORN, union of PERSHORE, Middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 5½ miles (E. by S.) from Pershore; containing 312 inhabitants, and comprising 1544 acres. It is surrounded on all sides, except the south, by a winding of the river Avon.

CHARLTON-ABBOTTS, a parish, in the union of WINCHCOMBE, Lower division of the hundred of KIRTS-GATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 2¼ miles (S. by E.) from Winchcombe; containing 101 inhabitants, and comprising 1374*a. 2r. 25p.* Stone of inferior quality is raised for the repair of the roads. In a farm-house is an apartment, called Queen Elizabeth's Room, with a beautifully carved mantel-piece, above which are the initials E. R. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £38; patron, W. L. Lawrence, Esq. The church, a neat edifice, has been recently repaired. A school is supported by the patron.

CHARLTON-ADAM (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union of LANGPORT, hundred of SOMERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (E.) from Somerton; containing 472 inhabitants, and consisting of 1476*a. 2r. 32p.* Stone of good quality for building and for paving is quarried to a considerable extent. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 14. 7.; net income, £137; patron, John Barney, Esq.: the impropriation belongs to Mrs. Gapper. The tithes were commuted for corn-rents, under an inclosure act, in 1803; the glebe comprises 19 acres. A school is partly supported by subscription. A chantry, or free chapel, dedicated to St. Stephen, was anciently founded here by Lord Henry Fitz-Richard, by permission of the prior of Brewton, under whom he held the manor. The old Roman Fosse-way from Bath to Ilchester proceeds through the parish.

CHARLTON-CROSS, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of KILMERSDON, E. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (N.) from Frome; containing 30 inhabitants.

CHARLTON, EAST-QUARTER, a township, in the parish and union of BELLINGHAM, N. W. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 1¾ mile (N. W. by W.) from Bellingham; containing 173 inhabitants. The village in the township is pleasantly situated on the north side of the North Tyne. A small stream tributary to that river flows at this place.

CHARLTON-HORETHORNE, or CANFIELD (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, formerly a market-town, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of HORETHORNE, E. division of SOMERSET, 5½ miles (S. W.) from Wincanton; containing 569 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the road from Bath to Weymouth, comprises about 2500 acres: stone of good quality is extensively quarried for building, and repairing the roads; and a considerable number of the inhabitants are employed in the manufacture of dowlas. The market which was formerly held here, was obtained by Henry de Lacy, in the 22nd of Edward I., who also had, by the same charter, a grant for a fair on the eve and morrow of St. Thomas the Martyr; the fair is still held. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 10. 5.; net income, £384; patron and impropriator, the Marquess of Anglesey: the glebe comprises 40 acres. The church is a handsome edifice, in the early English style, but has been greatly disfigured by the insertion of windows of modern character. There was anciently within the manor a chantry chapel, dependent on the priory of Kenilworth.

CHARLTON, KINGS (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHELTENHAM, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (S. S. E.) from Cheltenham; containing 3232 inhabitants. This place participated in the hostilities of the parliamentary war during the reign of Charles I., and a hill, since called Battle-downs, was the scene of a sanguinary conflict, in which many of the inhabitants, who adhered to the royal cause, were slain. The parish, which is situated on the road from London to Gloucester, and at the base of the Cotswold Hills, comprises 3214*a. 2r. 4p.*: the soil is chiefly a sandy loam, with a little yellowish clay; the lands are watered by a rivulet, named the Chelt, which flows hence into the parish of Cheltenham. A small part of the population is employed in the making of gloves. Stone of the oolite formation is quarried for rough building, and for roads. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £177, with an excellent glebe-house, of recent erection; patrons, Principal and Fellows of Jesus' College, Oxford; impropriator, C. W. Lovesy, Esq. The church is a handsome structure, in the later English style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The sum of £6 a year is paid for instruction out of the rental of land producing £30 per annum, given by Samuel Cooper, about the year 1743; the remainder is applied to the relief of the poor. Three other schools are supported by subscription. Almshouses have been built; and there is a fund arising from several benefactions, now yielding £100 a year, which sum is distributed among the deserving poor. A mineral spring, similar in its properties to the Cheltenham water, was lately discovered.

CHARLTON-MACKREL (St. Martin), a parish, in the union of LANGPORT, hundred of SOMERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (E.) from Somerton; containing 405 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south by the river Cary, across which is a bridge of two arches, on the line of a modern road that passes along the course of the old Roman fosse-way. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 0. 2½.; net income, £499; patron and incumbent, Rev. W. T. P. Brymer. The church is a handsome edifice, in the ancient style of English architecture, repaired and embellished at the expense of the present incumbent. A national school was established in 1830.

CHARLTON-MARSHALL, a parish, in the union of BLANDFORD, hundred of COGDEAN, Blandford division of DORSET, 1¼ mile (S. S. E.) from Blandford-Forum; containing 395 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the rectory of Spetisbury: the tithes were commuted for land in 1799. The church contains some monuments to the family of Bastard, and one to the memory of Dr. Sloper. Some fossils, and Roman and Grecian coins, were found in 1831.

CHARLTON-MUSGRAVE (St. STEPHEN), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of NORTON-FERRIS, E. division of SOMERSET, 1 mile (N. N. E.) from Wincanton; containing 409 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 10.; patron and incumbent, Rev. Paul Lier: the tithes have been commuted for £450, and the glebe comprises 52 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. A school, commenced in 1829, is partly supported by voluntary contributions. Dr. William Musgrave, physician and antiquary, was born here in 1657.

CHARLTON, NORTH, a township, in the parish of ELLINGHAM, union of ALNWICK, S. division of BAMBROUGH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6½ miles (N. by W.) from Alnwick; containing 238 inhabitants. The village is situated on the road from Alnwick to Belford. Charlton Hall stands near a stream which, after a short course, falls into the North Sea. A school, erected by John Cay, Esq., is endowed with £5 per annum. There are some curious barrows.

CHARLTON, SOUTH, a township, in the parish of ELLINGHAM, union of ALNWICK, S. division of BAMBROUGH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5½ miles (N. by W.) from Alnwick; containing 188 inhabitants. This place is on the great north road, and comprises a considerable area; the soil is light, and rests generally upon a limestone substratum, and the surface is undulated and pleasing. Link Hall, with about 410 acres of land, is the property of Edward Anthony Hedley, Esq., M.D. Here was formerly a chapel, of which there are no remains. £5 are annually given by Lord Crewe's trustees in aid of a school. A great portion of North and South Charlton is covered with ancient roads and earthworks; and graves of rude workmanship are frequently discovered, containing bones, urns, and armour.

CHARLTON-UPON-OTMORE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BICESTER, hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 6 miles (S. S. W.) from Bicester; containing, with the hamlets of Fencot and Murcot, 658 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1840 acres, of which 1291 are arable, and nearly all the rest pasture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 9. 4½.; patrons, Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford. The church is partly in the early and partly in the decorated English style; a portion of the ancient rood-loft, of exquisite beauty, is remaining; and in the chancel, which is lighted by elegant windows with flowing tracery, are some stone stalls, highly enriched.

CHARLTON, WEST-QUARTER, a township, in the parish and union of BELLINGHAM, N. W. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Bellingham; containing 176 inhabitants. This place, which comprises about 400 acres, is situated at the confluence of the Tarsset burn and the North Tyne river. Here anciently stood a castle, the walls of which were of ashlar stones four feet thick, and extended over an acre of land; its magnitude and strength are said to have impressed the popular mind with the notion of its having been the abode of some giant, and it is believed that there still exists a subterraneous passage beneath the bed of the Tyne, from this castle to another known as Dally Castle, distant from it southwards about a mile.

CHARLTON-WOODLANDS, a hamlet, in the parish and union of SHEPTON-MALLET, hundred of WHITSTONE, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 86 inhabitants.

CHARLWOOD (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union and First division of the hundred of REIGATE, E. division of SURREY, 7 miles (S. S. W.) from Reigate, on the borders of the county of Sussex; containing 1291 inhabitants. This place was the scene of a sanguinary battle between the Danes and the men of Surrey and Sussex, that occurred near a bridge, since called Kilman Bridge, and in which the Danes were defeated with great slaughter. The London and Brighton railway intersects the south-eastern part of the parish, also the road from London to Brighton, by way of Crawley; and the river Mole winds through and bounds some parts of it. An act for inclosing lands was passed in 1843. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 16. 8.; patron and incumbent, Rev. H. Wise: the tithes have been commuted for £900, and the glebe contains 22 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church contains several ancient monuments of the family of Sanders and others, and is in the Norman and early English styles; the south aisle is separated from the chancel by the remains of a very handsome and elaborately carved screen. There is a place of worship for Independents. A school was founded, in 1637, by the Rev. John Bristow, and endowed with land, let for £8 per annum; another, commenced in 1831, is supported by Mrs. Clayton, of Charlwood Park.

CHARMINSTER (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DORCHESTER, hundred of GEORGE, Dorchester division of DORSET, 2 miles (N. W. by N.) from Dorchester; containing 927 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Stratton annexed; net income, £137; patrons and impropiators, the Pickard family. The great tithes have been commuted for £510, the perpetual curate's for £12, and the tithes of the landowners for £155. The church has been lately enlarged by the addition of 174 free sittings, the Incorporated Society having granted £120 towards defraying the expense.

CHARMOUTH (St. MATTHEW), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of AXMINSTER, hundred of WHITCHURCH-CANONICORUM, Bridport division of DORSET, 2 miles (N. E. by E.) from Lyme-

Regis; containing 620 inhabitants. This place derives its name from its situation at the mouth of the river Char, which here falls into the English Channel. It was the scene of a sanguinary battle in 833, between the Saxons, under Egbert, and the Danes, who, though many of their men were killed in the action, yet maintained their post, and made good their retreat to their ships. Another battle was fought in 840, in which the Danes defeated the Saxons under Ethelwolf, but, without improving their victory, precipitately embarked, leaving their booty behind. In the 7th of Edward I. the abbot of the monastery of Ford, in the vicinity, obtained for the inhabitants the grant of a weekly market, and an annual fair. After the battle of Worcester, Charles II. and his suite fled to the place, intending to escape into France; but, being frustrated in that expectation, quitted it without delay. On this occasion, a blacksmith, having discovered, from the manner of shoeing the horse of Lord Wilmot, who had remained behind, that the party came from the north, a pursuit was instantly commenced, but without success. The village is pleasantly situated at the base of a steep hill, round which the road was carried in 1758, and, from its situation on the coast, is a place of resort for sea-bathing: the surrounding scenery is enlivened by the river Char, over which is a bridge leading to the village; and the neighbouring cliffs abound with martial pyrites, bitumen, and other inflammable matter, which after heavy rains emit a vivid flame, and were particularly observable in the year 1751. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 16. 8., and in the gift of A. Hatherell, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £120, and the glebe comprises 6 acres. The church was lately rebuilt. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a national school has been erected.

CHARNDON, a hamlet, in the parish of TWYFORD, union, hundred, and county, of BUCKINGHAM, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Winslow; containing 190 inhabitants.

CHARNES, a township (formerly a chapelry), in the parish of ECCLESHALL, union of STONE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Eccleshall; containing 98 inhabitants. The chapel has been destroyed.

CHARNEY, a chapelry, in the parish of LONGWORTH, union of FARRINGDON, hundred of GANFIELD, county of BERKS, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Wantage; containing 275 inhabitants, and comprising 1159*a.* 2*r.* 16*p.* The chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, is an ancient edifice, of early Norman architecture. A school is partly supported by subscription. Here is a circular fortification, called Cherbury Castle, surrounded by a double trench, resembling that of Badbury, in Dorsetshire, and traditionally said to have belonged to Canute the Great.

CHARNHAM-STREET, a tything, in the parish and union of HUNGERFORD, hundred of KINWARDSTONE, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and S. divisions of WILTS; containing 401 inhabitants.

CHARNOCK-HEATH, a township, in the parish of STANDISH, union of CHORLEY, hundred of LEYLAND, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3 miles (S. E.) from Chorley; containing 1062 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £102.

CHARNOCK-RICHARD, a township, in the parish of STANDISH, union of CHORLEY, hundred of LEYLAND, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Chorley; containing 784 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £246. 1. A school is partly supported by the rector.

CHARSFIELD (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of WOODBRIDGE, hundred of LOES, E. division of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Woodbridge; containing 551 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 1299 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income £66; patron and impropiator, Earl Howe, whose tithes have been commuted for £160. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists.

CHART, or CHURT, a tything, in the parish of FRENESHAM, hundred of FARNHAM, W. division of SURREY, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Haslemere; containing 432 inhabitants. A manufactory for coarse earthenware is carried on to a limited extent. A chapel of ease was erected in 1838, by subscription, aided by a grant from the Pastoral Aid Society; the chaplain is appointed by the incumbent of Frensham, and his stipend is paid by the society. A school is supported by subscription.

CHART, GREAT (St. MARY), a parish in the union of WEST ASHFORD, hundred of CHART and LONGBRIDGE, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Ashford; containing 714 inhabitants. This parish, called by the Saxons Sybertes Chert, and in Domesday book Certh, lies chiefly on the Quarry Hills, the southern part being within the Weald, the boundary of which runs east and west, to the north of the church. The town, which was burnt by the Danes, was anciently of some importance, having had a weekly market, and a great fair on the 5th of April, for sheep and oxen; the market is disused, but the remains of the market-house were formerly visible in the field where the fair is still held. It has been reduced to a small village, which, from its elevated situation, commands an extensive and picturesque view of the surrounding country. On the 1st of May, 1580, a violent earthquake was felt here. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £25. 6. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury: the tithes have been commuted for £700, and the glebe comprises 13 acres, and to which there is a glebe-house. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A national school is supported by subscription; and an almshouse, founded by Francis Toke, Esq., in 1583, was rebuilt in 1833.

CHART, LITTLE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WEST ASHFORD, hundred of CALEHILL, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 2 miles (S. W. by W.) from Charing; containing 300 inhabitants. It comprises 1607*a.* 2*r.* 30*p.*, and the South-Eastern railway passes about three miles from the village. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury: the tithes have been commuted for £400, and the glebe contains about 30 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church, which is ancient, contains some handsome monuments to the Darell family, and one to the memory of a descendant of Camden, the historian, which is remarkable for the elegance of the inscription. A school is principally supported by Mrs. Darell.

CHART, SUTTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of HOLLINGBOURN, hundred of EYHORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Maidstone; containing 604 inhabitants. This parish, in Domesday book called Certh, is intersected from east to west by the Quarry, or northern range of hills, here forming the boundary of the Weald: the southern declivity, both from its genial aspect and the richness of the soil, is well adapted to the culture of vines. The parish comprises by measurement 2165 acres, the soil of which on the hills is light and spongy, and on the lower grounds clay; the land, excepting the pastures, is employed in the cultivation of fruit and hops. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 12. 8½, and in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester: the glebe contains 8½ acres. The church, which stands near Sutton-Valence, on the summit of the acclivity, upon which the village is built, was, with its beautiful spire, destroyed by lightning in 1779, but has been rebuilt; it formerly belonged to Leeds Priory, and was given, by Henry VIII., to Rochester Cathedral.

CHARTERHOUSE-HINTON, county of SOMERSET.—See HINTON, CHARTERHOUSE.

CHARTERHOUSE-ON-MENDIP, a district, in the union of AXBRIDGE, and liberty of WYTHAM FRIARY, though locally in the hundred of WINTERSTOKE, E. division of SOMERSET, 5½ miles (E. N. E.) from Axbridge; containing 99 inhabitants. Here was a cell to the priory of Witham, which, as part of the possessions of that establishment, was granted away in the 36th of Henry VIII. A small school is partly supported by a private individual.

CHARTERIDGE, a hamlet, in the parish of CHESHAM, union of AMERSHAM, hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM; containing 404 inhabitants.

CHARTHAM (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BBIDGE, hundred of FELBOROUGH, Upper division of the lathc of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Canterbury; containing, with the chapelry of Horton, 974 inhabitants. It comprises about 4400 acres, and is situated on the river Stour, over which, near the village, is an ancient structure of five arches, called Shalmsford Bridge. The manufacture of paper is carried on to a moderate extent, and there are also some seed-mills. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £41. 5. 10., and in the gift of the Archbishop of Canterbury: the tithes have been commuted for £800, and there is a glebe of 34¾ acres. The church is of early decorated architecture, with very fine windows, and some remains of richly stained glass; the roof is of wood and the tower of flint, both being of later date than the stone work. It contains a monumental arch and some old brasses, one in particular of Sir Robert Septvan, having the alæ of the knight's armour, and in other respects peculiar; and in the chancel lie the remains of Dr. John Reading, chaplain to Charles I., and author of some religious tracts. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school has lately been established. Numerous tumuli, raised over the slain in the decisive conflict between Cæsar and Cassivelaunus, lie thickly scattered at the distance of about three-quarters of a mile from the church, on the road to Canterbury.

CHARTINGTON.—See CARTINGTON.

CHARTLEY-HOLME, an extra-parochial liberty, in the S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, union and N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 7½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Stafford; containing 71 inhabitants.

CHARWELTON (Holy Trinity), a parish, in the union of DAVENTRY, hundred of FAWSLEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Daventry; containing 227 inhabitants. This place, partly bounded on the west by a portion of Warwickshire, comprises by measurement 2258 acres, chiefly rich pasture land, with about 20 acres of wood; it produces excellent gravel, and stone is quarried for agricultural purposes, and for common buildings. The river Cherwell, from which the place took its name, rises in the cellar of a farm-house in the parish, called Cherwell House; the village is intersected by the road from Daventry to Banbury. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 2. 11.; net income, £582; patron, Sir Charles Knightley, Bart. The church consists of a nave, with north and south aisles, and has a small side chapel; the arches are in the early English style, and the tower is remarkably well built and proportioned; the font is octagonal, and is a curious piece of workmanship; the interior contains some good monuments of brass, and has a handsome one, of marble, to the memory of the Andrew family, the ancient possessors of the manor-house. The village, now situated at the distance of three-quarters of a mile from the church, is supposed to have been originally adjoining it, which opinion is confirmed by traces of foundations discovered near the church.

CHASELEY (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of TEWKESBURY, forming, with the parishes of Eldersfield and Staunton, a separate portion of the Lower division of the hundred of PERSHORE, Upton and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Tewkesbury; containing 364 inhabitants. The parish lies at the southern extremity of the county, and is bounded on the south-east by the river Severn, and on all other sides except the north-west, by the shire of Gloucester; it contains 1681 acres, and the road from Upton to Gloucester passes along its western border. The living is a discharged perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £5. 14. 7.; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The great tithes have been commuted for £327, and the vicarial for £177; the glebe contains about one acre. The church is an ancient edifice, with a tower and spire. Thomas Tuberville, in 1728, bequeathed land, producing £14 per annum, for which children are taught.

CHASEWATER.—See CHACEWATER.

CHASTLETON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of CHIPPING-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from Chipping-Norton; containing 239 inhabitants. The parish is memorable as the scene of a sanguinary conflict which took place, in 1016, between Edmund Ironside and Canute, when the latter was defeated with great slaughter. The manor anciently belonged to the family of Catesby, of which one of the members was principally concerned in the gunpowder plot, in the reign of James I. The manor-house is a handsome building, in the Elizabethan style. The parish comprises by computation 1650 acres, 1141 of which are pasture, 460 arable, and 25 woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 0. 2½.; net income, £336; patron, M. Adams, Esq. The church is in the early English style, with an embattled tower of two stages, of which the lower is Norman. In the vicinity are vestiges of a Danish fortification.

CHATBURN, a township, in the parish of WHALLEY, union of CLITHEROE, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Clitheroe; containing 500 inhabitants. This place is situated on a picturesque spot at the base of Pendle Mountain, on the road from Clitheroe to Skipton, and commands fine views of the castle of Clitheroe, and the vale of the Ribble: there are three limestone quarries. The living is a district incumbency; net income, £30; patron, the Vicar of Whalley. The church was built in 1837, and contains 364 sittings, of which 189 are free, the Incorporated Society having granted £250 in aid of the expense, which was £1622; it is a neat structure with a spire, in the early Norman style. There is a national school.

CHATCULL, a township, in the parish of ECCLESHALL, union of STONE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD; containing 68 inhabitants.

CHATHAM (ST. MARY), a newly enfranchised borough, market-town, and parish, and the head of the MEDWAY union, partly within the jurisdiction, and adjoining the city, of ROCHESTER, but chiefly in the hundred of CHATHAM and GILLINGHAM, N. division of the lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 8 miles (N. by E.) from Maidstone, and 30 (E. by S.) from London; containing 21,939 inhabitants. This place, anciently called Ceteham and Cettham, derives its name from the Saxon Cyte, a cottage, and Ham, a village, and, till it rose into importance as the seat of one of the principal naval arsenals in the kingdom, was only an inconsiderable village. Previously to the Conquest, the lord of the manor espoused the cause of Harold, and for his loyalty to that prince was, after the accession of William, deprived of his possessions, which were conferred upon Crevecoeur, who accompanied the Conqueror to England. The town is situated on the south-east bank of the river Medway, and on the north side of Chatham Hill, and, though extensive, is irregularly built, partly from the nature of the ground, which, in every direction, is very hilly, and partly from the large space occupied by its vast naval establishments. The dock-yard for the royal navy was commenced in the reign of Elizabeth, when it occupied the site of the present ordnance wharf, and was protected by Upnor Castle, which that queen caused to be erected for its defence: in 1622, it was removed to its present situation, and greatly enlarged by Charles I., who erected capacious storehouses, and constructed new docks, to enable ships to float in with the tide. It was still further improved by Charles II., in whose reign the Dutch Admiral de Ruyter, having cast anchor at the Nore with fifty sail of the line, sent his vice-admiral, Van Ghent, with seventeen of his lightest vessels and eight fire-ships, to destroy the shipping in the river Medway: the vice-admiral attacked and took Sheerness, though gallantly defended by Sir Edward Spragge, blew up the fortifications, burnt the storehouses, &c., and, sailing up the Medway with six men of war and five fire-ships, came in front of Upnor Castle, at that time defended by Major Scot, whose warm reception of the assailant frustrated his attempt on Chatham.

The dock-yard occupies an extensive area, nearly a mile in length, inclosed on the land side by a high wall, and defended by strong fortifications, principally of modern erection; the entrance is through a spacious gateway, flanked by two embattled towers. The houses of the superintendent and the principal officers are spacious and handsome buildings, and the various offices in the several departments of the yard are neat and commodiously arranged. The numerous storehouses, one of which is 660 feet in length, contain an immense quantity of every article necessary for the building and equipment of ships of the largest dimensions, all disposed with such order and exactness, that upon any emergency a first-rate man of war may be equipped for sea in a few days. The mast-house is 240 feet in length, and 120 feet wide; and the new rope-house 1110 in length, and 50 wide. At the north-eastern extremity of the dock-yard are the saw-mills, erected on a very extensive scale, under the superintendence of Mr. Brunel, at an expense of nearly £57,000, and worked with powerful machinery propelled by steam. To the north of the mills is a canal, which, on entering the rising ground, passes under a tunnel 300 feet long, into an elliptic basin, from which the timber, having been floated from the river, is raised by machinery with extraordinary velocity. Connected with the steam-engine of the saw-mills are extensive water-works, for the supply of the dock-yard, the infantry and marine barracks, and Melville hospital. There are four wet docks sufficiently capacious for first-rate men of war, two of which, recently constructed, are of stone, besides two others for smaller vessels. There are six slips or launches, for building ships of the largest dimensions; and among the many fine vessels launched from this dock-yard may be enumerated some of the first-rate men of war in the royal navy. In time of war the number of artificers and labourers employed exceeds 3000. Within the walls is a neat brick chapel, erected in 1811, at an expense of £9000. The ordnance wharf occupies a narrow site of land between the church and the river, to the west of the dock-yard, and is still called the Old Dock. A large building has been erected in the dock-yard for the grinding of paint, and the rolling and smelting of lead by steam.

Prior to the year 1760, the defence of the arsenal was entrusted principally to guard-ships in the river, to forts on its banks, especially at Sheerness, to Upnor Castle, built by Queen Elizabeth, and to a small fort below Gillingham, erected by Charles I.; but in 1758, an act of parliament was passed for the erection of such works as might be requisite for more perfect security, under the provisions of which act the extensive fortifications, called the Lines, were constructed. These works commence above the ordnance wharf, on the bank of the Medway, and are continued round an area one mile in extent from south to north, and half a mile from west to east (including the church of Chatham, the village of Brompton, which is principally inhabited by the artificers in the yard and the barracks, magazines, &c.), to beyond the northern extremity of the dock-yard, where they again meet the river. These fortifications were enlarged during the American war, and strengthened by the erection of a strong redoubt on the summit of an eminence commanding the river; and in 1782, an act was procured for their further improvement, under which considerable additions have been made to the Lines, which now constitute, next to Portsmouth, the most complete and regular fortification in the kingdom. Forts Pitt and Clarence, two strong redoubts flanking the southern extremity of the Lines, are situated on the heights overlooking the town, and commanding the upper part of the river; since the conclusion of the war, the former has been used as an hospital for invalids, and the latter as an asylum for lunatics. The lower, or marine barracks, adjoining the upper extremity of the dock-yard, consist of a uniform range of brick building, inclosing a spacious quadrangle: the upper barracks are also neatly built of brick, and are extensive and commodious. The new artillery barracks, in Brompton, built in 1804, are a fine range, forming three sides of a quadrangle, and containing apartments for the officers, lodgings for 1200 men, and requisite stabling; the open side of the quadrangle commands a good view of the Medway in the foreground, and of the Thames in the distance. The artillery hospital, a neat building, erected in 1809, contains wards for one hundred patients. The town was much improved under the provisions of an act passed in 1772, for paving and lighting it, but the streets are still narrow and inconvenient for carriages. A Philosophical and Literary Institution was established in 1827, the members of which have spacious premises; and a Mechanics' Institute was opened in 1837. There are two subscription libraries, one the United Service library, and the other the Marine library; and a Horticultural Society was lately formed for Rochester, Chatham, and the vicinity. Races are held in August, on the extensive plain without the Lines. The market is on Saturday: fairs, for three days each, were held on May 15th and Sept. 19th, but have fallen into disuse. Chatham is partly within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, and partly included in the limits of the city of Rochester: it is also within the jurisdiction of a court of requests held at Rochester, for the recovery of debts under £5. By the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, it was constituted a borough, with the privilege of sending a member to parliament; the right of election is vested in the £10 householders of a district comprising 1670 acres; the returning officer is appointed by the sheriff for the county.

The parish, exclusively of the ground whereon the town is built, comprises 3960 acres, of which the surface is in general broken and hilly, and the soil a thin chalky earth; there are considerable tracks of woodland in different parts. The living is a perpetual curacy, with the chapel of St. John annexed; net income, £961; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The parochial church is a neat plain structure of brick: the original edifice having been destroyed by fire, at the commencement of the fourteenth century, a new one was built under the sanction of a bull from the pope, who granted an indulgence of one year and forty days to all who should contribute to the work; in 1635 it was repaired and enlarged, and the steeple was rebuilt by the commissioners of the royal navy; in 1788, the body of the church was taken down and rebuilt of brick upon a larger scale, and the churchyard being found too small, the Board of Ordnance gave three acres of ground, at a short distance from the church, for a cemetery, which was consecrated in 1828. St. John's church, of the Grecian Doric order, with a tower, and containing 1624 sittings, of which 1090 are free, was completed in 1821, at an expense of nearly £15,000, by grant of the Parliamentary Commissioners: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the incumbent of Chatham. The living of the dock-yard chapel is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Lords of the Admiralty. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians, also a Jews' synagogue. "The Rochester and Chatham Commercial and Mathematical School" was instituted in 1827; the building, which was opened on Oct. 1st, 1828, is situated on the Chatham and Maidstone road, and was erected at an expense of £1600. A national school, chiefly supported by subscription, has an endowment of about £6. 13. 4., arising from tenements bequeathed by Mrs. Elizabeth Petty, in 1723. The Congregational Dissenters have a small school of industry for girls; and there are an infants' school and several Sunday schools, supported by voluntary contributions. Melville or Marine hospital is a handsome range of building adjacent to the dock-yard, begun in 1827, and finished in the following year, at an expense of £70,000, for the use of the whole naval department; it is built of brick and stuccoed. St. Bartholomew's Hospital was originally founded, in 1078, by Gundulph, Bishop of Rochester, as a lazaret-house: the estate has been invested in the Dean of Rochester, who is governor and patron: the institution consists of five persons, the patron or master, and four brethren, two in holy orders, the other two being the town-clerk of Rochester and another layman. An hospital for decayed mariners and shipwrights was founded by Sir John Hawkins, in 1592; it consists of twelve dwellings. A fund, commonly called "the chest," for the relief of sailors who have been disabled in the service, was established by Sir Francis Drake and Sir John Hawkins, Knts., in 1588, when, after the defeat of the Spanish Armada, the seamen of the royal navy agreed to contribute a portion of their pay for the relief of their distressed brethren: this chest was removed to the royal hospital at Greenwich in 1802. The Medway poor law union, of which Chatham is the head, contains a population of 36,590. Numerous Roman remains were discovered in forming the fortifications. Chatham gave the title of Earl to the family of Pitt, now extinct.

CHATHILL, a township, in the parish of ELLINGHAM, union of BELFORD, S. division of BAMBROUGH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Alnwick; containing 18 inhabitants. It is a small township, situated a little distance north-east from Ellingham, near the road between Alnwick and Belford; and consists of a few cottages, and of farming ground.

CHATLEY, a hamlet, in the parish of GREAT LEIGHS, union of CHELMSFORD, hundred of WITHAM, N. division of ESSEX, 4 miles (S. by W.) from Braintree; containing 563 inhabitants. This place extends for some distance on each side of the road to Chelmsford. An ancient hermitage, called St. Ann's, is now an inn.

CHATSWORTH, a hamlet, in the union of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Bakewell; containing, with the township of Edensor, 379 inhabitants. The magnificent mansion of Chatsworth, the property and princely residence of the Duke of Devonshire, was begun in 1687, and completed in 1706, by William Cavendish, first Duke of Devonshire, upon the site of a more ancient edifice, in which Mary, Queen of Scots, passed a considerable portion of her long captivity. Sir John Gell garrisoned it for the parliament in 1643, but capitulated to the Earl of Newcastle, who placed in it Colonel Eyre, with a sufficient force, to hold it for the king. In 1645, it withstood the siege of 400 parliamentarians under Colonel Gell, who, at the expiration of fourteen days, raised the siege, and retired to Derby. After the battle of Blenheim, in 1704, Marshal Tallard, the French general, having been made prisoner on that occasion, was sent to reside here. On the 1st of December, 1843, Her Majesty, her royal consort, and the court, visited the Duke of Devonshire, at Chatsworth, where they remained until the 4th.

CHATTERIS (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a parish, in the union and hundred of NORTH WITCHFORD, Isle of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Ramsey; containing 4813 inhabitants. This place, which is situated near the river Ouse, is of great antiquity, and in 980, a Benedictine nunnery was founded here, and endowed by Alfwen, wife of Earl Ethelstan, and sister of Ednod, first abbot of Ramsey, who was raised to the see of Dorchester, and was murdered by the Danes in 1016: the nunnery continued to flourish till the Dissolution, when its revenue was estimated at £112. 3. 6. The parish comprises 13,454*a.* 26*p.*, of which about 3000 acres are upland and dry, and the remainder, with the exception of the site of the village, flat, but well drained; the soil is gravel, alternated with sand and clay, of which last excellent bricks are made: considerable improvement, both in the agriculture and in the soil, has taken place since the inclosure in 1812. Chatteris is a franchise under the Bishop of Ely, who holds a court leet for appointing officers in a house called the Guildhall, given to the parish, with other premises and lands, producing together nearly £70 per annum, which are distributed amongst infirm old men and widows. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £1370; patron and incumbent, Rev. Dr. Chatfield: impropiator, Charles Cholmondeley, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents, under the inclosure act: there is a good glebe-house. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists and Wesleyans; and national schools. At Hunny farm are the subterraneous remains of a chapel, supposed to have contained the bones of St. Huna. In 1757, on opening a tumulus near Somersham Ferry, several human skeletons, military weapons, an urn, and a glass vase, were found.

CHATTERLEY, a township, in the parish of WOLSTANTON, union of WOLSTANTON and BURSLEM, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, and of the county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (N.) from Newcastle; containing 374 inhabitants. It includes the ancient vills of Dimsdale and Bradwell, and comprises 1563 acres.

CHATTISHAM (ALL SAINTS AND ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of SAMFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Ipswich; containing 215 inhabitants, and comprising 713*a.* 3*r.* 7*p.* The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 13. 5.; patrons and appropriators, Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £142. 10., and the glebe comprises 21 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school is partly supported by the curate; and there is an endowment of £6. 6. per annum, for teaching six boys at Hinthlesham school.

CHATTON (HOLY CROSS), a parish, in the union of GLENDALE, E. division of GLENDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 4 miles (E.) from Wooler, on the road to Belford; containing 1725 inhabitants. This parish, which is intersected by the river Till, comprises by measurement 15,830 acres, whereof 7035 are arable, 8311 pasture, and 484 woodland; it abounds with limestone and coal, the working of which affords employment to a considerable number of the population; the latter is chiefly for home consumption. Clay of good quality is found for making bricks and tiles, which is carried on to a moderate extent; and there are several quarries of freestone of excellent quality for building: A large fair is held at Weetwood Bank, on the third Tuesday in May, for all kinds of stock, and also for cloth, shoes, hardware, and various other articles. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £198; patron, Duke of Northumberland; impropiators, Earl of Tankerville and others. The church was rebuilt about 1763. A parochial school is supported by quarterly fees from the parents of the children. A curious stone coffin was discovered in the churchyard a few years since, while digging a grave, and which has been placed in the chancel of the church; it contained some human bones, pieces of armour, and a coin of Robert Bruce. There are vestiges of encampments in various parts of the parish; and numerous fossils are found in the limestone quarries.

CHAWLEY, a tithing, in the parish of CUMNER, union of ABINGDON, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Abingdon; containing 94 inhabitants.

CHAWLEY (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of CREDITON, hundred of NORTH TAWTON, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, 2 miles (S. E. by E.) from Chulmleigh; containing 850 inhabitants. Fairs for cattle are held on May 6th and Dec. 11th. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £25. 14. 2.; net income, £455; patron, Hon. N. Fellows. The church has a low steeple covered with oak shingles, and contains some elegant screen-work. A parochial school is supported by subscription.

CHAWSON, a hamlet, in the parish of ROXTON, hundred of BARFORD, union and county of BEDFORD; containing 195 inhabitants.

CHAWTON (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union, and hundred of ALTON, Alton and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. S. W.) from Alton; containing 460 inhabitants. This parish, which consists by computation of 2600 acres, whereof several hundred are rich woodland, is situated in a district abounding with picturesque scenery; it comprises a beautiful and fertile valley, watered by numerous springs that occasionally spread over the adjacent lands, and within its limits is one of the sources of the river Wey. About 20 acres are planted with hops, which thrive well; and there is a quarry of stone, used for building walls and cottages. The village, through which the high road passes, contains several handsome houses. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 5. 5., and in the gift of Edward Knight, Esq. : the tithes have been commuted for £500, and the glebe comprises 70 acres, with a glebe-house. The church, which was enlarged in 1839 at an expense of £900, contains a handsome monument to Sir Richard Knight. A national school, for which an appropriate building was erected in 1840, is supported by subscription, and there are two schools partly maintained by private charity.

CHEADLE (St. MATTHEW), a parish, partly in the union of STOCKPORT, and partly in that of ALTRINCINGHAM, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 7 miles (S.) from Manchester; containing 10,145 inhabitants, of whom 5463 are in Cheadle-Bulkeley, 2288 in Cheadle-Moseley, and 2394 in Handforth with Boxden. The parish comprises by measurement 5469 acres, chiefly arable and pasture land: the village, situated near the Bollin, is remarkable for the beauty and salubrity of its situation, and its neat appearance. The chief employment of the inhabitants is in the spinning, bleaching, and printing of cotton. The Manchester and Birmingham railway passes through Cheadle-Bulkeley, and the Macclesfield branch diverges from it there. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 0. 7½; net income, £635; patron, H. D. Broughton, Esq. The church is principally in the later English style, with side aisles and a tower, and contains some monuments of the Brereton and Bulkeley families. Parts of the screen-work in one of the chapels, and the roof of the chancel, are supposed to belong to a church much older; the date of 1369 can be traced. A chapel, dedicated to St. Chad, containing 250 sittings, has been built, at Handforth, in the later English style, at the cost of £850. There are places of worship for Methodists and Roman Catholics. A school at Cheadle-Moseley, built by subscription, was endowed by Mr. J. Robinson, in 1785, with three acres of land.

CHEADLE (St. GILES), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the S. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 14 miles (N. N. E.) from Stafford, and 147 miles (N. W. by N.) from London; containing 4399 inhabitants. This place is situated in a valley environed by hills, which, though formerly barren, have been planted with forest-trees, and have assumed the appearance of verdure and cultivation. The town, which is intersected by the roads from Newcastle to Ashbourn, and from Leek to Uttoxeter, consists of one principal and four smaller streets: the houses in the main street have, for the most part, been either rebuilt or modernised of late years, and appear substantial and roomy: the inhabitants are supplied with water from a rivulet, called Cicely's Brook, and from springs and pumps. Tape, copper, and brass works are extensively carried on in the town and neighbourhood: copper-ore has been discovered, but not in sufficient quantity to repay the expense of working it; and the vicinity abounds with coal. The Caldron branch of the Trent and Mersey canal passes within four miles of the town, by Oakamoor, the chief seat of the copper and brass works. The market is on Friday: a small square has been recently appropriated for the market-place. The fairs are on Holy-Thursday and Aug. 21st, for cattle. The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 9. 2.; net income, £438; patrons, Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The old church, which was principally in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles, and, though much mutilated and disfigured by alterations, retained some features of its original character, has been lately taken down, and a new church on a much larger scale, containing 1480 sittings, erected by subscription, aided by the Incorporated and Diocesan Societies. A chapel of ease has also been lately built at Oakamoor, containing nearly 500 sittings, of which 304 are free, the Incorporated Society having granted £300 towards the expense. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, the New Connexion of Methodists, or Kilhamites, and Roman Catholics. A school was founded, in 1685, by Mr. Stubbs, who endowed it with a rent-charge of £20; and to this the trustees of Mr. Andrew Newton added £30, the interest of which is paid to the master. Mr. Fowler, in 1663, gave a rent-charge of £6; Mr. Charles Beech, in 1726, bequeathed £26 per annum; and Mrs. Frances Grosvenor, of Hale Hall, in 1727, gave a rent-charge of £10, all for distribution among the poor. The union of Cheadle comprises 15 places, and contains a population of 17,859.

CHEAM (St. DUNSTAN), a parish, in the union of EPSOM, Second division of the hundred of WALLINGTON, E. division of SURREY, 1½ mile (N. E. by E.) from Ewell; containing 1109 inhabitants. This parish comprises the districts of Lower and North Cheam, the latter of which is situated on the high road from London to Worthing. The manor anciently belonged to the Lumley family, of whom one of the descendants sold his collection of books to James I., which laid the foundation of the royal library now in the British Museum. About half a mile to the south-west of the village was the magnificent palace of Nonsuch, the erection of which was commenced by Henry VIII., and completed by Henry, Earl of Arundel; it became the favourite seat of Queen Elizabeth, and was kept up as a royal residence, till the decapitation of Charles I., after which it came into the possession of Algernon Sydney, and, at the Restoration, was granted to the Duchess of Cleveland, who pulled down the building, and disparked the land. The parish comprises by admeasurement 1894*a.* 3*r.* 6*p.*, of which nearly 1200 acres are arable, 581 meadow and pasture, and 14 wood. A vein of clay is found of excellent quality for making casting-moulds, and for tobacco-pipes, of which there is a manufactory; and a pottery, chiefly for chimney and flower-pots, affords employment to several hands. The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 5. 5., and in the patronage of St. John's College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £625, and the glebe comprises 26 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church, an ancient and spacious edifice, was, with the exception of the tower, rebuilt of brick in 1740; the chancel contains several monuments to the Lumleys. Schools on the national system, erected in 1826, on a site given by Mr. Palmer, who also contributed largely to their erection, are supported by subscription. Mr. Pierson bequeathed lands producing £14 per annum to the poor. Sir Edmund Yates, Knt., many years one of the justices of the king's bench and common pleas, noticed with eulogium by Junius in his letters, resided and was interred here; and Bishop Watson was also buried in the parish, of which he had been rector. Of six successive rectors, from 1581 to 1662, five became bishops, viz., Watson, Andrews, Mountain, Senhouse, and Hackett.

CHEAPSIDES, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSIRE, E. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Howden; containing 47 inhabitants. This place, which adjoins Scalby, comprises about 10 acres, being cottages, and plots of land attached to them, on Walling fen, built and inclosed previously to the general inclosure.

CHEARSLEY (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of AYLESBURY, hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Thame; containing 308 inhabitants. The parish is supposed to have been the scene of a battle which Cerdic and Cynric fought with the Britons, in 527, mentioned in the Saxon Chronicle as having occurred at Cerdicesleagh: it comprises by measurement 914 acres, about two-thirds of which are arable, and the rest pasture. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of Miss Grubbe; net income, £46.

CHEBSEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of STONE, S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (E. by S.) from Eccleshall; containing, with the township of Cold-Norton, 442 inhabitants. The Grand Junction railway passes through the parish. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 7. 6.; net income, £211; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Lichfield. In the churchyard was formerly a tall pyramidal stone, supposed to be the memorial of a bishop anciently slain near this place.

CHECKENDON (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of HENLEY, hundred of LANGTREE, county of OXFORD, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Henley-on-Thames; containing 398 inhabitants. The number of acres is 3023, of which 215*sa. 3r. 39p.* are titheable; about 746 are beech woods. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of University College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £560, and the glebe comprises $117\frac{3}{4}$ acres. The church is a highly interesting edifice, in the Norman style, with a circular east end and a low embattled tower: there are two fine Norman arches, with columns having highly enriched capitals; and on the floor are two ancient brasses, dated respectively 1404 and 1424, with engraved effigies. In the chancel is a curious old monument to the memory of Christiana, wife of Richard Braybrook, Esq., who died in 1629; also a monument to the memory of T. Stanyan, Esq., author of a History of Greece, who died in 1751. Schools are supported by private charity.

CHECKLEY, with WRINEHILL, a township, in the parish of WYBUNBURY, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 7 miles (S. E. by E.) from Nantwich; containing 213 inhabitants.

CHECKLEY (St. MARY AND ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CHEADLE, S. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (S. S. E.) from Cheadle; containing, with part of the township of Foxt, 2322 inhabitants. It is intersected by the Grand Junction railway, and comprises by measurement 6034 acres, of which 4700 are meadow and pasture, about 850 arable, and 390 woodland. A large tape-manufactory, supposed to be one of the most extensive in Europe, established in 1748, affords employment to a great portion of the population. A fair is held on Easter-Tuesday. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 2. 6.; net income, £576; patrons, the Hutchinson family. The church is an ancient structure, and contains a fine marble tomb, with recumbent figures. A church has been built at Upper Tean, in the parish, by subscription, in the later English style, the site of which was given by the late patron of the living, and which was endowed by the rector, the Rev. William Hutchinson, with £50 per annum from the tithes. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans; and infants', day, and Sunday schools are supported by the proprietors of the tape-manufactory.

CHEDBURGH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of THINGOE, hundred of RISBRIDGE, W. division of SUFFOLK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Bury-St. Edmund's; containing 284 inhabitants, and comprising 566*a. 1r. 16p.* The living is a discharged rectory, united to that of Ickworth, and valued in the king's books at £4. 2. $8\frac{1}{2}$.: the tithes have been commuted for £143. 2., and the glebe consists of nearly 28 acres. The church is a small structure, with an eastern window in the decorated style; a chancel was built by subscription in 1839, and in 1840 a beautiful tower and spire were added by the Marquess of Bristol, in the early English style. The Hon. William Hervey, in 1812, bequeathed property for the endowment of a school, for which a house has been built at the expense of the Marquess of Bristol.

CHEDDER (St. ANDREW) a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of WINTERSTOKE, E. division of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Axbridge; containing 2325 inhabitants. This place is of considerable antiquity, having been the occasional residence of the Saxon monarchs, and in the possession of Alfred the Great, who bequeathed his hunting-seat at Chedder, together with his brugge of Ax, and the wet moor, now Nedmore, to his son. The name is generally deduced from Ced, a brow or height, and Dur, water; a broad, clear, and rapid stream flows through the parish, on which are some paper-mills. The surface comprises 6697*a. 3r. 24p.*, of which about 1140 acres are arable, 3136 meadow and pasture, 159 woodlands, and 2261 sheep-walks. Chedder Cliff, a vast chasm more than a mile in length, and appearing as if the mountain had been rent by an earthquake from the summit to the base, exhibits a combination of rocky precipices and gloomy caverns, some of the rocks towering 800 feet above the level of the valley. The principal cavern is about 100 feet high at the entrance, and afterwards sinks 300 feet beneath the rocks, branching out into several collateral apartments, and producing a perfect and pleasing echo: the sides and roof are covered with stalactites that have assumed a variety of fanciful forms. The village consists of three or four irregular streets, in one of which stands a dilapidated hexagonal market-cross: it was once a considerable market-town, the grant having been made to Joceline, Bishop of Wells, in the 19th of Henry III., but it is now principally celebrated for its excellent cheese. Several of the inhabitants are employed in the manufacture of paper, the tanning of leather, and the knitting of worsted stockings; and fairs for horned-cattle and sheep are held on May 4th and October 29th. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £23. 16. 8.; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Wells: the appropriate and vicarial tithes have been commuted for £400 each, and the glebe consists of 41 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a large and handsome structure, with a square tower 100 feet high, surmounted by pinnacles. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. In 1751, Sarah Comer bequeathed £6052 three per cents., producing a dividend of £181. 11. 4., which is applied to the instruction and the relief of the poor. A Sunday school was supported for 40 years, by the celebrated Mrs. Hannah More.

CHEDDINGTON (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of LEIGHTON-BUZZARD, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Tring; containing, with part of Seabrook hamlet, 439 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 1389 acres, of which 1023 are arable, 215 meadow and pasture, and 140 common. The London and Birmingham railway passes about a mile to the east of the village, and near this place also the branch railway to Aylesbury commences. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Countess of Bridgewater: the tithes have been commuted for £300, and the glebe contains 81 acres, to which there is a glebe-house: a rent-charge of £16. 10. per annum is paid to the rector of Cublington, and £5 to an improPRIATOR. A small school is supported by voluntary contributions.

CHEDDLETON (St. EDWARD), a parish, in the union of CHEADLE, N. division of the hundred of TOMMONSLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Leek; comprising the townships of Basford, Cunsall, and Rownall, and containing 1824 inhabitants, of whom 808 are in the township of Cheddleton. The Caldron branch of the Trent and Mersey canal, and the Uttoxeter canal, pass through the parish: the latter terminates near the village. Here are coal and lime wharfs, a silk-throwing mill, and a brewery. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £160; patron and incumbent, Rev. Edward Powys. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. At a field near Ferry Hill is the shaft of a very ancient cross, eleven feet high, standing on three circular stone steps. In 1724, James Whitehall bequeathed £200 for teaching children, and £30 to build a schoolroom, to which charity John Bagnall gave a rent-charge of £5.

CHEDDON-FITZPAINE (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of TAUNTON, hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Taunton; containing 357 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Tone, by which it is bounded on the south, and the Taunton and Bridgwater canal passes through it: it comprises by measurement 945 acres, of which about 538 are arable, 327 meadow, and 43 orchards. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 10. 10.; patron and incumbent, Rev. F. Warre: the tithes have been commuted for £325, and the glebe comprises 89 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. A school is supported by some small bequests.

CHEDGLOW, a hamlet, in the parish of CRUDWELL, union and hundred of MALMESBURY, Malmesbury and Ringswood, and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 55 inhabitants.

CHEDGRAVE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of LODDON and CLAVERING, hundred of LODDON, E. division of NORFOLK, 1 mile (N. by W.) from Loddon; containing 348 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1432 acres, of which 492 are arable, 822 pasture, and 92 woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the gift of Sir W. B. Proctor, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £220, and the glebe comprises 6 acres. The church is chiefly in the decorated style, and has a low square tower at the north-east end; the interior was repewed in 1819, and ornamented with a handsome eastern window of stained glass, by the Rev. T. H. W. Beauchamp; the entrances on the north and south are through richly-decorated Norman doorways.

CHEDINGTON (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union and hundred of BEAMINSTER, Bridport division of DORSET, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Beaminster; containing 186 inhabitants. The parish comprises 773*a. 2r. 25p.*, and is separated from that of Beaminster by the river Axe, which rises within its limits; the surface is extremely irregular, rising into numerous hills, with scarcely a level field within its bounds; the hills are composed of a hard durable fossil rock, and afford rich and extensive views. The river Parret rises within the parish, and, with the Axe, adds greatly to the fertility and beauty of the district. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 8. 4., and in the gift of William Trevelyan Cox, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £128. 10., and the glebe comprises $46\frac{3}{4}$ acres, with a glebe-house. The church is a handsome edifice, erected on a new site, in 1840, chiefly at the expense of Mr. Cox, lord of the manor. A parochial school is supported by subscription. On one of the hills in the parish are the remains of a Roman encampment, and in the fields below it, is the site of a Roman villa. The Rev. Thomas Hare, translator of Horace, was rector.

CHEDISTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (W.) from Halesworth; containing 433 inhabitants, and comprising 237*sa. 34p.* The living is a discharged vicarage, united to the rectory of Halesworth, and valued in the king's books at £6. 7. 6.: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £230, and the vicarial for £13. 14. 6.; the glebe comprises $61\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church is chiefly in the perpendicular style, consisting of a nave and chancel, with a lady chapel on the north; it has an embattled tower, and contains a font of Caen stone, curiously sculptured. An almshouse was, in 1575, vested in trustees, by Henry Claxton, for three poor families.

CHEDWORTH (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of NORTHLEACH, hundred of RAPSGATE. E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Northleach; containing 983 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 5000 acres, the soil of which is chiefly light, and good barley land. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 8. 4., and in the patronage of Queen's College, Oxford: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £278. 7., with a glebe of 110 acres, and the impropriate for two rent-charges, one, amounting to £371. 2., payable to the master, and the other, £185. 11., to the usher, of Northleach grammar school; the masters also have $118\frac{1}{4}$ acres of glebe. The church contains a handsome stone pulpit, and is supposed to have been built in the reign of Henry VI. In 1760, a Roman hypocaust was discovered at Lestercomb Bottom, in the parish, with a brick floor and pillars, a spring, and a cistern, the bricks of which bore the inscription "a'rviri." On a hill a little above is a large tumulus, in which, on the removal of a stone set upright at its mouth, a great quantity of human bones was exposed. Chedworth gave the title of Baron to the family of Howe, which became extinct on the death of John, Lord Chedworth, in 1804.

CHEDZOY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of NORTH PETHERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Bridgwater; containing 507 inhabitants. It is situated about a mile and a quarter from the Bath and Exeter road, and comprises 1655*a.* 2*r.* 36*p.*: the soil is rather of a sandy nature, but tolerably fertile. The river Parret, which runs through Bridgwater, affords facility for the conveyance of coal; and the Bristol and Exeter railway is within three miles of the village. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £38. 7. 11., and in the gift of the Rev. Richard James Luscombe: the tithes have been commuted for £380, and the glebe comprises 30 acres, to which there is a glebe-house: a rent-charge of £2 is paid to the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The church is an ancient spacious cruciform structure, in the Norman style, with a lofty square embattled tower, and a north and south porch, over the latter of which is the date 1579. A school is supported by the rector and lord of the manor. Roman coins have frequently been discovered; and, in 1701, some earthen urns and a fibula were dug up near the church.

CHEESEBURN-GRANGE, a township, in the parish of STAMFORDHAM, union of CASTLE ward, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 12 miles (N. W. by W.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 56 inhabitants. The township, anciently called Chyseburgh, is situated on the river Pont, and comprises 795*a.* 2*r.* 39*p.* of high flat table land, upon a substratum of blue mountain limestone: it is the property of Edward Riddell, Esq., high sheriff for the county in 1841, to whose ancestor the estate passed, in the female line, from Sir Thomas Widdrington, its former possessor. Mr. Riddell has a beautiful seat here, which has been much improved, and attached to the mansion is a Roman Catholic chapel. The Newcastle and Carlisle railway passes within a distance of six miles. The township having been annexed to the abbey at Hexham, it is free from the payment of large tithes: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £8. 13. 1., and 10*s.* are payable to the Bishop of Durham.

CHEETHAM, a chapelry, in the parish of MANCHESTER, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Manchester; containing 6082 inhabitants, including the district of St. Luke. This chapelry, comprehending the township of Crumpsall and a portion of Cheetham and Broughton, and generally called Cheetham Hill, comprises about 750 acres, and is situated on the banks of the river Irwell, and on the road to Bury. The living is a perpetual curacy; patron, impropiator, and incumbent, Rev. C. W. Ethelston, who built the chapel, dedicated to St. Mark, a plain brick edifice, in 1794: the tithes have been commuted for £187. 10. A district church, dedicated to St. Luke, has been erected on a plot of ground given by Lord Ducie, and was consecrated in October 1839; it has 1500 sittings, of which 500 are free; and the perpetual right of presentation is vested in the subscribers, who received for every £25 a pew, containing five sittings, rent-free for ever. There are two meeting-houses for Wesleyans, with a burial-ground and a school attached to one of them; also a place of worship for Associated Methodists. A school for girls is supported by subscription, as is also a day and Sunday school.

CHELBOROUGH, EAST, or LUCCOMBE, a parish, in the union of BEAMINSTER, hundred of TOLLERFORD, Sherborne division of DORSET, 16 miles (N. W.) from Dorchester; containing 96 inhabitants. The parish was anciently called Lucombe, and East Chelborough was a hamlet within its limits. It comprises 948*a.* 1*r.*, of which about 258 acres are arable, 594 pasture, 62 wood and plantation, and 23 orchard and garden ground. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the gift of the Rev. Blakeley Cooper: the tithes have been commuted for £160, and the glebe comprises 110 acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

CHELBOROUGH, WEST, a parish, in the union of BEAMINSTER, hundred of TOLLERFORD, Sherborne division of DORSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Evershot; containing 58 inhabitants, and consisting of 578*a.* 3*r.* 28*p.* The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 15. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Lord Rolle and John Bragge, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £82, and the glebe comprises 29 $\frac{1}{4}$ acres.

CHELDON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SOUTH MOLTON, hundred of WITHERIDGE, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Chulmleigh; containing 90 inhabitants, and consisting by estimation of 101 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres. There are quarries of stone, which is chiefly used for the roads. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 18. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Hon. N. Felloses: the tithes have been commuted for £77, and the glebe comprises 35 acres. The church is a small neat edifice.

CHELFORD, a chapelry, in the parish of PRESTBURY, union and hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Knutsford; containing 201 inhabitants. Five roads meet in the village; and the Birtles and Henbury brooks unite immediately below the chapel, forming a fine sheet of water, which empties itself into a brook called Peover-leve. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £135; patron, T. Parker, Esq.; impropiator, C. B. Leigh, Esq. The chapel was rebuilt in 1776. In 1754, John Parker, Esq., erected a school, and endowed it with £50, to which Thomas Moss and Samuel Brooke added £100 each.

CHELL, a township, in the parish of WOLSTANTON, union of WOLSTANTON and BURSLEM, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (N. E.) from Burslem; containing 737 inhabitants. It is divided into two townsteads, called Great and Little Chell, containing 740 acres: coal-mines are wrought on the confines. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists. The workhouse for the united parishes of Wolstanton and Burslem, lately erected here, is a fine capacious structure of gabled architecture. At Turnhurst, in the township, James Brindley, the eminent canal engineer, died in 1772.

CHELLASTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of SHARDLOW, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Derby; containing 461 inhabitants. This place once belonged to the Earls of Huntingdon, whose ancient manor-house has long been destroyed. The parish, which was formerly part of the rectory of Melbourne, comprises by computation 800 acres: some very productive mines of gypsum or alabaster, of fine quality, are in full operation. The Derby canal passes to the north, and the Trent and Mersey canal to the south, of the village. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £80; patron, Bishop of Carlisle; impropiator, Lord Melbourne: the tithes were commuted for land at the inclosure of the parish. The church is in the later English style; the tower has been rebuilt. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

CHELLESWORTH, or CHELSWORTH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of COSFORD, W. division of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (N. W. by N.) from Hadleigh; containing 284 inhabitants, and consisting of 861*a. 2r.* The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 8. 9., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £264. 7., and the glebe comprises 30 acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

CHELLINGTON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the hundred of WILLEY, union and county of BEDFORD, 7 miles (N. E. by E.) from Olney; containing 125 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united in 1769 to that of Carlton, and valued in the king's books at £10: the tithes were commuted for land in 1805.

CHELMARSH (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of BRIDGENORTH, hundred of STOTTESDEN, S. division of SALOP, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Bridgenorth; containing 495 inhabitants. It comprises about 3200 acres, and is situated on the river Severn, which flows a little to the eastward of the village, and is here navigable. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 5. 8.; patron and impropiator, Sir J. Sebright, Bart.: the great tithes have been commuted for £369. 8., and the vicarial for £235; the glebe contains 20 acres, to which there is a glebe-house.

CHELMERTON, a chapelry, in the parish and union of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Tideswell; containing 238 inhabitants. The manufacture of ribbons is carried on. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £86; patron, Vicar of Bakewell; impropiators, Dean and Chapter of Lichfield and Duke of Devonshire. The chapel has some remains of a rood-loft and screen-work. There are meeting-houses for Wesleyans and Presbyterians; also a school, to which Mr. Brocklehurst, who died in 1792, gave £200. On the summit of an eminence rising above the village are two barrows, the circumference of the larger being about 240 feet: in this, when opened in the year 1782, several human skeletons were discovered, in rude stone coffins, with bones and teeth perfect.

CHELMONDISTON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the hundred of SAMFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Ipswich; containing 566 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Orwell, by which it is bounded on the north, and comprises the hamlet of Penemill, pleasantly seated on the south bank of that river, which is here navigable. The hamlet is chiefly inhabited by persons engaged in dredging for stone, which is found on a ledge of rocks six or seven miles out at sea, east of Harwich, and is made into Roman cement; nearly thirty boats are employed in the trade. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £346. 10. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. The noted John Henley, familiarly termed "Orator Henley," was for a short time rector.

CHELMSFORD (St. MARY), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of CHELMSFORD, S. division of ESSEX, of which it is the chief town, 29 miles (N. E. by E.) from London, on the road to Yarmouth; containing, with the hamlet of Moulsham, 6789 inhabitants. This place, which is within a short distance of the Cæsaromagus of the Romans, derives its name from an ancient ford on the Chelmer, near the natural confluence of that river with the Cann, into which its stream is previously diverted by an artificial channel near the bridge. In the reign of Edward the Confessor, and at the time of the Norman survey, it was in the possession of the Bishops of London; and two buildings, still called Bishop's Hall and Bishop's Mill, seem to indicate its having been either permanently or occasionally their residence. In other respects it was an inconsiderable place till the reign of Henry I., when Maurice, Bishop of London, built a stone bridge of three arches over the river Cann; and diverting the road, which previously passed through Writtle, made Chelmsford the great thoroughfare to the eastern parts of the county, and to Suffolk and Norfolk. From this period the town increased in importance; and its trade so much improved, that, in the reign of Edward III., it sent four representatives to a grand council at Westminster. A convent for Black, or Dominican, friars was established at an early date, the foundation of which has been erroneously attributed to Malcolm, King of Scotland: its revenue, at the Dissolution, was £9. 6. 5. In this convent, of which only the site is visible, Thomas Langford, a friar, compiled a Universal Chronicle, from the creation to his own time. During the late war with France, two extensive ranges of barracks, for 4000 men, were erected near the town, both of which have been taken down; and at a short distance from it, a line of embankments, defended by star batteries, of which some traces are still remaining, was raised to protect the approaches to the metropolis from the eastern coast.

The town, which is surrounded by interesting scenery, is well paved and lighted with gas: the houses, several of which, on both sides of the town, have gardens extending to the river, are in general modern and well built; and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. Considerable improvements have been made of late years in the appearance of the neighbourhood; a handsome iron bridge has been erected over the Chelmer; and more recently a road has been formed, commencing at the twenty-eighth milestone on the London road, and after crossing the river Cann by an elegant iron bridge (about one hundred yards from the stone bridge, erected in 1787, and connecting Chelmsford with the hamlet of Moulsham), enters the town about the centre of the High-street. An elegant building, called the Institute, has been built for the delivery of lectures, for concerts, and public meetings; and near the Eastern-Counties railway, which passes a little to the west, numerous villas have been erected. Races, which continue for two days, are held in August, on Galleywood Common, about two miles distant, where there is an excellent two-mile course. The trade consists principally in corn, which is sent to London, and in the traffic arising from the situation of the town as a great public thoroughfare: there are several large corn-mills on the banks of the Chelmer. A navigable canal to the river Black-water, twelve miles distant, was constructed in 1796. The market is on Friday, for corn, cattle, and provisions; and fairs are held on May 12th and November 12th. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold petty-sessions for the division every Tuesday and Friday; and constables and other officers are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor, who also holds a court baron occasionally. The assizes and sessions for the county, and the election of knights for the southern division of the shire, likewise take place here. The shire hall is an elegant and commodious structure, fronted with Portland stone, and having a rustic basement, from which rise four handsome pillars of the Ionic order, supporting a triangular pediment; the front is ornamented with appropriate figures, in basso-relievo, of Wisdom, Justice, and Mercy; in the lower part is an area for the corn-market. The old county gaol, a spacious and handsome stone building, in the hamlet of Moulsham, was completed, in 1777, at an expense of upwards of £18,000; it is appropriated exclusively to the reception of persons confined for debt, and of prisoners committed for trial. Adjoining the gaol, and incorporated with it, is the house of correction, used for convicted female prisoners; it was built in 1806, at a cost of about £7500. The new convict gaol at Springfield Hill, on the road to Colchester, is a very extensive and well-arranged building of brick, ornamented with stone, begun in October, 1822, and completed in 1825, at an expense of £55,739. 17., and capable of containing 254 prisoners, of whom 218 may be confined in separate cells. A building has been erected within the last few years for the reception of vagrants.

The parish comprises 2348 acres, of which the soil is generally a deep rich loam, occasionally intermixed with gravel, and producing fair average crops. The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £31. 2. 6., and in the patronage of Lady St. John Mildmay: the tithes have been commuted for £500, and the glebe contains $15\frac{3}{4}$ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The body of the church has been rebuilt, at an expense of £15,000, the former having fallen down in 1800, from the unskilfulness of some workmen, who, in digging a vault, undermined two of the principal pillars: it is a stately structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, crowned with pinnacles, and surmounted by a lofty spire. A chapel of ease in a modern style has been erected in the hamlet of Moulsham, on a site given by Lady Mildmay, and was consecrated in 1839. There are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, Irvingites, the Society of Friends, and Wesleyans; also a Roman Catholic chapel at Newhall. The free grammar school was founded and endowed, in 1551, by Edward VI.: the income is about £488; and, in common with those at Maldon and Brentwood, it has an exhibition of £6 per annum to Caius College, Cambridge. The school-house was rebuilt by R. Benyon, Esq., in 1782, on the site of a more ancient one erected by Sir John Tyrrell, Bart. Philemon Holland, translator of Camden's Britannia, and a native of Chelmsford; John Dee, the celebrated mathematician; Sir Walter Mildmay, Bart., founder of Emanuel College, Cambridge; and Dr. Plume, Archdeacon of Rochester, received the rudiments of their education in the establishment. A school for the maintenance and instruction of boys, founded in 1713, and a school for girls, founded in 1714, are supported by endowment and subscription: a school on the national plan for boys, girls, and infants, was created by subscription in 1841; and there is a Lancelian school. Six almshouses in Moulsham, founded by Sir Thomas and Lady Mildmay, in 1565, were rebuilt by William Mildmay, Esq., in 1758; and four in Baddow-lane, erected by the sale of a barn given by William Davis, in 1520, for the use of the poor, have also been rebuilt, and two tenements added at the expense of the parish. The union of Chelmsford comprises 31 parishes or places, and contains a population of 30,603. The inhabitants of an island in the river have from time immemorial practised the form of electing a representative in parliament, which takes place either on a dissolution of parliament or the vacation of a member for the county: the ceremony concludes with the chairing of the successful candidate, who is dipped in the river, and the chair broken to pieces.

CHELSEA, a suburb of the metropolis, comprising the parishes of St. Luke and Upper Chelsea, in the Kensington division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX; and containing, with part of the chapelry of Knightsbridge, 40,179 inhabitants. This place was anciently called Chelcheth, or Chelchith, probably from the Saxon Ceosl, or Cesol, sand, and Hythe, a harbour; from which its present name is derived. In 785, a synod for the reformation of religion in England was assembled here by the legates of Pope Adrian. The beauty of its situation on the Thames, which is wider here than in any other part above London bridge, made it, at an early period, the residence of illustrious persons, whose superb mansions procured for it the appellation of the "village of palaces." Among these was the residence of the chancellor, Sir Thomas More, at the north end of Beaufort-row, which, after being successively in the occupation of several distinguished characters, was taken down by Sir Hans Sloane, in the year 1740. The Bishops of Winchester had a palace at the upper end of Cheyne-walk, which, under an act of parliament passed in 1823, enabling the bishop to alienate it from the see, was taken down in 1824. Queen Elizabeth had also a palace here; and Sir Robert Walpole resided for some time in a mansion previously belonging to the crown, on the site of which a fine edifice was erected, in 1810, by Gen. Gordon. The mansion and gardens of the Earl of Ranelagh were converted into a place of public amusement, which after having been fashionably attended for a considerable time, was closed in 1805, and the buildings taken down; the site is now occupied by dwelling-houses. Chelsea comprehends the old town on the bank of the Thames, over which is a bridge of wood leading to Battersea, in Surrey; the new buildings, erected since 1777, and called Hans Town, in honour of Sir Hans Sloane, a former lord of the manor; and several ranges of building of recent-erection in various directions. In the old town is Cheyne-walk, which contains many handsome houses, commanding an interesting view of the river and the scenery on its opposite bank; in the new town are, Sloane-street, a regular range of respectable houses, nearly a mile in length, Sloane-square, and Upper and Lower Cadogan-places. The streets are partially paved, and well lighted with gas, under the superintendence of 40 commissioners, including the rector and the church-wardens, appointed annually by act of parliament obtained about the year 1820; the inhabitants are supplied with water by the Chelsea Water Works Company, incorporated in 1724. The Botanical Gardens were established in 1673, by the Company of Apothecaries, to whom Sir Hans Sloane granted, at a quit-rent of £5 per annum, four acres on the bank of the river: they contain a great variety of medicinal plants systematically arranged, a hot-house, green-houses, and a library, in which are many volumes of natural history. Lectures are delivered periodically to the students, by a demonstrator appointed for that purpose. In the centre of the gardens is a fine statue of Sir Hans Sloane, by Rysbrach; and in the front opposite to the river are two remarkably fine cedars of Libanus. A second botanic garden, occupying more than six acres, well stocked with plants arranged after the Linnæan system, in seventeen compartments, was established in 1807, near Sloane-street, where lectures are delivered in May and June.

The Royal Hospital for veteran soldiers, a spacious and handsome structure of brick, ornamented with columns, quoins, and cornices of stone, erected after a design by Sir Christopher Wren, at an expense of £150,000, towards defraying which the projector, Sir Stephen Fox, grandfather of the Rt. Hon. C. J. Fox, contributed £13,000, was begun in the reign of Charles II., and completed in that of William III. The buildings occupy a spacious quadrangle, in the centre of which is a fine statue in bronze of Charles II.; the east and west sides, which are 360 feet in length, comprise wards for the pensioners, and the governor's house; in the centre of the north side is a large vestibule, lighted by a handsome dome, with the great hall on one side, in which the pensioners dine, and on the other, the chapel, a neat and lofty edifice, containing a handsome altar-piece, in which is a good painting of the Resurrection; the south side of the quadrangle is open to the river, affording a fine view of the extensive gardens, which reach to its margin. There are smaller quadrangles, in which are the infirmaries and various offices, formed by the addition of wings to the extremities of the north side of the large quadrangle: on the north side of the college is an inclosure of thirteen acres, planted with avenues of trees. The number of in-pensioners is about 500, and the number of out-pensioners indefinite; the annual expenditure is from £700,000 to £800,000. York Hospital, situated in the parish, is a receptacle for wounded soldiers arriving from foreign stations, who are waiting for a vacancy in the royal college. The Royal Military Asylum was founded, in 1801, by His Royal Highness the late Duke of York, for the support and education of the orphan children of soldiers, and of those whose fathers are serving on foreign stations: there are at present 350 boys. There were formerly nearly 1000 boys in the institution, and 300 girls; but the latter, in 1823, were removed to Southampton, where a cavalry barrack, which had been previously converted into an asylum for 400 boys, was appropriated to their use, and the boys were received into this institution. The premises, which are handsomely built of brick, and ornamented with stone, form three sides of a quadrangle: the west front consists of a centre, with a stone portico of the Doric order, connected with two wings by an arcade, and within the grounds is a handsome chapel. There are a soap-manufactory, two breweries, a manufactory for papier-maché, and an extensive floor-cloth manufactory: a considerable trade is carried on in coal; and in the neighbourhood are large tracts of ground cultivated by market-gardeners. The county magistrates hold a petty-session here for the hundred every Tuesday; and four headboroughs, nine constables, and other officers are appointed at the court for the manor. An act for the administration of the poor laws in the parish of St. Luke, Chelsea, and relating to the highways in the same parish, was passed in 1841.

The ancient parish of Chelsea has lately been divided into two distinct and separate parishes. The living of St. Luke's is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8.; net income, £1003; patron, Earl Cadogan. The church, erected in 1824, at an expense of £40,000, of which the Parliamentary Commissioners granted £8785. 12., is a magnificent structure, in the decorated and later styles of English architecture, with a lofty square tower crowned by dome turrets at the angles; the west front is strikingly beautiful. The interior has an impressive grandeur of effect, arising from the loftiness of the nave, which has a triforium and a fine range of clerestory windows of three lights, and is separated from the aisles by clustered columns and pointed arches; the altar-piece is ornamented with shrine-work of elegant design, and embellished with a painting of the Descent from the Cross; the east window is lofty and of graceful character, and the roof is finely groined. The living of Upper Chelsea is a rectory not in charge; net income, £840; patron, Earl Cadogan. Holy Trinity church, situated in Sloane-street, is a handsome edifice, in the later English style, with two minaret turrets at the west end, and was erected in 1830, at an expense of £5849. 17. 4., by grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners. The old church, now used as a Chapel of Ease, is a small edifice, partly in the early and partly in the decorated English style, with a low tower, surmounted by a campanile turret; it is chiefly of brick; and was rebuilt in the early part of the sixteenth century; it was enlarged, and the tower added, about 1670. At the end of the north aisle is a chapel in the decorated style, and at the extremity of the south aisle is one erected by Sir Thomas More, in 1520. Among the many interesting monuments are those of Sir Thomas More; Dr. Edward Chamberlayne, author of The Present State of England; Thomas Shadwell, poet-laureate in the reign of William and Mary; Sir Hans Sloane, and others. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £300; patron, Rector of St. Luke's. An episcopal chapel, called Park chapel, was built by Sir Richard Manningham, in 1718, and is in the patronage of Mrs. Owen. Christ Church, situated in Queen-street, and consecrated in June, 1839, is a neat edifice of brick, in the early English style, with a campanile turret surmounted by a dwarf spire; it was erected by the trustees of the late Miss Hyndman, at a cost of nearly £4000, and will accommodate 1200 persons. St. Saviour's district church has been recently built on a site behind Hans-place, in Upper Chelsea, for a congregation of 1200 persons, at an estimated expense of £5000, of which one-half was granted by the Metropolitan Church Building Society, and the remainder raised by voluntary contributions; it was consecrated in May, 1840. The first stone of the chapel for the National Society's Training College was laid in May, 1841, at the distance of about one hundred paces from the house, situated at Stanley Grove, at the western extremity of Chelsea. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics. Numerous schools are supported, on the national and other systems, for the education of the children of the poor: a dispensary in Sloane-square, supported by subscription, administers medical relief to nearly 3000 patients; and there are also a Philanthropic Society for visiting the sick, a Church Missionary Society, and a coal relief association, all maintained by subscription. Mrs. Martha Bromsall, in 1804, gave premises, the proceeds from the sale of which have been vested in the purchase of £315 new four per cents.; the dividends are distributed among poor housekeepers. There are some other bequests for charitable purposes. John King, A.M., editor of some of the tragedies of Euripides; and Dr. Thomas Martyn, F.R.S., an eminent antiquary and natural philosopher, and Regius Professor of Botany at Cambridge for sixty-four years, were natives of the parish.

CHELSEFIELD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BROMLEY, hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Bromley; containing 861 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £24. 14. 2., and in the patronage of All Souls' College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £820, and the glebe comprises 53 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is in the early English style, with a tower and spire at the north-east angle of the nave. At Farnborough, in the parish, is a chapel of ease. There is a small endowment for instruction; and boys and girls are educated on the national system.

CHELSHAM (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of GODSTONE, Second division of the hundred of TANDRIDGE, E. division of SURREY, 6 miles (S. E.) from Croydon; containing 347 inhabitants. It is consolidated with Warlingham (which see), under the title of Warlingham with Chelsham. The church is in the early English style, and is capable of accommodating about 200 persons; the chancel is separated from the body of the building by an oak screen of great beauty and elaborate carving. In 1835, a charity school was established. At Ledgers, in the parish, at a short distance from the dwelling-house of its proprietor, is a moat, in which, on its being partially cleared out a few years ago, several mutilated remains of ancient vases were discovered.

CHELSWORTH.—See CHELLESWORTH.

CHELTENHAM (St. MARY), a newly-enfranchised borough, market-town, and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of CHELTENHAM, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 9 miles (E. N. E.) from Gloucester, and 95 (W. N. W.) from London; containing 31,411 inhabitants. This place takes its name from the small river Chelt, which rises at Dowdeswell, in the vicinity, and runs through the town in its course to the Severn. Prior to the Conquest, the manor belonged to Edward the Confessor, and was afterwards held by the Conqueror; in 1199 it was granted to Henry de Bohun, Earl of Hereford, who exchanged it with King John for other lands; it was next given to the abbey of Feschamp, in Normandy, and subsequently to the nunnery of Sion, in Middlesex, on the dissolution of which it reverted to the crown. Cheltenham derives its importance from its mineral springs, the oldest of which was noticed in 1716, and since that time various others have been discovered, possessing different proportions of chalybeate, aperient salts, chiefly sulphate of soda, sulphate of magnesia, and oxyde of iron held in solution by carbonic acid; the last was discovered, in 1803, by Dr. Thomas Jameson, according to whose analysis it contains a greater proportion of sulphureous gas than the others; and, in many instances, bears a strong affinity to the Harrogate water. They are efficacious in the cure of jaundice and other diseases of the liver, in dyspepsia, and in the complaints arising from the debilitating influence of hot climates. In 1721, the old well, or spa, to the south of the town, was inclosed, and in 1738 Captain Henry Skillicorn erected over it a brick pavilion, supported on four arches, built a pump-room, and laid out walks for the accommodation of visitors. In 1780, the number of lodging-houses amounted only to thirty; but since the visit of George III., with the queen and princesses, in 1788, Cheltenham has been rapidly rising into celebrity as a place of fashionable resort, and is at present eminent for the elegance of its buildings, the extent and variety of its accommodations, and the rank and number of its visitors, of whom, in the course of the season, there are generally not less than 15,000.

The TOWN is pleasantly situated on an extensive plain, sheltered on the north and east by the Cotswold Hills, and consists of numerous fine streets, the principal of which is more than a mile and a half in length, containing many excellent ranges of building, interspersed occasionally with houses of more ancient date and less pretending character; to the south are a crescent and colonnade, and the upper and the lower promenade, lately built; and on each side are dwellings, displaying much beauty and variety of architectural decoration. The masonic hall, in Portland-street, is a handsome edifice, in the style of a Roman mausoleum, completed in 1823, and decorated in front and on one side with the insignia of the order of freemasonry. The streets are well paved, and lighted with gas, by an act procured in the 59th of George III., and amended in the 2nd of George IV.: the Gas-light and Coke Company was formed pursuant to an act passed in 1819; and in 1824 an act was obtained for the establishment of water-works, under the direction of a company. An act was also passed, in 1833, for the better sewerage, draining, and cleansing of the town. About half a mile towards the south is the Montpelier spa: the pump-room, a spacious and handsome rotunda, has a noble colonnade in front, above the centre of which is the figure of a lion couchant. Nearer the town is the Imperial spa, an elegant building, in the Grecian style of architecture, opened in 1818. The old well, or original spa, has been enlarged by the erection of a new pump-room in 1803. There are also the chalybeate spa, opened in 1802; the Cambray chalybeate spa, discovered in 1807; and Alstone spa, opened in 1809. On the north side of Cheltenham is Pittville, where a new town has been planned on a magnificent scale, by Joseph Pitt, Esq.: the pump-room, of which the first stone was laid on the 4th of May, 1825, is a splendid edifice, erected at an expense of more than £20,000. There are warm, cold, medicated, and vapour baths, furnished with all the requisite appendages; hotels, affording every accommodation; and several hundred lodging-houses, many of which are splendidly fitted up. The various libraries, reading-rooms, and musical repositories, are richly stored and well conducted; and concerts and assemblies take place regularly during the season, under the superintendence of a master of the ceremonies, in a splendid suite of rooms completed in 1816. The theatre, built in 1805, by Mr. J. Watson, a coadjutor of John Kemble and Mrs. Siddons, was totally destroyed by fire on the 3rd of May, 1839. Races take place annually, on the adjoining eminence.

The TRADE, exclusively of the ordinary business necessary for the supply of the inhabitants and the numerous visitors, consists principally of malt and in various kinds of medicinal salts, for the preparation of which latter there is an extensive manufactory on the road to Bath. The Birmingham and Gloucester railway has one of its principal stations at this place, a spacious building, of the Grecian Doric order, with a colonnade extending along the whole of the front, which is on the Queen's road. The market is on Thursday and Saturday: the fairs are on the second Thursday in April, Aug. 5th, the second Thursday in Sept., and the third Thursday in Dec., for cattle and cheese; there are also statute fairs on the first and second Thursday after Michaelmas-day. The market-house, a handsome and commodious building, was erected, in 1823, at the expense of Lord Sherborne. By the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, Cheltenham was constituted a borough, with the privilege of returning a member to parliament, to be elected by the £10 householders; the limits of the borough are co-extensive with those of the parish, comprising about 3650 acres; the returning officer is appointed by the sheriff for the county. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty-session for the division every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday; a high bailiff and constables are appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor; and the local affairs are under the controul of commissioners appointed by an act passed in the 2nd of George IV. By an ancient manorial custom, confirmed by act of parliament, land descends as by common law, but the eldest female inherits solely. The new gaol, near St. George's-square, is a convenient edifice, erected in 1814.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy; net income, £1073; patrons, certain Trustees; impropiator, J. Pitt, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, for the hamlet of Cheltenham, in 1801, and for the tythings of Arle and Arlestone, in 1830. The parochial church is an ancient cruciform structure, in the early, decorated, and later English styles, with a square tower rising from the intersection, and surmounted by a lofty octagonal spire. On the east side of the north transept is a grand circular window, 15 feet in diameter, divided into 33 compartments, and filled with tracery of the decorated and later styles intermixed; the east window of the chancel, and others, are also fine compositions. An antique altar-piece, presented by the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester, has been lately erected; and there is likewise a piscina in the chancel. In the churchyard is an ancient stone cross, of a single shaft, with an ascent of several steps. The church of the Holy Trinity, in Portland-street, a handsome structure, in the later English style, was erected by subscription, but finished by Lord Sherborne, and was consecrated in 1823; and another church has been erected in Suffolk-square. The living of each of these is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Trustees, elected by the subscribers, for a term of forty years, at the expiration of which the right of representation becomes vested in the Perpetual Curate of Cheltenham. St. John's, in Berkeley-place, was built at the expense of the present incumbent: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £150; patron, Rev. W. Spencer Phillips. A free church, of the Grecian-Ionic order, with a portico and tower, was completed in 1831, at a cost of £6500, half of which was defrayed by a grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £250. A new burial-ground has been purchased by the parishioners. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, the Connexion of the Countess of Huntingdon, Independents, Wesleyan and other Methodists, and Roman Catholics. The Baptist meeting-house has a burial-ground attached to it; and there is a fund of £95 per annum, for distribution among the poor of that congregation.

The Free Grammar school was established and endowed in 1574, by Richard Pates; the endowment, augmented by Queen Elizabeth, produces a salary of £30 per annum to the master, who is appointed by Corpus Christi College, Oxford. There are eight scholarships in Pembroke College, Oxford, founded in 1682, by George Townsend, Esq., for boys from Gloucester, Cheltenham, Chipping-Campden, and Northleach, with preference in presentation to his donatives of Uxbridge and Colnbrook: the same benefactor also instituted and endowed a school here, for poor boys, and similar schools in the parishes of Winchcombe, Chipping-Campden, Northleach, and Nether Guyting, or Blockley, and for apprenticing them he appropriated part of the income, which amounts to £207. The Rev. William Stanley, in 1704, gave land producing £25 per annum, subject to a rent-charge of £8, the residue being applied to the same purpose. A portion of an endowment by Lady Capel, amounting to £37. 10. per annum, is paid for the instruction of poor children. There are national, Lancasterian, and infants' schools, maintained by subscription; and a school under the patronage of the bishop of the diocese is supported by Miss Catherine Leacock and R. B. Cooper, Esq. A proprietary college, the object of which is to supply a good general education, founded on sound religious principles, was opened on the 22nd of June, 1843: the building is entirely of stone, raised from Dodswell-hill, near the town, and has a façade 240 feet in length; the cost of its erection exceeded £8000. Almshouses for six persons were founded and endowed by Richard Pates, in 1574. The dispensary and casualty ward, established in 1813, and lately enlarged, is supported by subscription; and there are many other charitable institutions, among which may be noticed the female orphan asylum, the Coburg Society, for the relief of indigent married women in child-birth, and the Dorcas Society. The poor law union of Cheltenham comprises 13 parishes or places, and contains a population of 40,221.

CHELVESTON (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of THRAPSTON, hundred of HIGHAM-FERRERS, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 2 miles (E. by N.) from Higham-Ferrers; containing, with the hamlet of Caldecott, 372 inhabitants. The parish, which extends from the river Nene to the border of Bedfordshire, consists of 1754*a.* 3*r.* 36*p.*, and the road from Higham-Ferrers to Kimbolton crosses it. The living is united to the vicarage of Higham-Ferrers: the tithes were commuted for land, in 1801. A school was founded, in 1760, by Abigail Bailey and Ann Levett, who endowed it with land, producing £12 per annum. James Sawyer, in 1708, endowed almshouses with £18 per annum.

CHELVEY (St. BRIDGET), a parish, in the union of BEDMINSTER, hundred of HARTCLIFFE with BEDMINSTER, E. division of SOMERSET, 9 miles (W. S. W.) from Bristol; containing 54 inhabitants. It comprises 442*a.* 1*r.* 39*p.*, and is intersected by the Bristol and Exeter railroad. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 9. 7., and in the patronage of C. K. K. Tynte, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £95, and the glebe comprises 24 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is a small neat edifice, with a handsome tower.

CHELWOOD (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of CLUTTON, hundred of KEYNSHAM, E. division of SOMERSET, 2 miles (S. E.) from Pensford; containing 260 inhabitants. It abounds with coal. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells: the tithes have been commuted for £175, and the glebe comprises 38 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The tower of the church was rebuilt in 1772. There is an endowed chapel belonging to the Independents; and a small school is supported by the rector and gentry.

CHELWORTH, a hamlet, in the parish of CRUDWELL, union and hundred of MALMESBURY, Malmesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 58 inhabitants.

CHELWORTH, a tything, in the parish of St. Sampson, borough of CRICKLADE, union of CRICKLADE and WOOTTON-BASSETT, hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, Cricklade and N. divisions of WILTS, 1½ mile (S. W.) from Cricklade.

CHENIES, anciently ISENHAMSTED, or EASTMANSTED (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of AMERSHAM, hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Amersham; containing 625 inhabitants. This parish once belonged to the family of Cheynes, lords of the manor; and the old manor-house, which was much improved, in the reign of Henry VIII., by Lord Russell, into whose family it came, by marriage with the Cheynes', is still in tolerable preservation. The parish comprises about 1400 acres, nearly all of which belong to the Duke of Bedford: the surface is hilly, and the soil a gravelly loam, resting on chalk. The manufacture of paper is carried on extensively. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 16. 0½, and in the gift of his Grace: the tithes have been commuted for £411. 6. 8., and the glebe comprises 30 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. Attached to the church is a chapel, built in 1556, by Anne, Countess of Bedford, pursuant to the will of her deceased lord, John, Earl of Bedford, and containing many very interesting and some superb monuments of the Russell family, especially one to Lord William Russell, beheaded in 1683, and who lies interred in the vault beneath, with his heroic wife, Lady Rachel: in the vault are upwards of fifty coffins, with inscriptions bearing dates from 1591 to the present time. There is a place of worship for Baptists. A national school has been established; and an infants' school is supported by the rector, Lord Wriothoesley Russell. An almshouse for ten poor persons was founded and endowed in 1603, by Anne, Countess of Warwick, daughter of the second Earl of Bedford. John Russell, Esq., ancestor of the Duke of Bedford, was raised to the peerage in 1538-9, by the title of Baron Russell of Chenies, which his descendants continue to bear.

CHEPSTOW (St. MARY), a port, market-town, parish, and division, and the head of a union, in the hundred of CALDICOT, county of MONMOUTH, 16 miles (S. by E.) from Monmouth, and 131 (W.) from London; containing, with the hamlet of Hardwick, 3366 inhabitants. This place, called by the Britons Cas Gwent, and by most antiquaries supposed to have risen from the ruins of the ancient city Venta, about four miles to the west, derives its present name from the Saxon Chepe, a market, and Stowe, a town: it obtained also the name Striguil from the Earls of Pembroke, to whom it belonged at the time of the Conquest, and who, from their residing in a neighbouring castle of that name, were called lords of Striguil, by which designation the manorial courts are still held. Soon after the Conquest, a strong castle was erected, probably by William Fitz-Osborn, Earl of Hereford, on the summit of a rocky precipice overhanging the river Wye: there are considerable remains, richly overspread with ivy, and forming a picturesque and stately object from various points of view. About the same time the town was fortified with strong walls, several portions of which, together with the bastions erected for their defence, are still remaining. In the reign of Stephen, a priory of Benedictine monks was founded here, and dedicated to St. Mary, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £32. 4. During the parliamentary war, the inhabitants adhered firmly to the royal cause, and the castle was taken, retaken, and again taken, in which conflicts it sustained considerable damage. On the restoration of Charles II., Henry Marten, one of those who sat in judgment on Charles I., was confined in the castle till his death.

The town is situated on the river Wye, near its confluence with the Severn, and is built on the slope of a hill, among the lofty cliffs that rise abruptly from the western bank of the river, over which a handsome iron bridge of five arches was erected in 1816, at the joint expense of the counties of Gloucester and Monmouth, of which the river forms the line of separation. It is much resorted to by visitors on account of the beautiful scenery wherewith it abounds, and consists of several spacious and well-paved streets, in which are many handsome and well-built houses: it is lighted with gas, and well supplied with water conveyed from Chepstow Park, four miles distant, by iron pipes. The trade is principally in navy timber, oak-bark, iron, and coal: formerly ship-building was carried on to a considerable extent, but at present vessels are only refitted and repaired. A steam-packet plies to and from Bristol during the summer months. The market-days are Wednesday and Saturday; there are also great markets on the last Monday in every month for horses, cattle, sheep, pigs, and wool; and the fairs are on the last Monday in February, Friday in Whitsun-week, the Saturday before June 20th, Aug. 1st, and the Friday before Oct. 29th. There is a convenient market-house, with an elegant assembly-room over it, erected by the late Duke of Beaufort. The county magistrates hold petty-sessions for the division every alternate Thursday; and the town is a polling-place for the election of the county representatives. The old passage over the Severn, within two miles of the town, has been greatly improved by the erection of stone piers, and the establishment of a regular steam-packet by some gentlemen in the neighbourhood, assisted by the Duke of Beaufort, who is lord of the manor; it may now be crossed with safety at any time of the tide.

The parish comprises 1024*a.* 1*r.* 34*p.*, of which 269 acres are arable, 605 meadow and pasture, 68 woodland, and 81 buildings and gardens. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 16. 8., and in the alternate patronage of Edward Bevan, and D. H. Burr, Esqrs.; impropiators, Mr. Bevan, and the Rev. H. S. Burr: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £124. 2. 11. The church, formerly the conventual church of the priory, is considered one of the finest relics of Norman architecture in the county, and in 1841 was thoroughly restored, chiefly by the efforts of the Bishop of Llandaff. The chancel and transepts, which were destroyed by the fall of the tower about 150 years since, have been rebuilt, the side aisles removed, and the church, originally in the cathedral form, is now restored to its primitive dimensions, and contains 1600 sittings, 800 of which are free: on the north side of the chancel is a handsome monument to Henry, second Earl of Worcester and his countess, and opposite is another to Mr. and Mrs. Shipman: the interior is entered by a richly decorated western doorway. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Irvingites, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics. A school was endowed with £7 per annum charged on land, in 1605, by Richard Cleyton, Esq., and with £4, the interest of a bequest of £100; and a national and an infants' school are partly supported by subscription. Sir William Montagu's hospital, for twelve aged persons, was founded in 1614, and endowed with a rent-charge of £32 per annum: Powis' almshouse, for six men and six women, was founded in 1716, by Thomas Powis, Esq., who bequeathed £1800 for its erection and endowment. J. Boucher, Esq., in 1822, bequeathed a sum of money which has been placed in the three per cent. consols., amounting to £3120, the interest to be applied in giving 4*s.* per week to ten bachelors of the age of sixty years and upwards, and if so many are not found, then to poor men of the parish of the same age who have not received parochial relief: he also left £1000, the interest to be applied in lighting the town. In Bridge-street is a singular well, which ebbs and flows contrary to the ebbing and flowing of the tide of the river. The union of Chepstow comprises thirty-eight parishes or places, of which thirty are in the county of Monmouth, and eight in that of Gloucester, and contains a population of 16,776.

CHERRILL (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union and hundred of CALNE, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, 3 miles (E.) from Calne; containing 422 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1300 acres, the soil of which in general is light and chalky. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Calne. There is a small endowment for the instruction of children. On the summit of a hill near the village is Oldborough, or Oldbury, camp, to which it is supposed the Danes retreated after the battle of Ethandune; and on its slope is the figure of a white horse, 157 feet long, in the attitude of trotting, cut out of the turf on the chalk rock: it was executed about half a century since, under the direction, and at the expense of Dr. Christopher Allsop, an eminent physician of Calne; and from its lofty situation, this being the highest land between London and Bath, is visible at the distance of twenty or thirty miles, in several directions.

CHERRINGTON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of TETBURY, hundred of LONGTREE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Tetbury; containing 220 inhabitants. The ancient manor-house was built by Sir John Turner; the park contains a great number of deer. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13; net income, £176; patron, Rev. W. George. The church is a small edifice, with a nave, chancel, south transept, and low tower at the west end, exhibiting in some parts traces of the early English style. The Rev. Joseph Trapp, professor of poetry at Oxford, and the translator of Virgil, was born here in 1672.

CHERITON (St. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of ELHAM, hundred of FOLKESTONE, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. divisions of KENT, 1 mile (W. N. W.) from Sandgate; containing 1178 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises 1788*a.* 2*r.* 28*p.*, and includes the principal portion of the chapelry of Sandgate, is intersected by the South-Eastern railway, and the Grand Military canal. The living is a rectory, with the vicarage of Newington united, valued in the king's books at £16. 12. 6.; patron, Rev. W. Brockman. The tithes have been commuted for £515, and the glebe contains 8 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church is in the early English style, and contains several monuments, supposed to be the most ancient in the country. A national school is partly supported by voluntary contributions.

CHERITON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of ALRESFORD, hundred of FAWLEY, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (S. by W.) from New Alresford; containing, with the tything of Beaworth, 709 inhabitants. This parish participated in the conflicts of the contending parties during the civil war, and a battle took place here in the reign of Charles I., which, from the scene of action, is called the battle of Alresford: it is situated on the road leading from Winchester to Petersfield, and comprises about 3000 acres, the soil of which is in general chalky. The living is a rectory, with Kilmeston and Titchbourn annexed, valued in the king's books at £66. 2. 6., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester: the tithes of Cheriton, including those of Beaworth, have been commuted for £625. 10., and the glebe comprises 160 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church was erected in 1745. Twenty children are instructed for £12 per annum, a bequest by the Rev. Morgan Jones. On the 30th of June, 1833, some boys playing in a field, called the Old Litten, at Beaworth, discovered a leaden box containing a number of coins in excellent preservation, of the reign of William, supposed to be partly of the Conqueror, and partly of his son, William Rufus.

CHERITON, BISHOP (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of CREDITON, hundred of WONFORD, Crockernwell and S. divisions of DEVON, 11 miles (W. by N.) from Exeter; containing 848 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 4800 acres, of which about 4000 are arable, 610 woodland and copse, 100 pasture, and 90 orchard. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £22. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter: the tithes have been commuted for £390, and the glebe comprises 50 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. A school is partly supported by subscription.

CHERITON-FITZPAINE (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of CREDITON, hundred of WEST BUDLEIGH, Crediton and N. divisions of DEVON, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Crediton; containing 1156 inhabitants. It includes parts of the tythings of Bradley and Fulford, and comprises by measurement 5365 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books £37. 6. 8.; patron and incumbent, Rev. William Harris Arundell, whose tithes have been commuted for £992, and whose glebe comprises 31 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. There is an almshouse for six poor people, founded and endowed in 1594, by Andrew Scott; the income is £45.

CHERITON, NORTH (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of HORETHORNE, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Wincanton; containing 290 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the great western road from London to Exeter, comprises 1088a. 2r. 6p.: stone of good quality is quarried for building and for the roads. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 12. 1.; patron and incumbent, Rev. Thomas Gatehouse: the tithes have been commuted for £195. 17., and a rent-charge of £46. 15. is paid to an impropiator; the glebe comprises 29 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. A small school is conducted on the national plan. John Abbot bequeathed to the poor of the parish seven acres of land, at present producing a rental of £8. 2.

CHERITON, SOUTH, a hamlet, in the parish of HORSINGTON, union of WINCANTON, hundred of HORETHORNE, E. division of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Wincanton; containing 414 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel, but it has been demolished.

CHERRINGTON, a township, in the parish of EDGMOND, union of NEWPORT, Newport division of the hundred of SOUTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP; containing 189 inhabitants.

CHERRINGTON (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of SHIPSTON-UPON-STOUR, Brails division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (S. E.) from Shipston; containing 340 inhabitants. It comprises 908a. 1r. 22p., and is intersected by the river Stour. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 10. $7\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £259; patron, Daniel Turner, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1805.

CHERRY-BURTON, county of YORK.—See BURTON, CHERRY.—And all places having a similar distinguishing prefix will be found under the proper name.

CHERTSEY (All Saints), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the Second division of the hundred of GODLEY, W. division of SURREY, 13 miles (N. N. E.) from Guildford, and 20 (W. S. W.) from London; containing 5347 inhabitants. During the heptarchy, the South Saxon kings had their residence in this town; and it became noted for a Benedictine monastery, founded, in 666, by Erkenwald, afterwards Bishop of London, and which, having been burnt to the ground in the war with the Danes, was refounded by King Edgar, and dedicated to St. Peter. In this abbey Henry VI. was privately interred; but his remains were subsequently removed, and deposited, with appropriate solemnities, in the royal chapel at Windsor. At the Dissolution, its revenue was £774. 13. 6r.: some portions of the outer walls remain, and on the site, and with part of the materials, of the abbey, a private mansion, called the Abbey House, has been erected. The town is pleasantly situated upon the Thames, over which is a handsome stone bridge of seven arches, built in 1785, at an expense of £13,000, defrayed jointly by the counties of Surrey and Middlesex: the houses are in general neatly built of brick; the streets are partially paved, and lighted; and the inhabitants are plentifully supplied with water from springs. A neat building, of which the first stone was laid in November, 1838, by the high sheriff of the county, has been erected for a Literary and Scientific Institution. The trade is principally in malt and flour; the manufacture of coarse thread, and the making of iron-hoops and brooms, are carried on to a considerable extent; and a great quantity of bricks is also made in the neighbourhood. The place is about three miles from the Weybridge station of the South-Western railway; and the river Wey navigation and canal passes within two miles, and joins the Thames a little to the north of Weybridge, affording facility of conveyance for the several articles of manufacture, and for large quantities of vegetables, which are cultivated in the environs for the London market. The market, chartered by Queen Elizabeth, in 1559, is on Wednesday: the fairs are on the first Monday and Tuesday in Lent, for cattle; May 14th, for sheep; and August 6th and September 25th, for toys and pedlery. A court of pie-poudre is attached to the fair in Lent. The county magistrates hold a meeting for the division on the first and third Wednesdays in every month; and headboroughs and other officers are appointed on Tuesday in Whitsun-week, at the court leet of the lord of the manor, who also holds a court baron on the following day at Hardwick Court, now a farm-house, but once the manorial mansion, in which Henry VI. resided when a child.

The parish comprises about 10,020 acres. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 12. 4.; net income, £307; patrons, the Haberdashers' Company, and the Governors of Christ's Hospital; impropriators, the landowners. The church, a handsome structure, in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, was rebuilt with money raised on annuities, in 1808; it contains a tablet to the memory of the celebrated orator and statesman, Charles James Fox, and several monuments to the Mawbey family. A church has been lately built at Addlestone (which see); and there are places of worship for Independents and Methodists. A school was founded, in 1725, by Sir William Perkins, who endowed it with £3000 Bank stock, which sum, augmented by an accumulating annual surplus, produces at present nearly £400 per annum: the school has been extended upon the national plan. There are some almshouses, under the management of the vicar and churchwardens; and the interest of £45 is distributed among the most deserving of the almspeople on Christmas eve. The tolls and profits arising from stallage in the market and fairs were granted by Queen Elizabeth to the poor, for whose benefit there are also various other charitable benefactions. The union of Chertsey comprises 9 parishes or places, and contains a population of 14,929. Near the town is St. Anne's Hill, commanding an extensive prospect, formerly the residence of Charles James Fox, and in which are some tessellated pavements, collected from the ruins of the abbey: the water of St. Anne's Well was formerly in repute for its efficacy in curing diseases of the eye. The poet Cowley lived for some time in an ancient house in the town, called Cowley House, in which he died; and Mr. Day, author of Sandford and Merton, resided in the vicinity.

CHESEL, a hamlet, in the parish of WINTERSLOW, union of ALDERBURY, hundred of ALDERBURY, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 8 miles (E. by N.) from Salisbury. About a mile from this place is a curious earthwork, of oval form, containing five acres, and supposed to have been a Roman amphitheatre; on the north side is a large rampart.

CHESELBORNE, a parish, in the union of CERNE, hundred of WHITEWAY, Cerne division of DORSET, 10½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Blandford-Forum; containing 346 inhabitants. It comprises about 2580 acres, chiefly arable and pasture land: the surface is hilly, and the soil, which is watered by three small streams, in general chalky. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 10. 5.; net income, £254; patron, Lord Rivers. The glebe contains 40 acres, to which there is a glebe-house. In the churchyard is an ancient stone cross. A school is chiefly supported by the minister.

CHESHAM (St. Mary), a market-town and parish, in the union of AMERSHAM, hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (N.) from Amersham, and 29 (N. W. by W.) from London; comprising the hamlets of Asheridge, Ashley-Green, Bellingdon, Botley, Charteridge, Hundridge, Latimer, and Waterside; and containing 5593 inhabitants, of whom 2425 are in the town. This place derives its name from the small river Chess, which rises in the neighbourhood, and, after running through the town, empties itself into the Colne near Rickmansworth. The town, which consists of three streets, is situated in a pleasant and fertile valley, and was formerly noted for its extensive manufacture of wooden-ware and turnery, which has of late much declined. The prevailing branch of manufacture is the making of shoes for the London market; many females are employed in making lace and straw-plat; and there are several mills worked by the Chess for the manufacture of paper, and a silk-mill worked by machinery. The market days are Wednesday, for corn, which is pitched in the market-place, and Saturday, for straw-plat and provisions: fairs are held on April 21st and July 22nd, for cattle; and September 28th, a statute fair. The parish comprises by computation 12,000 acres, which, excepting about 500 of wood, are chiefly arable: the surface is in general hilly, and the soil on the high lands abounds with flint and chalk, which latter is obtained for manure. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, formerly consisting of the mediocrities of Chesham-Leicester and Chesham-Woburn, each valued in the king's books at £13. 1. 5½., but consolidated in 1767; net income £453; patron and proprietor, Duke of Bedford. The church is an ancient cruciform structure, with a square embattled tower surmounted by a low spire: in the chancel is a monument from an elegant design by Bacon, to the memory of Nicholas Skottowe, Esq. At Latimer is a chapel of considerable antiquity, which has lately undergone a thorough repair; it is supposed to have been built and endowed by the Cavendish family. There are four places of worship for dissenters, two of which are for Baptists. A school, on the British and Foreign plan, is supported by subscription; and a school, established in 1822, is maintained by the Countess of Burlington. Almshouses for four persons were founded by Mr. Thos. Weedon, of London, and endowed with £35 per annum. A chalybeate spring was discovered in 1820. At Asheridge, a college for a rector and twenty brethren was founded in 1283, by Edmund, Earl of Cornwall, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was £447. 18.

CHESHAM-BOIS (St. Leonard), a parish, in the union of AMERSHAM, hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 1½ mile (N. E. by N.) from Amersham; containing 218 inhabitants. It comprises 905a. 3r. 32p., of which about 620 acres are arable, and 150 woodland; the situation is hilly, and the soil, in general a stiff clay, resting on chalk, produces excellent wheat. The parish is intersected in the northern portion of it, by a branch of the river Colne, on the banks of which are a corn-mill and a mill for the manufacture of paper. The living is a donative rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Duke of Bedford: the tithes have been commuted for £160, and the glebe comprises 2¼ acres, to which there is a glebe-house. The church was formerly a chapel of ease to the vicarage of Chesham, and is supposed to have been originally a private chapel to the adjoining mansion, belonging at that time to Lord Cheney, whose family monuments are in the church, the records of which extend back as far as to the year 1560; the pulpit and a painted window are great curiosities, and exhibit much skill and ingenuity.

CHESHIRE, a maritime county, bounded on the north by the estuary of the Mersey, the county of Lancaster, and a small part of the county of York; on the east by the counties of Derby and Stafford; on the south by the county of Salop, and a detached portion of Flintshire; on the west by the counties of Denbigh and Flint, and the estuary of the Dee; and on the north-west by the Irish Sea. It extends from 52° 56' to 53° 32' (N. Lat.), and from 1° 49' to 3° 10' (W. Lon.), and includes 1052 square miles, or 673,280 statute acres. Within the limits of the county are 73,444 inhabited houses, 5844 uninhabited and 547 in progress of erection; and the population amounts to 395,660, of whom 193,646 are males, and 202,014 are females.

The name is a contraction of Chestershire. At the time of the Roman invasion, the country formed part of the territory occupied by the Cornavii: in the first division of Britain by the Romans it was included in Britannia Superior, and in their subsequent subdivision it became part of Flavia Casariensis. Under the Saxons it was a portion of the powerful kingdom of Mercia; and upon the division of England into three great districts by Alfred, it was comprehended in that called Mercenlege, or the "Mercian jurisdiction." Cheshire is within the diocese of Chester, and province of York; it forms an archdeaconry, and comprises the deaneries of Chester, Frodsham, Macclesfield, Nantwich, Malpas, Middlewich, and Wirrall, containing 87 parishes. For purposes of civil jurisdiction it is divided into the hundreds of Broxton, Bucklow, Eddisbury, Macclesfield, Nantwich, Northwich, and Wirrall. It contains the city and port of Chester (which however forms a county of itself); the large manufacturing towns of Macclesfield and Stockport, recently created parliamentary boroughs; and the other market-towns of Altrincham, Congleton, Frodsham, Knutsford, Malpas, Middlewich, Nantwich, Northwich, Sandbach, and Tarporley. Under the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the county was divided into two parts, the Northern and Southern, each sending to parliament two knights of the shire. Two citizens are returned for the city of Chester, and two burgesses each for Macclesfield and Stockport; and the village of Farndon, bordering on Denbighshire, is included within the limits of the adjacent borough of Holt, and shares in the election of one member for the district of boroughs comprising Denbigh, Ruthin, and Holt. Under the act of the 1st of William IV., cap. 70, for the more effectual administration of justice in England and Wales, the assizes were directed to be held in Cheshire and each of the counties of Wales, in like manner as such courts had been held in the counties of England having no palatine jurisdiction; one of the two judges appointed by her Majesty's commission to hold the assizes within the county of Chester and principality of Wales proceeding to hold such assizes in North Wales, and the other in South Wales, and both holding the assizes in and for the county of Chester, as in other English counties. The assizes, and the Epiphany and Easter quarter-sessions, are held at Chester, where stands the county gaol; and the Midsummer and Michaelmas quarter-sessions, at Knutsford, where is the house of correction.

William the Conqueror, having granted the county to his nephew, Hugh Lupus, the latter was constituted the first hereditary earl in England, that dignity having previously been an office of the executive government of the realm; and by the terms of the grant he acquired jura regalia within the county, in the exercise of which he created eight parliamentary barons (one of whom was hereditary constable, and another hereditary steward), assembled parliaments, and established courts of law. His descendants continued to enjoy this sovereignty until the death of John, Earl of Chester, in 1237, without male issue; in consequence of which Henry III. seized on the county of Chester, gave other lands in lieu of the sisters of the deceased earl, and bestowed the earldom on his son, Prince Edward. Richard II., having erected Cheshire into a principality, added to his other titles that of Princeps Cestriae; but this act was abrogated by his successor, and it again became a county palatine, and continued, under the king's eldest sons, as earls of Chester, to be governed, as in the time of its ancient earls, by a jurisdiction separate from, and independent of, the parliament of England. The ancient privileges of the palatinate were much abridged in the 27th of Henry VIII., prior to which time the lord high chancellor of England did not appoint justices of the peace, justices of the quorum, or of gaol delivery, within the county; the authority of the earl within the palatinate being as absolute as that of the king throughout the realm, and so extensive that he had power to pardon for treason and felony, to rescind outlawries, and to appoint justices of eyre, assize, gaol delivery, and of the peace; and all original and judicial writs, and indictments, for treason and felony, with the process thereon, were made in his name. In consequence of this curtailment of its privileges, the county petitioned that it might send knights and burgesses to the parliament of the realm, in accordance with which a statute was passed in 1542, enacting that thenceforward two knights should be returned to parliament for the county palatine, and two burgesses for the city of Chester. The authority of the judges and officers of the great session of the county palatine, which, says Lord Coke, "is the most ancient and honourable remaining in England," formerly extended over the counties of Chester and Flint, for both which one seal was used; and the king's writ did not run in the palatinate, all writs from the superior courts being directed to the chamberlain of Chester, who issued his mandate to the sheriff. The chamberlain had, within the county palatine and the county of the city of Chester, the jurisdiction of chancellor; and the court of exchequer, at Chester, was the chancery court, whereof the chamberlain, or his deputy, was the sole judge in equity: he was also judge at the common law within the said limits: the other officers of the court were the vice-chamberlain, baron, seal-keeper, filizer, examiner, six clerks or attorneys of the court, and some inferior officers. But by the recent statute above mentioned, the whole of these jurisdictions have been abolished, and the subjects of them transferred to the courts at Westminster.

The general appearance of the county is that of an extended plain, thickly covered with wood; so that, from some points of view, its entire surface wears the aspect of a vast and continued forest. The most elevated lands are on its eastern border, and in the western part from Malpas to Frodsham. There are several small lakes, called meres or pools, of which Combermere is a fine sheet of water, nearly two miles in length and half a mile in breadth, close to the site of Combermere Abbey. The Soils are intermingled; the prevailing species are clay and sand, a tolerably strong and retentive clay existing in the largest proportion. The substratum on which the soils rest is commonly clay or marl; but in some places it is found to consist of sand, rammel, fox-bench, gravel, and red rock: the rammel is a hard argillaceous substance, very unfavourable to the vegetation on the surface; as also, in a still greater degree, is the foxbench. The proportion of land in tillage is much inferior to that of many counties possessing the same degree of fertility: wheat and oats, but principally the latter, are the chief objects of culture; and in a considerable tract bordering on Lancashire, into which county it also extends, potatoes are a more common agricultural crop than in any other part of the kingdom. The ordinary artificial grasses are red and white clover, rye-grass, trefoil, rib-grass, and vetches. As the making of cheese is a principal object of husbandry, the proportion of pasture land is very considerable; and it is calculated that the number of cows kept for the dairy is about 92,000, and that the quantity of cheese annually made is about 11,500 tons. There are few woods and plantations of great extent, yet the quantity of timber growing here is more than the average of the same space in the kingdom at large; it is scattered chiefly in hedge-rows and coppices. The wastes consist of the large tract of hilly land on the Derbyshire border, and several peat mosses, such as Lindow Common, Featherbed Moss, &c., in the hundred of Macclesfield; Rud Heath; and some smaller tracts in different parts of the county; but great progress has for several years been made in their inclosure, of which the most remarkable instance is that of Delamere Forest.

The Mineral Productions of the county are various and important. The principal and the most remarkable, as forming one of its staple productions, and being almost peculiar to it, is SALT, the manufacture of which appears to have been carried on here from the most remote period, and to have yielded a considerable revenue to the crown, even prior to the Norman Conquest. This article was, until a late period, manufactured only from the water of the brine springs; and even so late as the beginning of the last century, the salt made in Cheshire supplied merely its own consumption and that of a few adjacent counties, the English salt being then considered inferior to that imported from the continent; but the preparation, as well for home consumption as for exportation, exceedingly increased in the course of that century; and the trade is now of the first national importance, and the source of an extensive commerce. The first bed of fossil rock salt was found in 1670, in searching for coal, at Marbury, about a mile to the north of Northwich; and this place, and its immediate neighbourhood, continued to be the only part of the county in which rock salt was known to exist until 1779, when extensive beds were found near Lawton. The first bed of salt, found at the depth of about 40 yards, is here 25 yards in thickness; and the second, which is at the depth of about 76 yards, is of unknown thickness, having been dug for about 36 yards. The cavities formed in working the salt, which are generally about fifteen feet in height, and are separated by massive pillars of salt, eight or ten yards square, when illuminated by candles fixed in the rock, have a highly brilliant and picturesque appearance. The salt from the brine is procured by evaporation and crystallization in large pans placed over fires. The next most valuable mineral is Coal, which is procured chiefly in the range of high ground extending between Macclesfield and Stockport, and connected with the Derbyshire hills. In the beds of sandstone composing Alderley-Edge are several breaks, extending across it from east to west, and filled irregularly with sandstone and masses of barytes, among which are veins of Lead and Copper ores. Similar veins have also been found at Mottram-St. Andrew, a little to the north-east; and copper-ore is likewise procured in the Peckforton hills, forming the southern part of the range which extends across the middle of the county. Several quarries of excellent Freestone are worked in different parts of the county, among which those at Runcorn and at Manley, on the north-west side of Delamere Forest, are the most considerable. At Kerredge, on the hills near Macclesfield, is a species of Sandstone peculiarly adapted to the formation of flags and hones. Limestone is no where found but at Newbold-Astbury, where large quantities are burned with coal brought from Staffordshire. Marl exists almost in every part, and Gypsum is found in some places. From its proximity to Manchester, the county has participated in the great extension of the Cotton manufacture, and there are now few situations within its limits favourable for the purpose where cotton-mills have not been erected; which is more especially the case in the northern part of the county, where the cotton trade has rendered Stockport one of the most important towns in the kingdom: the same trade is also of considerable extent at Macclesfield, Marple, and Congleton. A large quantity of muslin is made at Macclesfield, and in Stockport and its neighbourhood. There are numerous silk-mills at Congleton, Macclesfield, Stockport, and Sandbach; the weaving of ribbon forms the staple trade of Congleton, and that of silk handkerchiefs of the more important town of Macclesfield, where also silk-ferret is made. At Knutsford is a manufacture of thread; and the manufacture of hats for exportation at Stockport, Macclesfield, and Nantwich, and that of shoes at Sandbach, are each considerable. Some woollen-cloths are made at the north-eastern extremity of the county, in the parish of Mottram; and tanning is extensively carried on.

The principal RIVERS are the Dee, the Mersey, and the Weaver, to which the minor streams of the Dane, the Bollin, the Peover, the Wheelock, and the Tame, are tributary. The Dee, a little below the city of Chester, enters an artificial channel, by which it is carried through the marshes in the north-eastern extremity of Flintshire, by Hawarden, to its expansive estuary, which is in some parts seven miles in breadth, but so full of sands that at low water the channel is almost entirely dry: this opens to the Irish Sea near Hilbree Island, where it is about five miles in breadth. Prior to the year 1449, the navigation of the Dee had become so much obstructed by sand, as to cause the stream frequently to change its channel, and occasion the total ruin of the haven of Chester; to obviate which evil a new quay or haven was made nearly six miles from Chester, about the middle of the following century, and in 1560 a pecuniary collection for it was made in all churches throughout the kingdom: on its completion, all goods and merchandise conveyed from or brought to the port of Chester were there shipped and landed. In 1700, an act was obtained to enable the mayor and citizens of Chester to recover and preserve the navigation of the Dee; and another act being passed in 1734, empowering some gentlemen willing to undertake the work, to inclose a large tract of the banks of the river, called the White Sands, on the condition of making a navigable line from the sea to Chester, the present artificial channel was completed in 1740, in which year the undertakers were incorporated by the name of "The Company of Proprietors of the Undertaking for recovering and preserving the Navigation of the river Dee," and have since obtained several confirmatory acts. In 1763, 1411 acres of land were recovered from the sea; in 1769, 664; and in 1795, 348; and this reclaimed tract has been greatly augmented by subsequent embankments.

The Mersey forms the boundary between this county and Lancashire, and below Warrington, where it meets the tide, begins to expand until it reaches Runcorn Gap, where it is suddenly rendered narrow by a projection from the Lancashire side. Below this point it immediately opens into a grand estuary, three miles in width, which gradually contracts until it arrives at Liverpool, where it is only three-quarters of a mile in width, but forms a fine channel, at least ten fathoms deep at low water, and very commodious for shipping. At the distance of about five miles further, measuring by the Cheshire coast, it falls into the Irish Sea, through different inlets, separated and much obstructed by sands; but the passage is rendered secure by means of various landmarks, buoys, and lighthouses, and the good system of pilotage established by the Liverpool merchants. The Weaver rises on Bulkeley Heath, in the south-western part of the county, and pursues its entire course within its limits: this river, in its natural state, being navigable only at high tides, and but for six miles above Frodsham bridge, a company of Cheshire gentlemen, in 1720, entered into a subscription for the purpose of procuring an act of parliament for extending the navigation from Frodsham bridge to Winsford bridge, and all incumbrances brought on by this undertaking were discharged in 1778, since which time a considerable surplus revenue, arising from tonnage, &c., has been annually paid into the county treasury in aid of the rate, as provided by the act, and the returns are now estimated at about £20,000 per annum. The total length of the Weaver navigation is nearly 24 miles, and the extensive trade upon it in salt and coal, and in flint and clay for the Staffordshire potteries, makes the tonnage greater than perhaps that of any river of its size in the kingdom.

The Canals that intersect Cheshire in various directions, are, the Duke of Bridgewater's, commenced under an act passed in 1759, and completed, with its several branches, under various others; the Trent and Mersey, or Grand Trunk canal, begun under an act obtained in 1766, which has been amended by numerous subsequent acts; the Ellesmere and Chester canal, commenced under an act procured in 1772, and finished under many others with different branches; the Peak Forest canal, the first act for which was passed in 1794; and the Macclesfield canal, the act for constructing which was obtained in 1825. The Huddersfield canal also pursues its course for some distance within the northern confines of the county, on the south side of the valley of the Tame; and there is a branch canal from Stockport, communicating with the Manchester, Ashton-under-Line, and Oldham canal, which at Ashton approaches close to the borders of Cheshire, and in the vicinity of that town is connected with the Peak Forest and Huddersfield canals. The Grand Junction railway enters the county at Blackenhall, between Checkley and Wrinehill, and proceeds in a direction to the west of Crewe Hall, where it is joined by the Manchester and Birmingham, and the Chester and Crewe, railways; it afterwards pursues its course to the river Mersey, and at Warrington unites with the Warrington and Newton railway; it was opened on the 4th July, 1837. The Chester and Crewe railway runs from the station in Chester to the Grand Junction railway at Crewe, a distance of 20½ miles; in its course it is carried over the river Weaver, and several bridges, by an extensive viaduct, and at Christleton it passes under the Ellesmere canal; it was opened for passengers and general traffic in October, 1840, at which time the company united with the Grand Junction company. The Chester and Birkenhead railway, commences at Chester, and proceeds to Birkenhead, on the Mersey, opposite to Liverpool, a distance of 14½ miles; it passes over several extensive embankments, and by a viaduct of 11 arches over the Ellesmere canal; it was opened for passengers and general traffic in September, 1840. The Sheffield, Ashton-under-Line, and Manchester railway, crosses the north-eastern angle of the county, which interposes between Lancashire, Yorkshire, and Derbyshire; it is of recent construction, and is a line of great importance.

Few Roman remains have been discovered, except within the walls of Chester, which, under the name of Deva, was for more than two centuries the station of the twentieth legion, vestiges of whose occupation are even yet numerous: the site of no other station within the county has been clearly ascertained, though it is conjectured by Whitaker, on interesting local evidence, that the station of Condate was at Kinderton, and that there were likewise fortified posts at Stockport, Stretford, and Warrington. Many Roman roads traversed this territory, of which the principal were, one from Manchester to Kinderton, one from Kinderton to Wroxeter, one from Kinderton southward by the vicinity of Sandbach, one from Kinderton to the station at Chesterton, near Newcastle-under-Line; one from Kinderton to Chester; the ancient Watling-street, originally of British construction, from the south-eastern coast of the island to Chester; and a great road called by Sir R. C. Hoare, the Via Devana, from Chester southward: but the existing remains of these are few, scattered, and imperfect. Prior to the Dissolution, Cheshire contained 13 Religious Houses, including one commandery of the Knights Hospitallers: there were, besides, two colleges and nine ancient hospitals. Of some of these houses there are yet considerable remains, especially of the abbey of St. Werburgh, at Chester. The principal remains of ancient Castles are those of Chester and Beeston, though the former were much diminished in 1790, for the purpose of erecting on their site the present noble county hall, gaol, and barracks; and vestiges of those of Halton, Alford, Shotwick, and Shotlach are yet traceable. There are several remarkable ancient mansions, of which the chief are, Doddington, Bramhall, Saighton, Little Moreton, Dutton, Poole, Brereton, and Crewe Halls; and many of the modern seats are elegant edifices, of which the most distinguished are, Eaton Hall, Dunham-Massey, Cholmondeley Castle, and a few others. At Buglawton is a saline and sulphureous spring, efficacious in the cure of scorbutic diseases; at Shaw Heath, near Stockport, is a strong chalybeate spring; and some of the brine springs already noticed have also chalybeate properties.

CHESHUNT (St. Mary), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of EDMONTON, hundred and county of HERTFORD, 8 miles (S. by E.) from Hertford; containing, with Cheshunt-street, Waltham-Cross, and Woodside wards, 5402 inhabitants. In this parish was formerly a bank separating the kingdoms of Mercia and East Anglia, during the heptarchy, the lands on one side of which the elder brother still inherits, and the younger those on the other side. Cardinal Wolsey possessed the united manors of Andrews and Le Mote, in the parish, and received from the crown the appointment of bailiff of the honour, and keeper of the park of Cheshunt. Here stood the palace called Theobalds, the favourite residence of Lord Burleigh, and afterwards of James I., who died here in 1625; it was also the occasional resort of Charles I., who here received the petition from both houses of parliament in 1642, a short time before he placed himself at the head of the army. The greater part of the palace, the park attached to which was ten miles in circuit, and surrounded by a wall, was taken down by the Parliamentary Commissioners for selling the crown lands, in 1650. Near the church is a house in which Richard Cromwell, after resigning the protectorate, lived in retirement, under the assumed name of Clark, till his death, in 1712. The parish comprises about 8450 acres, the soil of which is rich and fertile, consisting of the several varieties of gravel, clay, and loam; the surface is undulated and hilly, and the scenery diversified and beautiful, and enlivened and ornamented by the picturesque windings of the New River, and the expansive and commanding stream of the Lea. The village is supposed to occupy the site of a Roman station on the Ermin-street: the petty-sessions for the division are held here.
